LYCURGUS (Hist.) the celebrated law-giver of Sparta, son of Eunomus, and brother to Polydectes, succeeded the latter on the throne of Sparta, until his nephew Charilaus arrived at years of maturity, when he retired to Crete to avoid the persecution of his enemies; but being soon after recalled to correct the disorders of the state, he established a system of laws, which were in effect for 700 years, having, previous to his second departure from Sparta, bound the citizens by a solemn oath that neither they nor their posterity would violate, alter, or abolish, the laws which he had established before his return. He is said to have put himself to death soon after, and to have ordered his ashes to be thrown into the sea, lest, if they were carried to Sparta, the citizens should think themselves absolved from their oath. The Lacedæmonians showed their respect for their legislator, by instituting a festival in his honour, called Lycurgidæ, or Lycurgides. His laws were abrogated by Philopœmen, A. C. 188; but re-established soon after by the Romans. Dionys. Hal. l. 2; Strab. l. 8; Justin. l. 3; Plut. in Vit.; Paus. l. 3.

LYCURGUS, an orator of Athens in the reign of Demosthenes, surnamed Ibis, who rendered himself famous by his impartial administration of justice and prudent government while at the head of affairs, particularly by increasing the strength of the Athenians to withstand the attacks of Philip, king of Macedon. He died about 330 years before Christ, leaving Orations, some of which are still extant. Plut. de Decem. Orat.; Pausan. l. 1.

LYCURGUS, one of the tyrants who disturbed the public peace after the death of Cleomenes, A. C. 223.

LYCUS (Myth.) Λύκος, a king of Bœotia, and husband of Dirce, who married Antiope, his niece, and afterwards delivered her to his first wife to be tortured. Apollod. l. 3; Paus. l. 9.

LYCUS, a king of Lybia, who commonly sacrificed whatever strangers came upon his coast, but nevertheless gave the Argonauts a friendly reception. He imprisoned Hercules, who found means to escape, by the assistance of Calirrhoe, the king's daughter, who was enamoured of him. Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 18, &c.

LYCUS (Hist.) an officer of Alexander, in the interest of Lysimachus, who made himself master of Ephesus by the treachery of Andron, &c. Polyæn. l. 5.

LYCUS (Biog.) a Greek historian, and native of Reggio, in the time of Ptolemy Lagus. He wrote a History of Libya and Sicily. Suidas.

LYDDA (Bibl.) called in the Hebrew לד; by the Greeks Λύδδα, or Διόσπολις; a city of Palestine, in the way from Jerusalem to Cæsarea Philippi. It lay east of Joppa four or five leagues distant, and belonged to the tribe of Ephraim. Lydda was one of the three toparchies which were dismembered from Samaria, and given to the Jews. St. Peter coming to Lydda, cured Æneas, who was sick of the palsy. Neh. xi; Acts ix; 1 Macc. xi; Joseph. Antiq. l. 14; Ptol. l. 3.

LYDGATE, John (Biog.) an ancient English poet, recorded to be one of the immediate successors of Chaucer, and supposed to have died between the years 1446 and 1461, left a number of works, the most esteemed of which are his 'Story of Thebes;' 'Fall of Princes;' 'History, Siege, and Destruction of Troy;' the first was printed by Speght, in his edition of Chaucer; the second by Pinson in 1494, and several times since; the third by Pinson, in 1513; and more correctly by Marsh, in 1555; it has since been modernized, and published under the title of 'The Life and Death of Hector,' &c.

LYDIA (Bibl.) Λυδία, a woman of Thyatira, a seller of purple, who dwelt in the city of Philippi, in Macedonia, and was converted by the preaching of St. Paul. Acts xvi. 14, &c.

LYDIA (Geog.) Λυδία, a considerable country of Asia Minor, otherwise called Mæonia, now Carasia.

Boundaries. It was first bounded by Mysia Major, Caria, Phrygia Major, and Ionia, but in its more flourishing times it contained the whole country lying between the Halys and the Ægean Sea.

Chief Towns. Sardis, Thyatira, Philadelphia, &c.

Principal Rivers. Caius, Hermus, and Pactolus, &c.

Mountains. Sipylus, Tmolus, and Mimas, &c.

History. Lydia derives its name, according to Josephus and St. Jerome, from Lud, the son of Shem, and, according to profane authors, from Lydus, one of their kings. The kingdom of Lydia is said to have begun with Argos, or Agros, who had among his successors Ardysus, who began to reign 797 A. C.; Alyattes 761; Meles 747; Candaules 738; Gyges 718; Ardysus II 680; Sadyattes 631; Alyattes II, 619, and Crœsus 562; who was conquered by Cyrus A. C. 548, when Lydia became a province of the Persian empire. Herod. l. 1; Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Diodor. l. 4; Strab. l. 2; Mela l. 1; Joseph. Antiq. l. 1; Plin. l. 3; Ptol. l. 5; Justin. l. 13; Euseb. in Chron.; Leunclav. in Pand. Turc.; Scaliger, Riccioli, Cluverius, &c.

LYDIAT, Thomas (Biog.) an English scholar, was born at Alkrington, near Banbury, in Oxfordshire, in 1572, and died in 1646, after having suffered much for his loyalty. Among his works are, 1. 'Tractatus de variis Annorum Formis,' 8vo. 1605. 2. 'Prælectio Astronomica de Natura

Cœli,' &c. 3. 'Disquisitio Physiologica de Origine Fontium,' these two are printed with the first. 4. 'Defensio Tractatus de variis Annorum Formis, contra Jos. Scaligeri Obtrectationem,' 8vo. 1607. 5. 'Examen Canonum Chronologiæ Isagogicorum,' printed with the 'Defensio.' 6. 'Emendatio Temporum contra Scaligerum,' &c. 8vo. 1609. 7. 'Explicatio et Additamentum Argumentorum in Libello Emendationis Temporum,' &c. 8vo. 1613. 8. 'Solis et Lunæ Periodus, seu Annus Magnus,' 8vo. 1620, &c. 9. LYON, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Strathmore.

LYONET, Peter (Biog.) a naturalist, was born at Maestricht in 1707, and died in 1789, leaving 'Traité Anatomique de la Chénille qui ronge les Bois de Saule,' 1764.

LYONS, Israel (Biog.) a Polish Jew, who died in 1770, was the author of 'The Scholar's Instructor, or Hebrew Grammar,' &c. 8vo. Cambridge, 1757; and 'Observations and Enquiries relating to various Parts of Scripture History,' 1761.

LYONS, Israel, son of the preceding, was born in Cambridgeshire in 1739, and died in 1775, leaving, 1. 'A Treatise on Fluxions,' 1758. 2. 'Fasciculus Plantarum circa Cantabrigiam Nascentium, quæ post Raium observatæ fuère,' 8vo. 1763. 3. 'Calculations in Spherical Trigonometry abridged,' which were printed in the Philosophical Transactions. vol. lxi.

LYONS (Geog.) or rather Lyon, a city in the south-east of France, and capital of the department of the Rhone, situated on the confluence of the Rhone and the Saone, 190 miles N. by W. Marseilles, 280 S. S. E. Paris, and 300 E. N. E. Bourdeaux. Lon. 4° 49′ E. lat. 45° 45′ N.

History of Lyons.

Lyons, called by the Romans Lugdunum, [vide Lugdunum] became early the centre of the commerce which the Romans established in Gaul, and notwithstanding the disasters it was exposed to by lightning, pillagings, and fires, and subsequently to the inroads of the Allemanni, the Goths, and the Saracens, in the eighth century, it rose to great distinction. The Romans kept possession of this city until the reign of Honorius, when Stilicho having conquered the Goths by means of the Burgundians, it was given to them by the emperor by way of reward. It afterwards came into the hands of the French about 532, when Clodomir put to death Sigismond, king of Burgundy, and Childebert and Clotaire dethroned Gondemar, brother of the same Sigismond. The French ceded it about 955 to Conrad I, king of Burgundy, and on the division of this kingdom the archbishops of Lyons, and the counts of Forez, disputed the possession of this city for a long time, but it was retained by the latter until 1173, when Gui II and III, father and son, ceded it to Guichard, the archbishop. Finally, the archbishopric came into the hands of Philip the Fair, and the temporalities into those of Peter of Savoy. Philip III, surnamed the Bold, gave many privileges to it; among others, a consul and chamber of commerce. Lyons suffered much in the religious wars of the 16th century, but still more in the revolution, at the commencement of which, the royalists gaining the ascendancy, the city was besieged by the Jacobins, and when obliged to surrender, became the scene of the most horrible atrocities. The Lyonese not being by this means reconciled to a revolutionary government, violent dissensions continued in this city until the termination of the revolutionary war, and the downfal of Bonaparte, previously to which several severe actions took place in this neighbourhood.

Ecclesiastical History of Lyons.

S. Photinus, and S. Irenæus, successors to the disciples of the apostles, laid the foundation of the church of Lyons, which was sprinkled with the blood of more than 20,000 martyrs. The archbishop was the primate of France, but at what period this see obtained the primacy is not known. It was, however, confirmed by Gregory VII, in favour of Gebuin in 1079, and subsequently by others of his successors; but in 1702 it was decreed in council that the archbishop of Rouen should acknowledge no superior except the pope. It has been observed, that all its prelates were illustrious persons, and that out of the 132 who have held this see, five were reckoned among the fathers of the church, thirty were deemed worthy of canonization, fifteen were princes by birth, most were descended from illustrious families, one was pope, nine cardinals, fifteen apostolical legates, besides ministers of state, ambassadors, &c. Pope Gregory X, held the 14th general council of the church in the city of Lyons in 1274, at which he himself presided, and the ambassadors from Philip the Bold, from the emperor Rudolph, and from many other princes of the West, as also from Michael Paleologus, attended. Other councils were also held in the same city, namely, one assembled by S. Irenæus, with some prelates of the Gauls, for confirming the decree made for the celebration of Easter; another council is said to have been held by the same Irenæus in 185, against the heretics; besides others in 254, '74, 517, 567, 581, 583, 836, 878, 1055, 1080, 1376, 1449, 1565, 1577, 1614, and 1626.

LYRA, Nicholas de (Biog.) or Lyranus, a Franciscan in the 14th century, was born of Jewish parents at Lyre, a town of Normandy, but embracing Christianity, he entered among the Franciscans at Verneuil in 1291, and died in 1340, leaving some 'Postils,' or Short Commentaries on the whole Bible, &c. which were printed in 7 vols. fol. Rome, 1472, and in 6 vols. fol. Antv. 1672. These Commentaries are incorporated in the 'Biblia Maxima,' 19 vols. fol. Paris, 1660; a French translation of them was published in 5 vols. fol. 1511 and 1512.

LYRCUS (Myth.) a son of Phoroneus, the son of Inachus, who was sent in quest of Ino. Parthen. Erot.

LYRNESSUS (Geog.) Λυρνησσὸς, a city of Cilicia, taken and plundered by Achilles, and the Greeks. Hom. Il. l. 2, &c.; Strab. l. 3.

LYSAGHT (Her.) the name of an Irish family, which claims descent from the illustrious house of O'Brien, co. Clare, and enjoys the peerage, conferred on John Lysaght, who in 1758 was created baron Lisle, of Mount North, co. Cork.

LYSANDER (Hist.) Λύσανδρος, a general of Sparta, who obtained the celebrated victory over the Athenian fleet at Ægospotamos, and destroyed the whole, except three ships, out of 120, by which he so humbled the Athenians, that they consented to destroy the Piræus, to deliver all their ships except 12, and by surrendering themselves to the Lacedæmonians, to put an end to the Peloponnesian war, which had lasted 27 years. Lysander was afterwards employed in the Theban war, with his colleague Pausanias, and was killed in a bloody battle against the Haliartians, which ended in the defeat of his troops, 394 years before Christ. Corn. Nep. et Plut. in Vit.; Diod. l. 13.

LYSANIAS (Bibl.) Λυσανίας, or Lysias, a tetrarch of Abilene, who governed in Judæa, or in the country round about, when John Baptist began his ministry. Luke iii.

LYSANIAS (Hist.) the father or grandfather of the preceding, was put to death by Mark Anthony, who gave part of his kingdom to Cleopatra. Dio. l. 49.

LYSERUS, Polycarp (Biog.) a Protestant divine, was born at Winendeen, in the territory of Wittemberg, in 1552, and died in 1601, leaving, 'Centuria Quæstionum de Articulis Libri Christianæ Concordiæ,' 4to.; 'Christianismus, Papismus, Calvinismus,' 4to.; 'Harmonia Calvinianorum et Photinianorum in Doctrina de Sacra Cœna,' 4to.; 'Vindiciæ Lyserianæ,' &c. besides several other pieces in Latin and German, on theological and polemical subjects.

LYSERUS, John, an author, of the same family as the preceding, who died in 1684, wrote, among other things, in favour of polygamy, 'Polygamia Triumphatrix,' 4to. 1682, which was answered by Brunsmannus in his 'Polygamia Triumphata,' 8vo. 1689, and again in another work entitled 'Monogamia Victrix,' 8vo. 1689.

LYSIADES (Hist.) a tyrant of Megalopolis, of low birth, but of great talent, who, rising by his merits to the post of commander, with Aratus, caused the latter to be banished, and was afterwards killed in battle against the Lacedæmonians, A. C. 225. Polyb. l. 1; Plut. in Arat.

LYSIAS (Bibl.) a captain of a Roman cohort; in Judæa, who on hearing that St. Paul was a Roman, abstained from scourging him, and sent him bound to Felix. Acts xxi. &c.

LYSIAS (Hist.) Λυσίας, a friend and relation of Antiochus Epiphanes, who at the death of the latter, took possession of the government during the minority of young Antiochus. He waged an unsuccessful war against the Maccabees, by whom he was frequently beaten, as were also the generals acting under him, wherefore he finally concluded a peace with them, on conditions highly advantageous to the Jews, A. M. 3481, A. C. 163. Lysias was afterwards killed by Demetrius, the son of Seleucus. 1 Macc. vi. &c.; Joseph. Antiq. l. 2; Appian. in Syriac.

LYSIAS (Biog.) a Grecian orator, and native of Syracuse, was born about 459 years before Christ, and died in the 81st year of his age. [Vide Plate XXXII] Thirty-four of his orations are extant, the first edition of which is that of Aldus, fol. 1513; in the first part of the 'Rhetorum Græcorum Orationes.' The editions of Taylor, 4to. 1739; of Reiske, 8vo. Lips. 1772; and of Auger, Paris, 1782, are reckoned the best. Auger also published a French translation of Lysias, in 1783. Cic. de Orat. l. 2; Quintil. l. 3; Plut. de Orat.; Diog. l. 2.

LYSICLES (Hist.) Λυσικλῆς, an Athenian, sent with Chares into Bœotia, to stop the conquests of Philip of Macedon, was afterwards condemned to die for his ill conduct at the battle of Chæronea. Diodor. l. 16.

LYSIDICUS (Hist.) a partisan of Antony's, whom Cicero, alluding to the Greek derivation of his name, denominates the destroyer of law and justice. Cic. Phil. 2.

LYSIMACHIA (Geog.) Λυσιμάχεια, a town of Thracian Chersonesus, now Hexamili, built by Lysimachus on the ruins of Cardia. Polyb. l. 5; Liv. l. 32; Plin. l. 4; Ptol. l. 3.

Lysimachia (Numis.) this town is known by the inscription ΛΥΣΙ.—ΛΥΣΙΜΑΧΕΩΝ; also with the addition of ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ; or ΜΕΤΡΟΠΟΛΕΩΣ on some medals, bearing for their type the head of king Lysimachus, or a head of Hercules, Apollo, &c.

LYSIMACHUS (Bibl.) Λυσιμάχος, the surname of Alexander. [Vide Alexander]

Lysimachus (Hist.) a son of Agathocles, and one among the generals of Alexander, who seized Macedonia for his share after expelling Pyrrhus, was killed in battle A. C. 281, in the 80th year of his age. His body would not have been found among the slain but by the fidelity of a little dog that carefully watched near it. Diodor. l. 19; Senec. de Ira. l. 3; Val. Max. l. 9; Plin. l. 8; Paus. l. 1; Plut. in Demet.

Lysimachus, an Acarnanian, preceptor to Alexander the Great. Justin. l. 15; Plut. in Alex.

Lysimachus, a son of Aristides, to whom the Athenians assigned some lands out of respect for his father.

Lysimachus, brother of Menelaus, high-priest of the Jews, acted as his vicegerent in the priesthood during his absence, but, having attempted to pillage the temple, in order to procure money for his brother to pay according to his promise to Antiochus Epiphanes, he was killed in a popular tumult. 2 Macc. iv.

Lysimachus, brother of a man named Apollodorus, and governor of Gaza, delivered the city to Alexander Jannæus, because he conceived that his brother was better liked than himself.

Lysimachus, son of Pausanias, was one of the ambassadors sent by Hyrcanus, the high-priest, to Anthony at Ephesus, to testify the good affection which the Jewish nation bore to him. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14.

Lysimachus (Numis.) the king of Macedonia above-mentioned, is known by some medals bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure, inscription—ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΛΥΣΙΜΑΧΟΥ.

Lysimachus (Biog.) an historian of Alexandria, who wrote a history of Egypt, &c. quoted by Joseph. Varro de Re. Rust. l. 1; Joseph. cont. Appion. l. 1.

Lysimachus, a physician, and follower of Hippocrates, quoted by Lycander.

LYSIPPUS (Biog.) a statuary of Sicyon in the reign of Alexander the Great, who is said to have executed not less than 600 statues, the most admired of which were those of Alexander, of Apollo of Tarentum, of a man coming out of a bath, and of Socrates.

Horat. l. 2, ep. 1, v. 240.

LYSIS (Biog.) a Pythagorean philosopher, and preceptor to Epaminondas, to whom the Golden Verses are attributed by some, of which Pythagoras is generally reputed to be the author. Cic. Orat. l. 3, c. 34; C. Nep. in Epam. c. 2.

LYSONS, Daniel (Biog.) a physician, and native of Gloucestershire, was educated at Oxford, where he took his degree of LL. D. in 1759, and of M. D. in 1764, and died in 1800, leaving several Essays on Medical Subjects.

Lysons, Samuel, an antiquary, was born at Rodmarten, in Gloucestershire in 1763, and died in 1819, leaving 'The Antiquities of Gloucestershire,' fol.; 'Magna Britannia,' &c. &c.

LYSTRA (Bibl.) Λύστρα, a city of Lycaonia, of which Timothy was a native. Acts xiv. &c.

LYTE, Henry (Biog.) a botanist, was born in Somersetshire in 1529, educated at Oxford, and died in 1607, leaving a translation of Dodoens' Herbal, 4to. 1578.

LYTTELTON (Hist.) vide Littleton.

Lyttelton, Sir William, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, raised a considerable force to the aid of Henry VII against Lambert Simnel, the earl of Lincoln, and their adherents; and for his valour at the battle of Stoke, near Newark, he was rewarded by the king with the honour of knighthood. He died in 1507, at the age of 65.

Lyttelton, Sir John, was high in the favour and confidence of queens Mary and Elizabeth, and died in 1589.

Lyttelton, John, son of the preceding, was drawn by Essex into his treasonable conspiracy, for which the latter lost his life, and he his estate and his liberty. He died in prison in 1601, aged 39.

Lyttelton, Sir Thomas, the first baronet, son of the preceding, had his estates restored to him by James I, and the attainder of his father reversed, of which favours he showed himself worthy by adhering faithfully to his royal master, Charles I, in all his troubles. His fine seat at Frankly was burnt to the ground by prince Rupert to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy; and he himself died in 1649, after having suffered some years close confinement.

Lyttelton, Sir Henry, son of the preceding, shared with his father in the honour of suffering for his loyalty during the rebellion, but had the happiness to survive the restoration. He died in 1693, at the age of 69.

Lyttelton, Sir Charles, brother and heir to the preceding, signalized himself at the siege of Colchester in behalf of king Charles I, and afterwards had a considerable share in the bold and spirited attempt made by sir George Booth in Cheshire to restore the king and constitution. On the failure of that scheme he was imprisoned for a time; but, obtaining his liberty, he repaired to his royal master, Charles II, whom he served in a private capacity, being employed on many secret and important messages between the king and his people, at the critical conjuncture just preceding the restoration. He was afterwards appointed governor of Jamaica in 1662, and rebuilt the town of Port-Royal, which was almost entirely destroyed by the great earthquake in 1692. On his return to England he continued in the service of Charles II and James II until the revolution, when he retired, and died in 1716.

Lyttelton, George, first Lord, grandson of the preceding, was, in 1744, appointed one of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury; in 1754 one of his Majesty's Privy Council; in 1755 Chancellor and Under Treasurer of his Majesty's Exchequer; and died in 1773. This nobleman, who is now remembered more as an author than in any other character, left, among other things, 'Observations on the Conversion of St. Paul,' printed first in 1747; 'Letters from a Persian in England to his Friend in Ispahan;' 'Dialogues of the Dead;' 'Observations on the Life of Cicero,' one of his early productions; besides which he wrote 'The History of Henry the Second,' three volumes of which were published in 1764; a second edition of them in 1767; a third edition in 1768; and the conclusion in 1771; this was his last literary production. His poems, which have justly given him a place among the British poets, are to be found in all collections. His prose works were first printed collectively in 4to. in 1774, and since in 8vo. [Vide Plate XXIX]

LYTTELTON, Charles (Ecc.) younger brother of George, lord Lyttelton above-mentioned, was born in 1714, and educated at Eton School, whence he was removed to University College, and afterwards to the Inner Temple, with the view to qualify himself for the bar; but, entering into orders, he was, after different preferments, consecrated bishop of Carlisle, and died in 1768, leaving a useful and valuable bequest of MSS. and printed books to the Society of Antiquaries, of which he was long a president. Besides his contributions to the papers of this society, published in the 'Archæologia;' there is in Gutch's 'Collectanea Curiosa,' Vol. II. 'Dean Lyttelton's Memoir concerning the Authenticity of his Copy of Magna Charta,' from the minutes of the Antiquarian Society, and an answer by Judge Blackstone.

LYTTELTON (Her.) Littleton, Lutlelton, and Lyttleton, for so it is variously spelt; the name of a family of which honourable mention has been made under History. This name is in all probability derived, agreeably to the custom of the age, from South Lyttelton, in the county of Worcester, where the family had been of long standing, and had considerable possessions before the reign of Henry III; but its greatest honour was to have given birth to the distinguished judge Littleton before-mentioned. [Vide Littleton] The first of this family who enjoyed the peerage was George, lord Lyttelton, the poet, son of sir Thomas Lyttleton, bart. who was created in 1757 a peer of Great Britain, by the style and title of lord Lyttelton, baron of Frankley, co. Worcester, which title became extinct at the death of the second lord; but William Henry, the fifth brother of the first lord, was advanced to the dignity of a baron of Ireland in 1776, and to that of a baron of Great Britain in 1796. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Lyttelton, lord Lyttelton, baron of Frankley, co. Worcester; baron Westcote, of Balamore, in Ireland.

Arms. Argent, a chevron between three escallops sable.

Crest. On a wreath a Moor's head in profile, couped proper, with a wreath about the head argent and sable. This was the crest of Westcote; that of Lyttelton, borne by Thomas de Luttelton, grandfather to the judge (temp. Hen. IV), being a greyhound's head collared.

Supporters. Two tritons, or mermen, with tridents, all proper.

Motto. "Ung Dieu, ung Roy."

LYTTELTON, Thomas, second Lord (Biog.) son of George, lord Lyttelton, who closed an unhappy life in 1779, was for some time the reputed author of two volumes of 'Letters,' published in 1780, and 1782, and a quarto volume of 'Poems,' published in 1780; but the Letters are now known to have been the production of another pen, and the Poems are publicly disowned by his executors.

M.

MAACAH (Bibl.) מעכה, a little province of Syria, east and north of the sources of Jordan. It is sometimes called Maachah, or Beth-Maacha. 2 Sam. x. xx. &c.

MAACHAH (Bibl.) son of Nahor by his concubine Reumah. Gen. xxii.

MAACHAH, daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur, wife of David, and mother of Absolom and Tamar. 2 Sam. iii. 3.

MAACHAH, daughter of Abishalom, wife of Rehoboam, king of Judah, and mother of Abijam, his successor. 1 Kings xv. 2.

MAACHAH, daughter of Abisholam, wife of Abijam, king of Judah, and mother of Asa, his successor. 1 Kings xv. 10, &c.

MAACHAH, the name of other persons mentioned in 1 Chron. ii. vii. xxxvii.; 1 Kings ii.

MAASEIAH (Bibl.) מעשיה, son of Ahaz, king of Israel, and also son of Adaiah, to whom the high-priest Jehoiadah discovered his design of setting Joash on the throne. 2 Chron. xxiii.

MABILLON, John (Biog.) a French Benedictine, was born in 1632, and died in 1707, leaving, 1. An edition of St. Bernard published in 2 vols. fol. and 9 vols. 8vo. Paris, 1667, reprinted in 1690 and 1719. 2. An edition of the 'Acta Sanctorum;' the first volume of which was published in 1668, and continued to 9 vols.; the prefaces to which were published separately at Rouen in 4to. 1732. 3. 'De Re Diplomatica Libri sex,' &c. fol. Paris. 1681. 4. 'De Liturgia Gallicana,' &c. 4to. 1685. 5. 'Musæum Italicum,' 4to. 1685. 6. 'Eusebii Romani ad Theophilum Gallum Epistola,' 1698; besides some other smaller pieces.

MABLY, Gabriel Bonnot Abbé de (Biog.) a French miscellaneous writer, and brother to the Abbé Condillac, was born at Grenoble in 1709, and died in 1785, leaving, 1. 'Parallèle des Romains et des François,' 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1740. 2. 'Le Droit Public de l'Europe,' 3 vols. 12mo. 1747. 3 'Observations sur les Romains,' 2 vols. 12mo. 4. 'Observations sur les Grecs,' 12mo. 1751, and reprinted in 1766 under the altered title of 'Observations sur l'Histoire de la Grece.' 5. 'Des Principes des Negociations,' 12mo. 1757. 6. 'Entretiens de Phocion sur le Rapport de la Morale avec la Politique,' 12mo. Amsterdam, 1763, in 3 vols. 12mo. 1783, and in 4to. 1795. 7. 'Observations sur l'Histoire de France,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1765. 8. 'Entretiens sur l'Histoire,' 12mo. 9. 'De la Manière d'écrire l'Histoire,' 2 vols. 12mo. Kehl, 1784. 10. 'Observations sur la Gouvernement et les Lois de l'Amerique.' 11. 'Les Morales;' all which were collected, with an Eloge by the Abbé Brizard, in 15 vols. 8vo. 1794.

MABOUL, James (Ecc.) a native of Paris, whose eloquence, as a preacher, procured his elevation to the see of Aleth, died in 1723, leaving 'Oraisons Funebres,' which have been published in 12mo.

MABUSE (Biog.) or Mabeuge, John de, a Hungarian painter, so called from the place of his nativity, was born about 1499, and died in 1562, leaving several specimens of his skill at Amsterdam; the most admired of which is said to be 'The Decapitation of St. John.'

MACAN (Hist.) a king of Ghilan, &c. was defeated and killed in battle by Nasser, sultan of the Samanides, in the year of the Hegira 329, A. D. 939.

MACAR (Hist.) Μάκαρ, a son of Criasius, or Crinacus, the first Greek who led a colony to Lesbos. Hom. Il. 24; Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Diodor. l. 5; Mel. l. 2.

MAC ARDELL, James (Biog.) an English mezzotinto engraver, who died in 1765, executed some fine prints after Rembrandt, and other masters.

MACAREUS (Myth.) a son of Æolus, who debauched his sister Canace, and had a son by her. Hygin. Fab. 242; Ovid. Met. &c.

MACARIA (Myth.) Μακαρία, a daughter of Hercules and Dejanira, who procured a victory for the Heraclidæ over Eurystheus by devoting herself to a voluntary death, according to the oracle. Eurip. Heracl.; Paus. l. 1.

MACARIUS (Ecc.) the name of several prelates and two saints.

Macarius I, bishop of Jerusalem, succeeded Hermon, or Thermon, in 312, distinguished himself by his zeal in defence of the catholic faith against all heresies, particularly those of Arius, and died in 334, after having assisted at the general council of Nice. S. Epiphan. Hæres. 69; Theodoret. l. 1, c. 5.

Macarius II, was placed over the see of Jerusalem in 546 after Peter, and died after governing the church four years. He was once deposed on an unjust charge of favouring the errors of Origen; but having convicted his enemies of falsehood, he was re-instated.

Macarius, an heretical bishop of Antioch in the seventh century, followed the errors of the Monothelites, which he had the effrontery to declare in the sixth general council of Constantinople, and in the presence of the emperor Constantine Pogonatus. This hardihood caused him to be deposed, and shut up in a monastery. Anastas. in Vit. Pontif.; Baronius, &c.

Macarius, the name of several other bishops of Antioch.

Macarius, the tenth of this name, who was bishop of Antioch in the 11th century, was an Armenian by nation; he succeeded another bishop of the same name in the government of Antioch, and died in 1012, after having gone as a missionary into Palestine, and suffered imprisonment, and other hardships.

Macarius I, a patriarch of Constantinople for the Greeks in the 14th century, at the same time that James de Vifs bore this title for the Latins. He is said to have held this see upwards of two years. Onuph. in Chron.

Macarius II, was placed over the see of Constantinople after Jeremiah II, who had been expelled in 1573, but did not hold this dignity very long. Genebr. in Chron.

Macarius, archbishop of Ancyra in the 15th century, composed a treatise against the Romish church.

Macarius, St. surnamed the Elder, and a native of Egypt, so called to distinguish him from another of the same name, is said to have passed 60 years of his life in a monastery on Mount Scita, and to have died at the age of 90 in 391. Fifty homilies in Greek attributed to him were printed at Paris in 1526, with Gregory Thaumaturgus, in folio, and in 2 vols. 8vo. Leipzig, 1698. Socrat. Hist. l. 4; S. Hieron. Epist. 22; Niceph. l. 9; Pallad. Hist. c. 18, &c.

Macarius, St. surnamed the Younger, a native of Alexandria, presided over not less than 5000 monks, and died in 395, after having been banished by the Arians to an island, all the inhabitants of which he converted. Rufin. Hist.; Pallad. Hist.; Baron. Annal. &c.

MACARTNEY, George, Earl (Hist.) only son of George Macartney, of Auchinleck, in Scotland, was born in Ireland in 1737; and, after being educated at Trinity College, Dublin, was sent in 1764 as Envoy-Extraordinary to the empress of Russia; appointed governor of Grenada, Foliago, and their dependencies, in 1775; taken prisoner by the French on the capture of the islands, but the next year was nominated governor of Fort St. George; in 1792 was selected as Ambassador Extraordinary of Great Britain to the emperor of China; and died in 1806: an Account of his Embassy was published by Sir George Staunton in 3 vols. 4to. 1797.

MACAULAY, Catherine (Biog.) a female historian and political writer, otherwise called Graham, after her second husband, who died in 1791, was the author of a History of England, from James I to the Brunswick Line, and other works, which were very acceptable to the zealous advocates of liberty in that day.

MACBETH (Hist.) a usurper, who obtained the throne of Scotland in the 11th century by the murder of Duncan, his relation, and rightful sovereign, at Inverness. He also put to death Banquo and Mad-Gill, the faithful adherents of Duncan; but at last fell in battle against Malcolm, son of the murdered Duncan, who, aided by the English, invaded Scotland to assert his right to the crown. His name is become familiar to the English by the tragedy of Shakspeare. The effigy of this usurper is given as in the annexed figure.

MACBRIDE, David (Biog.) a physician, and native of Ballymony, in Ireland, descended from an ancient Scotch family, was born in 1726, and died in 1778, leaving, 1. 'Experimental Essays,' 1764. 2. 'An Introduction to the Theory and Practice of Medicine,' 4to. 1772 and 1777; it was translated into Latin, and published at Ultrecht, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1774.

MACCABÆI (Hist.) or Machabæi, in English Maccabees; the name given to the seven brothers, Jews, who, with their mother, suffered death for their religion during the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, A. C. 168. The same name is also applied to three distinguished brothers among the Jews, Judas, Simon, and Mattathias Maccabæus, who signalized their zeal and constancy in defence of the religion of their forefathers. This name was first given to Judas, who, by distinction, is called Maccabæus. [Vide Judas, Matathias, and Simon] The name Maccabees has also been given to the books containing the history of those times, which form a part of the Scripture generally deemed apocryphal by the Protestants, although the Romish church admit the two first books as canonical.

MAC-CAGHWELL, Hugh (Ecc.) called in Latin Cavellus; titular archbishop of Armagh, who died in 1626, left several commentaries on the works of Duns Scotus, which were incorporated in Wading's edition of Scotus, in 12 vols. fol. Lugd. 1639.

MACCARTHY, Sir Charles (Hist.) a Lieutenant Colonel of the Royal African Corps, was killed in an engagement with the Ashantees in 1824, after having displayed so many virtues in the colony over which he presided as to endear his memory to all who had partaken of his mild administration. He was appointed to that post in 1811.

MACCHIAVELLI, Nicolas (Biog.) vide Machiavel.

MACCLESFIELD, Thomas, Earl of (Hist.) of the second family mentioned under Heraldry, was born at Leake, in Staffordshire; and, being bred to the bar, was called to the degree of Serjeant in 1705; constituted Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench in 1709; one of the Lords Justices on the demise of the queen, until the arrival of her successor from Hanover; was raised to the high post of Chancellor of Great Britain in 1718; appointed again one of the Lords Justices during the absence of king George I in 1719; impeached on charges of corruption in 1725, and being found guilty was fined 30,000*l.* His lordship passed the remainder of his life in retirement, and died in 1732, in the 66th year of his age, leaving his character unblemished by the party prosecution which had been instituted against him.

Macclesfield, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles conferred on Charles Gerard in 1679, whose son Charles, second earl of Macclesfield, was the husband of the lady so memorable as the mother of Richard Savage. He died in 1701, and was succeeded by his brother Fitton, the third earl, on whose death in 1702 the titles became extinct.

Macclesfield, Earl of, one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Parker; of which was the Lord Chancellor abovementioned. [Vide Parker] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Parker, earl of Macclesfield, viscount Parker, and baron Parker, of Macclesfield.

Arms. Gules, a chevron between three leopards' faces or.

Crest. On a wreath a leopard's head erased and guardant or, ducally gorged gules.

Motto. "Sapere aude."

MACDIARMID, John (Biog.) a Scotch writer, and native of Perthshire, was born in 1779, and died in 1807, leaving, 1. 'An Inquiry into the System of Military Defence of Great Britain,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1803. 2. 'An Inquiry into the Nature of Civil and Military Subordination,' 8vo. 1804. 3. 'Lives of British Statesmen,' 4to.

MACDONALD, John, Earl of Ross (Hist.) vide Ross.

MACDONALD, Donald, otherwise styled Donald Gorme, made no claim to the lordship of the Isles, his inheritance [vide Macdonald under Heraldry], owing to the distraction of the times; but he continued faithful to queen Mary until the end of the war.

MACDONALD, Donald, son of the preceding, styled Donald More, or the Great, was in great favour with James VI, whom he assisted in suppressing the irregularities of the Macleods of Lewes, and other disorderly Highlanders. In 1585 he entered into a solemn league offensive and defensive, with the most powerful clans in the highlands, to support the king's authority; and, after rendering acceptable service to his majesty, he died in 1616.

MACDONALD, Donald, nephew of the preceding, otherwise called Donald Gormoge, was in great favour with Charles I, to whom he rendered essential service by making some discoveries of the secret designs of the Covenanters, but died in 1643.

MACDONALD, Sir James, was, with the marquis of Montrose, at the siege of Inverness, and sent some men to assist at the battle of Worcester; but on the termination of the war, he retired to the Isle of Sky, and lived in great privacy.

MACDONALD, Æneas, Lord of Glengary, manifested his loyalty in an eminent manner to Charles I and II, for which he suffered from Cromwell, but was recompensed at the restoration, and died in 1680.

MACDONALD (Her.) or Macdonell, the name of a Scotch family, the most powerful of any in the Highlands, being styled Kings of the Isles for many generations, and acknowledged as such by many foreign princes. The ancestor of all the Macdonalds was Somerled, Thane of Argyl, who flourished about the year 1140, and being of royal descent, entertained hopes during the nonage of Malcolm Canmore, the fourth of that name, of enjoying the kingdom. To his own hereditary possessions on the continent he added the Hebrides, or Western Isles to his fortune, by his marriage with the daughter of Olaus, lord thereof, whereupon he assumed the title of King, or Lord of the Isles. His descendant, Donald, obtained also the earldom of Ross, which, however, was surrendered to the king by John, his grandson; and Donald Macdonald, his descendant in the fourth degree, was created a baronet in 1625. Sir Alexander Macdonald, the eighth baronet, was created baron Macdonald, of Slote, in Ireland. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first argent, a lion rampant gules; second or, a hand in armour, holding a cross crosslet fitchy gules; third or, a row galley or lymphad, the sails furled up, sable; fourth vert, a salmon naiant in fess.

Crest. A hand in armour, holding a cross crosslet fitchy gules.

Supporters. Two tigers tenne, collared or, armed and langued gules.

Motto. "Per mare et terras."

MACDONELL, Sir Randal Mac Sorley (Hist.) Earl of Antrim, vide Antrim.

MACDONELL, Alexander, a stout and active officer, of the family of Macdonell, mentioned under Heraldry, commanded the forces sent by the marquis of Antrim to assist the marquis of Montrose in Scotland; and after his return from that service he was made Lieutenant-general of the province of Munster, and commanded a regiment of Scots-Highlanders, whom he headed at the battle of Knocknoness against the lord Inchochin, where he lost his life in 1647.

MACDONELL, Sir Randall, the third baronet of the same family, a captain of a ship of war in the service of Charles II, performed the memorable action of Mamora against the Moors, burning and destroying a great number of their ships. He adhered to the interests of James II, and died in 1720.

MACDONELL (Her.) a younger branch of the above-mentioned family of Macdonalds, is descended from John, the second son of John, Lord of the Isles, in the 14th century, whose posterity removed into the north of Ireland, where they have flourished ever since. Among these was sir Randall Macdonell above-mentioned, who in 1618 was created viscount of Dunluce, and in 1620 earl of Antrim. His son Randall, the second earl, was created in 1644 marquis of Antrim, which last title became extinct at his death, but the earldom devolved on his brother.

MACDONELL of Glengary above-mentioned, also a descendant from John, Lord of the Isles, was, for his loyalty, created a peer in 1660, with the title of lord Macdonell and Arrass, which title became extinct at his death in 1680.

MACDUFF, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Fife.

MACE, Francis (Biog.) a French divine and scholar, was born at Paris in 1640, and died in 1721, leaving, 1. 'Un Abregé Chronologique, Historique, et Moral de l'Ancien et Nouveau Testament,' 2 vols. 4to. Paris, 1704. 2. 'La Science de l'Ecriture Sainte divisée en quatre Tables,' 4to. Paris, 1708. 3. A French translation of the 'Testament des douze Patriarches,' &c. 12mo. 1713. 4. A translation of the 'Meditations,' &c. of Busee, 2 vols. 12mo. 5. 'Histoire des quatre Cicerons,' 12mo. Paris, 1714.

MACE, Thomas, an English musician in the 17th century, was the author of 'Music's Monument; or, a Remembrancer of the best practical Music.'

MACEDO (Myth.) Μακεδὼν, a son of Osiris, who had a share in the honours paid by the Egyptians to his father. He is said to have been king of Macedonia, and to have given his name to that country.

MACEDO, Francis (Biog.) a Portuguese Jesuit, was born at Coimbra in 1596, and died in 1681, leaving, among his numerous works, 1. 'Elogia Gallorum,' 4to. Aq. Sext. 1641. 2. 'Clavis Augustiniana Liberi Arbitrii.' 3. 'Schema Sanctæ Congregationis,' 4to. 1676. 4. 'Encyclopædia in Agonem Literatorum,' fol. 1677. 5. 'Myrothecium Morale,' 4to. &c.

MACEDONIA (Geog.) Μακεδονία, a celebrated country situated between Thrace, Epirus, and Greece; but its boundaries were afterwards more limited.

Division. Macedonia, properly so called, consisted anciently of many people or regions, as the Taulantii, who inhabited the western part on the Adriatic; the Elymiotæ, also on the coast of the Adriatic, south of the Taulantii; the region of Orestes, near to Epirus; the Dessaretæ, to the north of Orestes; Æmathia, east of the Dessaretæ; Pieria, near to Thessaly, Mygdonia, Chalcidica, Amphaxitis, &c. It is at present divided into four parts, namely, Iamboli, nearest to Thrace; Camenolitari, nearest to Thessaly; Albania, nearest to Illyricum, or Dalmatia; and Macedonia, properly so called, which lies in the middle.

Towns. The principal towns, ancient and modern, are as follow:

Ancient.	Modern.
Dyrrhacium,	Durazzo.
Apollonia,	Valona.
Elyma,	Canina.
Gyrtone,	L'Ocrida.

The principal towns of these now known are Salonichi and Durazzo.

Rivers and Bays. The principal rivers are as follow:

Acheron,	Voleton.
Achelous,	Acarnas.
Peneus,	Igliaco.
Alpheus,
Eurotas,
Inachus,
Cephissus,
Ismenus,
Aliacmon,
Erizon, &c.
Sinus Strymonicus,	Golfo di Contessa.
Sinus Singeticus,	Golfo di Monte Santo.
Sinus Toronaicus,	Golfo d'Aionama.
Sinus Thermæus,	Golfo di Salonichi.

Mountains. The principal mountains are the Olympus, Pindus, Athos, Pelion, Ossa, Tempe, &c.

History. Macedonia, which is said to owe its name to Macedo, one of its kings, was, according to most accounts, first erected into a kingdom by Caranus, an Argive, and a descendant from Hercules, who established himself in that country in 895 years A. C. and 315 after the taking of Troy; whose successors, as far as they can be collected from history, are given in the following order.

Chronological Succession of the Kings of Macedonia.

Perseus being conquered by the Romans 168 years A. C. in the first year of the 153d Olympiad, U. C. 586, Macedonia was converted into a Roman province, after having been governed by its own kings for upwards of 700 years. On the division of the Roman empire Macedonia became subject to the emperors of the East, and from them fell into the hands of the Turks, with whom it has since remained.

Writers on Macedonia.

Herodotus, Aristotle, Polybius, Diodorus, Livy, Strabo, Scylax, Mela, Valerius Maximus, Pliny, Justin, Quintus Curtius, Arrian, Ælian, Plutarch, Athenæus, Eusebius in Chronicon, Cluverius, Cellarius, Usserius in Annalibus, &c.

MACEDONICUS (Hist.) a surname given to Metellus, from his conquests in Macedonia.

MACEDONIUS (Ecc.) an heresiarch of the church of Constantinople, whom the Arians set over that see in 342. He was deposed by the Council of Constantinople in 360, after being found guilty of setting forth some blasphemous notions against the divinity of the Holy Ghost. From him the sect of the Macedonians took its name. S. Athanas. lib de Spirit.; S. Hieron. in Chron.; S. Augustin. de Hæres. 52; Socrat. Hist. l. 2; Sozom. l. 3; Rufin. l. 1.

MACEDONIUS, a second bishop of Constantinople, was raised to that see by the emperor Anastasius, in the place of Euphemius, who was banished. He died in 516, after having suffered much for his steady adherence to the Catholic faith in the midst of the general dereliction, which was favoured by the emperor himself. Theodor. Collect. l. 2; Cedren. in Annal.; Theophanes; Baronius, &c.

MACEDONIUS, a bishop of Mopsuesta, who assisted at the Council of Nice in defence of the Catholic faith, from which he afterwards swerved to take up with Arianism.

MACEDONIUS, a martyr of Phrygia, in the fourth century, was roasted on a gridiron by a slow fire, in the time of the persecution of Julian the martyr. Socrat. Hist. l. 3; Sozom. l. 5; Theodor. Hist. l. 5.

MACEDONIUS, an heretical bishop of Antioch, was placed over the see about 640, after Anastasius III, whose errors he maintained, which obliged pope Martin I to excommunicate him in 649. Martin. i. Epist. 6; Geneb. et Onuph. in Chron.

MACER, C. Licinius (Hist.) an orator, condemned for extortion during Cicero's prætorship. Cic. Attic. l. 1, ep. 4; Val. Max. l. 9.

MACER, L. Clodius, or Claudius, a propraetor of Africa, who assumed the title of emperor; but was slain by Galba.

MADRAS (Geog.) or Fort St. George, called by the natives Chennapatam, a city and fortress of the south of India, and the capital of the British possessions in that quarter, 290 miles E. by S. Seringapatam. Lon. 80° 25′ E. lat. 135° N.

History of Madras.

Madras was built in 1640, on a small territory five miles in length, by one in breadth, purchased from a descendant of the Hindoo dynasty of Biganagur, who then resided at Chandergherry, and named after his father Chennapa. It was taken by the French in 1744, and during the five years they retained it, its fortifications were materially improved. It was restored to the British at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1749; and since that period it has gradually increased in strength, so as to be now one of the strongest fortresses in India. The territory of Madras has also experienced a proportionate increase, so as to comprehend nearly the whole of India south of the river Kistnah, and the extensive province of the Circars. It is subdivided into the districts of Arcot, Bellary, Canara, Chingleput, Chiltore, Coimbatoor, Combaconum, Cuddapat, Gangam, Guntoor, Madras, Seringapatam, Tanjore, Malabar, &c.; besides the rajahs of Mysore, Travancore, and Cochin.

History of Madrid.

Madrid, originally an insignificant place situated on the ruins of the Mantua Carpetanorum, of the ancients, and called in the Latin of the middle ages Madritum, Matritum, or Madridium in Carpetanis, was founded by the Saracens, or the Visigoths, and became the capital of the kingdom in the reign of Philip II, who first made it a royal residence. It was sacked by the Moors in 1109, took a decided part in favour of the Bourbons in the war of the succession, and was occupied successively by the French and English during the late peninsular war. A council was held in Madrid by Roderic, legate of the Holy See during the pontificate of Paul II in 1473.

MÆANDER (Geog.) Μαίανδρος, a river of Asia Minor, rising near Celænæ, and flowing through Caria and Ionia into the Ægean Sea, between Miletus and Priene, after it has been increased by the waters of the Marsyas, Lycus, Eudon, Lethæus, &c. now called by the Turks Madre. It is celebrated by the poets for its windings, which are said to have been not less than 600, whence the term mæander has been employed, to signify winding.

Ovid. Met. l. 8, v. 145, &c.

MÆON (Myth.) Μαίων, a Theban, son of Hæmon, who, with 50 of his companions, having attacked Tydeus on his approach to the city, his whole company were killed except himself.

MÆONIA (Geog.) the former name of Lydia. [Vide Lydia]

MÆONIA (Numis.) this country is distinguished on medals by its ancient name, as MAIONΩN, or MAιονων. MAIONIA, to which is frequently added the name of their magistrates, as MAIONΩN EΠI AYP. AΠΦIANOY APXA, i. e. Maeonum sub Aurelio Apphiano Pontifice primo. EΠI ZHNΩNOC APX. A. MAIΩNΩN, i. e. sub Aurelio Zenone Archonte primo Mæonum. EΠI AYP. ZHNΩNOC CAP. ΠP; and sometimes, IEPA CYNKΛHTOC. The Mæonians honoured Bacchus, Ceres, Jupiter, and Diana, on their medals, but still more Hercules, to whom they referred their origin; as also to Omphale, their queen, and the mistress of this hero, holding a club in her left hand. They struck medals as an independent state, and also in honour of Nero, M. Aurelius, Alexander Severus, Julia Mamæa, Tranquillina, Trajan Decius, Herennia, Etruscilla.

MÆONIDÆ (Myth.) a name given to the Muses, because Homer, their greatest and worthiest favourite, was supposed to be a native of Mæonia.

MÆOTIS, Palus (Geog.) a large lake between Europe and Asia, at the north of the Euxine, now called the Sea of Azoph.

Lucan. l. 2, v. 640.

Pigra palus Scythici patiens Mæotica plaustri.

Ovid. Trist. l. 3, el. 12.

Frigora jam Zephyri minuunt; annoque peracto
Longior antiquis visa Mæotis hyems.

Ibid. l. 3.

MAESTLINUS, Michael (Biog.) an astronomer of Germany, was born in 1542, and died in 1590, leaving among his works 'De Stella nova Cassiopeïa;' 'Ephemerides;' 'Thesis de Eclipsibus;' 'Epitome Astronomiæ,' &c.

MAESTRICHT (Geog.) a town of the Netherlands, situated on the Maese, or Meuse, where it is joined by the Jaen, 14 m. N. by E. Liege, 56 E. Brussels. Lon. 5° 13′ E. lat. 50° 48′ N. This town, which in the Latin of the middle ages is distinguished by the names of Trajectum Superius, Trajectum ad Mosam, or Obtricum, is one of the strongest places in the Netherlands, which has been exposed to several sieges and captures, as by the Prince of Orange in 1632, by Louis XIV in 1673; it was attacked by William Prince of Orange in 1676, but he was obliged to raise the siege. It was ceded to the Dutch at the peace of Nimeguen, but fell into the hands of the French during the late revolutionary war.

MÆVIUS (Biog.) a poet of inferior note, whose name has escaped oblivion by the mention which Virgil and Horace have made of him.

MAFFEI (Hist.) an illustrious and ancient family of Italy, originally of Bologna, from which it was driven, with many other families, in 1724; when the party of the Gibelins prevailed over that of the Guelfs. One branch of this family settled at Verona, where they held the highest offices of the state. Other branches settled at Rome, Mirandula, and Turin; of this latter branch was count Maffei, viceroy of Sicily, who was sent Ambassador into England, and as first Plenipotentiary from the court of Savoy, at the congress of Utrecht.

MAFFEI, Alexander, otherwise known by the name of the Marquis Maffei, was born at Verona in 1662, and early engaged in arms, distinguished himself at the siege of Strigonia in 1683, at the battle of Salankerman, in Hungary, in 1691, where he was wounded, at the battle of Ramillies, where he was taken prisoner, and at the battle of Belgrade, where he contributed materially to the victory gained over the Turks. He died in 1730.

MAFFEI, Scipio, brother of the preceding, was born at Verona in 1675, and after having distinguished himself in arms, he obtained still greater celebrity by his writings, and died in 1755, leaving, 1. 'La Scienza Cavalleresca,' 4to. Rome, 1710, and reprinted several times. 2. 'La Mérope,' a tragedy, of which there were several editions, the third printed in 4to. 1714, and the eighth at London, 8vo. 1721, translated into French, and published with the original at Paris, in 1718. 3. 'Rime è Prose,' &c. 4to. 1719; translated into French, and published with the notes of the translator, in the two first volumes of the 'Bibliotheque Italique ou Histoire Littéraire de l'Italie,' &c. 12mo. Geneva, 1728. 4. 'Ceremonie,' a comedy, several times printed, and among others, with the Merope, at Verona, in 1730. 5. 'Dell' Antica condizione di Verona, ricerca Istorica,' &c. 8vo. Venice, 1719. 6. 'Traduttori Italiani,' &c. 8vo. Venice, 1720. 7. 'Teatro Italiano, o sia Scelta di Tragedie per uso della scena,' &c. 3 vols. 8vo. 1723. 8. 'Cassiodori Complexiones in Epistolas et Acta Apostolorum,' &c. Florent. 1721, and Rotterdam, 1738. 9. 'Istoria Diplomatica,' &c. 4to. Mantua, 1727. 10. 'Degli Ampitheatri,' &c. Verona, 1728. 11. 'Supplementum Acaciarum,' &c. Venet. 1728. 12. 'Verona Illustrata,' fol. or in 4 vols. 8vo. Veron. 1732. 13. 'Galliæ Antiquitates quædam Selectæ, atque in plures Epistolas Distributæ,' 4to. Paris. 1733. 14. 'Il Primo Canto de Iliade,' &c. London, 1737. 15. 'La Religion de Gentili nel morire,' &c. 4to. Paris, 1736. 16. 'Osservazioni Letterarie,' &c. 6 vols. 8vo. Verona, 1737, besides some theological pieces, &c. A complete edition of his works was published in 18 vols. 8vo. Venice, 1790.

MAFFEI, Timothy (Ecc.) of the same family, and archbishop of Ragusa, in the pontificate of Paul II, was distinguished both for his piety and his learning. He was the author of some Dialogues on the ignorance of the monks, entitled 'In Sanctam Rusticitatem litteras Impugnantem Dialogi,' of which mention is made by Scipio Maffei, in his 'Verona Illustrata,' besides which he wrote some theological pieces.

MAFFEI, Vegio (Biog.) an ecclesiastic of the city of Lodi, near Milan, who died in 1458, was the author of a book, 'De Educatione Liberorum,' &c. 4to. 1511, besides several theological treatises, &c.

MAFFEI, Celsus, a relation of the preceding, who died in 1508, was the author of, 1. 'Dissuasoria a Principi dall' Appropriarsi i Censi Ecclesiastici,' Bologna, 1494. 2. 'Suasoria ad Venetos.' 3. 'De Laudibus Reipublicæ Venetæ Oratio.' 4. 'De Interdicto,' &c. besides other works.

MAFFEI, John Peter, a Jesuit, and native of Bergamo, who died about 1605, at the age of 69, wrote, 1. 'Libri Tres de Vita et moribus Sancti Ignatii Loyolæ,' &c. 8vo. Venet. 1585, and reprinted several times since. 2. 'Historiarum Indicarum Libri XVI,' fol. Florent. 1588; Colonn. 1589, and several times since in 8vo. and 4to.; the quarto edition of Bergamo in 1747, is reckoned the best.

MAGALOTTI, Laurence (Biog.) a mathematician and philosopher of Rome, was born in 1637, and died in 1712, leaving, 1. 'Saggi di Naturali esperienze fatte nel Academia de Cimento,' &c. fol. 1666 and 1691. 2. 'Lettera proemiale,' &c. 1680. 3. 'Lettere scientifiche,' 4to. Florence, 1721. 4. 'Canzonette Anacreontische,' &c. 1723. 5. 'Lettere familiare,' 4to. Venice, 1761.

MAGAS (Hist.) a king of Cyrene, in the age of Ptolemy Philadelphus, who reigned 50 years, and died A. C. 257. Polyæn. l. 2.

MAGELLAN (Hist.) or Magalhaens, Ferdinand de, a Portuguese navigator, who served with distinction under Albuquerque in the conquest of India, was sent by Charles V on a voyage of discovery in 1519, and after having passed through the Straits at the southern extremity of America, which still bear his name, he was slain at the Ladrone islands in 1520. One of his ships only, with 18 men, escaped; and after sailing round the world, reached Seville in 1521. [Vide Plate XV]

MAGGI (Hist.) or Maggius Jerome, a civilian, and native of Anghiari, in Tuscany, who, having settled in Famagouste, in Cyprus, rendered considerable service to the Venetians in the capacity of engineer, when this place was besieged by the Turks, but on the capture of the whole island, he was carried in chains to Constantinople, and strangled in prison in 1572 or 1573. He was the author of several works, namely, 'De Mundi Exitio per Exustionem;' 'Vitæ Illustrium Virorum autore, Æmilio Probo cum Commentariis,' &c. &c.

MAGINI (Biog.) or Maginus, John Anthony, a professor of mathematics at Bologna, was born at Padua in 1536, and died in 1618, leaving, 1. His 'Ephemeris,' 3 vols. from 1580 to 1630. 2. 'Tabulæ Secundorum Mobilium.' 3. 'Theoria Planetarum juxta Copernicas Observationes.'

4. 'De planis Triangulis Lib. I.' 5. 'Primum Mobile Lib. XII.' 6. 'Problemata Astronomica,' &c. 7. 'Comment. in Geograph. Ptolemæi.' 8. 'Italiæ Descriptio,' &c.

MAGIUS, Decius (Hist.) a man of consequence at Capua, who distinguished himself by his steady adherence to the Romans in the second Punic war. Cic. in Pis. 2, &c.; Liv. l. 23.

MAGIUS, Lucius, an adherent of Marius, who revolted to Mithridates, but was afterwards reconciled to his countrymen. Cic. in Verr.

MAGIUS, grandfather to the historian Paterculus, who was in the interest of Pompey. Paterc. l. 2.

MAGNA GRÆCIA (Geog.) vide Græcia.

MAGNA MATER (Myth.) the name given to the goddess Cybele.

MAGLIABECCHI, Anthony (Biog.) an Italian of an astonishing memory, who was born in 1633, and died in 1714, left a library of his collection for the use of the public, with funds for its support; of which, after it had received considerable accessions, a catalogue was published, entitled 'Catalogus Codicum sæculo XV Impressorum in Bibliotheca Magliabechiana, Florentiæ adversantur,' 3 vols. fol. Florent. 1793—1795. Although he never composed any thing himself, yet the republic of letters is indebted to him for the publication of the Latin poems of Henry de Settimello; the 'Hodæporicon' of Ambrose Camaldula; the 'Dialogus' of Benedict Aretin, and some other works. 'A Collection of Letters addressed to him by Literary Men,' was printed at Florence in 1745.

MAGNÆUS, Arnas (Biog.) a native of Iceland, was born in 1663, and died in 1730, leaving, 1. 'Incerti Autoris vetusti Chronicon Danorum, et præcipuè Sialandiæ,' 8vo. 1685. 2. 'Magni Regis Norvegiæ Testamentum,' inserted by the Abbe Lenglet in his 'Supplement à la Methode pour etudier l'Histoire,' &c.

MAGNENTIUS, Magnus (Hist.) one of the usurpers of the imperial dignity in the time of Constantius, a German by birth, according to Julian the Apostate, revolted from Constans, his benefactor; and having caused himself to be proclaimed emperor in 350, put the latter soon after to death; but being defeated by Constantius, he killed himself at Lyons, after having murdered his own mother, and the rest of his relations. Julian. Orat.; Aurel. Vict. in Epit.; Socrat. Hist. l. 2; Sozom. l. 4; Marcellin. in Chron.; Eutropius, Zosimus, &c.

MAGNENTIUS (Numis.) medals are extant of this usurper, bearing his effigy as in the annexed figure; inscriptions FL. MAGNENTIUS P. F. AUG.—MAG. MAGNENTIUS—D. N. MAGNENTIUS AUG.—D. N. MAGNENTIUS P. F. AUG.—IMP. CAES. MAGNENTIUS AUG.; on the reverse, BEATITUDO PUBLICA—FEL. TEMP. MAGNES (Myth.) a shepherd of Mount Ida, who found himself held back by the iron-nails of his shoes as he was walking over the stones; whence the power of the magnet was discovered, and its name derived. Plin. l. 36.

MAGNESIA (Geog.) Μαγνησία, the name of several cities among the ancients; the three principal of which are, 1. A town of Ionia, in Asia Minor, on the Mæander, about 15 miles from Ephesus, now Guzelhigar. 2. A town of Lydia, at the foot of Mount Sipylus. 3. A town in Thessaly. Liv. l. 37; Strab. l. 13, &c.; Plin. 45, &c.; Ptol. l. 5, &c.

MAGNESIA (Numis.) medals are ascribed to the three towns above-mentioned; that of Ionia is distinguished by the inscriptions ΜΑΓΝΗΣΙΑ ΠΡΟΣ ΤΩ ΜΑΙΑΝΔΡΩ—ΜΑΓΝ. ΜΑΙΑΝΔΡ.; frequently with the name of their magistrates, as ΕΠ. ΓΡ. ΗΓΗϹΙΠΠΟΥ ΑΡΙϹΤΕΟΥ ΜΑΓΝΗΤΩΝ, i. e. sub Scriba Egesippo, vel Hegesippo Aristeæ filio; or ΕΠΙ. ϹΤΡ. ΑΥΡ. ΦΡΟΝΤΩΝΟϹ ΜΑΓΝΗΤΩΝ, i. e. sub Prætore Aurelio Frontone; and the addition of the title Metropolis, as ΕΠΙ. ΔΙΟϹΚΟΡΙΔΟΥ ΓΡΑΤΟΥ ΜΗΤΡ. ΜΑΓΝΗΤΩΝ, i. e. sub Dioscoride Grato Metropoleos Magnesiorum; sometimes also it is styled ΜΑΓΝΗΤΩΝ ΕΒΔΟΜΗ ΑϹΙΑϹ, i. e. Magnesiorum septima Asiæ, scilicet urbs; and on other medals Neocori, as ΜΑΓΝΗΤΩΝ ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ ΤΗϹ ΑΡΤΕΜΙΔΟϹ, i. e. Magnesiorum Neocororum Dianæ. This town struck medals either as an independent state, or in honour of Tiberius, Claudius, Domitius, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, Faustina, jun., Sept. Severus, Domna, Heliogabalus, Caracalla, Julia Mæsa, Alexander Severus, Julia Mamæa, Maximinus, Maximus, Gordianus Pius, Philip, sen. and jun. and Gallienus. Diana was particularly honoured in this town by the name of Diana Leucophryne, her name occurring frequently on their coins.

MAGNESIA, in Lydia, is also distinguished on medals by its situation near Mount Sipylus, as ΜΑΓΝΗΤΩΝ ϹΙΠ.—ϹΙΠΥ.—ΠΡ. ϹΙΠΥ, i. e. πρὸς Σιπύλῳ, vel ΑΠΟ ϹΙΠΥ. vel ϹΙΠΥΛΟΥ. Its medals are likewise sometimes inscribed ΙΕΡΑ. ϹΥΝΚΛΗΤΟϹ, i. e. sacer senatus; and sometimes with the name of its magistrates, as ΕΠΙ ΣΤΡ. Λ. ΙΟΥΟΔΙΟΥ ΜΑΓΝΗΤΩΝ ϹΙΠΥ.; i. e. sub Prætore Lucio Ævodio Magnesiorum Sipyli. This town struck medels as an independent state, and also in honour of Augustus, Livia Caligula, Germanicus, Agrippina, Nero, Poppæa, Domitian, Domitia, Longina, Commodus, Crispina, Caracalla, Aquilia Severa, Julia Mæsa, Alexander Severus, Mamæa, Gordianus Pius, Philip, sen., Otacilia, Philip, jun., Trajan Decius, Etruscilla, Valerian, sen. and Gallienus. Its types consisted of the figures of Jupiter, Cybele, Apollo, Fortuna, Victory, &c.

MAGNESIA, in Thessaly, medals are commonly ascribed to this town, bearing the figure of the ship Argos, and sometimes the inscription ΑΡΓΩ ΜΑΓΝΗΤΩΝ. Vaillant. Gr.; Spanh. Dissert.; Beg. Thes. Brand.; Harduin. Oper.; Tristan. Comm. Hist.; Peller. Rec. de Med. tom. i.; Hunt. Mus.

MAGNIA Urbica (Numis.) an empress known only by her medals, bearing her effigy as in the annexed figure, and the inscription MAGNIAE URBICAE AUG.; but of whom she was the wife is altogether uncertain, having been assigned by different writers to Maxentius, Magnentius, Carus, Carinus, &c. Med. Impp.; Cimel. Vindob. tom. i.

MAGNOL, Peter (Biog.) a botanist of Montpellier, who was born in 1638, and died in 1715, wrote 'Botanicum Montpeliense,' 'Novus Character Plantarum,' &c. The Magnolia was called after him.

MAGNUS (Hist.) the surname of Pompey from the greatness of his exploits.

MAGNUS, the name of two kings of Norway and Denmark.

MAGNUS I, succeeded S. Olac on the throne of Norway, and Canute II on that of Denmark in 1045, which latter kingdom he governed for four years.

MAGNUS II, his son, reigned in Denmark 28 years until 1070.

MAGNUS III, succeeded his father Magnus II, and was succeeded by Magnus IV, who reigned 52 years until 1180.

MAGNUS, the name of two kings of Sweden.

MAGNUS I, son of Eric, reigned until 1315.

MAGNUS II, succeeded his brother Aquinus III.

MAGNUS, John (Ecc.) archbishop of Upsal, in Sweden, was very zealous in the 16th century in defence of the Romish church against the Lutherans. He was sent as legate into Sweden by Adrian VI, Clement VII, and Paul III, and died in 1544, leaving, 1. 'Historia Gothorum et Sueonum;' of which the folio edition, printed at Rome in 1554, is the most esteemed. 2. 'De Vitis Pontificum Ecclesiæ Upsalensis,' fol. Rom. 1557 and 1560.

MAGNUS, Olaus, brother to the preceding, and his successor on the see of Upsal, died in 1555, after displaying no less zeal against the innovations that were then set on foot on pretence of reformation. He was the author of 'Epitome Historiæ de Gentibus Septentrionalibus,' 4to. Antv. 1558, fol. Venet. 1565, Bas. 1567, &c.

MAGO (Hist.) Μάγων, a Carthaginian general sent against Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, whom he conquered and compelled to sign a treaty. He was killed in battle soon after this treaty. Diodor. l. 1.

MAGO, son of the preceding, succeeded to the command of the army in Sicily; but having disgraced himself by a shameful flight at the approach of Timoleon to the aid of the Syracusans, he put an end to his own existence in order to escape the sentence, which awaited him. His body was afterwards hung on a gibbet. Plut. in Timol.

MAGO, a Carthaginian, sent by his countrymen to assist the Romans against Pyrrhus and the Tarentines, with a fleet of 120 sail. This Mago was the father of Asdrubal and Amilcar. Justin. l. 18, 19.

MAGO, a brother of Annibal, who was present at the battle of Cannæ, and afterwards defeated the two Scipios in Spain; but was himself totally ruined in another engagement. He retired to the Balearcs, where he founded the city called after him Portus Magonis, or Port Mahon; and landing afterwards in Italy, he was defeated by Quintilius Varus, and died of a mortal wound 203 years before the Christian æra. Cornelius Nepos, however, gives a different account of his death. Polyb. l. 2; Liv. l. 22; C. Nep. in Annib.

MAGO (Biog.) a Carthaginian, who wrote a work on husbandry, which was preserved by Scipio at the capture of Carthage, and translated by Cassius Dionysius of Utica, and into Latin by order of the Roman senate. Cic. Or. l. 1; Varr. de Re Rust. l. 1; Plin. l. 18, &c.

MAGOG (Bibl.) מגוג, son of Japheth (Gen. x.), and father of the Scythians, as is believed. Joseph. Antiq. l. 1.

MAGONIS Portus (Geog.) a town of the Balearcs, now Port Mahon, built by Mago above-mentioned.

MAGUIRE, Charles (Biog.) a native of Ireland, and canon of the church of Armagh, who died in 1498, was the author of 'Annales Hiberniæ usque ad sua Tempora,' which were afterwards continued by Roderick Cassidy, 1541; but though quoted by Usher, Ware, and other authors, with great commendation, they have never been printed.

MAHALATH (Bibl.) מחלת, wife of Rehoboam, king of Judah (2 Chron. xi. 18); also daughter of Ishmael, and wife of Esau. Gen. xxviii. 9.

MAHALEEL (Bibl.) or Malaleel, son of Canaan, of the race of Seth. Gen. v.

MAHALI (Bibl.) מחלי, eldest son of Merari, chief of a family. Exod. vi.

MAHANAIM (Bibl.) מחנים, a city of the Levites of the family of Merari.

MAHARAI (Bibl.) מהרי, a Netopathite, of the race of the Zarhites, and chief of David's guards. 2 Sam. xxiii.

MAHERBAL (Hist.) a Carthaginian, who was at the siege of Saguntum, and commanded the cavalry at the battle of Cannæ, when he advised Annibal to march immediately to Rome. Liv. l. 21, &c.

MAHLAH (Bibl.) מחלה, a daughter of Zelophehad, who, with her sisters, received their allotment in the land of Canaan, because their father died without male issue. Numb. xxvi. &c.

MAHLON (Bibl.) מחלון, son of Elimelech and Naomi, who married Ruth. He died without children, and Ruth became the wife of Boaz. Ruth i. &c.

MAHMED, Aga (Hist.) a Persian nobleman, and a warrior of considerable renown in his day, was particularly successful against the Russians, whom he was on the point of shutting out from the Caspian Sea, when death stopped the progress of his conquests in 1788.

MAHMUD, Gazni (Hist.) called also Soltân Mahmûd, son of Sabektigen, and the first sultan of the race of the Gaznevides, of whose power his father laid the foundations, no sooner succeeded to the dominions of the latter in Chorasan than he penetrated into India, where he made considerable conquests, and died in the year of the Hegira 421, A. D. 1031, after a reign of 31 years, during which he was very successful as a warrior.

MAHMUD, son of Malec Shah, third sultan of the Seljuks of Iran, was invested with the insignia of empire; but on the defeat of his troops by his eldest brother Barkiarôk, he resigned his throne to the latter, and contented himself with Isphahan and its dependencies.

MAHMUD, surnamed Mogayâthô'ddin, second son of Mohammed, sultan of Bagdad, was proclaimed his father's successor in the year of the Hegira 511, A. D. 1121; but being defeated by his uncle Sangar, he consented to a division of the Seljukian empire, and died after a reign of 13 years.

MAHMUD, Mir, son of Mir Weis, succeeded his father on the throne of Persia after the defeat and dethronement of Shah Husseyn in the year of the Hegira 1112, A. D. 1722, and was slain, after a reign of three years, in the 27th year of his age.

MAHMUD, Ben Faraj', a famous impostor, who gave himself out to be Moses; but being apprehended, the caliph Motawakkel ordered him to be beaten with clubs till he died.

MAHOMET (Hist.) or Mohammed, the Arabian impostor, was born at Mecca, according to the general account, in 571 or 572, although some have placed his birth in 560, 578, 580, 593, 600, and even 620. His father, who was a pagan, was named Abdallah; his mother, a Jewess, was named Ermine: but although poor he is not generally supposed to have been of low extraction; for, according to the Eastern writers, he was descended in a direct line from Ishmael, the son of Abraham; and his grandfather Abdâl Motâlleb, by whom he was brought up, was a prince, or chief of the Koreish. On the death of the latter, he was reduced to the necessity of serving a rich Arabian merchant, whose widow, Khadijah, he afterwards married, and was thus raised to the condition of the greatest wealth. He then chose for his companions Batiras, an heretical Jacobite; Sergius, a Nestorian monk; and some Jews; by whose assistance he compiled the Koran, which he imposed on his countrymen by various artifices, but still more so by the power of the sword, with which he slew all that refused to acknowledge him as the true Prophet. He died in the 11th year of the Hegira, A. D. 621; and was henceforth honoured with the title of the Apostle of God by his followers, who were denominated Moslems, Musselmen, or Mahometans; and the religion which they professed was called Islamism, or Mahometanism. The Koran has been translated into English by Sale, in 2 vols. 4to. and 2 vols. 8vo.; and into French by Du Ruyer, and by Savarz. The best edition of the original, in Arabic and Latin, is said to be that by Maracci at Padua, in 2 vols. fol. 1698. Among the biographers of this impostor may be reckoned Abulfeda, Maracci, Savary, Sale, Prideaux, Boulainvilliers, D'Herbelot, Gagnier, Gibbon, and the author of the first volume in the Modern Universal History. Mahomet was succeeded by Abu Becr, who was elected his caliph or successor agreeably, as is said, to the wishes of the deceased prophet. [Vide Syria]

MAHOMET, son of Abdalrahman II, and grandson of Hakem, the fifth caliph of the Arabians in Spain, succeeded his father in the year of the Hegira 238, A. D. 848, and died at the age of 68, in the year of the Hegira 273, after having inflicted signal vengeance on the inhabitants of Toledo, on account of a revolt. Rod. Tolet. de Reb. Hist.; Vas. Hisp. Chron.; Gol. Not. ad Alfragan.

MAHOMET, or Mohammed, Ben Thaher, the fifth and last prince of the Thaherites, who reigned under the authority of the caliphs in Chorasan and the neighbouring provinces, was taken prisoner by his rival Jacob, in the year of the Hegira 259, A. D. 869.

MAHOMET, or Sultan Mohammed, brother to Barkiarok, became by his death possessor of the Seljukian empire, for which he had striven during his life-time, and died in the year of the Hegira 511.

MAHOMET, or Mohammed II, the 11th Seljukian sultan, died in the year of the Hegira 554, A. D. 1164, at the age of 32, after a reign of seven years.

MAHOMET, Shah, the name of two Seljukian sultans, of the dynasty of Kerman, who begun to reign in the years of the Hegira 536 and 583.

MAHOMET, Karazm Shah, of Khowarazm, being defeated by Jenghiz Khan, died a fugitive in the year of the Hegira 611, A. D. 1221, after a reign of five years.

Princes and Cheriffs of Morocco of this Name.

MAHOMET, Enacer, fourth king of Morocco, of the race of the Almohades, succeeded his father in the year of the Hegira 603, A. D. 1213, and died after a reign of six years of grief at losing a battle against the Christians, whom he attacked in Spain with an immense army.

MAHOMET, Budobas, seventh king of Morocco, killed Abdelcader, the nephew and successor of Ceyed, in order to mount the throne; but was killed in battle by Aben-Josef, usurper of Fez, who, making himself master of Morocco, put an end to the dynasty of the Almohades. Leo. Afric. l. 3; Gramm. Afric. Illus.; Marmol. L'Afrique, l. 2.

MAHOMET, Ben Mahomet, a cazir, or cheriff of Numidia, affected great sanctity, and sending his three sons Abdelquiver, Hamet, and Mahomet on a pilgrimage to Mecca, he procured for them such a reputation for sanctity, that the youngest of them, the subject of the next article, became cheriff of Morocco.

MAHOMET, the first cheriff, or emperor of Morocco, and the youngest son of Mahomet above-mentioned, gained possession of the throne of Morocco on the death of his brother Hamet, whom he besieged and took prisoner in Tafilet in 1555, and was assassinated in 1557, by Hassan, a captain of the guards, whom the king of Algiers had bribed to this action. Diego de Tor. Hist. de Cher.; Thuan. Hist. l. 7.

Turkish Sultans of this Name.

MAHOMET I, son to Bajazet, succeeded his brother Moses, whom he put to death in 1413, and died at Adrianople in 1421, at the age of 47, after having conquered Cappadocia, Servia, Wallachia, and other provinces.

MAHOMET II, was born in 1430, succeeded his father Amurath in 1451, and died in 1481, just as he was on the point of subjugating Italy, after having subdued two empires, 12 tributary kingdoms, and 200 towns; but his name has been rendered memorable in history principally by his siege and capture of Constantinople, when he put an end to the eastern empire of Rome. Some of his letters were collected by Laudin, a knight of Rhodes, written in the Syriac, Greek, and Turkish, from which he translated them into Latin; this translation has been published at different times, as in 4to. Lugd. 1520; 12mo. Basil. 1554; published in a collection by Oporinus, 8vo. Marpurg. 1604; 12mo. Lips. 1690; Melchior Junius, professor of eloquence at Strasburg, published at Montbaliard, in 1595, a collection of Letters, in which there are three written by Mahomet II to Scanderbeg.

MAHOMET III, succeeded his father Amurath III in 1595, and died in 1603, at the age of 39, after having ordered 19 of his brothers to be strangled, and 10 of his father's wives to be drowned; and also waged an unsuccessful war against Hungary.

MAHOMET IV, succeeded his father Ibrahim I in 1649, was deposed by his Janissaries in 1687, and died in confinement in 1691.

MAHOMET V, son of Mustapha II, succeeded in 1730, on the deposition of his uncle Achmet III, and died in 1754, after a mild reign, which was distinguished by no military exploits.

Persian and Tartar Princes of this Name.

MAHOMET, or Mohammed Beg, sultan of the dynasty of the Turcomans, named Koinlus, or White Sheep, was son of Joseph, and grandson of Uzum Hassan. He was killed after a year's reign by Morad Beg, of the same family.

MAHOMET, or Mohammed Schah Ben Cara Joseph, second prince or sultan of the Turcomans, of the race of the Cara Coin, or Black Sheep, succeeded his father, the founder of this dynasty, and was killed after a reign of 23 years, by Ahmed Hamadani, in the year of the Hegira 833, A. D. 1444.

MAHOMET, or Mohammed Kodabendeh Ben Thahamah, succeeded his brother Israel on the throne of Persia in the year of the Hegira 985, A. D. 1577, and died after a reign of six or seven years, during which he waged war with little success against the Turks.

MAHOMET, or Nasro'ddin Mohammed Shah, twelfth descendant of Tamerlane, and emperor of the Moguls, begun to reign in 1720, and died after a reign of 27 years, during which he lost the greater part of his dominions, which were taken from him by Nadir Shah, the invader of Hindostan.

MAHOMET, Ghirei, or Zirci Khan, of Little Tartary, was the first who refused to send his eldest son to the grand seignior as a hostage; for, having experienced great indignities while in that situation himself, he resolved as soon as he came to the throne to shake off this insupportable yoke.

MAHOMET, Galadan, emperor of the Moguls, distinguished himself by his justice and his clemency, and entertained such a regard for the Christian religion, that he would, as is said, have embraced it, but for the prohibition which it enjoined against polygamy.

MAHOMET, the first vizier, and son-in-law of the sultan Selim II, secured the throne to the latter at the death of his father Soliman in 1565, which, by this means, he obtained, and preserved the most entire ascendancy over his master.

MAHOMET-ALI-BEG, grand-master of the house of the king of Persia, was raised from the condition of a peasant to enjoy the favour and esteem of Shah-Abbas I, and his successor Shah-Safi, and died in the service of the latter notwithstanding the endeavours which were made to lessen his credit with this prince. Tavern. Voy. de Perse.

MAHOMETTA (Geog.) a town of Africa, on the E. coast of Tunis, in a bay or gulf of the Mediterranean, to which it gives its name, 36 m. S. Tunis. Lon. 10° 30′ E. lat. 36° 15′ S. It is the Adrumetum of the Latins, and is called by the Arabians at present Hamametha. It was formerly more considerable than at present, being the see of a bishop, where a council was held in 394. Marmol. Descript. de l'Afrique; Baron. Annal.; Mercator. Geogr.

'Philosophia Sacra,' the first volume of which appeared in 1652, and was followed by three other volumes; a second edition of the whole was published in 1673.

MAILLA, Joseph Anne Maria de Moyriac de (Ecc.) a Jesuit, was born in the province of Bugey in 1670, sent as a missionary to China in 1703, and died in 1748. He procured the esteem of the emperor Ham-Hi, by whom he was employed in the construction of maps. He likewise translated the 'Great Annals' of China into French, and transmitted his MS. to France in 1737, comprising the complete History of the Chinese Empire. The first volumes appeared in 1777, under the care of the Abbé Grosier, and the whole was completed by him in 13 volumes, 4to.

MAILLARD, Oliver (Biog.) a famous preacher, and native of Paris, who died in 1502, was entrusted with several honourable employments by Innocent VIII, and Charles VIII of France, and Ferdinand of Arragon. His Latin sermons were printed at Paris, in 3 vols. 8vo. in 1711—1730.

MAILLE, Breze Urban de (Hist.) a marshal of France, was sent as ambassador into Sweden, and died in 1650, at the age of 55, after having distinguished himself in the field on several occasions.

MAILLE, Breze Armand de, duke of Fronsac, began his military career with distinction in Flanders in 1638, obtained a naval victory over the Spanish fleet in 1640, and died in 1646, at the age of 27, after having been employed both in the cabinet and the field from an early period.

MAILLE, Breze Simon de (Ecc.) of the same family as the preceding, and archbishop of Tours, was raised successively to the see of Viviers, and the archiepiscopal see of Tours in 1554, held a provincial council in 1583, and died in 1597, leaving a reputation for great piety and learning. He translated the Homilies of Basil from the Greek into the Latin.

MAILLEBOIS, John Baptist Demarets, Marquis of (Hist.) a marechal of France, distinguished himself in the service of Louis XIV, in the war of the Spanish succession, in two brilliant campaigns in Italy, and afterwards in an expedition against Corsica, as also in subsequent campaigns in Germany and Italy; but in 1746 he was defeated by the famous count Brown, in the battle of Placentia, and died in 1762. The account of his campaigns in Italy, written by the marquis de Pezay, was published in 1775, in 3 vols. 4to.

MAILLET, Benedict de (Biog.) a French theorist, was born of a noble family of Lorraine in 1659, and died in 1738, leaving some papers, from which a Description of Egypt was published in 4to. in 1743; and afterwards in 2 vols. 12mo.

MAIMONIDES, Moses (Biog.) a rabbi, of an illustrious family at Cordova, in Spain, was born in 1131, and died in 1204, leaving numerous works, the principal of which, known by Hebrew translations from the Arabic originals, are his 'Mischne Terah;' 'More Nevochim;' 'Peruschim; or, Commentaries upon the Misna,' &c. His 'More Nevochim' has been translated into Latin by Buxtorf.

MAIMBOURG, Louis (Biog.) a Jesuit, and a descendant of an ancient family of Nancy, in Lorraine, was born in 1610, and died in 1686, leaving 'Une Methode pacifique, pour ramener sans Dispute les Protestans à la Vraie Foi sur le Point de l'Eucharistie;' 'De la Vraie Eglise;' besides histories of Arianism, of the Iconoclasts, the Crusades, the Schism of the West, the Schism of the Greeks, of the Decline of the Empire, &c.; all which works have been published in 16 vols.

MAINE (Geog.) a late province of France, which now forms the departments of Maine and Sarte. Its inhabitants were called by Cæsar and Ptolemy the Cenomani Aulerci.

MAINFROY (Hist.) natural son of Frederic II, being made guardian to Conrad, son of Conrad IV of Sicily, governed the kingdom for many years under this title; but having embroiled himself with the pope, he was excommunicated by Urban IV, and the kingdom given to Charles of Anjou, who attacked the usurper in 1266, when Mainfroy was defeated and slain, and his body thrown into a ditch, as an excommunicated person.

MAINTENON, Madame de (Hist.) a lady whose family name was d'Aubigné. M. d'Aubigné, her grandfather, a man of rank, and a leading man among the Protestants in France, was born in 1550, and died in 1630. Her father, Constance d'Aubigné, married the daughter of Peter de Cardillac, lord of Lane; but being committed to prison for some offence soon after their marriage, Madame d'Aubigné preferred to be shut up with him. In this prison Madame de Maintenon was born in 1635, was married in 1651 to the Abbé Scarron, and secretly to Louis XIV in 1685, after having lived with him for some time as a mistress, when she assumed the name of Maintenon, from the lands of Maintenon, which the king had given her. At the death of Louis, which happened in 1715, Madame de Maintenon retired wholly to her favourite retreat at St. Cyr, and died in 1719. M. de la Beaumelle published 'Lettres de M. de Maintenon,' in 9 vols. 12mo.; and also 'Memoires;' the whole was reprinted in 12 vols. 12mo.

MAINWARING (Her.) the name of an ancient family of Chester, which long enjoyed the dignity and title of a baronet, that became extinct in 1797; but was revived in 1804 in the person of Thomas Wittenhall, a relative of the family by marriage, who assumed the name and arms of Mainwaring. The arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Argent, two bars gules.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet, an ass's head proper.

Motto. "Devant te je puis."

MAIO (Hist.) Magio, or Madio, an illustrious house of Naples, and one of the most ancient in all Italy, was also distinguished by the rank which it held in the state. One branch of this family became allied to the royal house of Durazzo, in the person of Francis de Maio, who espoused Hyppolita de Durazzo, niece to king Ladislaus.

Maio, Durazzo Nicholas de, a descendant of the same family, was for many years Minister Plenipotentiary to the king of the two Sicilies, at the court of Constantinople, and afterwards at that of Vienna.

Maio, a man of obscure condition in the 12th century, who, having succeeded in obtaining the favour of William I, king of Sicily, was successively elevated to the posts of Notary of the Palace, Chancellor, and High-Admiral, when, aspiring to the sovereignty, he was assassinated by a young courtier, named Bonello, who was disgusted at his insolence.

MAJOLUS, Simon (Ecc.) a prelate, and native of Aste, a town of Italy, who was raised by his merit to the episcopal see of Vulturara, in the kingdom of Naples, in the 16th century, wrote, 1. 'Tractatus de Irregularitate,' &c. an edition of which was published at Rome in 1619. 2. 'Dies Caniculares, hoc est, Colloquia tria et viginti Physica,' &c. 3 vols. 4to. 1607-12; and afterwards in folio, at Francfort.

MAJOR (Biog.) or Mair, John, a divine and historian of Haddington, near North Berwick, was born in 1469, and died about 1550, leaving, 1. 'In primum et secundum Sententiarum Commentarius,' Paris. 1510; which was followed by other Commentaries, 'In tertium, &c. Sententiarum.' 2. 'Libri duo Fallaciarum,' Lugd. 1516. 3. 'De Historia Gentis Scotorum,' 4to. Paris. 1521. 4. 'Commentarius in Physica Aristotelis,' &c.; besides which he translated Caxton's Chronicle into Latin.

MAJORAGIUS, Mark Anthony (Biog.) a professor of eloquence, so named from a village in Milan, of which he was a native, was born in 1514, and died in 1555, leaving 'De Senatu Romano;' 'De Risu Oratorio et Urbano;' 'De Nominibus Propriis Veterum Romanorum,' &c.

MAJORCA (Geog.) an island in the Mediterranean, about 100 miles from the coast of Spain, and 150 from Algiers, which is 40 m. in length and breadth. Palma is the chief town; besides which there are the towns of Alcudia, Pollenza, St. Martial, Andracio, and Bunola, &c.

History of Majorca.

Majorca, called in Latin Majorica, is the principal of the Baleares, or Balearic islands, which were successively in the hands of the Romans and the Pisans, until taken by the Saracens, from whom it came into the hands of the Arragonese and Castilians. [Vide Baleares]

MAJORIANUS, Jul. (Hist.) grandson of Majorianus, a master of the horse in Illyria, in the reign of Theodosius, distinguished himself early as a brave commander under Ætius, and at his death he rose to such distinction that he was elected emperor of the West, in the room of Avitus, whom he compelled to resign the imperial dignity in 457, and was assassinated by Ricimer, one of his generals, after a reign of four years and a half, at Dertona, in Liguria.

Majorianus (Numis.) medals of this emperor are extant, bearing his effigy as in the annexed figure, inscriptions, D. N. MAJORIANUS NOB. CAES.—D. N. JUL. MAJORIANUS P. F. AUG. &c.; on the reverse, VICTORIA AUGG. —VOTA MULTA.

MAJORINUS (Ecc.) the first bishop of the Donatists, in Africa, in the fourth century, who nevertheless did not give his name to this sect, which was called after his successor Donatus.

MAIRAN, John James d'Ortous de (Biog.) a French philosopher, was born at Beziers in 1678, and died in 1771, leaving, 1. 'Dissertation sur les Variations du Barometre,' 12mo. 1715. 2. 'Dissertation sur la Caûse de la Lumière des Phosphores et des Noctiluques, 12mo. 1717. 3. 'Dissertation sur la Glace,' 12mo. 1719. 4. 'Lettre à M. l'Abbé Bignon, sur la Nature des Vaisseaux,' 4to. 1728. 5. 'Traité Physique et Historique de l'Aurore Boreale,' 4to. 1733. 6. 'Dissertation sur les Forces Motrices des Corps,' 12mo. 1741. 7. 'Lettre à Madame du Chatelet, sur la Question des Forces vives,' 12mo. 1741. 8. 'Eloges des Academiciens de l'Academie des Sciences Morts en 1741, 1743, and 1747,' 12mo. 9. 'Lettre au Père Parennin, contenant diverses Questions sur la Chine,' 12mo.

MAIRE, Eudes le (Hist.) valet de chambre to Philip I. At the end of the 11th century, was the only one who offered to perform a vow for the king, his master, by going on foot armed, and with a taper in his hand, to the Holy Land. On his return the king gave him the land of Chalon-Saint-Mard or Medard, near Estampes, with this privilege, that his descendants, male and female, should be exempt from all taxation, which privilege they enjoyed for five centuries, until 1596, when it was abolished by Henry IV, because there were so many families who claimed exemption on that score, who could not prove their descent.

Maire, James le, a Dutch navigator, who sailed from the Texel in 1615 on a voyage of discovery, discovered a strait between Terra del Fuego and Staten Land, which has been called after him. An account of this voyage was published in French in a Collection of Voyages, fol. Amsterdam, 1622.

Maire, William le (Ecc.) bishop of Angers, was raised to that see in 1290; held a council at Angers in 1292 to consult on the means of recovering Acre, and the Holy Land, which was at that time taken again by the infidels; assisted at the council of Saumur in 1294 to consult on the subsidies to be granted to Philip the Fair for carrying on the war against the English. He was also at the general council of Vienne in 1311, and died about 1316.

Maire, John le (Biog.) an early French poet and historian, was born at Bavai, in Hainault, in 1473, and died, as is supposed, about 1548, leaving, 1. 'Temple d'Honneur et de Vertu,' &c. 1503; an eloge of Peter of Bourbon. 2. 'Le Plainte du Desiré,' in honour of Louis of Luxemburg. 3. 'Illustrations des Gaules,' 1506, which was followed by two other parts in 1512, and published in folio. 4. 'Legende des Venitiens,' 1509, a satire. 5. 'Traité de la Difference les Schismes et des Conciles de l'Eglise,' &c. 6. 'Histoire du Prince Syach Ishmael dit Sophy.' 7. 'La Concorde de deux Langages;' besides several poems; as 'Epitres de l'Amant verd;' 'Cupidon et Astropos;' 'La Couronne Margaritique,' &c.

MAIRET, John (Biog.) a French poet, was born at Besançon in 1604, and died in 1686, leaving twelve tragedies, as 'Chryseide,' 'Sylvia,' 'Sylvianire,' 'Duc d'Ossane,' &c. besides several poems.

MAISTRE (Hist.) the name of an ancient French family in Brittany, which has distinguished itself both in the civil and military departments of the state.

Maistre, Alaine le, signalized himself at the battle of Auray in 1364, and on other occasions.

Maistre, John le, seigneur of Gartaye, fought valiantly at the battle of Fournoue in 1495 for Charles VIII, and afterwards followed Louis XII into Italy, where he contributed to the successes of the French.

Maistre, William le, was in favour with Henry IV, whom he served with zeal and fidelity in all the wars of those times.

Maistre, Gilles le, the descendant of another ancient French family, the Seigneurs de Cincepour, acted as president to the Parliament of Paris in the reigns of Francis I and Henry II, and died in 1562, at the age of 63, after having maintained his integrity through all the troubles of the times.

His works on legal subjects were collected and published in 1653 in 4to.

MAISTRE, John le, president to the Parliament, refused to sanction the election of any foreign prince to the throne of France as contrary to the laws of the French monarchy, and exerted all his influence to secure the obedience of the city of Paris to Henry IV. He died in 1601, after having previously resigned his office in 1596. Thuan. Hist.

MAISTRE, Joseph, Count de, Minister of State to the king of Sardinia, was born in 1753 at Chamberry, and died in 1821, after having been employed more than once as plenipotentiary at the court of Petersburgh. His writings were powerfully directed against the infidelity and licentiousness of the age.

MAISTRE, Anthony le (Biog.) probably of a different family from the preceding, was born in 1608, and appeared very early as a pleader; but resigning his profession, he retired to the society of the Port-Royal, where he died in 1658, leaving, besides his Pleadings, which were often printed, translations from the fathers, and several pieces in favour of the society of the Port-Royal.

MAISTRE, Louis Isaac le, brother of the preceding, more known under the name of Sacy, was born at Paris in 1613, and died in 1684, leaving a Translation of the Bible, also of the Homilies of St. Chrysostom, and of some other works of the Fathers.

MAITLAND, Sir Richard (Hist.) of Leithington and Thirlstane, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was appointed in 1552, and again in 1560, one of the commissioners for adjusting the differences with the English about the debateable lands on the borders; was constituted one of the Extraordinary Lords of Session in 1554; received the appointment of Keeper of the Privy Seal in 1562; and died in 1586, after having been employed upwards of 70 years in the service of James IV, and his successors, to James VI. This sir Richard left, among his works as an author, a poem 'On the Creation and Paradyce Lost,' printed in Allan Ramsay's 'Ever-Green;' and a number of other pieces, which are to be found among Mr. Pinkerton's 'Ancient Scottish Poetry,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1786. Two of his unpublished works, a Genealogical History of the Family of Seaton, and Decisions of the Court of Session, from 1550 to 1565, are preserved in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh.

MAITLAND, William, eldest son of the preceding, was appointed Secretary of State in 1558, Extraordinary Lord of Session in 1561; adhered to the queen-mother till 1559, when, from his zeal for the reformation, he went over to the faction opposed to her, and by them was sent to England to implore the assistance of queen Elizabeth. When queen Mary arrived in Scotland in 1561, he was sent by her in that, and the following years, to queen Elizabeth; and a third time in 1565, to signify to the latter the marriage of Mary with Darnly. On the imprisonment of Mary in 1567, he exerted himself to procure her liberation, and afterwards projected a marriage between the queen and the duke of Norfolk, as a probable device for restoring her to liberty. On his return to Scotland, he remained steadfast in his adherence to her cause; on which account, when Lennox was chosen regent, he was deprived of his office of secretary, proclaimed a traitor to his country, attainted in the Parliament in 1571, and on the surrender of the castle of Edinburgh, where he had taken refuge, in 1537, he put an end to his own existence in order to escape the ignominy of a public execution. [Vide Plate VII]

MAITLAND, John, Lord, younger brother of the preceding, was appointed Keeper of the Privy Seal on his father sir Richard's resignation in 1567, constituted an Ordinary Lord of Session in 1568, forfeited his posts for his adherence to the queen's party in 1570; and, having taken refuge in the castle of Edinburgh, was, on its surrender in 1573, made a prisoner at large until the fall of the regent Morton in 1578, after which he was re-instated in his offices, and receiving an accession of honours, he died in 1595, when he had just completed the 50th year of his age, leaving, among his works as an author, 'Johannis Metellani Thirlstonii Domini Epigrammata Latina,' published in the second volume of the 'Deliciæ Poetarum Scotorum,' Amst. 1637; a satire in the Scotch language 'Against Sklanderous Toungis;' and an 'Admonitioun to the Regent's Mar,' published in Mr. Pinkerton's Collection of 'Ancient Scotish Poems.'

MAITLAND, John, Earl of Lauderdale, had the office of President of the Council, and was appointed one of the Ordinary Lords of the Session in 1618, from which office he was removed in 1626, but had the appointment of one of the Extraordinary Lords of the Court in 1628, and died President of the Parliament in 1645.

MAITLAND, John, second Earl of Lauderdale, and Duke of Lauderdale. [Vide Lauderdale]

MAITLAND, Hon. Robert, younger brother of the duke of Lauderdale, entered into the engagement for the rescue of king Charles I in 1648, accompanied king Charles II in his expedition into England, was taken prisoner at the battle of Worcester in 1651, and died in 1658.

MAITLAND, Hon. John, eighth son of the sixth earl of Lauderdale, was an officer of the marine forces under admiral Boscawen, and lost a hand in the engagement of that admiral with De la Clue in 1759. He afterwards served with distinction in America in the rank of a colonel, and contributed by his exertions to drive the French from Georgia, two days after whose departure he died in 1779 of a fever brought on by extraordinary bodily fatigue.

MAITLAND, Right Hon. Sir Thomas, a general and a statesman, third son of James, the seventh earl of Lauderdale, entered the military service in 1778; and, after having honourably distinguished himself in the East Indies, he rose by various gradations to the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1811, was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the island of Malta, and its dependencies in 1813; and subsequently Lord High Commissioner of his majesty, the Sovereign Protector to the United States of the Ionian Isles, in which latter post he conducted the negociations, and the proceedings of the surrender of Parga to the Turks, and died in 1824. A monument was erected by the inhabitants of Corcyra to commemorate the return of sir Thomas in 1816 from Great Britain to the Ionian Isles, and a funeral oration was delivered on his death by count Sparadin Bulgari of Corfu.

MAITLAND (Her.) the name of a family which has made considerable figure in the Scotch History. It is supposed to be of Anglo-Norman original, and was anciently written Matulant and Maulant. The first who arrived at the dignity of the peerage was sir John Maitland, the second son of sir Richard above-mentioned, who was created a peer by the title of lord Maitland, of Thirlestane, in 1589, after his return from Denmark, whither he had accompanied king James on his matrimonial expedition. John, his son, the second lord, was created in 1616 viscount of Lauderdale; and in 1624 earl of Lauderdale, viscount Maitland, lord Thirlestone and Boulton. John, the second earl, was created in 1672 duke of Lauderdale and marquis of March; and in 1674 he was created a peer of England by the title of earl of Guildford and baron of Petersham; but at his death in 1698, his grace's English honours became extinct; also the titles of the duke of Lauderdale and marquis of March. His other Scotch honours devolved on his brother. [Vide Lauderdale]

MAITLAND, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Lauderdale.

MAITLAND, a junior branch of this family, also enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1818 on the hon. sir Alexander Maitland, a general in the army, and fifth son of the sixth earl of Lauderdale.

Maitland, William (Biog.) a Scotch antiquary, was born at Brechin, in Forfarshire, in Scotland, about 1693, and died in 1757, leaving, 1. 'History of London,' fol. 1739, and afterwards enlarged by Entick to 2 vols. fol. 1753. 2. 'History of Edinburgh,' fol. 1753. 3. 'History and Antiquities of Scotland,' 2 vols. fol. 1757.

MAITTAIRE, Michael (Biog.) a classical editor of a foreign family, was born in 1668, educated at Westminster under Dr. Busby, and died in 1747, leaving, 1. 'Græcæ Linguæ Dialecti,' &c. 8vo. 1706, and improved by Reitz, 8vo. Hag. 1738, and still more improved by Sturtz, Leipsic, in 1807. 2. 'Remarks on Mr. Whiston's Account of the Convocation-proceedings, with relation to Himself,' &c. 1711, which was followed by 'An Essay against Arianism,' &c. in Reply to Mr. William Whiston's Historical Preface, &c. 3. 'Stephanorum Historia, Vitas ipsorum ac Libros complectens,' 8vo. which was followed in 1717, by 'Historia Typographorum aliquot Parisiensium, Vitas et Libros complectens;' in 1719 by 'Annales Typographici ab Artis inventæ Origine ad Annum MD. Hagæ. Com.' the first volume only of which was then published in 4to. the second volume at the Hague in 1722, introduced by a letter of John Toland, under the title of 'Conjectura verosimilis de prima Typographiæ Inventione,' the third volume in 1725, and in 1733 was published at Amsterdam, what is usually considered as a fourth volume, under the title of 'Annales Typographici ab Artis inventæ Origine, ad Annum 1564,' &c. Editio nova, &c. Tomi primi Pars posterior; in 1741 the work was closed at London by Annalium Typographicorum Tomus quintus et ultimus, &c. 4. 'Opera et Fragmenta Veterum Poetarum,' 2 vols. fol. 1713, sometimes dated 1721. 5. An edition of the 'Greek Testament,' 2 vols. 1714; 'Christus Patiens,' an heroic poem by Réné Rapin, first printed in 1674. 6. Editions of 'Paterculus,' 'Justin,' 'Lucretius,' 'Phædrus,' 'Sallust,' 'Terence,' 'Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius,' 'Cornelius Nepos,' 'Florus,' 'Horace,' 'Ovid,' 3 vols. 'Virgil,' 'Cæsar,' 'Martial,' 'Juvenal and Persius,' 'Quintus Curtius,' 'Lucan,' 'Bonefonii Carmina,' between the years 1713 and 1720. All the other classics ascribed to him have been disclaimed by a memorandum which Mr. Nichols has preserved under Maittaire's own hand, from which it appears that 'Sophocle's Tragœdiæ;' 'Homeri Ilias;' 'Musarum Anglicanarum Analecta;' 'Livii Historia;' 'Plinii Epistolæ,' &c. 'Conciones et Orationes ex Historicis Latinis,' were not edited by him, although advertised under his name. 7. 'Batrachomyomachia Græcè ad Veterum Exemplarium Fidem recusa,' &c. 8vo. 1721. 8. Miscellanea Græcorum aliquot Scriptorum Carmina, cum Versione Latina et Notis,' 4to. 1722. 9. An Index to the work of Aretæus, to accompany the edition of 1723. 10. 'Marmorum Arundellianorum, Seldenianorum,' &c. fol. 1728—1732, to which an Appendix was printed in 1733. 13. 'Epistola D. Mich. Maittaire ad D. P. des Maizeaux, in qua Indicis in Annales Typographicos Methodus explicatur,' &c. printed in 'The Present State of the Republic of Letters,' August, 1733. 14. The Life of Robert Stephens, in Latin, revised and corrected by the author, is prefixed to the improved edition of Stephens's Thesaurus, 4 vols. fol. 1734. 15. 'Antiquæ Inscriptiones duæ,' fol. 1736, being a commentary on two large copper tables discovered near Heraclea, in the Bay of Tarentum. 16. 'Carmen Epinicium Augustissimæ Russorum Imperatrici sacrum,' 1739. 17. An edition of Plutarch's 'Apophthegmata,' 4to. 1741. 18. 'Senilia, sive Poetica aliquot in Argumentis varii Generis Tentamina.' His valuable library, which he had been collecting for 50 years, was sold by auction, the sale of which took up 44 nights.

MAIUS (Biog.) or May, John Henry, a Lutheran, was born at Pfortzheim, in the marquisate of Baden-Durlach, in 1653, and died in 1719, leaving, 1. 'Historia Animalium Scripturæ Sacræ,' 8vo. 2. 'Vita Johannis Reuchlini,' 8vo. 1687. 3. 'Examen Historiæ criticæ Ricardi Simonis,' 4to. 4. 'Synopsis Theologiæ Symbolicæ,' 4to. 5. 'Synopsis Moralis,' &c.

MALACHI (Bibl.) מלאכי, the last of the twelve minor prophets, of whom so little is known, that it is doubted whether his name be a proper name, or only a general name. He appears to have prophesied under Nehemiah, and after Haggai and Zechariah, and supposed to have lived about 400 years before Christ.

MALACHY, St. (Ecc.) a native of Armagh, successively abbot of Benetor, bishop of Connor, and archbishop of Armagh, which he resigned in 1135, and died at Clairvaux, in the arms of his friend St. Bernard, in 1148, leaving a high character for learning and piety.

MALAGA (Geog.) a city of Granada, in Spain, situated on the coast of the Mediterranean, 55 miles W. S. W. Granada, and 203 S. by W. Madrid. Lon. 4° 25′ W. lat. 36° 43′ N.

History of Malaga.

This town, which was anciently called Malacha, or Malaca, is said to have been built by the Phœnicians, and was a flourishing place in the time of the Carthaginians and Romans. It fell into the hands of the Moors in 714, from whom it was not wrested before 1487. It was taken by the French in 1810, after a desperate conflict, with a body of Spaniards officered by monks, and commanded by a Capuchin. An old Moorish fortress called Gibral Faro, which was built in 1280, is still standing, and admits of being made impregnable.

MALAGRIDA, Gabriel (Ecc.) an Italian Jesuit, who was sent as a missionary into Portugal, obtained such influence at the court of Lisbon, that when the king thought proper to banish the Jesuits from the kingdom, he suffered Malagrida, Alexander, and Mathos, to remain, although they three were at that time accomplices in the conspiracy of the duke d'Aveiro, against the king. He was afterwards called to an account by the inquisition, for the extravagance of his writings, and at length burnt alive in 1761, at the age of 75, not as a conspirator, but as a false prophet. The works in which his heretical conceits are to be found are entitled 'Tractatus de Vita et Imperio Antichristi,' and the 'Life of St. Anne,' &c. written in the Portuguese, &c.

MALAPERT, Charles (Biog.) a poet and mathematician, was born at Mons Hainault in 1581, and died in 1630, leaving Latin poems, which were printed at Antwerp in 1634, besides his mathematical works, 'De Ventis;' 'Comment. in Lib. 6 priores Euclidis;' 'Elementa Geometriæ;' 'Institutiones Arithmeticæ Practicæ;' 'Austriaca Sidera Heliocyclica,' &c.

MALAVAL, Francis (Biog.) a modern mystic among the French, was born at Marseilles in 1667, became blind at the age of nine months, and died in 1719, leaving 'Pratique Facile pour elever l'Ame à la Contemplation;' 'Poesies Spirituelles,' &c.

MALCHIAH (Bibl.) מלכיה, chief of the fifth of the twenty-four sacerdotal families. 1 Chron. xxiv.

Malchiah of the Levites, son of Ethni, and father of Baaseiah. 1 Chron. vi.

Malchiah, a Jew, who put away his wife because she was a foreigner. Ezra x.

Malchiah, son of Harim, assisted at the building half a street of Jerusalem, after the Babylonish captivity. Neh. iii. 11.

Malchiah, son of Rechab, chief or lord of Bethhaccarem, rebuilt the gate at Jerusalem, called the dung-gate. Neh. iii.

MALCHIAH, son of Hammelech, keeper of the prisons at Jerusalem, by whose orders Jeremiah was let down into a cistern. Jer. xxxvii. The name also of some other persons mentioned by Nehemiah and Jeremiah.

MALCHISHUA (Bibl.) מלכישוע, third son of Saul, killed with his father and brethren at the battle of Gilboa. 1 Sam. xxxi. 2.

MALCHUS (Bibl.) Μάλχος, a servant of the high-priest Caiaphas, whose right ear Peter cut off. John xviii; Luke xxii.

MALCHUS (Hist.) or Malichus, the assassin of Antipater, the father of Herod, was afterwards slain by his own men. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14.

MALCHUS, or Malichus, a king of the Arabs, who having received great obligations from Herod, the son of Antipater, repaid them with perfidy. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14; De Bell. Jud. l. 2.

MALCHUS, a king of the Arabians, whether the same as the preceding is doubtful, who sent a thousand horse, and five thousand foot, to the assistance of Vespasian against the Jews. The most of these soldiers were armed with bows and arrows. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 3.

MALCHUS (Biog.) a sophist of Byzantium, in the fifth century, was the author of a Roman History, mentioned by Anastasius. Phot. Bibl. c. 78; Suidas; Voss. de Hist. Græc. l. 2.

MALCOLM (Hist.) the name of four kings of Scotland.

MALCOLM I, son of Dongal, or Donald VI succeeded Constantine II, and reigned 15 years. The effigy of this and the following princes are given, as in the annexed cuts.

MALCOLM II, son of Kennet III, succeeded Grime, whom he defeated and killed in battle, and was himself waylaid and assassinated in 1034, by some of his courtiers, on whom he had heaped the greatest obligations, after a glorious reign, in which he compelled the Danes to live in peace with the Scots.

MALCOLM III, surnamed Canmore, the son of Duncan, fled to his principality in Cumberland from the violence of Macbeth, the murderer of his father, and the usurper of the throne, but encouraged by Macduff, a nobleman, who remained faithful to him, he invaded Scotland, with the assistance of the court of England, when Macbeth was killed in a sally, by Macduff, and Malcolm mounting his father's throne, was treacherously slain in 1094, after a reign of 36 years.

MALCOLM IV, son of Henry, prince of Scotland, and grandson of David, succeeded the latter in 1153, and died after a reign of 12 years. Buchan. Hist. Scot.

MALDEN, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Essex.

MALDONAT, John (Biog.) was born at Fuente del Maestro, in Estremadura, in 1534, and died about 1583, leaving a number of Commentaries on the Scriptures, which have been highly esteemed. He was also employed by Gregory XIII to superintend the publication of the Septuagint.

MALDUIN (Hist.) son of Donald IV, succeeded Ferquhard II, and reigned 20 years, namely, from 668 to 688, when he was succeeded by Eugene IV. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

MALEBRANCHE, Nicholas (Biog.) a French philosopher, was born at Paris in 1638, and died in 1715, leaving among other works 'La Recherche de la Verité,' first printed in 1674, and afterwards augmented in several successive editions; 'Conversations Chretiennes,' &c. 1676; 'Traité de la Nature et de la Grace,' 1680.

MALEC, Rahim (Hist.) son of sultan Addoulat, the 16th and last prince of the Bouides, succeeded his father in the year of the Hegira 448, A. D. 1058, as master of the city of Bagdad, but on the capture of this city by Togrul Beg, he was sent a prisoner to the castle of Irak, where he ended his days, after a reign of seven years, which terminated the dynasty of the Bouides.

MALEC, Shah, third sultan of the race of the Selgiucides, and son of Alp Arslan, who, although not the eldest son, was declared by his father his successor, and taking possession of his dominions, was invested by the caliph with all his honours as Emir-Elmumen, in the year of the Hegira 465, A. D. 1075, and died in the year of the Hegira 485, after a warlike and successful reign, in which he defeated all his enemies.

MALEC, Shah, grandson of the preceding, succeeded his uncle Massud, but was deposed by his brother after a short reign, and died in the year of the Hegira 555, A. D. 1165.

MALELAS (Biog.) or Malalas, John, a sophist and teacher of rhetoric, who is supposed to have flourished about the 10th century, was the author of a Chronicle, which was published by Edward Chilmead, 8vo. Oxon. 1691, from a MS. in the Bodleian Library, and republished among the Byzantine Historians as a kind of appendix at Venice in 1733.

MALESHERBES, Christian William de Lamoignon (Hist.) the descendant of an illustrious family, was born at Paris in 1721, and, being bred to the bar, rose to the post of president of the Court of Aides in 1750, from which he retired after a 25 years faithful discharge of his duty, but was recalled by Louis XVI in 1775 to fill the office of minister of the interior, which he resigned on the retirement of his friend Turgot. He was, however, a second time called into public life at the breaking out of the French revolution to be the legal defender of his sovereign, but his pleadings, which were addressed in vain to a sanguinary tribunal in behalf of the royal victim, procured him the honour of perishing on the same scaffold in 1793, when his daughter and his grand-daughter were executed at the same time with himself.

MALET, Sir Thomas (Hist.) of St. Audries, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was knighted and made a judge by Charles I, in whose service he lost a son and himself suffered imprisonment; but at the restoration he was reinstated in his office, and died at the age of 83, full of honours.

MALET (Her.) originally written Mallet, in Latin Malleus, in French Maule, the name of a family which traces its origin from William, lord Malet de Greville, one of the great barons that accompanied the Norman Conqueror into England. He and his successors continued to hold their possessions in France, where they preserved a high rank among the noblesse of Normandy till the revolution, and acquired likewise vast possessions in England, which, at the general survey, were found to consist of not less than 221 lordships in Suffolk, besides many others in different counties. In succeeding ages this family experienced fluctuations both in its property and dignity, the baronial rank devolving by the females to the families of Points and Vivian. Two branches, however, retained great property and respectability; namely, the Mallets of Enmore and St. Audries. From the former descended the Greville, Lisburn, and Sandwich branches. Of the latter was sir Thomas Malet above-mentioned, who, for his loyalty and services, was created a baronet in 1663, which title lay dormant through three generations, and was revived in 1791 in the person of sir Charles Warre Malet for his services in India. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Azure, three escallops or.
Crest. Out of a ducal coronet or, a griffin's head ermine.
Motto. "Ma force d'en haut."

MALEZIEU, Nicholas de (Biog.) a French writer, was born at Paris in 1650, and died in 1727, leaving 'Elemens de Geometrie,' &c.

MALHERBE, Francis de (Biog.) a French poet, considered by his own countrymen as the father of French poetry, was born at Caen about 1555, of an ancient and illustrious family, that had formerly borne arms in England under Robert, duke of Normandy, and died in 1628, leaving several pieces, consisting of Paraphrases upon the Psalms, Odes, Sonnets, and Epigrams, which were published in various forms until 1666, when a very complete edition of them came out at Paris, with the notes and observations of Menage. He also translated some parts of Seneca and Livy.

MALINGRE, Claude (Biog.) Sieur de St. Lazare, an historian, who died in 1655, left 'Histoire des Dignités Honoraires de France,' 8vo.; 'L'Histoire Générale des Derniers Troubles;' 'Histoire de Louis XIII,' 4to.; 'Histoire de la Naissance et des Progrès de l'Herésie de ce Siecle,' 3 vols. 4to.; 'Les Annales et les Antiquités de Paris,' &c.

MALLET, David (Biog.) an English poet and miscellaneous writer, is said to have been descended from the Macgregors, a clan which, under the conduct of Robin Roy, rendered themselves so formidable by their violence and robbery, that the name was annulled by a legal prohibition, and when they were called upon to give themselves a new name, the father of David Mallet took that of Malloch, which he afterwards changed into Mallet. He was born in 1700, and died in 1765, leaving, besides his poems, which have given him a place in the collection of British poets, some tragedies, as, 'Eurydice;' 'Edward and Eleonora;' 'Elvira,' &c.; a 'Life of Lord Bacon,' and other things, of which an edition was published in 3 vols. 8vo. in 1769.

MALLET, Edmund, one of the principal writers in the French Encyclopædia, was born at Melun in 1713, and died in 1755. Besides his share in the Encyclopædia, he wrote several works on the Principles of Poetry and Eloquence; and also a History of the Civil Wars of France, &c. translated from the Italian of D'Avila.

MALLET, Du Pan, James, vide Du Pan.

MALLET, Paul Henry, an historian and antiquary, was born at Geneva in 1730, and died in 1807, leaving, 1. 'Histoire de Dannemarck,' the best edition of which is that of 1787; the substance of this work has been translated by Dr. Percy, bishop of Dromore, and published under the title of 'Northern Antiquities,' &c. 2 vols. 8vo. 1770, to which Dr. Percy added many notes. 2. The translation of Coxe's 'Travels,' with remarks and additions, in 2 vols. 4to. 3. Translation of the Acts and Form of the Swedish Government, 12mo. 4. 'Histoire de Hesse,' 3 vols. 8vo. 5. 'Histoire de la Maison de Brunswick,' 3 vols. 8vo. 6. 'Histoire des Suisses,' 4 vols. 8vo. Geneva, 1803. 7. 'Histoire de la Ligue Anseatique,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1805. 8. 'A Chronological Series of the Icelandish Bishops,' which is published in Lanjabeck's collection of Danish writers.

MALLINKROTT, Bernard (Ecc.) a learned but turbulent man, who was elected to two bishoprics, namely, of Ratzburg, and afterwards that of Minden, without taking possession of either, was found guilty of intriguing and raising seditions against the bishop of Munster, whose see he aspired to, and being arrested, was confined in the castle of Ottenzheim, where he died in 1664, leaving, 1. 'De Natura et Usu Literarum,' 4to. Monast. Vall. 1638. 2. 'De Ortu et Progressu Artis Typographicæ,' 4to. Colonn. 1639; and since reprinted in Wolf's collection of 'Monumenta Typographica,' Vol. I. 1740. 3. 'De Archicancellariis S. R. Imperii,' 4to. Monast. Vall. 1646. 4. 'Paralipomenon de Historicis Græcis,' 4to. Colonn. 1656.

MALMSBURY, James, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Harris [vide Harris]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:
Titles. Harris, earl of Malmsbury, viscount Fitz-Harris, of Hurn Court, co. Southampton, and baron Malmsbury, of Malmsbury, co. Wilts. The title commonly borne by the eldest son, viscount Fitz-Harris.
Arms. Azure, a chevron ermine, between three hedgehogs or, on a chief the Prussian eagle; which augmentation his lordship received by his majesty's permission on May 9, 1789.
Crest. A hedge-hog or.
Supporters. On the dexter side an eagle; on the sinister a stag.
Motto. "Ubique patriam reminisci."

MALMSBURY, William of (Biog.) an ancient English historian, and a native of Somersetshire, who died in 1143, wrote 'De Rebus gestis Regum Anglorum;' 'De Historia Novella;' and 'De Episcopis Anglorum;' which were published in sir H. Saville's collection in 1596. His 'Antiquities of Glastonbury,' are inserted in Gale's 'Historiæ Britannicæ Scriptores,' &c., and his 'Life of St. Adhelm' has been published by Wharton; besides which he wrote Latin verses and other things mentioned by Pitts and Bale.

MALMSBURY (Geog.) a market and borough town of Wiltshire, in England, situated on a hill almost surrounded by the Avon, 23 m. N. E. Bath, 95 W. London. Lon. 2° 5′ W. lat. 51° 35′ N. This town is principally famous for its abbey, of which there are still some remains. It was founded by Mandulph, or Meydulph, a noted Scotch monk, and in 670 was converted into an abbey by the bishop of Winchester, which was greatly patronized by king Ina and his successors, Athelstane, Edgar, Edward the Confessor, William the Conqueror, and others. The buildings are said to have occupied 45 acres, of which there still remains the abbey church, a magnificent structure. The borough of Malmsbury is among the most ancient in the kingdom, having been incorporated about the year 916. The town was formerly walled and fortified by a strong and large castle, which has been long since demolished.

MALONE, Edmund (Biog.) one of the commentators on Shakespear, descended from an ancient Irish family, was born in Dublin in 1741, and died in 1812, leaving two supplementary volumes to the second edition of Mr. Steevens's Shakespear in 1780, containing some additional notes, Shakespear's poems, and seven plays which have been ascribed to the latter.

MALOUIN, Paul James (Biog.) a French chemist and physician, was born at Caen in 1701, and died in 1777, leaving, 1. 'Traité de Chemie,' 12mo. 1734. 2. 'Chemie Medicinale,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1755; besides the chemical part of the Encyclopedie, which was of his composition.

MALPIGHI, Marcellus (Biog.) an Italian physician and anatomist, was born at Crevalcuore, near Bologna, in Italy, in 1628, and died in 1694, leaving 'Observationes Anatomicæ de Pulmonibus,' fol. 1661; 'De Formatione Pulli in Ovo,' 4to. 1669; 'Anatome Plantarum,' fol. 1675 and 1679; and several other tracts, which were all collected and republished in 1686, in 2 vols. fol.; and more correctly at Amsterdam in 4to. 1687. A posthumous volume, with an account of his life, was printed at London in 1697, and reprinted at Venice and Leyden the next year. Some other of his dissertations are also to be found in the 'Bibliotheca Anatomica,' published by Le Clerc and Manget at Geneva in 1685.

MALTA (Geog.) an island of the Mediterranean, on the coast of Africa, 60 m. S. of Sicily. It is 20 m. long, and 12 broad, containing two cities, namely, La Valetta, the capital, and Civita Vecchia, and several good harbours, besides the two small islands, Gozzo and Cerino, which are separated from it only by a narrow channel.

History of Malta.

Malta, the Melita of the ancients [vide Melita], passed from the dominion of the Romans to that of the Goths, from whom it was taken by the Saracens, who kept possession of it from 904 to 1090, when the Normans, having driven the Saracens out of Sicily, took immediate possession of Malta. They continued masters of this island until 1530, when the emperor Charles V gave it to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, an order of knights who, on their original institution in the 11th century for charitable purposes, were called Hospitalers, but, becoming a military body in the next century, they took the title of knights. On the loss of Jerusalem they retired to Acre, which they defended valiantly against the Turks in 1290. They afterwards followed the king of Cyprus, and in 1310 took Rhodes; but, on the capture of this island by the Turks in 1522, they retired successively to Candia, Sicily, and Malta, which becoming, by the grant of the emperor, their possession, they took the well known title of Knights of Malta, under which they distinguished themselves by a memorable defence of their island against an expedition of the Turks in 1565, consisting of 30,000 men, furnished with artillery, ammunition, and all the requisites for a grand attack; but, after losing four months in reiterated assaults, and sacrificing the greater part of their army, the enemy were obliged to reimbark, and from that time forbore from any further attempts on Malta. The knights, who continued long after to bear a part in the hostilities of the Mediterranean powers against the Turks, retained peaceable possession of their island until 1798, when the French expedition to Egypt under Bonaparte presented itself before La Valetta, and, summoning the town to surrender, the knights submitted after a short delay. The English succeeded, after a two years' blockade, to starve the garrison into a surrender in 1800; but by the treaty of Amiens Malta was to have been restored to the knights, under the guarantee of some neutral power, if the renewal of the war in 1803 had not prevented the cession of the island, which, by the treaty of Paris, was confirmed to Britain as its possession.

MALVENDA, Thomas (Biog.) a Dominican, was born in 1566, and died in 1628, leaving among his works, 1. 'De Antichristo,' the best edition of which is that of Valencia, fol. 1621. 2. 'Annales Ordinis Prædicatorum,' fol. Neapol. 1627. 3. 'A new Version of the Hebrew Text of the Bible, with Notes,' 5 vols. fol. 1650.

MALVEZZI, Virgil (Biog.) commonly styled Marquis Malvezzi, an Italian writer, was born of a noble family at Bologna in 1599, and died in 1654, leaving, 1. 'Il Romulo;' and 'Il Tarquinio Superbo,' translated by H. Carey, 12mo. 1638. 2. 'Discorsi sopra Cornelio Tacito,' which were translated and published in English by sir R. Baker, fol. Lond. 1642. 3. 'Il Davide Perseguitato,' translated by Robert Ashley, 12mo. 1647. 4. 'Successi della Monarchia di Spagna,' translated by Robert Gentilis, 12mo. 1647; besides some other works.

MAMÆA (Hist.) vide Julia.

MAMBRUN, Peter (Biog.) a French Jesuit and Latin poet, was born in 1581, and died in 1661, leaving Eclogues and Georgics in imitation of Virgil, 12mo. 1661; besides which he wrote a poem entitled 'Constantin,' 12mo. Amsterdam, 1659, and also 'Dissertation Peripatetique,' on epic poetry, 4to. Paris, 1652.

MAMERANUS, Nicholas (Biog.) a poet and historian of Luxembourg, who died in 1550, left, among other things, 'De Venatione Carmen Heroicum;' 'Descriptio Metrica Aquæductus, seu Navigationis Bruxellensis;' 'Historia de Electione Caroli V,' &c. &c.

MAMERCINUS, Luc. Æm. (Hist.) a Roman, twice appointed consul and dictator. Liv. l. 8.

MAMERCUS (Hist.) a tyrant of Catana, who surrendered to Timoleon and was soon after put to death. Polyæn. l. 5; C. Nep. in Tim.

Mamertium (Numis.) several medals are extant, which are ascribed to this town from the inscriptions, MAMEPT. BPET.; i. e. Μαμερτινῶν Βρεττίων. — MAMEPTINΩN. Several bear for their type the head of their founder and deity, Adranus, with the inscription, ΑΔΡΑΝΟΥ [vide Adranus]; others the head of Apollo, Hercules, Jupiter, Mars, &c.

MAMILAS (Hist.) fourteenth king of the Assyrians, succeeded Iphereus. Euseb. in Chron.

MAMILIA, gens (Hist.) a plebeian family of Rome, which traced its descent from Mamilia, the daughter of Telogonus, who was said to be the son of Ulysses and Circe, who, having slain his father unknowingly, sailed to Italy and built Tibur. [Vide Mamilius] This family was divided into the branches of the Limetani and the Turrini, &c.

Mamilia, gens (Numis.) medals are extant of this family bearing the inscriptions, C. MAMIL. LIMETAN.; i. e. Caius Mamilius Limetanus.—C. MAMILIUS Q. F. TURRINUS; i. e. Caius Mamilius Quinti Filius Turrinus. Many of these medals bear the figure of an old man with a dog to represent Ulysses, in allusion to their origin.

MAMILIUS, Tusculanus Octavius (Hist.) a native of Tusculum, who gave his daughter in marriage to Tarquinius Superbus, and, on the expulsion of the latter from Rome, took up his cause, and was killed at the battle of Regillum, where he fought on his behalf. Liv. l. 1.

Mamilius, L. a dictator of Tusculum, having rendered assistance to the Romans, was presented with the citizenship of Rome.

Mamilius Vitulus, C. the first plebeian who was created curio maximus, or chief deputy of the ward, was afterwards created a prætor, sent on a mission to Philip, and died of the plague. Liv. l. 27, &c.

Mamilius Turrinus, Q. a plebeian ædile and prætor, was sent into Gaul. Liv. l. 28.

Mamilius Limetanus, C. a tribune, who proposed to punish those that had been bribed by Jugurtha. Cic. Brut. c. 33; Sallust in Jugurth. c. 40.

Mamilius Marius, a consul U. C. 603, A. C. 151, composed a formula for the arrangement and settlement of sales and bargains. Varro de Re Rust. l. 2, c. 3; Cic. Orat. c. 58.

MAMITHUS (Hist.) a king of the Assyrians, called Hermascus by St. Augustin, was a formidable enemy to the Egyptians and Syrians. Euseb. in Chron.; S. August. de Civit. l. 18, &c.

MAMRE (Bibl.) ממרא, an Amorite, brother of Aner and Eschol, and a friend of Abraham, assisted him in defeating the kings that had plundered Sodom and Gomorrah. Gen. xiv. 13.

MAMURIUS, Veturius (Hist.) a worker in brass, whom Numa employed to make the sacred ancilia or shields used by the Salii at the feast of the Ancilia. Varr. de Ling. Lat. l. 5; Ovid. Fast. l. 2, &c.

MAMURRA (Hist.) a Roman knight, and native of Formiæ, who followed the fortunes of Cæsar, and having greatly enriched himself, built a magnificent palace on Mount Cœlius. Catullus has attacked him in his epigrams. Cic. ad Attic. l. 7, ep. 7; Horat. l. 1, sat. 5; Catul. Carm. 55; Plin. l. 26.

MAN, James (Biog.) a Scotch writer, who died in 1761, is only known by his rival edition of Buchanan's History of Scotland, which was published in 1762, and professed to be an improvement of Rudiman's folio edition, published in 1715.

Man, Cornelius de, a painter of Delft, who died in 1706, at the age of 85, acquired considerable celebrity by his historical pieces, conversations, &c.

Man (Geog.) an island of Great Britain, in the Irish Sea, nearly equi-distant from the coasts of England, Scotland, and Ireland, about 30 miles in length, 10 or 12 in breadth, and 70 in circumference. The principal towns are Castletown, the capital, Douglas, Peel, and Ramsay; the principal villages Saxey, Balasala, and Kirmichael, all which lie along the coast.

History of Man.

Man, called by Pliny, Monapia; by Ptolemy, Μόνα; by Bede, Menavia; by Gildas, Eubonia; and now the Isle of Man; had originally princes of its own, of which the earls of Derby were the last who exercised any sovereign power. From that family it passed into the hands of the duke of Athol, who sold the sovereignty to the English government. The island is under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of a bishop, who is styled bishop of Sodor and Man; and possesses, among other privileges, that of being sole baron of the island.

MANAEN (Bibl.) a Christian prophet, and foster-brother of Antipas. Acts xiii. 1.

MANAHEM (Bibl.) מנחם, the 16th king of Israel, and general of the army of Zachariah, killed Shallum, the murderer of his master, and reigned in his stead. He died after a reign of ten years, A. M. 3274, A. C. 761. 2 Kings xv.; Joseph. Antiq. l. 9.

Manahem (Hist.) Μανάημος, of the sect of the Essenians, was viceregent to Hillel, and afterwards in the service of Herod the Great, whose elevation to the throne of Judæa he predicted. Joseph. Antiq. l. xv.

Manahem, or Manaim, the son of Judas the Galilean or Gaulonite, drew a party of robbers and profligates to himself, by whose assistance he got possession of Jerusalem at the death of Herod, and caused himself to be proclaimed king; but after having put to death the high-priest Ananias, and committed other excesses, he was assaulted by Eleazar and his party, and being deserted by his followers, was taken and put to death. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 2.

MANARA, Prosper (Hist.) a statesman and writer, was born in 1714 at Borgo Taro, a small town in the duchy of Parma, appointed in 1771 counsellor of state to the Infant Don Philip, duke of Parma; sent ambassador in 1773 to the court of Turin; and died in 1800; after having been employed in public for the greater part of his life. His poetical works, with his life by M. Cerati, were published in 1801, in 4 vols.

MANASSEH (Bibl.) מנשה, eldest son of Joseph, and grandson of the patriarch Jacob, was born A. M. 2290, A. C. 1714, whose younger brother Ephraim was preferred before him in the blessing which Jacob gave his two grandchildren. Gen. xli.

Manasseh, fifteenth king of Judah, son and successor of Hezekiah, was twelve years old when he began to reign, and reigned fifty-five years, during which period he was carried captive to Babylon, and afterwards restored to his kingdom. 2 Kings xx. xxi.; 2 Chron. xxxiii. It was this wicked king who caused the prophet Isaiah to be sawn asunder, for attempting to reclaim him from his evil courses. Tertull. Lib. de Pat. c. 14; Orig. in Matt. xxiii. et Homil. in Isa.; Justin. cont. Tryph.; S. August. de Civ. Dei, l. 17, c. 24; S. Hier. in Isa. l. 15; Chrysost. ad Cyriac.

Manasseh (Hist.) husband of Judith, of the tribe of Simeon, who died in the time of barley harvest of a stroke of the sun, which had affected his head. Judith. viii.

Manasseh, son of Asoni, who, after the return from Babylon, was obliged to put away his strange wife. 1 Esdras ix.

Manasseh, high-priest of the Jews, son of John, and brother of Jaddus, who succeeded Eleazar, his great uncle, and was succeeded by Onias II, his nephew. Joseph. Antiq. l. 12.

Manasseh (Ecc.) archbishop of Rheims, was elevated to that see in 1070, and, notwithstanding he was deposed in 1080, he kept possession of his dignity until 1085.

Manasseh, fifty-first bishop of Meaux, succeeded Gautier de Chambly at the end of 1105, and died in 1120, after having assisted at the consecration of Louis the Fat at Orleans.

MANASTABAL (Hist.) son of Masinissa, the father to the celebrated Jugurtha. Sallust. Bell. Jugurth.

MANBY, Peter (Biog.) a Roman Catholic writer in the reign of king James II, who died in 1697, wrote, 1. 'A Letter to a Non-conformist Minister,' 4to. Lond. 1677. 2. 'A brief and practical Discourse on Abstinence in Lent,' 4to. Dublin, 1682. 3. 'Of Confession to a lawful Priest,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1686. 4. 'The Considerations which obliged Peter Manby, Dean of Derry, to embrace the Catholic Religion,' &c. 1687; which was answered by Mr. William King, afterwards archbishop of Dublin, and Dr. Clagett, in England. Manby replied to King in 'A reformed Catechism in two Dialogues,' the first of which only appeared in 1687.

MANCHESTER, Henry, Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was the third son of sir Edward Montagu, eldest son of Lord Chief Justice Montagu, who, after having studied at Cambridge, and at the Middle Temple, and passed through several gradations in office, was advanced in 1616 to the dignity of Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, in 1620 to that of Lord Treasurer; which latter office he exchanged the next year for that of Lord President of the Council. In 1627 he was made Lord Privy Seal, and continued in this office until his death in 1642.

Manchester, Edward, Earl of, son of the preceding, who in the history of the rebellion is known by his title of lord Kimbolton, begun very early, notwithstanding his close connexion with the court, to act in unison with the party who were plotting its destruction, and was among the first to take up arms against his sovereign, from whom himself and his family had received nothing but favours. He had the command of a regiment at the battle of Edge-Hill in 1642; and continued very active in the cause in which he was embarked, and much to the satisfaction of his employers, until the elevation of Cromwell, who, being jealous of his influence, charged him with lukewarmness and remissness, a charge which his lordship thought proper to rebut. He afterwards withdrew from public life until the restoration, to which, by his prudent management and seasonable advices, he obtained the credit of contributing, and in 1660 was reinstated in his office as Speaker of the House of Peers; and on the joyful entry of his majesty, on May 29th, he was appointed by the lords to congratulate his return to his subjects, which he expressed in a speech that is still preserved. On the coronation of the king, he had the honour to bear the sword of state before his majesty, with whom he continued in favour until his death in 1671, when he was in the 69th year of his age.

Manchester, Robert, third Earl of, was one of the six lords, members of the House of Commons, deputed by them to wait on the king at the Hague, to solicit his return to his kingdom, and at the coronation he was one of the four lords who bore up his majesty's train.

Manchester, Charles, fourth Earl of, and first Duke of, took an active part in the revolution of 1688; was at the battle of the Boyne in 1690; appointed Ambassador Extraordinary to the republic of Venice in 1691; to Louis XIV in 1699, and to the court of Vienna in 1707; and died in 1721, in the service of his majesty George I.

MANCHESTER, Duke of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Montagu [vide Montagu]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Montagu, duke and earl of Manchester, viscount Mandeville, and baron Montagu of Kimbolton.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, three lozenges conjoined in fess gules, within a border sable, with a crescent for difference, for Montagu; second and third or, an eagle displayed vert, beaked and membered gules, for Monthermer.

Crest. On a wreath, a griffin's head coupé or, wings indorsed sable, gorged with a collar argent, charged with three lozenges gules.

Supporters. On the dexter side, an antelope or, armed, crested, and hoofed argent; on the sinister a griffin of the first, gorged with a collar argent, charged with three fusils gules.

Motto. "Disponendo me, non mutando me."

MANCINELLI, Antonio (Biog.) an Italian grammarian and poet, was born at Velitri in 1452, and died about 1506, leaving 'Silva Vitæ suæ,' a poem on his own life; reprinted by Meuschenius in 1735, in the first volume of his collection, entitled 'Vitæ Summorum Dignitate et Eruditione Virorum;' besides some other poems, 'De Floribus, de Figuris, de Poetica Virtute;' and epigrams, published in 4to. 1500; and also some notes on classic authors.

MANCINUS, C. (Hist.) a Roman general, who, with an army of 30,000 men, was defeated by the Numantians. Cic. Orat. l. 1.

MANCO-CAPAC (Hist.) founder of the Peruvian empire, who declared himself to be the descendant of the Sun, was honoured as a deity by his subjects, whom he had brought from a savage to a civilized state.

MANDANE (Hist.) Μανδάνη, the daughter of Astyages, and wife of Cambyses, an ignoble Persian, by whom she had Cyrus. Herod. l. 1, c. 107, &c.

MANDANES (Hist.) a philosopher, who refused the invitation given to him by Alexander to attend his banquet. Strab. l. 15.

MANDEVILLE, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the duke of Manchester.

MANDEVILLE, Sir John (Biog.) an English traveller, and native of St. Alban's, descended from an ancient family in the 14th century, left England in 1322 to visit foreign countries, and returned at the end of 30 years, after having been long reputed dead. He went afterwards to Liege, where he passed under the name of Joannes de Barbam, and died about 1372, according to the inscription on his tomb, given by Vossius. His account of his travels, which he originally wrote in Latin, was translated into French, and from the French into English. The English edition was published under the title of 'The Voyage and Travaile of Sir John Maundevile, Knight, which treateth of the Way to Hierusalem,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1568, and 1684; and 8vo. 1727. All these are in the British Museum, together with copies of the French, Spanish, Latin, and Italian translations. Of the last, two editions were printed at Venice in 8vo. 1537 and 1567.

MANDEVILLE, Bernard de, an author and physician, was born about 1670 in Holland, and died in 1733, leaving, among other things, his 'Fable of the Bees,' &c.; 'Treatise of the Hypocondriac and Hysteric Passions,' &c.

MANDONIUS (Hist.) a prince in Spain, and brother of Indibilis, who at first favoured the cause of the Romans, and was in alliance with Scipio; but being charged with raising commotions in the country against his allies, he destroyed himself. Liv. l. 22, &c.

MANDUBRATIUS (Hist.) a young Briton, who went over to Cæsar, in Gaul, his father Immanuentius, a king in Britain, having been put to death by Cassibelaunus. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 5, c. 20.

MANES (Myth.) a son of Jupiter and Tellus, who reigned in Mæonia.

MANES (Ecc.) vide Manichæus.

MANETHO (Biog.) a celebrated priest of Heliopolis, in Egypt, who flourished upwards of 200 years before Christ, wrote a History of Egypt in Greek, of which fragments only are extant. A Greek Poem is ascribed to him, which was edited by Gronovius, 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1698. Plut. de Is. et Osir.; Hieron. contra Jov.; Suidas.

MANETTI, Giannozzo (Biog.) or Janutus, a scholar, was born at Florence in 1396, and died in 1459, leaving, 1. 'De Dignitate et Excellentiâ Hominis,' 8vo. Basil, 1532. 2. 'Vita Petrarchæ,' inserted in Tommasini's 'Petrarcha Redivivus.' 3. 'Oratio ad Regem Alphonsum in Nuptiis Filii sui;' reprinted by Freher in 4to. 1601, along with three other orations.

MANFREDI, Eustachio (Biog.) an astronomer and mathematician, was born at Bologna in 1674, and died in 1739, leaving, 1. 'Ephemerides Motuum Cœlestium ab Anno 1715 ad Annum 1750,' 4 vols. 4to. 2. 'De Transitu Mercurii per Solem Anno 1723,' 4to. Bonon. 1724. 3. 'De Annuis Inerrantium Stellarum Aberrationibus,' 4to. Bonon. 1729; besides some poems, the best edition of which is that by Bodoni, in 8vo. 1793.

MANFREDI, Gabriel, a mathematician, and brother to the preceding, was born at Bologna in 1681, and died in 1761, leaving 'De Constructione Æquationum Differentialium Primi Gradus,' Bonon. 1707; besides contributions to the Memoirs of the Institute of Bologna.

MANGEAT, Thomas (Biog.) a Benedictine, who died in 1763, was the author of 'Introduction à la Science des Medailles pour servir à la Connoissance des Dieux,' &c. fol. 1763.

MANGET, John James (Biog.) a physician and historian of the medical science, was born in 1652, at Geneva, and died in 1742, leaving, 1. 'Messis Medico-spagyrica,' &c. fol. Genev. 1683. 2. An edition of 'Pauli Barbetti Opera omnia Medica et Chirurgica.' 3. 'Bibliotheca Anatomica,' 2 vols. fol. 1685, executed in conjunction with Daniel Le Clerc. 4. 'Bibliotheca Pharmaceutico-Medica,' 2 vols. fol. 1703. 11. 'Bibliotheca Chirurgica,' 4 vols. fol. 1716. 12. 'Theatrum Anatomicum cum Eustachii Tabulis Anatomicis,' 2 vols. fol. 1716. 13. 'Traité de la Peste recueillé des Meilleurs Auteurs,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1721. 14. 'Nouvelles Reflexions sur l'Origine, la Cause, la Propagation, les Preservatifs, et la Cure de la Peste,' 12mo. 1722. 15. 'Observations sur la Maladie qui a commencé depuis quelques Années à attaquer le Gros Betail.' 16. 'Bibliotheca Scriptorum Medicorum veterum et recentiorum,' 4 vols. fol. 1731.

MANGEY, Thomas (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Leeds in 1684, educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and died in 1755, leaving, 1. 'Practical Discourses upon the Lord's Prayer,' &c. 8vo. 1716, 1717, and 1721. 2. 'Remarks upon Nazarenus,' &c. 1710. 3. 'Plain Notions of our Lord's Divinity,' 1719, a sermon, which was followed by other single sermons. 4. 'Philonis Judæi Opera omnia quæ reperiri potuerunt,' 2 vols. fol. 1742.

MANIA (Myth.) the mother of the Manes and the Lares. Varr. de Ling. Lat.

MANICHÆUS (Ecc.) Mani, or Manes, an heresiarch of the third century, who, pretending to the power of working miracles, was employed by Sapor, king of Persia, to cure his son, who was dangerously ill, but the child dying in his arms, the king was so enraged, that he threw him into prison, from which he made his escape; but being taken again, was, by the king's order, flead alive, his body given to the dogs, and his skin, stuffed with chaff, was hung before the city gates, where, according to Epiphanius, it was hanging in his time. Among the errors taught by this heretic, who gave his name to the Manicheans, was the denial of the incarnation, &c. of our Saviour; as also the admission of two principles in the world, a good and an evil one. Besides which they made use of amulets and incantations, &c. S. August. Hæres. 46; S. Epiphan. 6; Baron. Annal. &c.

MANILIA, gens (Hist.) a plebeian family at Rome, which was originally from Tusculum. [Vide Manilius]

MANILIA, gens (Numis.) the name of this family is to be found inscribed on some few medals, as M. MANILIUS, i. e. Manius Manilius, &c. Goltz. Fast.

MANILIUS (Hist.) a Roman, who married the daughter of Tarquin the Proud. Liv. l. 2.

MANILIUS, Marcus, a consul with Censorinus, U.C. 604, A.C. 149. He is commended for his eloquence by Cicero. Cic. Brut. c. 27.

MANILIUS, Caius, a tribune, proposed Pompey for prosecuting the Mithridatic war. Cic. pro Man. c. 14.

MANILIUS, Titus (Biog.) an historian in the age of Sylla and Marius. Plin. l. 10; Voss. de Lat. Hist. l. 1.

MANILIUS, Caius, or Marcus, an astronomer, who is supposed by some to have flourished in the Augustan age, although others have placed him in the age of Constantine the Great, composed a poem on astronomy entitled 'Astronomicon,' which is still extant. The best editions of Manilius are those of Bentley, 4to. London, 1739; and of Stoeber, 8vo. Argentor. 1767. Gyrald. de Poet. Hist. l. 4; Voss. de Poet. Lat. l. 2.

MANLEY, Sir Roger (Hist.) governor of Guernsey, and a great sufferer for his loyalty, was the author of, 1. 'Commentaria de Rebellione Anglicana ab Anno 1640 ad Annum 1685,' 8vo. London, 1686, of which an English translation was published in 1691. 2. 'History of the late Wars of Denmark,' 1670. The first volume of 'The Turkish Spy,' has also been ascribed to him, which was found among his papers, but this has been justly doubted. [Vide Marana]

MANLEY, Mary (Biog.) daughter of the preceding, who died in 1724, wrote 'Royal Mischief,' a tragedy, which procured her great applause among the wits of the day; and 'Memoirs of the New Atalantis,' a piece of licentious scandal, for which she was prosecuted, but finally liberated.

MANLIA, gens (Hist.) a patrician family at Rome, and one of the most fruitful in distinguished men, among whom may be reckoned three consuls, two dictators, and twelve tribunes, with consular power. It is supposed to have taken its origin from Manilius, the son-in-law of Tarquin above-mentioned, and is known by the surnames of Cincinnatus, Torquatus, Vulso, &c. [Vide Manlius, and Manlia gens, under Numismatics]

MANLIA, Scantilla, a Roman empress, remarkable, as is said, for her deformity, was the wife of Didius Julianus, and the mother of Didia. On the murder of her husband, his body was given to her, which she placed in the tomb of his ancestors. Spartian. in Vit. Did.

MANLIA, gens (Numis.) this family is distinguished on medals by the surname of TORQUATUS, very frequently as L. TORQUAT. III VIR, i. e. Lucius Torquatus Triumvir.—T. M. AP. CL. Q. MR. i. e. Titus Manlius Appius Claudius Quintus Marcus.—L. MANLI. PRO. Q.; also sometimes of Acidinus, as L. MANLI. ACIDIN. i. e. Lucius Manlius Acidinus; of Maximus, as CN. MANLIUS, CN. F. MAXIM. i. e. Cneus Manlius, Cnei Filius Maximus; of Vulso, as L. M. A.A. F. i. e. Lucius Manlius Auli Filius; and V. L. SO. LONGUS, in another part.

MANLIA, Scantillia, the wife of Didius, was honoured with the title of Augusta on the elevation of her husband, as appears from the inscriptions on her medals, bearing her effigy, as in the annexed figure, MANLIA SCANTILLIA AUG.; on the reverse, JUNO REGINA.—P. M. TR. P. COS. S. C.—SALUS AUGUST. Vaillant. Pr. tom. i; Strada. Imp. Rom.; Med. Imp. Rom.; Mus. Pembroch.

MANLIUS, Cincinnatus, a consul with M. Fabius Vibulanus, U.C. 274, A.C. 479, was killed in a battle with the Veii, and other enemies to Rome, after having obtained a victory over them. Liv. l. 2.

MANLIUS, Capitolinus, M. displayed his valour in the field at the early age of 16, and when Rome was taken by the Gauls, Manlius, with a body of his countrymen, defended the capitol, when it was surprised by an attack of the enemy in the night-time. Being afterwards found guilty of seditious practices, he was thrown down from the Tarpeian rock, and none of his family were ever after allowed to bear the name of Marcus. Liv. l. 6.

MANLIUS, Capitolinus, brother of the preceding, and four times tribune with consular power, discountenanced the proceedings of his brother.

MANLIUS, surnamed Imperiosus, from the haughtiness of his character, the father of Manlius Torquatus, so renowned in history, was made dictator U.C. 392, A.C. 361, and was afterwards accused by M. Pomponius, the tribune, of cruelty towards his son, but the latter hearing of the charge, went to the tribune, and by threats of stabbing him on the spot, compelled him to give up the proceedings against his father. Liv. l. 7, c. 3.

MANLIUS, Torquatus, T. the illustrious son of the preceding, and the first Roman who was raised to the dictatorship without having been first consul, obtained the surname of Torquatus, from the torquis or collar which he took from a Gaul whom he had conquered and slain. His piety to his father above-mentioned, and his rigorous severity to his son, have rendered his name more celebrated even than his great military exploits. His son, who was of the same name, stepped out of the ranks and engaged an enemy, by whom he was challenged, and notwithstanding he was victorious, and killed his antagonist, his father ordered him to execution, because he had violated military discipline. This T. Manlius was three times consul, but refused it the fourth time, because he could not restrain the vices of the people as he wished, notwithstanding his severity was such, that Manliana Imperia became proverbial for rigorous laws. Liv. l. 7; Val. Max. l. 2; Aurel. Vict. de Vir. illust. c. 28; Florus. &c.

MANLIUS, Torquatus, T. grandson of the preceding, and son of the Manlius who was beheaded, was consul with M. Fulvius Petinus, U.C. 455, A.C. 298, and was killed at a review of the troops, by a fall from his horse. Polyb. l. 1; Liv. l. 8; Plut. in Num.; Eutrop. l. 2.

MANLIUS, Torquatus, T. a consul with C. Attilius Balbus, U.C. 519, A.C. 235, obtained a triumph over the Sardinians, and shut the temple of Janus for the first time since the days of Numa. He was afterwards created dictator. U.C. 546, A.C. 208, and voted that the prisoners taken at the battle of Cannæ ought not to be redeemed.

MANLIUS, A. was censor U.C. 507, consul U.C. 510, with Sempronius, when he obtained a triumph over the Falisci.

MANLIUS, Vulso, C. a consul U.C. 565, with M. Fulvius Nobilior, was sent to administer the government of the province which Scipio Asiaticus had conquered in Asia, when he made war on the Pisidians and the Galatians, with the hope of obtaining a triumph, which the senate on that account refused him, but the people granted to him. Liv. l. 38; Flor. l. 2; Aurel. Vict. de Vir. illust.

MANLIUS, Torquatus, T. a consul U. C. 589, with Cn. Octavius, and again U. C. 605, with L. Martius, when the third Punic war was commenced, and Manlius, who was engaged with Asdrubal, and had precipitated himself into a defile, would have perished if the prudence of Scipio, a tribune, had not rescued him. It was this Manlius who forbade his son to come into his presence, because he had been found guilty of maladministration in the province of Macedonia. The son, struck with the rigour of his father, went and hanged himself.

MANLIUS, a tribune of the people, who made a law in favour of Pompey, which was called Manilia Lex, from Manilius, as it is otherwise written.

MANN (Her.) the present family name of earl Cornwallis, which is changed from that of Cornwallis.

MANNERS, Sir Robert de (Hist.) a brave captain, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, signalized himself in a particular manner by his prudent defence of Norham Castle, whereby he defeated the purpose of the Scots, who had contrived to take it by surprise. He was afterwards one of the commanders with lord Thomas Grey, of Werk, who defeated the earls of March and Sutherland, during king Edward's absence at the siege of Tournay, and in the 18th Edward III he was commissioned, with others, to treat with David de Bruce, and his adherents, about a truce. In 1346, when king David broke this truce, he was one of the commanders at the battle of Nevil's Cross, in which he gained no small share of honour, and died in 1355.

MANNERS, Thomas, vide Rutland.

MANNERS, Lord Robert, third son of the marquis of Granby, and grandson of the third duke of Rutland, having taken to the sea-service, soon acquired the reputation of a gallant officer, and died of the wounds he received in an engagement Sept. 1, 1781, in the West Indies, on board his majesty's ship the Resolution, of which he was captain. A monument, in honour of his memory, was erected in Westminster Abbey at the national expence, as also for his companions, captain Blair, and captain Bayne.

MANNERS (Her.) the name of an ancient family, of whom honourable mention is made under History, was first ennobled in the person of George Manners, who had the title of lord Roos in 1487, after the decease of his mother. His son Thomas, the second lord Roos, was created earl of Rutland in 1585. John, the ninth earl, was created baron Manners, of Haddon, co. Derby, by writ of summons to Parliament in 1679; and in 1703 he was advanced to the dignities of marquis of Granby, and duke of Rutland. [Vide Rutland] Sir Thomas Sutton, fifth son of lord George Sutton, third son of John Manners, third duke of Rutland, was created in 1807, a peer of Great Britain, by the title of lord Manners, of Foston, in Lincolnshire. The arms, &c. of this branch are as follow:

MANTON, Thomas (Biog.) a nonconformist, of Somersetshire, was born in 1620, ejected for his nonconformity in 1661, and died in 1677.

MANTUA (Geog.) a city of Austrian Italy formerly called Lombardy, and capital of a duchy of the same name, situated on islands formed by the river Mincio, 70 miles W. S. W. Venice, and 70 E. S. E. Milan. Lon. 10° 46′ E. lat. 45° 8′ N.

History of Mantua.

Mantua, which has retained its ancient name, is said to have been founded 300 years before the building of Rome by Bianor, or Ocnus, the son of Manto. It was the capital of Etruria, and suffered much during the civil wars on account of its adherence to the cause of Brutus, many of its inhabitants being deprived of their lands. The poet Virgil, who was a native of this place, and among the number of the sufferers, obtained a restitution of his lands in consequence of his poetic talent, which ever after secured him the favour of Augustus. On the fall of the Roman empire, Mantua, and its adjoining territory, experienced the vicissitudes to which all the states of Italy were subjected in the middle ages; but came at length, about 1327, into the hands of Louis de Gonzaga, whose successors took the title of captain until the emperor Sigismond conferred on them that of marquis in 1433. Charles V erected Mantua into a duchy in 1530; but the duke of Mantua having engaged with France in a war against the emperor of Germany, Mantua was taken and pillaged in 1630, when its public edifices suffered very much. From that period Mantua became annexed to the empire, and enjoyed an uninterrupted peace until the late revolutionary war, when it was twice besieged; first by the French in 1796, to whom it was surrended in 1797; and afterwards by the Austrians in 1799, from whom it was retaken in that year, but ceded to them in 1801, and remained in their hands until 1814. A council was held at Mantua in 1064 for the purpose of putting an end to the schism which had been occasioned by the election of an anti-pope in opposition to Alexander II. Virg. Eclog. l. 1, &c.; Serv. ad Virg. loc. cit.; Strab. l. 5; Ovid. Am. l. 3, el. 15; Stat. Sylv. l. 2; Sil. Ital. l. 8; Anton. Possevin. in Mant. et Mant. Hist.; Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital.; Greg. Let. Ital. Regn. &c.

MANTUAN, Baptist (Biog.) an Italian poet, whose family name was Spagnoli, was born at Mantua in the 15th century, and was the author of several poetical pieces of different descriptions, which were first printed in folio without a date, and reprinted at Bologna in 1502, and again at Paris in 1513, in 3 vols. fol. usually bound in one. A more complete edition was published at Antwerp in 4 vols. 8vo. 1576, under the title of 'I. Baptisti Mantuani Carmelitæ, Theologi, Philosophi, Poetæ, et Oratoris clarissimi, Opera omnia pluribus Libris aucta et restituta.'

MANTURNA (Myth.) one of the deities, who presided over marriage among the Romans. Aug. de Civ. D. l. 6.

MANUEL (Hist.) or Emanuel, the name of two emperors of Constantinople.

MANUEL, or Emanuel Comnenus, son of John Comnenus, succeeded his father in 1143 to the prejudice of his eldest brother Isaac, whom the latter had disinherited, and died in 1180, after having waged war on the Dalmatians, Hungarians, and Egyptians, with but little success.

MANUEL PALÆOLOGUS, succeeded his father, John Palæologus, in 1384, took the monastic habit in 1419, and died in 1425.

MANVERS, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Pierrepont [vide Pierrepont], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Pierrepont, earl Manvers, viscount Newark, and lord Pierrepont.

Arms. Argent, semé of cinquefoils gules, a lion rampant sable.

Crest. On a wreath, a lion rampant sable, between two wings erect argent.

Supporters. Two lions sable, armed and langued gules.

Motto. "Pie repone te."

MANUTIUS, Aldus (Biog.) a learned printer and editor, and the most celebrated of his family, was born about 1447 at Bassiano, and died in 1515. He began the business of printing at Venice in 1488, with an edition of the Greek poem of Musæus in quarto, with a Latin translation, but without date; this was followed by the Greek Grammar in 1494; and in one collection in 1495, the Grammatical Treatises of Theodore Gaza, Apollonius, and Herodian; in 1498 a complete edition of Aristotle's works in five vols. fol.; about 1500 the Virgil, called after him the Aldine Virgil, in the type since known by the name of Italic, which he had cast on purpose; from 1501 to 1505 he printed in folio or octavo a considerable number of the best authors, Greek, Roman, and Italian, as Demosthenes, Lucian, Horace, Cicero's Epistles, Juvenal, Lucan, Homer, Sophocles, Euripides, Dante, Petrarch, &c. in which he was assisted by the most learned of his cotemporaries. He published likewise a Latin Grammar of his own composition; and in 1515, after his death, was published by his friend Marcus Musurus, a Greek Grammar which Aldus had compiled with great research and industry; besides many of the Latin translations of which he was the author, a treatise 'De Metris Horatianis,' which is reprinted by Dr. Combe in his edition of that poet; a Greek Dictionary printed by himself in 1497, and reprinted by Francis d'Asola in 1524.

MANUTIUS, Paul, son of the preceding, was born in 1512, and died in 1574, leaving, among his works as an author, an edition of Cicero's works, besides several treatises; namely, 'De Legibus Romanis;' 'De Dierum apud Romanos veteres Ratione;' 'De Senatu Romano;' 'De Civitate Romana;' 'De Comitiis Romanorum,' &c.

MANUTIUS, Aldus, the Younger, and son of the preceding, was born in 1547, and died in 1597, leaving several works, the most considerable of which were his Commentaries on the Works of Cicero. [Vide Plate XXIII]

MAPES, Walter (Biog.) a Latin poet in the reign of Henry II, some of whose verses are still extant; besides which he wrote 'Compendium Topographiæ;' and 'Epitome Cambriæ.' The 'Descriptio Norfolciæ' is ascribed to him, and also a work under the assumed name of Valerius, entitled 'Valerius ad Rufinum de non ducenda Uxore.'

MAPLET, John (Biog.) a physician, was born in London in 1615, educated at Oxford, and died in 1670, leaving 'Epistolarum Medicarum Specimen de Thermarum Bathoniensium Effectis, ad Clariss. Medicos, D. Bate, Fraser, Wedderbourne,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1694. He is supposed to be a different person from the J. Maplet who wrote 'A Discourse of Metals, Stones, Herbs,' &c.

MAPLETOFT, Robert, (Biog.) an English divine, was born at North Thoresby, in the county of Lincoln, in 1610, educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, driven from his fellowship at Pembroke Hall by the covenanters, and died master of Pembroke Hall in 1677, leaving many charitable and useful donations.

MAPLETOFT, John, a physician, descended from a good family in Huntingdonshire, was born in 1631, and died in 1721, leaving a Latin translation of Sydenham's 'Observationes Medicæ;' 'The Principles and Duties of the Christian Religion,' &c.

MARACCI, Louis (Biog.) an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Lucca in 1612, and died in 1700, leaving an edition of the Koran, published at Padua, in 2 vols. fol. entitled 'Alcorani Textus Universus, Arabice et Latine. He had also a large share in the edition of the Arabic Bible printed at Rome in 3 vols. fol. 1671. Niceron gives a long list of his works.

MARALDI, James Philip (Biog.) an astronomer and mathematician, who was born in 1665 at Perinaldo, in the county of Nice, and died in 1729, was employed under his maternal uncle Cassini in prolonging the French meridian to the northern extremity of France, and afterwards by Clement XI in the reformation of the calendar. He left a catalogue of the fixed stars, and some other pieces printed in the Memoirs of the Academy.

MARANA, John Paul (Biog.) the author of the 'Turkish Spy,' was born at or near Genoa in 1642, and died in 1693. The 'Turkish Spy' was first published in 6 vols. 12mo.; to which a seventh was added in the last edition of 1742. He also wrote an Account of the Conspiracy formed by Raphael de la Torre to give up Genoa to the Duke of Savoy, in which he himself had had a part.

MARAT, John Paul (Hist.) one of the most prominent actors in the French revolution, was born of protestant parents in Neufchatel in 1744; and, being bred to the profession of physic, he became an empyric, and on the breaking out of the revolution, he was one of its most violent partisans, both by his writings and his conduct. After the deposition of Louis XVI, he was named a deputy of the department of Paris to the convention, where he went armed with pistols; and in 1793 publicly denounced the Brissotine faction. The downfal of this party was followed by the reign of terror, at which Robespierre and Marat presided; but the bloody career of the latter was stopt by the knife of an assassin in the person of Charlotte Cordé, who fancied she should rescue her country from the hands of barbarians by the assassination of one of their chiefs.

MARATHON (Geog.) Μαραθὼν, a village of Attica, 10 miles from Athens, celebrated for the victory which the 10,000 Athenians and 1000 Platæans under Miltiades gained over the Persian army, consisting of 100,000 foot and 10,000 horse, or still more, according to other accounts. In this battle, which was fought 490 years before Christ, the Athenians are said to have lost only 192 men, and the Persians upwards of 6000. Herod. l. 1, 6, &c.; Thucyd. l. 1; C. Nep. in Milt.; Val. Max. l. 5; Justin. l. 2; Plut. in Parall.

MARATTI, Carlo (Biog.) a painter of the Italian school was born at Camerino, in the March of Ancona, in 1625, and died in 1713, after having acquired an extraordinary reputation in painting Madonnas, with which he adorned the churches and palaces of Rome. Of his other pieces, his 'Bathsheba viewed by David' is the most admired.

MARCA, Peter de (Ecc.) one of the most celebrated prelates of the Gallican church, was born at Gant, in Bearn, in 1594, of a noble and ancient family, was raised to the see of Conserans in 1641, translated to that of Toulouse in 1655, and died in 1662, leaving, 1. 'Histoire de Bearn,' &c. fol. Paris, 1640. 2. 'Libellus de Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii,' 4to. 1641. 3. 'Vigilii Papæ Epistola Decretalis,' &c. 8vo. 1642. 4. 'Dissertatio de Primatu Lugdunensi,' &c. 8vo. Paris. 1644. 5. 'Histoire de Notre Dame,' &c. 8vo. Barcelona, 1648. 6. 'Marca Hispanica,' &c. fol. Paris. 1688.

MARC-ANTONIO (Biog.) vide Raimondi.

MARCELLA (Hist.) a daughter of Octavia, the sister of Augustus, by Marcellus. She married Agrippa.

MARCELLINUS (Hist.) a great general of Dalmatia, who, on the death of Aetius, entered into the service of the emperor Leo, and drove the Vandals from Sardinia.

MARCELLINUS, brother of the usurper Maximus, was defeated and killed by the emperor Theodosius in a battle fought near Padua.

MARCELLINUS, an officer of the empire, and a count of Illyria, wrote a Chronicle from the year 379 to 534, which has been published by Scaliger and other authors; but the edition of P. Sirmond, published in 1619, is reckoned the most correct.

MARCELLINUS, Ammianus, a warrior and historian, bore arms under Constantius, Julian, and Valens, and wrote a History of Rome, from the Reign of Domitian, where Suetonius stops, to the Emperor Valens. It was divided into 31 books, of which only the 18 last remain, beginning at the death of Magnentius. The best editions of Ammianus are those of Gronovius,' fol. & 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1693, and of Ernesti,' 8vo. Lips. 1773.

MARCELLINUS (Ecc.) a Roman by birth, succeeded Caius in the see of Rome in 296, and governed the church eight years, a month, and twenty-seven days, when he is said to have suffered martyrdom. He is vindicated by Augustine against the Donatists, who charged him with having sacrificed to idols. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 7; August. Cont. Petil. c. 16.

MARCELLINUS, a Roman priest and a martyr, was beheaded in the persecution of the emperor Diocletian, and his body thrown into a ditch, together with that of St. Peter, the exorcist, who suffered with him.

MARCELLINUS, a tribune and secretary of state in Africa, was employed by the emperor Honorius to preside at a conference between the Catholic bishops and those of the Donatists; and, having given his judgment in favour of the former, the Donatists caused him to be put to death by the emperor on a charge of his favouring the usurper Heraclianus.

MARCELLINUS (Biog.) a Greek author, of whose writings there remains a Dissertation on the Life of Thucydides, on his Style, and also Commentaries on the Rhetoric of Hermogenes. Gesner supposes this writer to be the same as Ammianus Marcellinus.

MARCELLO, Benedetto (Biog.) an Italian nobleman, and musical professor, was born in 1680 at Venice, and died in 1739, or, according to some, in 1741. He was author of, 1. 'Teatro alla Moda.' 2. 'Estro Poetico-Armonico Para-frasi sopri primi 50 Salmi,' &c. 8 vols. fol. Venice, 1724 and 1725. 3. 'Arato in Sparta,' a drama set to music by Ruggieri. 4. 'Giuditta,' an oratorio; the words of which he composed as well as the music.

MARCELLUS (Hist.) the surname of an illustrious but plebeian branch of the gens Claudia.

MARCELLUS, M. Claudius, was consul U. C. 423, A. C. 331, with C. Valerius Potitus, and afterwards dictator. He was deprived of this latter office through the influence of the patricians, because he was a plebeian.

MARCELLUS, M. Claudius, a Roman general, who, by gaining an advantage over Annibal, first taught his countrymen that the Carthaginian commander was not invincible. He was afterward sent into Sicily, where he rendered his name illustrious by the capture of Syracuse, notwithstanding all the mechanical skill of the mathematician Archimedes. He was then called upon a second time to encounter Annibal, by whom, after various success, he was killed in an ambuscade in the 60th year of his age, and in his fifth consulship U. C. 546, A. C. 208. [Vide Plate XIII] Polyb. l. 2; Liv. l. 2; Cor. Nep. in Annib.; Virg. Æn. l. 6; Plut. in Vit.

MARCELLUS, M. Claudius, son of the preceding, was caught in the ambuscade in which his father fell, but forced his way through the enemy, and afterwards received the ashes of the latter from the conqueror. He passed through all the offices of the state, triumphed in his consulship over the Insubres, and died pontifex. Liv. l. 27, &c.; Plut. in Marcell.

MARCELLUS, M. Claudius, grandson of the preceding, was three times consul; namely, U. C. 588, with Sulpitius Gallus; 599, with Scipio Nasica; U. C. 602, A. C. 152, with L. Valerius Flaccus. In his first consulship, he carried on a successful warfare against the Gauls, but was drowned in his passage to Africa on a public mission.

MARCELLUS, M. Claudius, son of the preceding, and the staunch adherent to Pompey, signalized himself in the civil wars between the rivals; for which he was banished by Cæsar, but was afterwards restored by the power of Cicero's eloquence displayed in his defence, in an oration still extant. He was assassinated at Athens by Magius Chilius. Cic. pro Marcell. ad Div. l. 4, ep. 12, &c.

MARCELLUS, M. Claudius, grandson of the preceding, and son of Marcellus by Octavia, the sister of Augustus, though early betrothed to Pompeia, the daughter of Sex. Pompey, nevertheless married Julia, the emperor's daughter, and was destined to be his successor if he had not been snatched away by an untimely death. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

MARCELLUS (Ecc.) the name of two popes.

MARCELLUS, St., succeeded S. Marcellinus, and is said to have held the see of Rome from the year 308 to 310, although Eusebius and S. Jerome make no mention of him. Baron. Annal. ann. 309; Tillemont. Mem.

MARCELLUS II, formerly named Marcellus Corvinus, succeeded Julius III in 1555, and died 24 days after his election, not without suspicion of having been poisoned. Panvin. in Vit.; Genebrard. in Chron.; Spondan. in Annal.

MARCELLUS, St., a martyr at Chalons sur Saone, was buried alive in the time of the first persecution of Marcus Aurelius. Gregor. Tur. de Glor. Martyr. c. 54, &c.

MARCELLUS, S., a martyr in Africa, in the reign of Diocletian, and a captain in the legion of Trajan, resigned his commission on becoming a christian, and, having publicly declared his reasons for so doing, was beheaded in 298.

MARCELLUS (Numis.) medals are extant of the second pope of this name, bearing the inscriptions, MARCELLUS II. PONT. MAX. &c.

MARCH, Roger, Earl of (Hist.) vide Mortimer.

MARCH and DUNBAR, Patrick, Earl of, vide Dunbar.

MARCH and DUNBAR, Earl of (Her.) vide Dunbar.

MARCH, Earl of, this title was conferred by king James III in 1478 on his brother Alexander, duke of Albany, on whose forfeiture it reverted to the crown; and was conferred, with the additional title of earl of Dunbar, on Robert Stuart, grand uncle of king James VI, but on his death in 1586 these titles again reverted to the crown. Lord William Douglas, second son of William, first duke of Queensbury, was created earl of March in 1697, but the title became extinct in 1810, at the death of the fourth duke of Queensbury.

MARCH, Earl of, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the duke of Richmond.

MARCHAND, Prosper (Biog.) a French writer, and a native of Paris, who died in 1756, was the editor of 'Satyre Menippée,' 3 vols. 8vo. Ratisbonne, 1714. 2. 'Cymbalum Mundi,' 12mo. by Bonaventure de Perrières, Amst. 1732. 3. Fenelon's 'Direction pour la Conscience d'un Roi,' 8vo. and 12mo. Hague, 1747. 4. The Abbé Brenner's 'Histoire des Revolutions de Hongrie,' 2 vols. 4to. and 6 vols. 12mo. ibid. 1739. 5. 'Lettres, Memoires, et Negociations du Comte d'Estrades,' 9 vols. 12mo. London, 1743. 6. 'Histoire de Fenelon,' 12mo. Hague, 1747. 7. 'Œuvres de Brantôme,' 15 vols. 12mo. &c. He was the author of 'Histoire de l'Imprimerie,' 4to. Hague. 1740; to which a supplement was published by Mercier, the Abbé of St. Leger, in 1775; and 'Dictionnaire Historique, ou Memoires Critiques et Litteraires,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1758-9; besides other works.

MARCHE, Oliver de la (Biog.) a French courtier, who died in 1501, was the author of 1. 'Memoires,' &c. 4to. Lyons, 1562, and Brussels, 1616. 2. 'Le Parement et le Triomphe des Dames d'Honneur,' &c.

MARCHETTI, Alexander (Biog.) a physician, mathematician, and poet, was born in 1633 at Pontormo, between Pisa and Florence, and died in 1714, leaving several poems, of which an edition was printed in 4to. Venice, 1755, with his life prefixed; besides which he translated Lucretius into Italian verse, published in 4to. London, 1717, and wrote a free translation of Anacreon, together with several treatises on Philosophy.

MARCHETTI, or Marchettis, Peter de, a physician and anatomist of Padua, who died in 1673, at the age of 80, was the author of 'Anatomia,' 4to. Venet. 1654; 'Sylloge Observationum Medico-Chirurgicarum,' &c. Patav. 1664; and several times reprinted since.

MARCHIN, Ferdinand, Count (Hist.) a native of Liege, and a general in the French armies, who signalized himself at the battles of Fleurus and Nerwinde, and at the siege of Charleroi, was sent in 1701 as ambassador from Louis XIV to Spain; commanded afterwards the retreat at the fatal battle of Hochstet; and died of the wounds he received at the battle of Turin in 1706.

MARCHMONT, Sir Patrick Home, first Earl of (Hist.) vide Home.

MARCHMONT, Alexander, second Earl of, assisted government on the invasion of the Chevalier de St. James in 1715, was appointed Envoy Extraordinary to the court of Denmark in the same year, and first Ambassador to the congress at Cambray in 1721. He was sworn a Privy Counsellor in 1726, and died in 1740.

MARCHMONT, Hugh, third Earl of, third son of the preceding, distinguished himself at first as a leader in the opposition to sir Robert Walpole's ministry, but was still more known in the literary world by his talents and acquirements, which he continued to improve by constant reading until his death in 1794. It is to him that the public are indebted for the publication of the Records of Parliament from the earliest period, and also the printing of Domesday Book.

MARCIA (Hist.) vide Martia.

Marcia, gens, a family, partly patrician and partly plebeian, which deduced its origin from Ancus Marcius. It was distinguished by the surnames of Coriolanus, Censorinus, Figulus, Libo, Philippus, and Rex.

Marcia, Proba, a queen of the Ancient Britons, who is said to have reigned before the birth of Christ, and to have promulgated some laws, known by the name of Leges Marcianæ, which Gildas translated into Latin, and king Alfred into the Saxon. Bed. de Reb. Angl.; Polydor. Verg. &c.

Marcia, gens (Numis.) the medals of this family bear, as a memorial of their origin, the heads of Ancus Marcius and Numa Pompilius, and the inscriptions, M. MARCI M. MARGARET (Hist.) the name of several queens and princesses.

Queens of England.

MARGARET of France, daughter of Louis VII, was married to Henry, son of Henry II of England, in 1170, and at his death to Bela II, king of Hungary; and being soon after a second time a widow, she undertook a voyage to the Holy Land, and died at Acre in 1196.

MARGARET of France, daughter of Philip III, was married in 1299 to Edward I, and died in 1317.

MARGARET of Anjou, daughter of René, king of Sicily, married Henry VI in 1443, levied an army in 1455 to rescue her husband from the hands of his enemies, by whom he had been made a prisoner; and after defending his cause in 12 battles, and experiencing many vicissitudes of fortune, she retired to France, where she died in 1482, at the age of 59. [Vide Plate VI]

Queens of France.

MARGARET of Provence, daughter of Raymond Berenger II, was married to S. Louis, at Sens, in 1234, and after accompanying him on his expedition to the Holy Land, in which she took an active part, she died at Paris in 1285.

MARGARET of Burgundy, daughter of Robert II, duke of Burgundy, was married in 1305 to Louis X; but being convicted of adultery, her lover was flead alive, and she was strangled in 1314.

MARGARET of Scotland, daughter of James I, king of Scotland, was married to Louis XI in 1436, and died in 1444, at the age of 26.

MARGARET of France, daughter of Henry II, and wife of Henry IV, was divorced from him in 1599, on account of her gallantries, and died in 1613, at the age of 65, leaving some poetical pieces and 'Memoires.'

Queens of Scotland, Denmark, and Spain.

MARGARET of England, grand-daughter of Edmund II, king of England, was married to Malcolm III, king of Scotland, in 1070, and died in 1093, of grief at the death of her husband in battle, by whom she was greatly beloved and esteemed. She was canonized by Innocent IV in 1251. Her three sons Edgar, Alexander, and David, successively filled the throne of Scotland, and her daughter Matilda was married to Henry I of England.

MARGARET, daughter of Waldemar III, king of Denmark, and wife of Hacquin, king of Norway, governed the kingdoms of Norway and Denmark, after the death of her husband, with much wisdom, and died after a reign of 36 years in 1412, at the age of 59, after having rendered the kingdom of Denmark very flourishing.

MARGARET, daughter of Charles of Austria, was born in 1584, married to Philip III of Spain, and died in 1611, after having endowed many pious foundations.

Queens of Navarre.

MARGARET of Orleans, or Valois, duchess of Alençon, and sister of Francis I; celebrated for her wit and beauty, was born in 1492; married to Charles, last duke of Alençon, in 1509; and at the death of her husband was re-married in 1527 to Henry d'Albret, and died in 1549, at the age of 59, of a catarrh, which, it is said, she caught while making observations on a comet. She was the mother of Joan d'Albret, who, by Anthony of Bourbon, had Henry IV of France. This princess, who cultivated letters, wrote, among other things, 1. 'Miroir de l'Ame Pecheresse,' a work savouring of Protestantism, which was published in 1533, and condemned by the Sorbonne in the same year as heretical. 2. 'Eptameron,' known by the name of 'Nouvelles de la Reine de Navarre,' 4to. 1559, 1560, and several times since reprinted. Several editions have been printed with cuts, of which the most valued are that of Amsterdam, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1698; also in 3 vols. 8vo. Berne, 1780-81. 3. 'Les Marguerites de la Marguerite des Princesse.' A collection of her productions, formed by John de la Haye, her valet de chambre, and published in 8vo. Lyons, 1547, and 1554.

MARGARET of France, another queen of Navarre, was also wife of Henry IV, and queen of France as above-mentioned.

Other Princesses of this Name.

MARGARET of France, daughter of Philip V, was married in 1320 to Louis II, count of Flanders, and died in 1382, leaving a high reputation for piety and virtue.

MARGARET of Austria, daughter of the emperor Maximilian I, was betrothed to the dauphin of France, afterwards Charles VIII; but not marrying him, she became the wife of the Infant of Spain, and after his death was married to Philibert, duke of Savoy. She died in 1530, at the age of 50, after having displayed her zeal against the Lutherans.

MARGARET, countess of Richmond and Bletsoe, was born in Bedfordshire in 1441, and married Edmund, earl of Richmond, half-brother to Henry VI, by whom she had Henry VII. After her husband's death she married sir Henry Stafford; and for her third husband took Thomas Stanley, created earl of Derby, whom she survived four years, dying in in 1509. She has rendered her name illustrious by her noble foundations at Cambridge and Oxford; in the former of which Universities she founded the two Colleges of St. John's and Christ's, besides a divinity professorship in both the Universities, now well known by the name of the Lady Margaret's Professorships. She is described by Fisher, who preached her funeral sermon, as allied to 30 kings and queens. Her will, which is very curious, is preserved in the 'Collection of Royal and Noble Wills,' 4to. 1780; besides which she published 'The Mirroure of Golde for the Sinful Soule,' translated from the French; the translation of a book called 'Speculum Aureum Peccatorum.' She also translated out of the French into English the fourth book of Gerson's treatise 'Of the Imitation and following the Blessed Life of our most merciful Saviour Christ,' printed at the end of Dr. William Atkinson's English translation of the first three books, 1504. A Letter to her son is printed in Howard's 'Collection of Letters." She also made, by her son's command and authority, the orders yet extant for great estates of ladies and noble women, for their precedence, &c. [Vide Plate XII]

MARGARET of York, sister of Edward IV, and wife of Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy, distinguished herself by her opposition to the elevation of Henry VII, and the encouragement which she gave to the impostors Simnel and Perkin Warbeck, who disturbed the government of this monarch.

MARGARET of York, countess of Salisbury, and daughter of George, duke of Clarence, as also niece to Edward IV, and the last of the line of the Plantagenets, was beheaded in 1541, at the age of 70, by order of Henry VIII, on account of the intrigues which she was suspected of carrying on with her son cardinal Pole, against the government.

MARGARET of France, daughter of Francis I, was born in 1523, married to Emanuel Philibert, duke of Savoy, in 1559, and died in 1574, after having acquired great reputation for her encouragement of learning.

MARGARET, duchess of Florence, and natural daughter of Charles V, was married by the emperor, her father, to Alexander de Medicis, duke of Florence, and after his assassination in 1537, to Octavius Farnese, nephew to the pope Paul III, at whose death she was entrusted by her brother Philip II with the administration of the government of the Low Countries, where she rendered herself extremely beloved by her prudence, and prevented those excesses into which the inhabitants were afterwards driven by the severity of the duke of Alba.

MARGARET, countess of Cumberland, daughter of the second earl of Bedford, wife of George, earl of Cumberland, and mother of Anne, duchess of Dorset, was also distinguished in her day by the spirit with which she brought to light and established the title of her family to several baronies that had for some centuries lain dormant. These, with the rest of the property, became the inheritance of the forementioned lady Anne Clifford, her only daughter. [Vide Plate VI] The Letters of this countess, as also her Diary, are extant in MS.

MARINUS, a martyr in the third century, distinguished by his birth and his wealth, was beheaded about 261.

MARIO, Nuzzi (Biog.) or Mario de Fiori, a painter, who died at Rome in 1673, at the age of 70, was highly esteemed for his flowers and landscapes.

MARIOTTE, Edmund (Biog.) a French philosopher and mathematician, was born at Dijon in 1666, and died in 1684, leaving several works, which were collected and published in 2 vols. 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1717.

MARIVAUX, Peter Carlet de Chambellain de (Biog.) a French writer of dramas and romances, was born at Paris in 1688, and died in 1763, leaving, 1. 'Pieces de Theatre,' 5 vols. 12mo. 2. 'Homère Travesti,' 12mo. 3. 'Le Spectateur François,' 2 vols. 12mo. 4. 'Le Philosophe Indigent,' 12mo. 5. 'Vie de Marianne,' 4 vols. 12mo. 6. 'Le Paysan Parvenu,' 12mo. 7. 'Pharsamon,' &c. &c.

MARIUS (Hist.) a Roman peasant of Arpinum, rose by his military talents to the rank of consul, when he succeeded in defeating Jugurtha, and thus bringing the Jugurthan war to a successful termination. His subsequent victories procured him an election to the consulship five several successive times, when he begun to raise seditions, and, under pretence of opposing the power of Sylla, aimed at the sovereignty for himself. He died, however, in the midst of this struggle, A. C. 86, but not until he had deluged Rome with the blood of his enemies. Paterc. l. 2; Plut. in Vit.; Flor. l. 3.

MARIUS, son of the preceding, who shared in his father's good and bad fortune, also followed his career of cruelty and ambition. He made himself consul at 25, but was defeated by Sylla, and fled to Præneste, where he was slain in attempting to escape. Cic. Nat. Deor. l. 3; Paterc. l. 2; Plut. in Mar.; Appian. de Bell. Civ. l. 1.

Marius, M. Gratidianus, a pretor, who was scourged and put to a cruel death by Catiline, or, according to others, by Sylla, was brother or uncle to the first Marius. Cic. de Pet. Cons. 3; Val. Max. l. 9; Plut. in Syll.

Marius, M. Aurelius, a native of Gaul, from the mean employment of a blacksmith, became one of the generals of Gallienus, and at length caused himself to be proclaimed emperor, but was killed by one of the common soldiers whom he offended three days after, according to Trebellius Pollio, which is scarcely credible from the number of medals struck of him. [Vide Marius under Numismatics]

Marius (Ecc.) a bishop of Avenche, who was present at the council of Maçon, held in 585, wrote a chronicle, which was first published by P. Chiflet, under the title of 'Marii Aventicensis seu Lausannensis Episcopi Chronicon,' &c. which is inserted in Duchêsne's collection of French historians.

Marius (Numis.) medals of this emperor bear his effigy, as in the annexed figure: inscriptions—IMP. C. MARIUS P. F. AUG.—IMP. C. M. AUR. MARIUS P. F. AUG.; on the reverse, CONCORD. MILIT.—FELICITAS AUG.—PACATOR ORBIS.—SAC. FELICITAS.—VICTORIA AUG. Vaill. Præst.; Harduin. Oper.; Mediob. Imp. Rom.

Marius, Maximus (Biog.) a Latin writer, who published an account of the Roman emperors from Trajan to Alexander, which is now lost. Capitolinus; Vopiscus.

MARK (Bibl.) Μάρκος, the Evangelist, was, according to the accounts of both ancients and moderns, the disciple and interpreter of St. Peter, whom some have confounded with John Mark, mentioned Acts xii. &c.; but this opinion is pretty generally discarded. Whether he wrote his Gospel in Greek or in Latin is a matter of dispute; but, as he wrote it at Rome, it is most generally supposed to have been written in the latter language. Iren. l. 3, c. 1; Tertullian. cont. Mar. l. 4; Papias. et Clem. Alex. apud. Euseb. Hist. l. 2; Hieron. de Vir. Illust.; Gregor. Nazian. Orat. 25, &c.; Epiphan. Hær. 51; Niceph. Callist. Hist. l. 3, c. 43; Du Pin, Bibl. &c. &c.

Mark, St. (Ecc.) a Roman by birth, succeeded Sylvester I in the papal chair in 336, but did not hold the pontificate more than eight months and twenty-two days, when he was succeeded by Julius I. Baronius; Bellarmin, &c.

Mark, bishop of Alexandria, succeeded Eumenes about 144, and governed this church until 154, when he was succeeded by Celadion. Euseb. Hist. l. 4; et in Chron.

Mark, a bishop of Jerusalem, and the first who governed this church not being a Jew. He was chosen after the persecution about 135, and held his charge until 156, when Publius succeeded him. Euseb. Hist. l. 4; et in Chron.; Adon. in Chron.

Mark, a heretic, and disciple of Valentin, used magic in order to make the wine in the chalice appear like blood. He also made four persons in the Godhead, and denied that our Saviour suffered actually in the body. Euseb. Hist. l. 4.

Mark, a bishop of Arethusa in the fourth century, was raised to the episcopal dignity in the reign of Constantine, and is said to have countenanced for some time the party of the Eusebians; but Gregory Nazianzene passes great eulogiums on this prelate for his steady adherence to the faith in the midst of all the sufferings which the Pagans made him endure.

Mark, a deacon of the church of Gaza, was sent by Porphyry, his diocesan, in 398 to Constantinople, in order to induce the emperor to have an idol temple pulled down, where the inhabitants of Gaza worshipped their god Marnas. He was supported in his appeal by S. John Chrysostom, if the accounts given of this transaction under the name of Mark be correct.

MARKHAM, Gervase (Biog.) an English author in the reigns of James I and Charles I, was the author of 'Herod and Antipater,' a tragedy, printed in 1622; 'The English Husbandman,' &c.; 'Pleasures of Princes in the Art of Angling;' 'The whole Art of Angling;' 'Hunger's Prevention, or the whole Art of Fowling;' 'The Soldier's Accidence and Grammar;' 'Devereux's Vertues Tears for the Loss of the most Christian King Henry Third,' &c. a translation from a French poem; 'England's Arcadia;' 'England's Parnassus;' and many other pieces in verse and prose.

MARKLAND, Abraham (Biog.) an English divine and poet, was born in London in 1645, educated at Oxford, and died about 1720, leaving a Poem on the Restoration; another on the Art of Shooting Flying; and a volume of Sermons.

Markland, Jeremiah, an English critic and divine, was born in 1693, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1776, leaving, 1. 'Epistola Critica ad Eruditissimum virum Franciscum Hare,' 8vo. Cantab. 1723. 2. An edition of Statius, of which the 'Sylvæ,' was published in 4to. 1728. 3. 'Remarks on the Epistles of Cicero to Brutus, and of Brutus to Cicero, in a Letter to a Friend,' 1745, which gave rise to a controversy in the learned world respecting the genuineness of these letters. 4. 'De Græcorum quintâ Declinatione Imparisyllabica, &c. Quæstio Grammatica,' 4to. 1760, which was afterwards annexed to his edition of the 'Supplices Mulieres,' of Euripides, 4to. 1763. 5. An edition of the two Iphigeniæ, published under the title of 'Euripidis Dramata Iphigenia in Aulide et Iphigenia in Tauride; ad codd. MSS. Recensuit et Notulas adjecit Jer. Markland, Coll. D. Petri Cant. Socius,' 8vo. 1768 and 1771. Of this, as also of the 'Supplices Mulieres,' and the 'Quæstio Grammatica,' &c. an edition both in 8vo. and 4to. has since been published at Oxford, by Mr. Gainsford.

MARLBOROUGH, John, Duke of (Hist.) the second, but eldest surviving son of sir Winstan Churchill, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1650, became page of honour to James duke of York, in his youth; served in 1671 against the Moors at Tangiers, signalized himself the next year at the siege of Maestrecht, under the duke of Monmouth; was nominated ambassador to the court of France in 1681, assisted in defeating the duke of Monmouth at Sedgemore in 1685; was appointed one of the Lords of the Bed-chamber to king William in 1689, when he was sent to command the English forces in the Netherlands, under prince Waldeck, general of the Dutch troops; in 1692 was imprisoned and divested of his offices in consequence of king William's displeasure, but being soon after reinstated in his favour, was readmitted of his Council, and to his other offices, which he retained until the accession of queen Anne, when, in the capacity of captain-general of all her majesty's forces in England, and of those employed abroad, in conjunction with her allies, he performed a series of brilliant exploits which were never before equalled, and have only been exceeded by those of the present age. His grace also acted as a negotiator as well as a warrior, and died in 1722, after having some time survived his mental faculties. [Vide Plate XIV]

Marlborough, Sarah, Duchess of, wife of the illustrious commander above-mentioned, daughter and co-heir of Richard Jennings, esq. died in 1744, after having acted a conspicuous part at the court of queen Anne, where, for many years, she was the prime mover of every thing that passed in the political world. Previous to her death she employed Hooke, the Roman historian, at the price of 5000*l.* to write a defence of her, which was published in 1742, under the title of 'An Account of the Conduct of the Dowager Duchess of Marlborough, from her first coming to Court to the Year 1710; in a Letter from Herself to my Lord.' A selection of her papers was made in the way of diary, by sir David Dalrymple, lord Hailes, under the title of 'The Opinions of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, published from the Original MSS,' 12mo. 1788.

MARLBOROUGH, Duke of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Spencer, [vide Spencer and Churchill] which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Spencer, duke of Marlborough, marquis of Blandford, earl of Sunderland, and of Marlborough, baron Spencer, of Wormleighton, and baron Churchill, of Sandridge.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth quarterly argent and gules; in the second and third a fret or, over all on a bend sable, three escallops of the first for Spencer; second and third sable, a lion rampant argent, on a canton of the last a cross gules, for Churchill.

Crest. In a ducal coronet or, a gryphon's head between two wings erect argent, gorged with two plain collars gules.

Supporters. The dexter, a gryphon party per fess argent and or; sinister, a wyvern argent, their wings expanded, each collared and chained sable, and each collar charged with three escallops argent.

Motto. "Dieu defend le droit."

MARLBOROUGH, Earl of, a title conferred in 1626 on James Ley, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and Lord High Treasurer of England, which title became extinct at the death of William, the fourth earl of Marlborough, in 1679.

MARLOE (Biog.) or Marlow, Christopher, a tragic poet of the 16th century, wrote, among other dramatic pieces, 'Tamerlane, the Great Scythian Emperor,' &c.; 'The rich Jew of Maltha;' 'The Tragical History of the Life and Death of Dr. John Faustus;' 'Lust's Dominion;' 'The Tragedy of King Edward II;' 'The Tragedy of Dido, Queen of Carthage,' besides which, he translated Coluthus' 'Rape of Helen,' into English rhyme; the 'Elegies of Ovid;' 'Loves of Hero and Leander,' &c.

MARLORAT, Augustine (Biog.) a Protestant divine of the 16th century, and native of Lorraine, wrote Commentaries on the Holy Scriptures, most of which were translated into English, in the age of Elizabeth.

MARMARICA (Geog.) a region of Africa, which formed one part of Libya, and is now comprehended under the kingdom of Barca. Strab. l. 17; Plin. l. 5; Ptol. l. 4.

MARMION, Shakerley (Biog.) a dramatic writer, was born of an ancient family at Aynhoe, in Northamptonshire, in 1602, and died in 1639, leaving 'Holland's Leaguer,' &c. a comedy, 4to. 1632; 'A fine Companion acted before the King and Queen at Whitehall,' 4to. 1633; 'The Antiquary,' a comedy, 4to. 1641; this is also printed in Dodsley's collection of Old Plays, vol. x. second edition, to which the Biographia Dramatica, and other books, add 'The Crafty Merchant,' &c. He also published 'Cupid and Psyche, or an epic Poem of Cupid and his Mistress,' &c. besides other poems, scattered in different publications.

MARMOL, Louis (Biog.) a Spaniard, and native of Grenada, in the 16th century, wrote, 1. 'La Descripcion General de Africa,' published in two parts, fol. Granada, 1573-99, translated into French, in three parts, by Nicholas Perrot d'Ablancourt, 4to. Paris, 1667. 2. 'Historia del Rebellion y Castigo de los Mariscos,' Malaca, 1600, besides some theological works.

MARMONTEL, John Francis (Biog.) a modern writer of some distinction, was born in 1723 at Bost, a small town in Limosin, and died in 1799, leaving 'Denys le Tyran,' a tragedy; his well known 'Tales,' 'Belisarius,' 'Les Incas,' 'Epitre aux Poetes,' and a Life of himself, most of which are familiar to the English reader. His works have been frequently reprinted in French, but the best edition is that in 32 vols. 8vo. 1787. [Vide Plate XL]

MARMORA (Geog.) an island on the coast of Natolia, properly called by the ancients Proconnesus, which lies in a small sea, called after it the Sea of Marmora. This sea or gulf, called by the ancients Propontis, communicates with the Archipelago by the Dardanelles, and with the Black Sea by the canal of Constantinople.

MARNAS (Myth.) a deity worshipped by the natives of Gaza, answering to the Jupiter of the Greeks.

MARNE (Geog.) a river of France, called by the ancients Matrona, has its source near Langres, and after a course of 220 miles, falls into the Seine at Charenton, a few miles above Paris.

MARNEY, Lord (Her.) a title conferred on sir Henry Marney, of an ancient family in Essex, in 1523, which became extinct at the death of the second lord in 1525.

MARNIX, Philip de (Biog.) a disciple of Calvin, otherwise called Saint Aldegonde, was born at Brussels in 1538, and died in 1598, leaving several works written after the fashion of his sect.

MARO (Biog.) vide Virgilius.

MAROLLES, Michael de (Biog.) a French translator, was born in 1600, and died in 1681, leaving translations of Plautus, Terence, Lucretius, Catullus, Virgil, Horace, &c.

MARONEA (Geog.) a city of the Cicones, in Thrace, near the Hebrus, of which Bacchus was the chief deity. The wine has always been reckoned excellent. Tibull. l. 4; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 14, &c.

MAROT, John (Biog.) a French poet, was born near Caen, in Normandy, in 1463, and died in 1523, leaving several works, which are mostly printed with those of his son Clement.

MAROT, Clement, son of the preceding, and also a poet of some celebrity, was born at Cahors, in Querce, in 1496, and died in 1544, leaving the reputation of being the poet of princes, and the prince of poets, in his time. His works have been collected and printed several times; the editions of the Hague, in 2 vols. 12mo. 1700, and 4 vols. 4to. 1731, are reckoned the best.

MARPESIA (Hist.) a celebrated queen of the Amazons, who waged a successful war against the inhabitants of Mount Caucasus. Virg. Æn. l. 6; Justin. l. 2.

MARPESSA (Myth.) Μάρπησσα, a daughter of Evenus, and wife of Idas, who was carried away by Apollo, and rescued by her husband, who pursued her ravisher with bows and arrows. Hom. Il. l. 9; Apollod. l. 1; Ovid. Met. l. 8; Paus. l. 4.

MARR, Donald, twelfth Earl of (Hist.) of the first family which enjoyed this title under Heraldry, was carried prisoner to England in 1306, after the defeat of his uncle king Robert Bruce, and released after the battle of Bannockburn in 1314. Upon the death of Randolph, earl of Moray, regent of Scotland, the earl of Marr was elected to fill his place in 1332, when he assumed the command of the Scotch army, but from his inexperience in military concerns, was totally defeated by an inferior force under Edward Baliol, and was stifled to death in the rout.

MARR, Thomas, thirteenth Earl of, was much concerned in public transactions during the reign of king David II, to treat of whose release he was one of the ambassadors sent into England in 1351. He was constituted great Chamberlain of Scotland in 1358, named ambassador to treat with England in 1362, and died in 1377, after having been employed on other public business.

MARR, Alexander Stewart, Earl of, natural son of Alexander, earl of Buchan, fourth son of king Robert II, was one of the ambassadors sent to England to treat of peace in 1406, distinguished himself in 1408 in the service of the duke of Burgundy; commanded the royal army in 1411 against the Lord of the Isles, was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary to England in 1416, and died in 1435.

MARR, John, Earl of, third son of king James II, being obnoxious to the favourites of James III, was in 1479 seized by his majesty's command, and confined in the castle of Craigmiller, and being condemned to die by the king's domestic council, he was put to death by having a vein opened.

MARR, John, Earl of, of the family of Erskine, mentioned under Heraldry, succeeded his father as governor of Edinburgh castle, and steering clear of all the party feuds which disturbed the nation at that time, he upheld the authority of the queen regent. On the return of queen Mary from France in 1561, he was appointed one of her Privy Council, and on the birth of king James VI in 1566, the queen committed the young prince to the custody of the earl of Marr. After the death of the regent Lennox in 1571, he was chosen regent in his stead, and died in 1572, leaving the reputation of unblemished integrity, a reputation which, in those days of faction and misrule, he enjoyed almost exclusively by himself.

MARR, John, Earl of, son of the preceding, was one of the accomplices in the Ruthven conspiracy, for seizing the king's person in 1582, with the view, as they declared, of removing from the king's presence his unworthy minion Arran, for which he was obliged to fly to England, and was attainted in the Parliament of 1584. On the removal of Arran he was restored to his honours and estates, and entrusted in 1595 by the king, with the keeping of prince Henry. He was sent Ambassador to England in 1601, where he entered into negociations for securing the succession of king James to the throne of England, and accompanied the king to England in 1603; he was sworn a Privy Councillor, and continued to enjoy the confidence of his sovereign, and to serve him in the most important affairs, until his death in 1634.

MARR, John, Earl of, son of the preceding, was sworn a Privy Councillor in Scotland, and appointed governor of the castle of Edinburgh in 1615, constituted one of the Extraordinary Lords of Session in 1620, and died in 1654, after having suffered for his loyalty.

MARR, John, Earl of, and son of the preceding, commanded the Stirlingshire regiment in the Scotch army that marched to England in 1640, but joined the association at Cumbernauld in 1641, in favour of the king, continued a steady loyalist during the struggle for the rights of the crown and the kingdom, lived during the usurpation in a cottage at the gate of his house at Alloa, on account of the heavy fines imposed on his property, and died in 1668.

MARR, John, last Earl of, grandson of the preceding, succeeded his father Charles, in 1689, and after having held several high offices in the reigns of Charles II, James II, and Anne, he was attainted in 1716, for the part which he took in favour of prince Charles, whom he accompanied to Rome, and after remaining for some years in his service, he died at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1732.

MARR, Earl of (Her.) a Scotch title, the origin of which is lost in its antiquity. The first mention of it is as early as 1065, when Martacus, earl of Marr, was witness to a charter of donation by Malcolm Canmore to the Culdees of Lochleven. On the death of Thomas, thirteenth earl of Marr above-mentioned under History, he was succeeded by his sister Margaret, after which it reverted to the crown in 1426; but was restored in 1561 to John, lord Erskine, on making his claim good as the descendant, in the female line, from the eleventh earl of Marr, and consequently as heir to Isabel, the last countess of Marr. This claim had already been preferred in 1435 by sir Robert Erskine, and subsequently by his son Thomas, lord Erskine, who was dispossessed of the earldom of Marr in 1457 by the assise of error; but on the recognition of this claim to John, lord Erskine, the fourth in descent from him, the earls of Marr always protested that they ought to be called first on the roll of earls, as possessing the most ancient earldom in the kingdom.

MARS (Myth.) Ἄρης, the god of war, and the son of Jupiter and Juno, according to the Greek accounts, is distinguished by Homer by the epithet βροτολοιγὸς, the homicide, had the surnames of Mavors, Gradivus, Quirinus, and Salisubsulus, among the Romans; and was called Enyalus by the Sabines, Camulus by the Gauls, and Mamers by the Carthaginians. Hom. Passim.; Hesiod. Theog.; Pind. Pyth. &c.; Apollod. l. 1; Varro de Ling. Lat.; Hygin. Fab.; Ovid, Fast. &c.

MARS (Numis.) this deity is easily known by his attributes, namely, his helmet, his spear, or his sword, with which he is represented in every attitude or situation, as in the subjoined figures.

He is also frequently mentioned in inscriptions by the epithets of Victor, Propugnator, Conservator, &c.

MARSAIS, Cæsar Chesneau du (Biog.) a French grammarian, was born at Marseilles in 1676, and died in 1756, leaving, 1. 'Exposition d'une Methode Raisonnée pour apprendre la Langue Latine,' 12mo. 1722. 2. 'Les Veritables Principes de la Grammaire,' &c. 4to. 1729. 3. 'Histoire des Tropes,' 8vo. 1730, and 12mo. 1731. 4. An Abridgment of P. Jouvanci's 'Fable.' 5. 'Logique,' &c. reprinted in 12mo. 1762, with the articles which he furnished for the Encyclopedie. 6. 'Exposition de la Doctrine de l'Eglise Gallicane,' &c. published after his death. His whole works were collected by Duchosal and Millon, and published at Paris in 7 vols. 8vo. 1797.

MARSEILLES (Geog.) a large commercial city in the south of France, in the ancient province of Provence, and capital of the modern departments of the Mouths of the Rhone, situated on the Mediterranean, 180 miles S. by E. Lyons, 300 E. N. E. Bourdeaux, and 450 S. S. E. Paris. Lon. 5° 22′ E. lat. 43° 17′ N.

History of Marseilles.

Marseilles, which was a distinguished city in the time of the Romans, and well known by the name of Massilia [vide Massilia], became subject to the Goths in the decline of the Roman empire, from whom it passed to the Burgundians and the French. It had then princes of its own with the title of viscount, and became in 1243 a part of the county of Provence, which was united to the crown of France in 1481. Alphonsus, king of Arragon, took it by surprize in 1423; but the constable, Charles of Bourbon, and the emperor, Charles V, besieged it in vain in 1524, and again in 1536. In 1720 the plague broke out here, and carried off 60,000 of its inhabitants; and on the breaking out of the revolution, it was exposed to the fury of the convention, by whom the most respectable of its inhabitants were put to death, and the town being declared in a state of rebellion its name was ordered to be changed. This contest between the Jacobins and the loyal part of the community continued, with little intermission, until the assumption of power by Bonaparte in 1799. Marseilles is an episcopal city, of which St. Lazarus is said to have been its first prelate. It was formerly suffragan of Vienne, but afterwards of Arles.

MARSH, Narcissus (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, descended from a Saxon family formerly seated in Kent, was born at Hannington, in Wiltshire, in 1638, educated at Oxford, presented to the bishopric of Leighlin and Ferns in 1683, translated to the archbishopric of Cashell in 1690, thence to Dublin in 1699, and thence to Armagh in 1703, and died in 1713, leaving, besides many endowments for charitable purposes in England as well as Ireland, a great number of oriental MSS. to the Bodleian. Among his works, as an author, are, 1. 'Manuductio ad Logicam,' with which he printed Gassendus' small tract 'De Demonstratione,' Oxon. 1678. 2. 'Institutiones Logicæ in usum Juventutis Academicæ,' Dublin, 1681. 3. 'An Introductory Essay to the Doctrine of Sounds,' &c. published in the Philosophical Transactions.' 4. 'A Charge to his Clergy;' besides a letter published in 'Letters written by eminent Persons,' &c. 3 vols. 8vo. 1813.

MARSHAL, Walter (Biog.) a nonconformist, educated at Winchester and New College, was ejected from his living of Hursley, in Hampshire, in 1662, and died in 1690, leaving some religious works.

MARSHALL, Thomas (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Barkly, in Leicestershire, in 1621, educated at Oxford, and died in 1685, leaving, 1. 'Observationes in Evangeliorum Versiones perantiquas duas, Gothicas scilicet et Anglo-Saxonicas,' Dordrac. 1665. 2. 'An Epistle for the English Reader, prefixed to Dr. Thomas Hyde's Translation into the Malayan Language of the four Gospels, and the Acts of the Apostles,' Oxford, 1677. 3. 'The Catechism set forth in the Common Prayer,' Oxford, 1679.

MARSHALL, Nathaniel, an English divine, who was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1729, published the genuine works of St. Cyprian, fol. 1717; and wrote a Defence of our Constitution in Church and State.

MARSHAM, Sir Thomas (Hist.) an English writer and loyalist, was born in 1602, educated at Oxford, and in the Middle Temple, deprived of his office as clerk in the chancery on the breaking out of the rebellion, and died in 1685, after having suffered much in his estate for his principles. He wrote, 1. 'Diatriba Chronologica,' 4to. 1649. 2. 'Canon Chronicus Ægyptiacus,' &c. fol. Lond. 1672, reprinted at Leipzic in 4to. 1676, and at Franeker in 1696.

MARSHAM (Her.) the family name of the earl of Romney, whose ancestor, sir Robert, the fifth baronet, was created in 1716 baron Romney. Charles, the third lord, was farther advanced in 1801 to the dignities of viscount Marsham and earl of Romney.

MARSHAM, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Romney.

MARSI (Geog.) a nation of Germany, who settled near the lake Fucinus, in Italy, and for some time carried on a successful war against the Romans; but being finally subjugated were allowed to enjoy the privileges of Roman citizens. Cic. pro Balb.; Vel. Pat. l. 2; Val. Max. l. 8; Plut. in Mar. &c.; Tacit. Annal. l. 1.

MARSIGLI, Lewis Ferdinand, Count (Hist.) an Italian soldier and writer, was born at Bologna in 1658, and taken prisoner while serving the emperor Leopold I against the Turks in Hungary in 1683. Being soon after ransomed, he served in 1701 under count d'Arco in the war of the Spanish succession, when, in consequence of the surrender of the fortress of Brisac to the duke of Burgundy in 1703, the count lost his head; and Marsigli, who was at that time a marshal, was stripped of all his honours and commissions, and had his sword broken over him. He then withdrew from public life, and applying himself to literary pursuits, died in 1730, leaving, among his works, 1. 'Histoire Physique de la Mer,' fol. Amst. 1725. 2. 'Danubius Pannonico-Mysicus,' 6 vols. Atlas. fol. 1726. 3. 'Stato Militare dell' Imperio Ottomanno,' &c. fol. Hague, 1733.

MARSOLLIER, James (Biog.) a French historian, was born in 1647, and died in 1724, leaving, 1. 'L'Histoire du Cardinal Ximenes,' 1693, and reprinted several times since. 2. 'Histoire de Henri VII Roi d'Angleterre,' &c. 1697. 3. 'Histoire de l'Inquisition et son Origine,' 1693. 4. 'Entretiens sur les Devoirs de la Vie Civile,' &c. 12mo. 1714, &c. &c.

MARSTON, John (Biog.) an English dramatic author in the time of James I, wrote 'Catiline and Sejanus,' a tragedy; 'Sophonisba,' another tragedy; besides other pieces, six of which were published together in a volume in 1633. He also wrote three books of satires, entitled 'The Scourge of Villainy.'

MARSUS (Hist.) a governor of Syria in the reign of the emperor Claudius, gave notice to the latter of the fortifications which Agrippa was making at Rome, who, in consequence, was forbidden to proceed in the work. From this period Marsus and Agrippa were sworn enemies. Joseph. Antiq. l. 19.

MARSYAS (Myth.) Μαρσύας, a celebrated piper of Celenæ, in Phrygia, who had the temerity to challenge Apollo to a trial of musical skill on condition that whoever should be pronounced victor by the inhabitants of Nyssa should flea his antagonist alive. The victory being adjudged to Apollo, the god immediately tied his antagonist to a tree, and flead him alive. The fate of the musician was deplored by the Fauns, Satyrs, and Dryads, whose tears flowed so plentifully as to give rise to a river of Phrygia, which received the name of Marsyas after him.

Ovid. Met. l. 6.

Illum ruricolæ, sylvarum numina, Fauni,
Et Satyri fratres, et tunc quoque clarus Olympus,
Et Nymphæ flérunt: et quisquis montibus illis
Lanigerosque greges, armentaque bucera pavit.
Fertilis immaduit, madefactaque terra caducas
Concepit lacrymas, ac venis perbibit imis.
Quas ubi fecit aquam, vacuas emisit in auras;
Inde petens rapidum ripis declivibus æquor,
Marsya nomen habet, Phrygiæ liquidissimus amnis.

The unfortunate Marsyas is often represented on monuments tied to a tree with his hands behind him. Apollod. l. 1; Diod. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 165; Ovid. Met. l. 6; Plut. de Ir.; Lucian. Dial.; Palæph. Incred.; Serv. in Virg. Æn. l. 3, &c.

Queens of England.

Mary, daughter of Henry VIII and Catharine of Arragon, was born in 1517, and, although set aside in the succession in favour of lady Jane Grey, nevertheless at the death of her brother Edward she was proclaimed queen, and, by the death of her rival, together with that of her husband and her father, she was left in peaceable possession of the throne. In 1554 she was married to Philip IV of Spain, and died in 1558, after an unhappy reign, in which she fruitlessly endeavoured to put down Protestantism by the most violent measures towards its adherents. Three books of devotion are ascribed to her. [Vide Plate IV]

Mary, daughter of James II, by the daughter of lord Clarendon, and wife of William III, was married at the age of 15 to William, prince of Orange, was crowned queen of England at the revolution, and died in 1694, at the age of 32, leaving no issue. [Vide Plate IV]

Queens of Scotland.

Mary of Lorraine, daughter of Claude of Lorraine, was married in 1534 to Louis of Orleans, and after his death was remarried in 1538 to James V of Scotland, by whom she had a daughter Mary, so celebrated for her beauty and misfortunes.

Mary Stuart, daughter of James V, and Mary of Lorraine above-mentioned, was born in 1542, and educated in France, where she was married in 1558 to the dauphin, afterwards Francis II. On the death of this monarch in 1560 she was obliged to return to Scotland, to take possession of a throne which she inherited from her father; was married in 1565 to her cousin Henry, lord Darnley, son of the earl of Lennox, by whom she had one son, afterwards James VI of Scotland. In 1567 Darnley, whom she had caused to be proclaimed king, was murdered by the contrivance of the earl of Murray, the queen's illegitimate brother, who caused the house in which Henry resided to be blown up at night by gunpowder. This foul deed was charged upon Bothwell, the favourite of the queen, who also fell under the violent suspicion of being a partner in his guilt. Bothwell was tried and acquitted in 1567; but, triumphing in his iniquity, he presumed to seize the person of the queen, and oblige her to marry him: an outrage which excited such indignation among the nobility, that Bothwell was obliged to fly the kingdom, and Mary, falling into the hands of her enemies, was compelled by the regent, Murray, to resign the crown in favour of her infant son James VI. But escaping from her imprisonment, she revoked all the acts that had been extorted from her, and rallying her adherents, who did not amount to more than 6000 men, she made an effort to regain her rights. She was however defeated by the forces which the regent Murray brought against her, and in an evil hour, when she knew not where to fly, she was compelled to seek protection from her rival Elizabeth, who, contrary to all her expectations, detained her a prisoner, and after 18 years' imprisonment signed a warrant for her death, which was, as the latter affected, contrary to her orders put into execution in Fotheringay Castle, Mary's prison, in 1587. The royal sufferer maintained her dignity, her composure, and her faith, amidst all the provocations which were offered her by those who impertinently urged her in that trying moment to change her religion. [Vide Plate V]

Queens of Hungary and Bohemia.

Mary of Austria, daughter of Philip, archduke of Austria, was born in 1503, married in 1521 to Louis Jagellon, king of Hungary, who was killed at the battle of Mohatz in 1526. Her brother the emperor, Charles V, in 1531 gave her the government of the Low Countries, when, during the war between the emperor and the kings of France, she took an active part against the latter, and died in 1558, a few days after her brother, and after having governed her states with the greatest wisdom. [Vide Plate VI]

Mary, or Maria Isabella, queen of Hungary, sister of Sigismund Augustus, king of Poland, married in 1539 John Zapolvaivod, of Transylvania, who had been elected king of Hungary in 1526, and died in 1540, leaving a son by his queen, who successfully exerted herself to keep the crown of Hungary against Ferdinand of Austria. She died in 1558, leaving the throne to her son John Sigismund. Strad. Decad. l. 9.

Queen of Naples.

Mary de Chastillon, daughter of Charles de Chastillon, married in 1360 Louis of France, duke of Anjou, who was afterwards king of Jerusalem, Naples, and Sicily. At the death of her husband in 1384 she governed the kingdom of Sicily during the minority of her son, and maintained his rights against Ladislaus, son of Charles de Duras, who disputed the crown with him. She died in 1404, after a wise and vigorous administration of the kingdom.

Princesses of this Name.

Mary of Burgundy, daughter of Charles, surnamed the Rash Duke, of Burgundy, was only 20 when her father was killed in 1477, at the siege of Burgundy, and made her heir of his estate. She chose Maximilian, son of the emperor Frederic, for her spouse, whom she married in the same year, and died in 1482.

Mary of France, eldest daughter of Louis VII, was married to Henry I, count of Champagne, surnamed the Rich, and died in 1198, at the age of 69.

In 1767 he published an auxiliary work, entitled, 'Tables requisite to be used with the Nautical Almanac, in order to find the Latitude and Longitude at Sea;' and some time after he published Mayer's Tables, with both Latin and English explanations, under the title of 'Tabulæ Motuum Solis et Lunæ,' &c. It was published like the foregoing, by order of the commissioners of longitude.

MASO, Thomas (Biog.) otherwise called Finiguerra, a goldsmith of Florence, who flourished about 1480, is said to have invented by accident the art of taking impressions from engravings on copper.

MASON, Sir John (Hist.) a statesman in the reigns of Henry VIII, and his successors Edward, Mary, and Elizabeth, was educated at Oxford, and died in 1566, after having been employed on several embassies by Henry, and filled, among other offices, that of Privy Councillor to this king and his successors. He was a munificent benefactor to his native town of Abingdon, and left a handsome estate for the endowment of an hospital.

Mason, Francis (Biog.) an English divine, and native of Durham, was born in 1566, educated at Oxford, and died in 1621, leaving, 1. 'The Authority of the Church in making Canons and Constitutions concerning Things indifferent,' a sermon, 4to. Lond. 1607; Oxford, 1634. 2. 'Vindiciæ Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ,' fol. Lond. 1613; which has been translated by Lindsay, with valuable notes.

Mason, Henry, a brother of the preceding, who was deprived of his living in the time of the rebellion, and died in 1647, was the author of some pious tracts, mentioned by Wood.

Mason, John, a nonconformist, descended from a family that had been for several generations beneficed clergymen, who died in 1763, is now remembered as the author of a little work entitled 'Self-Knowledge;' and also of some volumes of sermons, entitled 'Christian Morals,' &c.

Mason, William, an English poet, the friend and biographer of Gray, was born in 1725, in St. Trinity Hall, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, of which his father was vicar, and died in 1797, leaving 'Isis,' a poem, printed in 1748, and directed against the supposed Jacobitism of Oxford, which was answered by Mr. Thomas Warton, in his 'Triumph of Isis;' 'Elfrida,' a dramatic poem, in 1752, 'Odes on Memory,' &c. 1756; 'Caractacus,' another dramatic poem, in 1759, which was translated into Greek by the Rev. G. H. Glasse; 'Three Elegies,' in 1762; all which, except the 'Isis,' were collected into one volume, and republished in 1764. In 1772 appeared the first book of his 'English Garden,' which was followed by three others in 1777, 1779, and 1782; in 1775, 'Memoirs of Gray,' 4to.; in 1779, 'Ode to the Naval Officers of Great Britain;' in 1783, translation of Du Fresnoy's 'Art of Painting;' in 1788, 'Secular Ode in Commemoration of the glorious Revolution;' and also 'The Poems of William Whitehead, Esq.' to which he prefixed Memoirs of him; in 1795, 'Essay Historical and Critical on English Church Music. In all the earlier editions of his poems he omitted some of his pieces for various reasons; but in 1796 he determined to collect the whole into an additional or third volume, which appeared after his death in 1797. Among his works, in the late edition of the English Poets, was inserted a series of poems, entitled 'Heroic Epistle,' which is now generally ascribed to him by unanimous consent, although he never avowed himself as the author. It is a piece of party spleen, of which he might with justice be ashamed. [Vide Plate XXIX]

MASSAC (Biog.) or Masse, John Baptist, a French miniature-painter, who was born at Paris in 1687, and died in 1767, copied, from the original paintings of Le Brun, the collection of prints from the great gallery, and other apartments, at Versailles, which were engraved by the best artists under his inspection.

MATILDA (Hist.) or Maude, queen of Germany, and mother of the emperor Otho, was married to Henry, surnamed the Fowler, at whose death in 936 she assisted her son in the government of his dominions, and died in 968, after having built many religious houses.

MATILDA, or Maude, daughter of Baldwin V, count of Flanders, was married to William the Conqueror, and died in 1083.

MATILDA, daughter of Malcolm III, king of Scotland, and niece to Edgar Atheling, was married in 1100 to Henry I, who thereby greatly obliged his English subjects from the relationship she held with their ancient line of Saxon kings.

MATILDA, daughter of Henry I and the above-mentioned Matilda, was first betrothed to the emperor Henry V at the age of eight, and on the death of Henry was married to Geoffry, son of Fulk, count of Anjou, in 1127. She was left heir of all her father's dominions, which were contested with her by Stephen, count of Blois; and after a struggle carried on with alternate success by both parties, an accommodation was entered into that Stephen should possess the crown during his life-time, and at his death Henry, the son of Matilda, should succeed to the kingdom.

MATIUS, Cn. (Biog.) a Latin poet in the age of Augustus, who wrote farces that were highly applauded for their wit and humour. He also wrote a poem in heroic verse, which he called the Iliad; but of all his compositions only 14 lines are extant, which have been preserved in the 'Corpus Poetarum Latinorum.' Cic. ad Attic. l. 15, ep. 2; Colum. l. 12; Plin. l. 15; *Tacit. MATTHEW I, surnamed the Great, of the family of Visconti, lord of Milan, was created Vicar-General of Lombardy, by the emperor Adolphus in 1294, and died in 1322, after having made himself master of different places, and been at open warfare with the pope John XXII.

MATTHEW II, of the same family, having rendered himself contemptible by his vices, was killed by his two brothers in 1355. Spondanus, Bzovius, &c.

MATTHEW, Cantacuzene, son of John, emperor of the east, was made a partner in the empire in 1355, and being compelled by John Palæologus to share the fortunes of his father, retired to a monastery on Mount Athos, where he devoted himself to the cultivation of letters.

MATTHEW (Ecc.) a cardinal of a noble family of Rheims, was created a cardinal by pope Honorius in 1125, and after being nominated to the see of Albano, he was sent a legate into France in 1128, and died in 1135. He executed several important missions for the popes Honorius II, and Innocent II, and left among his works as an author, 'De Perfectione Monachorum;' 'De Vanitate Mundi;' 'De Votis Monasticis,' &c.

MATTHEW of Vendosme, abbot of St. Denys, in France, was regent of the kingdom in 1270, during the absence of S. Louis on the crusade, and died in 1286, after having enjoyed the esteem of the popes Clement IV, Nicholas III, and Martin II. A poem in elegiac verse, containing the history of Tobias, is ascribed to him, which was printed at Lyons in 1542.

MATTHEW of Cracovia, a Polonese, and bishop of Worms, was sent by the emperor Robert III, on an embassy to Rome; and nominated cardinal by pope Gregory XII in 1408, but declined the honour for fear that the diocese of Worms might then object to him for their bishop, after which he returned to his see, and died in 1410, leaving some theological works.

MATTHEW, a patriarch of Constantinople in the 16th century, succeeded Macarius, but was deposed by a faction, whose interest prevailed at the court of the Grand Seignor, and after having had Gabriel, Theophanes, and Meletius, for his successors, he was re-established two several times.

MATTHEW, Tobias, an English prelate, was born at Bristol in 1546, educated at Oxford, and after various preferments, was in 1595 consecrated bishop of Durham, and translated in 1606 to the archiepiscopal see of York, which dignity he enjoyed until his death in 1628. He was a political partizan, and extravagantly fond of preaching. Of his lady, whose maiden name was Barlow, it is said, in the inscription on her tomb, that she was the daughter of a bishop; her father-in-law was an archbishop, four of her brothers were bishops, and her husband an archbishop.

MATTHEW (Her.) vide Mathew.

MATTHEW of Ghent (Biog.) an ancient French poet, who flourished about 1260, and wrote different pieces of poetry mentioned by Fauchet, in his 'Poetes François.'

MATTHEW, Paris, vide Paris.

MATTHEW of Westminster, an English historian, who flourished, according to some, in 1377; but according to others, much earlier, wrote a history from the foundation of the world, which he entitled 'Flores Historiarum,' &c. published at London in 1567, and at Franckfort in 1601, both in folio.

MATTHEW, Tobias, eldest son of the archbishop Matthew above-mentioned, was born at Oxford in 1578, and died in 1655, after having attached himself to the Romish church, and entered the society of the Jesuits at Ghent. He wrote, 1. 'The Life of St. Teresa,' 8vo. 1623. 2. 'S. Augustine's Confessions,' translated, 8vo. 1624. 3. 'The Penitent Banditto,' &c. 4. 'A Collection of Letters, made by Sir Tobie Matthews, Knt. with a Character of Lucy, Countess of Carlisle,' 8vo. Lond. 1660, &c.

MATTHIAS (Bibl.) Μαθθίας, the apostle, one of the first of our Saviour's disciples, and one of those who continued with him from his baptism to his ascension, was chosen by lot to supply the place of the traitor Judas. Acts i. The Greeks place his festival on August 9, and the Latins Feb. 24; but of his life and death nothing authentic is mentioned in history.

MAXIMIANUS (Hist.) the name of two emperors.

MAXIMIANUS, Marcus Aurelius Valerius, surnamed also Herculius, a native of Sirmium, in Pannonia, of mean parentage, rose from the condition of a common soldier to have a share in the empire with his fellow-soldier Diocletian. On the abdication of the latter, Maximianus was induced to follow his example in 302, but reassumed the imperial dignity in order to oppose his son Maxentius; and on the desertion of his troops he fled to the court of Constantine, to whom he gave his daughter Faustina in marriage. He was, however, afterwards detected in an attempt on the life of his son-in-law, and was sentenced to die; but, being left to choose his own death, he strangled himself at Marseilles in 310, in the 60th year of his age. *Euseb. Maximianus, Galerius Valerius, a native of Dacia, and originally a shepherd, on entering the army attracted the notice of Diocletian, who raised him to the dignity of Cæsar, and gave him his daughter Valeria. He afterwards increased his influence still more by gaining a signal victory over the Persians; and as soon as Diocletian abdicated he was proclaimed Augustus in 304, but, his cruelty soon rendering him odious, he found himself attacked by his rival Maxentius, and obliged to fly. He died in 311, in the greatest agonies, which the Christian writers of that day considered as the infliction of divine providence for his cruelties towards the Christians. Euseb. l. 3; Lactant. de Mort. Persecut.; Aurelius Victor, Zosimus, &c.

Maximianus (Numis.) medals are extant of both the emperors above-mentioned.

Maximianus, the colleague of Diocletian, is distinguished by his effigy as in the annexed figure, and the inscriptions—VAL. MAXIMIANUS NOB. CAES.—IMP. C. VAL. MAXIMIANUS AUG.—IMP. C. M. AUREL. VAL. MAXIMILIAN (Hist.) the name of two emperors and several princes.

Maximilian I, archduke of Austria, son of Frederic IV, was born in 145.; elected king of the Romans in 1486; in 1493 he was elected emperor, and died in 1519. He was author of some Poems, and of Memoirs of his own life. His effigy, and that of the subsequent emperor are given as in the annexed figures.

Maximilian II, son of Ferdinand I, was elected king of the Romans in 1562, succeeded his father as king of Hungary and Bohemia, and emperor of Germany two years after, and died in 1576, at the age of 50, after having suffered from the inroads of the Turks into his dominions.

Maximilian, archduke of Austria, and son of the preceding, was elected by one party to the throne of Poland, and attempted to assert his claim by force, but was defeated by his rival Sigismund, and taken prisoner. He was afterwards unsuccessfully engaged in the war with the Turks, and died in 1618.

Maximilian, duke of Bavaria, was so distinguished in the 17th century by his valour that he acquired the title of Defender of Germany; and, in gratitude for his services, he was named Elector of the empire in 1623, and died in 1651, at the age of 70.

Maximilian, Emanuel, elector of Bavaria, distinguished himself also by his services in the cause of the emperor Leopold. He was successively at the sieges of Neuheusel and Buda, and at the battle of Mohatz. He took Belgrade from the Turks in 1689, and commanded the imperial troops at the siege of Mentz, and on the banks of the Rhine; but when, as governor of the Low Countries, he sided with France, the emperor deprived him of his electoral dignity, which was restored at the general peace. He died at Munich in 1726.

Maximilian, Leopold, elector of Bavaria, son of the emperor Charles VII, succeeded to the electorate of Bavaria in 1746, and died in 1777, but, leaving no issue, the succession to his dominions occasioned a war between the empire and Prussia, which was terminated by the peace of Teschen in 1779.

MAXIMINUS (Hist.) the name of two emperors.

Maximinus, Caius Julius Verus, the son of a Thracian peasant, who, entering the Roman armies, rose to the highest rank; and, on the death of Alexander Severus, caused himself to be proclaimed emperor in 235, but was slain by his own soldiers the next year. Jul. Capit. in Vit., Aurelius Victor, Herodian, Zosimus, &c.

Maximinus, C. Gal. Valerius, nephew to Galerius, and surnamed Daza before his elevation, was created Cæsar with C. Severus, entrusted with the government of the Eastern provinces in 1059, and caused himself to be proclaimed emperor in opposition to Licinius, but, being defeated by his rival, he fled to Tarsus, where he died a miserable death. Capitolin. in Vit. &c.

Maximinus (Numis.) medals are extant of both the emperors above-mentioned. The medals of Maximinus the Thracian, which bear his effigy as in the annexed figure, are inscribed—IMP. CAES. MAXIMINUS AUG.—MAXIMINUS PIUS AUG. GERM.—MAXIMINUS ET MAXIMUS AUGUSTI GERMANICI; and in the Greek ΜΑΞΙΜΕΙΝΟϹ ΕΥϹΕΒ ΑΥΓ.—ΑΥΓ. ΜΑΞΙΜΙΝΟϹ ΕΥϹΕΒ.—Α. Κ. Γ. Ι. ΟΥΗ. ΜΑΞΙΜΕΙΝΟϹ Κ. Γ. Ι. ΟΥΗ ΜΑΞΙΜΝΟϹ ΚΑΙ. MAXIMUS (Myth.) an epithet applied to Jupiter as being the greatest and most powerful of the gods.

Maximus (Hist.) the name of several emperors or usurpers, and other distinguished persons.

Maximus, Pupienus, vide Papienus.

Maximus, Flavius Magnus, a native of Spain, proclaimed himself emperor in opposition to Gratian, and on the latter being killed in battle, succeeded him A. D. 383; but was slain with his son Victor by his own soldiers.

Maximus, C. Julius Verus, son of Maximus the Thracian, was made a partner in his father's throne, and slain with him at the age of eighteen. Capitolin. in Max.

Maximus, one of the usurpers, who appeared in the time of Honorius, assumed the purple in 409, but resigned it soon after, and sought refuge among the barbarians. He ventured, however, to resume it in 417; and, being taken by the generals of Honorius three years after, he was condemned to death. Prosper. et Marcellin. in Chron.

Maximus, Petronius, a Roman senator, twice consul, and a patrician, of the same family as the preceding, caused the emperor Valentinian III to be murdered, and ascended the throne, but was stoned to death, and his body thrown into the Tiber by his soldiers in 455, after a reign of only 77 days. Procop. de Bell. Vandal.; Evag. l. 2; Sidon. Apollinar. l. 1, ep. 23; Niceph. Hist. Eccles.

Maximus (Ecc.) the name of three bishops of Jerusalem.

Maximus I, the nineteenth prelate who governed this church, was elected after Publius in the second century, and had Julianus for his successor. Euseb. in Chron.

Maximus II, the twenty-sixth prelate that governed this church, was elected A. D. 185, and was succeeded by Antoninus. Euseb. in Chron.

Maximus III, succeeded S. Macarius in 331, assisted at the council of Tyre in 335, and at the council of Sardis in 347. He held a council at Jerusalem in 349, and died in 351, after having governed the church 20 years. S. Hieron. in Chron.; S. Athanas. Apolog.; Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 2; Sozom. l. 1; Theodoret. l. 2; Rufin. l. 1; Philostorg, l. 3.

Maximus, bishop of Alexandria in the third century, succeeded S. Dionysius in 264, and had for his successor Theonas, after having governed the church for 18 years. Euseb. Hist. l. 7; Baron. Annal.

Maximus, a bishop of Naples in the fourth century, was banished by the Arians, who put Zosimus in his place. Baron.

Maximus, a Cynic philosopher of Alexandria, and afterwards a Christian, endeavoured to dispossess S. Gregory of the see of Constantinople, and formed a party in his own favour, by whom he was set up as bishop; but his intrigues and seditious behaviour soon exposed him to such general obloquy that he became an outcast, and died miserably. Gregor. Nazianz. in Vit.; Theodor. l. 5; Cassiodor. l. 9; Niceph. l. 22; Baron. Annal. ann. 379.

Maximus, St. the first bishop of Salzburg who, after its erection into a bishop's see in 474, was hanged some time after by the Goths, who took the city and sacked it.

Maximus, bishop of Antioch, was put in the place of Domnus in 449, assisted at the general council of Chalcedon in 451, and died in 456, having Basil for a successor.

Maximus, bishop of Ries, in Provence, was nominated to this see in 433, assisted at the council of Arles, and divers provincial councils at that period, subscribed to that of Riez in 439, assisted at that of Orange in 441, and died in 460, after having been actively employed in the service of the church in various ways. Sidon. Apollinar.

Maximus, bishop of Toulouse, succeeded S. Exuperus about 420, and had Heraclianus for one of his successors, who was at the council of Agde in 506.

Maximus, bishop of Turin in the fifth century, was a prelate distinguished for learning and piety, of whose writings there are still some homilies extant.

Maximus of Saragossa, a bishop of that city in the seventh century, was at the councils of Barcelona in 599, of Toledo in 610, of Egara in 615, and was living in 620. He wrote 'Insigne Volumen et Opus Amoenum de Gest. Goth. in Hispan.' Vas. in Chron. Rer. Hispan.; Voss. de Hist. Lat.; Possevin. in Appar. Sacr.

Maximus, St. an abbot of the seventh century, of an ancient family of Constantinople, opposed the errors of the Monothelites with so much zeal that the emperor Constantius, who was a favourer of their notions, caused his hands to be cut off, and his tongue cut out, after which he died in prison in 662. He left several works which were published in 2 vols. by P. Combefis. Anastas. Biblioth.; Theophan. Chron.; Phot. Cod.; Baron. Annal. &c.

Maximus (Numis.) the prince above-mentioned is distinguished on medals by his effigy, as in the annexed figure, and by the inscriptions—MAXIMUS CAESAR PRINC. JUVENT. GERM.—CAIUS JULIUS VERUS MAX. NOBILISSIMUS CAESAR.—IMP. CAES. CAIUS JUL. &c.

Maximus, Magnus, the usurper above-mentioned, is distinguished on medals by effigy, and the inscription D. N. MAG. MAXIMUS, &c.

Maximus of Tyre (Biog.) or Maximus Tyrius, a platonic philosopher in the second century, who flourished, according to Suidas, in the reign of Commodus, or, according to others, in that of Antoninus Pius, was the author of 41 dissertations on various subjects, a MS. copy of which was first brought out of Greece into Italy by John Lascaris. from which a Latin translation was made, and published by Cosmus Paccius, archbishop of Florence in 1519. The work was then published by Henry Stephens, 1557; in Gr. et Lat. by Daniel Heinsius, 1607; by J. Davies of Cambridge in 1703; by Markland, 4to. 1740; by Reiske, 8vo. 1774. The French have two good translations by Formey in 1764, and by Dounous in 1802.

Maximus Valerius, vide Valerius.

Maximus of Ephesus, an idolater and magician, who was high in favour with Julian the Apostate, and his successor Jovian, suffered death in the reign of Valens for his magical practices. He wrote a poem on astrology, entitled Περὶ Καταρχῶν, which was published by Fabricius with a Latin version by another hand in his 'Bibliotheca Græca,' vol. v. c. 25. His death happened in 366. Socrat. Hist. l. 4; Sozom. l. 6; Ammian. Marcellin. l. 22; Zosim. l. 4; Eunap. in Vit. Philosoph.

Maximus, a Greek author, who wrote an account of Apollonius, is quoted by Philostratus. Philost. de Vit. Apollon.

Maximus, a grammarian of Madaura, whose correspondence with S. Augustin is among the epistles of that father.

Maximus, Planudes, vide Planudes.

MAXWELL, Sir Eustace (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the patriots who adhered to Robert I in all his vicissitudes of fortune. He was besieged in his castle by the English, and forced them to raise the siege; but fearing lest it should afterwards fall into their hands, he dismantled and threw it down. He was also one of those who signed the letter to the pope asserting the independency of Scotland in 1320.

Maxwell, John de, was one of the Scotch nobles who was taken prisoner at the battle of Durham in 1316, and died soon after.

Maxwell, Herbert, first Lord, was one of the guarantees of a treaty with the English in 1430, and one of the conservators of a truce with England in 1451, and died in 1453.

Maxwell, John, third Lord, was one of the commissioners to treat with England in 1494, and fell at the battle of Flodden in 1513.

Maxwell, Robert fourth Lord, was employed on various state occasions, particularly to go on an embassy into Scotland to negociate the marriage of James V with Mary of Lorrain in 1537. He afterwards promoted the marriage between queen Mary and prince Edward, and died in 1546.

Maxwell, Robert, eighth Lord, vide Nithsdale.

Maxwell, John, Lord Herries, vide Herries.

Maxwell (Her.) an ancient Scotch family, of which mention is made under History, derives its descent from Maccus, the son of Unwin, who obtained from earl David, afterwards David I of Scotland, a grant of lands on the Tweed, which from him were called Maccusville, now contracted into Maxwell. The first of this family that was ennobled was Herbert Maxwell, of Caerlaverock, who was designated lord Maxwell in 1430; Robert, the eighth lord, was created in 1620 earl of Nithsdale, which titles were forfeited by William, fifth earl of Nithsdale. [Vide Nithsdale]

Maxwell, the name of a family of great antiquity of Calderswood, in North Britain, the descendant of which, sir David Maxwell, was created a baronet in 1804. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first argent, an eagle displayed with two heads sable; second azure, the gable-end of an antique chapel with three windows proper; third argent, a saltire, sable, within a bordure checky of the first and last; fourth argent, a bend azure, all within a bordure embattled gules.

Crest. A savage's head affrontee proper, within two branches of laurel in orle.

Motto above the crest. "Think on."

Supporters. Dexter, a lion rampant proper, sinister a stag proper.

Maxwell, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Farnham.

MAY, Louis du (Biog.) a French historian, who died in 1681, was the author of 'Etat de l'Empire;' 'Science des Princes,' &c.

May, Thomas (Biog.) an English poet and historian of an ancient family, in Sussex, was born at Mayfield about 1594, and died in 1650, leaving several dramatic pieces; as 'The Heir,' a comedy, acted in 1620, and printed in 1633; 'Cleopatra,' a tragedy, acted in 1626, and printed in 1639; 'Antigone,' &c. a tragedy, printed in 1631; 'Agrippina,' &c. 1639; 'The Old Couple,' &c. 1651; the second and last of which pieces were reprinted in Dodsley's Collection. 'The Old Wives' Tale' and 'Orlando Furioso' are ascribed to him, but, as is said, falsely. Besides these plays, he left several translations; as of 'Virgil's Georgics,' 1622; 'Lucan's Pharsalia,' 1627, with his own continuation of it in English in 1630; the Latin continuation in 12mo. Lugd. Bat. 1640, and afterwards several times reprinted abroad with good editions of Lucan; also of the 'Argenis' and 'Icon Animarum' of Barclay. Among his original compositions are his 'Reign of Henry II,' written in seven books, &c. a poem, 8vo. 1633; 'The victorious Reign of Edward III,' an historical poem in seven books, 1635; 'The History of the Parliament of England, which began Nov. 3, 1640,' &c. fol. which he afterwards published in Latin with a continuation of it to the death of king Charles I in 1649, and an English translation in 8vo. 1650 under the title of 'A Breviary of the History of the Parliament,' &c.

MAYENNE, Charles of Lorraine, Duke of (Hist.) son of Francis, duke of Guise, was born in 1554, distinguished himself as an heroic soldier at the sieges of Poictiers and Rochelle, and at the battle of Moncontour, and defeated the Protestants in Guienne, Dauphiné, and Saintonge. When his brothers were assassinated at the council of Blois, he declared himself at the head of the league, proclaimed cardinal Bourbon king under the name of Charles X; but being defeated by Henry IV on several occasions, he was at last reconciled to his enemy, appointed by him governor of the Isle of France, and died at Soissons in 1611. His family became extinct at the death of his son in 1621.

Mayenne (Geog.) a town of France, in the former province of the Maine, and in the modern department of Mayenne, 165 miles W. by S. Paris. Lon. 37° W. lat. 48° 10′ N. It is called in the Latin of the middle ages Meduana, when it bore the title of a marquisate, and afterwards that of a dukedom. After the death of Henry of Lorraine, the last duke of Mayenne, cardinal Mazarin bought Mayenne, which he gave in 1661 to Armand Charles de la Porte, duke de Mazarin.

MAYER, John Frederick (Biog.) a Lutheran divine, was born at Leipsic in 1650, and died in 1712, leaving, 1. 'De Fide Baronii,' &c. 8vo. Amst. 1697. 2. 'Bibliotheca Biblica,' the best edition of which is said to be that printed in 4to. Rost. 1713. 3. A treatise 'De Osculo Pedum Pontificis Romani,' 4to. Lips. 1714; besides some other treatises.

Mayer, Tobias, an astronomer and mechanic, who was born at Maspach, in the duchy of Wirtemberg, in 1723, and died in 1762, was the author of several pieces inserted in the 'Memoirs of the University of Gottingen;' besides his 'Tables of Refractions,' &c. which were published by the Board of Longitude in 1770; also a New and General Method of Resolving all Geometrical Problems, &c.; a Mathematical Atlas, &c.; and some other things written in German.

MAYERNE, Louis de (Biog.) a French writer, and native of Lyons, who was obliged to leave his native country on account of his adherence to Protestantism, was the author of 'Histoire générale d'Espagne,' 2 vols. fol. dedicated to Henry III, king of Navarre; and 'La Monarchie Aristo-Democratique,' dedicated to the States-General, which was only a translation of the 'Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos,' by the famous Junius Brutus.

Mayerne, Sir Theodore, a physician, and son of the preceding, was born in 1573, and died in 1655, leaving some works which were published in folio in 1701.

MAYNARD, John (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the 39 members, recorded in Lord Chief Justice Coke's Institutes, to absent themselves from the Parliament rather than join in receiving the pope's authority into this realm, for which they were indicted in the King's Bench.

Maynard, Sir John, one of his descendants, who had been made one of the knights of the Bath at the coronation of Charles I, was afterwards one of the faction that brought his benefactor to the block. He died in 1658 a zealous covenanter.

Maynard, William, second Lord, brought himself into discredit with the faction to which he belonged by some attempts in favour of the king. He was one of the peers who rejected the ordinance for the trial of his sovereign, and at the restoration, he was made a Privy Councillor to Charles II, and also to James II.

Maynard, Sir John, a serjeant-at-law, and probably of the same family, was born at Tavistock, in Devonshire, in 1602, and died in 1690. His political temper soon recommended him to the rising faction of that day, as a fit person to be one of the managers of the evidence against the earl of Strafford, as also of that against archbishop Laud; after which, he continued in the service of Cromwell and his adherents until the restoration, when, notwithstanding the part which he had taken, he was not only reinstated in his rank as serjeant-at-law, but appointed at the revolution one of the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of England. Some of his reports and speeches have been printed.

Maynard (Her.) the name of a family mentioned above under History, was ennobled in the person of William Maynard of Easton, who was dignified with the title of baronet in 1611, with that of lord Maynard, of Wicklow, in Ireland, in 1620, and in 1639 with that of lord Maynard, of Estaines ad Turrim, alias Little Easton, co. Essex. Charles, the sixth lord Maynard, was advanced in 1766 to the dignity of a baron of Great Britain, and a viscount, by the style and title of baron of Much Easton, otherwise Easton ad Montem, co. Essex, and viscount Maynard of Easton Lodge in the said county. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a chevron azure, between three sinister hands erect, couped at the wrist gules.

Crest. On a wreath, a stag trippant or.

Supporters. On the dexter side, a stag proper; on the sinister, a talbot argent, pied sable, and gorged with a plain collar gules.

Motto. "Manus justa nardus."

Maynard, Francis (Biog.) a French poet, was born at Toulouse in 1582, and died in 1646, leaving some songs and epigrams, &c.

MAYNE, Jasper (Biog.) an English poet and divine, was born at Hatherlagh, in Devonshire, in 1604, educated at Oxford, and died in 1672, after having testified a steady attachment to the royal cause throughout the whole period of the rebellion and usurpation, during which he was deprived of his studentship of Christ-church, and both his livings. He published a piece, entitled 'OXAOMAXIA; or, the People's War,' &c. 1646; 'A Poem upon the Naval Victory over the Dutch, by the Duke of York;' a translation of Lucian's Dialogues, and Downe's Latin Epigrams, which he entitled 'A Sheaf of Miscellany Epigrams;' besides some single Sermons.

MAYNWARING, Arthur (Biog.) a political and miscellaneous writer, descended from an ancient family in Shropshire, was born in 1668, educated at Oxford, and died in 1712, leaving several pieces of temporary interest. In 1715 Mr. Oldmixon published 'The Life and Posthumous Works of Arthur Maynwaring, Esq.' &c.

MAYO, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Bourke [vide Bourke]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Bourke, earl of Mayo, viscount Mayo, and baron of Naas.

Arms. Party per fess or and ermine, a cross gules, the first quarter charged with a lion rampant, and the second with a dexter hand couped at the wrist and erect, both proper.

Crest. On a cap of maintenance, a lion sejant argent.

Supporters. Two chevaliers in complete armour, holding in the exterior hand a pole-axe proper.

Motto. "A cruce salus."

MAYOW, John (Biog.) a physician, and native of Cornwall, was born in 1645, educated at Oxford, and died in 1679, leaving 'Tractatus quinque Medico-physici,' 8vo. Oxon. 1674. There is an edition of two of them, namely, 'De Rachitide,' and 'De Respiratione,' which were published together at Leyden in 1671.

MAZACES (Hist.) a Persian governor of Memphis, who made a sally against the Grecian soldiers of Alexander, and killed a great number of them.

MAZARIN, Julius (Hist.) first minister of state in France, well known by the name of Cardinal Mazarin, was born in 1602 at Piscina, in the province of Abruzzo, in Italy, and after having gained the esteem of the pope, Urban VIII, by his skill as a negotiator, he recommended himself to cardinal Richelieu, whom he succeeded as prime minister to Louis XIII, and continued in that office during the minority of Louis XIV, and the regency of Anne of Austria; at the close of which he withdrew from the kingdom, at the time that his popularity was on the decline; but was soon afterwards recalled to fill his former post, which he held with credit to himself and advantage to the nation, until his death in 1661. [Vide Plate VIII] His Letters, 103 in number, were published in 2 vols. 12mo. in 1694; and again by Chatelan, at Amsterdam, in 1745.

MAZEPPA, John (Hist.) a Polish gentleman, and general of the Cossacks, was sent by Casimir, king of Poland, on an embassy to the khan of the Tartars, and afterwards, on receiving the command of the Cossacks, he laboured effectually to guard the frontiers of his country against the incursions of the enemy, and contributed to bring Asoph under the dominion of Peter the Great, whom he served faithfully for 24 years; but having conceived the design of making himself king of the Cossacks, he in 1708 entered for that purpose into the service of Charles XII, and died after the battle of Pultowa in 1709.

MAZOCHI, Alexius Symmachus (Biog.) an Italian philologer and antiquary, was born in 1684, at Santa Maria, and died in 1771, leaving, 1. 'Commentarium in Mutilum Campaniæ Amphitheatri Titulum,' &c. 4to. Neapol. 1727; and afterwards inserted in Poleni's New Thesaurus of Greek and Roman Antiquities. 2. 'Ad Bernardum Tanuccium Epistola,' &c. 8vo. Neap. 1739. 3. 'Commentarium in Vetus Marmoreum S. Neap. Eccles. Calendarium,' 4to. Neap. 1744; besides other detached pieces on similar subjects.

MAZZUCHELLI, John Maria (Biog.) a nobleman of Brescia, was born in 1707, in the territory of Venice, and died in 1765, leaving, 1. 'Notizie Istoriche e Critiche intorno alla Vita, alla Inventione, &c. di Archimede Siracusano,' 4to. Brescia, 1737. 2. 'La Vita di Pietro Aretino,' 8vo. Padua, 1741; which was followed by other lives, forming the commencement of a large biographical work, which he carried only to the letter B; the title was 'Gli Scrittori d'Italia, &c. e gli Scritti dei Letterati Italiani,' 6 vols. fol. 1753—1763.

Mazzuchelli, Peter Francis, a painter, and native of Rome, who died in 1626, at the age of 55, left several beautiful altar pieces, that adorn the churches of Milan.

MEAD, Matthew (Biog.) a nonconformist, and native of Buckinghamshire, was born in 1629, and after serving Oliver Cromwell as his chaplain, he was ejected in 1662, and died in 1699, leaving some tracts, &c. He was implicated in the Rye-House Plot, from which he cleared himself so as to escape punishment. He published some sermons and tracts.

Mead, Richard, a physician of the first eminence, was born at Stepney in 1673, and died in 1754, leaving several works, which were frequently printed separately, and have been collected and published in 4to. 1762. [Vide Plate XXXII]

MEADE (Her.) the name of a family of Tipperary, which enjoys the peerage, conferred on sir John Meade, the fourth baronet, who in 1766 was created baron Gilford, and viscount Clanwilliam, in 1776 earl of Clanwilliam. [Vide Clanwilliam]

MEADOWCOURT, Richard (Biog.) an English critic, was born in Staffordshire in 1697, educated at Merton College, Oxford, and died in 1769, leaving 'Notes on Milton's Paradise Regained,' 1732; a second edition of which was published in 1748.

MEARA, Dermod O (Biog.) or Dermitius, an Irish physician and poet of the 17th century, was the author of an heroic poem on the earl of Ormond and Ossory, entitled, 'Ormonius, sive Illust. Herois,' &c. 8vo. Lond. 1615; 'Pathologia Hereditaria Generalis,' &c. 12mo.

Meara, Edmund O, son of the preceding, also a physician, and a graduate of the University of Oxford, who died in 1680, was the author of some works, which were printed in 12mo. Lond. 1665, and Amst. 1666.

MEATH, William, Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was an active royalist at the commencement of the rebellion, and being sent by the marquis of Ormond, with sir James Ware, and sir Henry Tichburne, to king Charles I about the affairs of Ireland, they were taken prisoners on their way by the parliamentary faction, and confined for 11 months, until they were exchanged.

MEATH, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Brabazon [vide Brabazon]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Brabazon, earl of Meath, and baron Brabazon of Ardee.

Arms. Gules, on a bend or, three martlets sable.

Crest. On a wreath, a mount proper, and thereon a falcon rising or, with golden bells.

MEAUX (Geog.) a town of France, capital of the former province of La Brie, in the modern department of the Seine and Marne, situated in a plain, on the Marne, 25 m. N. E. Paris. Lon. 2° 52′ E., lat. 48° 57′ N.

History of Meaux.

Meaux, which was known to the Romans by the name of Meldæ, or Meldi, suffered much on different occasions. It was sacked and burnt in the reign of king John, during an insurrection that broke out while he was a prisoner. It was taken by the English in 1421, after a three months' siege, and being one of the first places that embraced protestantism, which was preached there by one John le Clerc, a carder of wool, and afterwards by some less ignoble adherents of the reformed religion, it was taken possession of by the troops of Charles IX, at the commencement of the religious wars of that time. Meaux is an episcopal city, suffragan of Paris, where a council was held in 845, and three others subsequently in 962, 1080, and 1082. Gregor. Tur. l. 5; Thuan. Hist.; Sammarth. Gallia Christ.

MECÆNAS (Hist.) vide Mæcenas.

MECCA (Geog.) a city of Arabia Deserta, famous for being the birth-place of Mahomet, situated on a barren plain, 34 m. E. N. E. Jidda, and 200 S. by E. Medina. Lon. 40° 55′ E., lat. 21° 40′ N.

MECHAIN, Peter Francis Andrew (Biog.) a French mathematician and astronomer, was born at Laon in 1744, and died in 1805, leaving several observations and calculations relative to eclipses, which are in the 'Memoires' of the Academy, and also in the 'Connoissance des Temps,' and the 'Ephemerides' of M. Bode.

MECHLIN (Geog.) in French Maline, and in the Latin of the middle ages Mechlinia, a city of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Brabant, seated on the Dyle, 10 m. N. N. E. Brussels, 15 S. S. E. Antwerp. Lon. 4° 29′ E., lat. 51° N. Mechlin, formerly belonged to the house of Bartholde, and fell by inheritance to the bishop of Liege. It was sold by him to Regnaud, duke of Gueldres, who resold it to Louis, count of Flanders, who ceded it in 1846 to the duke of Brabant. It submitted to the duke of Marlborough in 1706, was taken by the French in 1746, but restored in 1748. In 1792 it surrendered to the French, who evacuated it the next year, and re-entered it in 1794. Mechlin is an archiepiscopal see, erected by Paul IV in 1559.

MECKLENBURG (Geog.) a duchy of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, bounded on the N. by the Baltic, E. by Pomerania, S. by Brandenburg, and W. by Holstein and Luneburg. The country was for many centuries under one prince of the same family, which, according to some, drew its origin from Genseric, king of the Vandals, and, according to others, from Radagasus, or Visilas, king of the Heruli, whose descendant, Mistero II, surnamed the Giant, was converted to the Christian faith. Godsfal, a successor of his, the apostle and martyr of his subjects, founded the church of Schwerin; Henry, another successor, accompanied St. Louis into Egypt, and was there made prisoner. His son Henry, the first duke of Mecklenburg, of whom there is any authentic account, was surnamed the Lion, on account of his valiant defence of his states against the marquis of Brandenburg. He died in 1471, and his successors were Albert I, Magnus I, John, who founded the University of Rostock, Magnus II, Henry, surnamed the Pacific, Albert IV, John Albert, John II, who left his states between his two sons in 1592, the eldest retaining the duchy of Mecklenburg Schwerin, and the youngest that of Mecklenburg Strelitz.

MEDAD (Bibl.) מידד, a man who, with Eldad, is said in Scripture to have been inspired by God with his Holy Spirit to assist Moses in the government. Numb. xi. 26.

MEDAN (Bibl.) מדן, or Madan, third son of Abraham and Keturah. Gen. xxv. 2.

MEDE (Biog.) or Mead, Joseph, an English divine, was born in 1586, of a good family, at Berden in Essex, and died in 1638, leaving 'Clavis Apocalyptica,' &c. 4to. Cant. 1627; to which he added 'In Sancti Joannis Apocalypsin Commentarius,' &c.; besides a treatise about the name Θυσιαστήριον, given to the Holy Table, and about churches in the apostles' times. These and some other things were printed more than once after his death. The edition by Dr. Worthington, published in folio, 1672, is reckoned the best.

MEDEBA (Bibl.) מידבא, a city beyond Jordan, in the southern parts of Reuben. Josh. xiii. 16.

MEDEA (Geog.) Μήδεια, a celebrated sorceress, daughter of Æetes, king of Colchis, who, falling in love with Jason, enabled him to procure the golden fleece which he came in quest of, when she sailed with him for Greece; but was deserted and divorced by him to make way for Glauce, his new mistress. Medea is fabled to have returned to her country, Colchis, after passing through various adventures, and on her death to have married Achilles in the Elysian fields.

MEDIA (Geog.) Μηδία, a celebrated country of Asia, bounded on the N. by the Caspian sea, W. by Armenia, S. by Persia, and E. by Parthia and Hyrcania. It was divided into two parts by Strabo, namely, Media Magna, and Media Parva, or Atropatene. The principal cities in Media were Ecbatana, Arsacia, Cyropolis, and Europus. The celebrated rivers were Cambyses, Cyrus, Mardus, Strato, and Corindas. The mountains were Coronus, Jasonius, Orontes, Zagrus, and Choabrus.

History of Media.

Media, now called Serwan, or Schirwan, was first raised into a kingdom after its revolt from the Assyrian monarchy, A. C. 820, soon after which Dejoces was elected their king, who reigned 53 years, and was succeeded by Phraortes, Cyaxeres, and Astyages, who was conquered by Cyrus, when Media was united to Persia, A. C. 550. The duration of the empire of the Medes is stated very differently by different writers; some, as Herodotus, not reckoning it to have lasted more than 150 years, and others extending its duration to 350. Ctesias, and after him Diodorus, have given the names of several kings, who are considered as fabulous. Herodot. l. 1, &c.; Polyb. l. 5; Diodor. l. 13; Justin. l. 1; Curt. l. 5, &c.

MEDICIS (Hist.) or Medici, as it is sometimes written, the name of a family in Italy, which distinguished itself in the annals of history, particularly during the 16th and 17th centuries. Different accounts of its origin are given, but mention is made as early as 1162 of Anselme de Medicis, who defended Alexandria against the emperor Frederic I; James de Medicis was chief of Orvietta in 1030; and others of this family held posts of consideration in that city in subsequent periods.

MEDICIS, Philip de, the first of this family of whom any thing authentic is known, was a man of such influence among the Guelphs of Florence, that the Gibelins aimed at the extermination of his family; but being defeated in their purpose, the Florentines not only adopted the Medicis as fellow citizens, but also invested them with high offices. Philip de Medicis died in 1258.

MEDICIS, John de, gonfalonier of Florence, was born in 1360, and died in 1428, after having distinguished himself by his merits.

MEDICIS, Cosmo de, son of the preceding, styled the Father of his Country, was born in 1399, raised to the office of gonfalonier, after having been banished from his country and recalled, and died in 1464, leaving the reputation of a great statesman, and a great patron of learning. [Vide Plate VII]

MEDICIS, Peter de, was gonfalonier in 1460, and died in 1472.

MEDICIS, Laurence, or Lorenzo de, son of the preceding, surnamed the Great, and the Father of Letters, succeeded his father in the post of gonfalonier in 1478, and died in 1492. [Vide Plate VII]

MEDICIS, Julian de, brother of the preceding, was murdered by the faction of Pazzi, who aimed also at the life of Laurence.

MEDICIS, Peter II de, son of Laurence, was born in 1471, and died in 1494, after having been proscribed and banished from Florence.

MEDICIS, Laurence II de, son of the preceding, was born in 1492, made duke of Urbino by his uncle pope Leo X in 1516, and died in 1519. His daughter, Catherine de Medicis, was the celebrated queen of France. [Vide Catherine]

MEDICIS, Alexander de, natural son either of the preceding, or Julius de Medicis, afterwards the pope Clement VII, was born in 1510, created duke of Florence by Charles V, and murdered by his cousin Laurence de Medicis, in his palace in 1537.

MEDICIS, John de, cousin to Peter de Medicis, the second of that name above-mentioned, affected the title of the Popular, on the banishment of his relative, and was killed at the battle of Pavia, after having signalized his valour in the service of Francis I.

MEDICIS, Cosmo I de, grand duke of Tuscany. [Vide Cosmo]

MEDICIS, Ferdinand de, vide Ferdinand.

MEDICIS, John de, natural son of Cosmo I, signalized himself in the wars of Hungary, and was chosen by the Venetians in 1616, to be commander-in-chief of their army for the defence of Frioul.

MEDICIS, John James, Marquis of Marignan, of the family of the Medicis settled at Milan, was one of the greatest captains of his age. He was born in 1497, and died in 1555, after having obtained numerous victories in the service of Francis Sforza, duke of Milan, and afterwards in that of Francis I.

MEDICIS, Julius de (Ecc.) a pope under the name of Clement VII. [Vide Clement VII]

MEDICIS, Hippolytus de, natural son of Julian de Medicis, was created a cardinal in 1529, by his cousin Clement VII, and died in 1535, after having signalized himself more as a soldier than as an ecclesiastic Paul. Jov. in Elog.

MEDICIS, John de, son of Cosmo I, was created a cardinal in 1560, and was killed, as is said, by his brother Garcias, whom the father in the height of his anger is reported to have killed on the spot, but this fact is by no means authenticated. On the other hand it is generally believed that they died of the plague.

MEDICIS, Sebastian de (Biog.) of the illustrious family above-mentioned, wrote 'De Venatione, Piscatione, et Aucupio,' 8vo.; 'De Fortuitis Casibus;' 'De Sepulturis,' &c.

MEDICIS, Peter de, a painter of Florence in the 16th century, studied under Cigoli, and acquired great celebrity as an historical painter.

MEDINA, John Baptiste (Biog.) a Spaniard by extraction, and a portrait painter, was born at Brussels in 1659, and died in 1711, where he had been particularly patronized.

MEDINA, John, a grandson of the preceding, who died at Edinburgh in 1796, was employed in repairing the series of Scottish Kings in Holyrood-House.

MEDINA, Peter, a native of Seville, in Spain, in the 16th century, was the author of 'Arte de Navigar;' 'Regimento de Navigacion;' 'Libro de las Grandezas y Cosas Memorables de España,' &c.

MEDINA del Campo (Geog.) an inland town of Spain, in the province of Leo, 37 miles N. W. Segovia, lon. 6° W. Segovia. It is the Methymna campestris, in the Latin of the middle ages, and was the birth-place and residence of many of the Spanish kings, when the sovereignty of the Christians was confined to the north of Spain.

MEDINA, Talnabi, one of the towns of Arabia, rendered celebrated by having afforded a shelter to Mahomet, when he was driven from Mecca. He died there, and was buried in a tomb, which is now the principal curiosity of the place.

MEDIOLANUM (Geog.) now Milan, the capital of Insubria, at the north of the Po. Liv. l. 5; Cluv. Ital. Antiq.

MEDIOLANUM, Aulercorum, a town of Gaul, now Evreux, in Normandy.

MEDITERRANEAN (Geog.) the great sea which forms the southern boundary of almost the whole of Europe, has a communication with the Atlantic by the Straits of Gibraltar, and with the Euxine, or Black Sea, by the Bosphorus. It contains a number of islands, as Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Majorca, Minorca, Malta, Candia, Corfu, Negropont, Rhodes, and many others in the Archipelago. Of the rivers that fall into the Mediterranean, the greatest are the Nile, Po, Rhone, and Ebro. Its name is derived from its situation, medio terræ, i. e. in the midst of lands; which name has been latinized Mediterraneum Mare; but among the ancients it is sometimes called Internum Mare, Nostrum Mare, Medius Liquor, and is frequently denominated in Scripture the Great Sea. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 5.

MEDLYCOTT (Her.) the name of a family of Vennhouse, co. Somerset, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1808 on sir William Coles Medlycott, the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, per pale plain, and per fess indented, gules and azure, two lions rampant in chief, and another in base argent.

Crest. Out of a mural crown gules, a demi-eagle with wings elevated or.

MEDON (Hist.) son of Codrus, the 17th and last king of Athens, was the first archon that was appointed with regal authority, A.C. 1070. His successors were called after him Medontidæ.

MEDUACUS (Geog.) the name of two rivers falling into the Adriatic, near Venice, one Meduacus Major, now Brenta; and another Meduacus Minor, now Baculione. Liv. l 10; Plin. l. 3.

MEDUANA (Geog.) a river of Gaul, flowing into the Lyeris, now the Maine. Lucan. l. 1.

MEDUS (Myth.) a son of Medea and Ægeus, who is said to have given his name to Media.

MEDUSA (Myth.) Μέδουσα, one of the three Gorgons, daughter of Phocys and Ceto, who, with her sisters, is said to have been born with snakes instead of locks of hair around their heads, and to have had the power of killing or turning into stones whatever they looked upon. Perseus having conquered Medusa, cut off her head and placed it on the ægis of Minerva. The blood which dropped from the head is said to have produced the numerous serpents that infest Africa.

Ovid. de Pont. l. 1.

Ipsa Medusa oculis veniat licet obvia nostris
Amittet vires protinus ipsa suos.

Lucan. l. 9, v. 624.

Squallebant latè Phorcynidos arva Medusæ.

Propert. l. 4.

Sectaque Perseâ Phorcydos ora manu.

Martial, l. 9, ep. 26.

MEGABYZUS (Hist.) Μεγάβυζος, one of the seven Persian noblemen, who conspired against the usurper Smerdis. He was set over an army in Europe by king Darius, where he took Perinthus, and conquered all Thrace. Herodot. l. 3, &c.

MEGABYZUS, a satrap of Artaxerxes, who revolted against the king, and defeated his armies, but was afterwards restored to favour.

MEGACLES (Hist.) Μεγακλῆς, a son of Alcmæon, and the leader of a faction at Athens, opposed Pisistratus, by whom he was expelled the city, and retiring to Eretria, gained immense wealth. He afterwards made two other attempts to destroy the power of Pisistratus, but without success Herod. l. 1, c. 59, &c.

MEGÆRA (Myth.) one of the furies, the daughter of Nox and Acheron. Virg. Æn. l. 12.

MEGALE (Myth.) a Greek name for Cybele, whose festival called Megalesia, was celebrated at Rome. Varr. de Lat. Ling. l. 5, c. 3; Cic. de Arusp. c. 12.

MEGALOPOLIS (Geog.) Μεγαλοπόλις, vel Μεγάλη πόλις, a town of Arcadia, in Peloponnesus, now Londaresus, built by Epaminondas, and celebrated as the birth-place of Polybius. It joined the Achean league A. C. 232, when it was taken and ruined by Cleomenes, king of Sparta. Polyb. l. 4, &c.; Liv. l. 28; Strab. l. 8; Paus. l. 30.

MEGALOPOLIS (Numis.) medals of this town are extant bearing the inscription, ΜΕΓΑΛΟΠΟΛΙΤΩΝ; and for their type a figure of Pan, or Apollo.

MEGANIRA (Myth.) Μεγανεῖρα, the wife of Celeus, king of Eleusis, in Attica, and mother of Triptolemus, to whom Ceres, as she travelled over Attica, taught agriculture. Paus. l. 1.

MEGAPENTHES (Myth.) Μεγαπένθης, a natural son of Menelaus, who was married to a daughter of Alector, a native of Sparta. Hom. Odyss. l. 4; Apollod. l. 3.

MEGARA (Myth.) Μεγάρα, a daughter of Creon, king of Thebes, is said to have been given in marriage to Hercules, because he had delivered the Thebans from the tyranny of the Orchomenians, and afterwards to have been killed by her husband in a fit of jealousy, together with the three children she bore to him. Apollod. l. 2; Diod. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 82; Senec. in Herc.

MEGARA (Geog.) Μεγάρα, a city of Achaia, the capital of a district called Megaris, situated on the Sinus Saronicus, nearly at an equal distance from Corinth and Athens. It was built about 1131 A. C. upon two rocks, and called after Megareus, the son of Neptune, who was buried there; or Megareus, a son of Apollo. It was originally governed by kings, but afterwards fell into a democracy, and became subject to the Athenians. At the battle of Salamis, the people of Megara furnished 20 ships for the defence of Greece; and at Platæa they had 300 men in the army of Pausanias. The sect of philosophers called Megaric, took their name from this city, which was the birth-place of Euclid, Stilpo, and Theognis, and is still extant under the same name, standing on an eminence about a mile from the Gulf of Egina. The country of Megaris is celebrated for its bulbs.

Ovid. de Rem. Am.

Daunius, an Libycis bulbus tibi missus ab oris,
An veniat Megaris, noxius omnis erit.

Columel. l. 10.

Jam Megaris veniunt genitalia semina bulbi.

MEIBOMIUS, Henry, son of the former, and also a physician, was born at Lubeck in 1638, and died in 1700, leaving, besides a number of medical works, a collection, entitled 'Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum,' 3 vols. fol. 1688, which had been begun by his father.

MEIBOMIUS, Marcus, a scholar of the same family, was born in 1611 at Tonningen, in the duchy of Sleswick, and died in 1710 or 1711, leaving 'Antiquæ Musicæ Auctores septem, Græce et Latine,' &c. 1652; 'Liber de Fabrica Triremium,' 1671; 'Diogenes Laertius,' 2 vols. 4to. Amst. 1692.

MEIER, George Frederic (Biog.) a German writer, was born in 1718 at Ammondorff, near Halle, in Saxony, and died in 1777, leaving 'Betrachtungen über den ersten Grundsatz aller Schönen Künste,' 8vo. Halle, 1748—1750, and republished in 1754-59; besides many other works, which were formerly esteemed in Germany.

MEJERDAH (Geog.) a large river of Tunis, the Bagrada of the ancients.

MELA, Pomponius (Biog.) a geographer, who was born in the province of Bætica, in Spain, and flourished in the reign of Claudius, was the author of 'Cosmographia, vel de Situ Orbis,' of which Isaac Vossius published an edition in 12mo. 1558; Gronovius also published one in 12mo. in 1658; Reynolds another in 4to. Exon. 1711; reprinted at London in 1719 and 1739; and at Eton in 1761 and 1775, which is reckoned the best.

MELAMPUS (Myth.) Μελάμπους, a celebrated soothsayer and physician of Argos, son of Amythaon and Dorippa, who lived at Pylos, in Peloponnesus, and professed to hold communion with the birds. He cured the daughters of Prœtus with hellebore, called after him Melampodium, and, as a reward for his services, married the eldest of these princesses. At his death he received divine honours, and had temples raised to his memory. Hom. Odyss. l. 11; Herodot. l. 2; Apollod. l. 2; Propert. l. 2; Virg. Eclog. l. 6; Paus. l. 2.

MELANCTHON, Philip (Ecc.) one of the first reformers, was born at Bretten, in the Palatinate upon the Rhine, in 1497, and died in 1560, rejoicing, as is said, that death came to deliver him from theological persecutions. His writings, consisting of theological, moral, and philosophical treatises, were so numerous, that it was thought necessary to give a catalogue of them in 1582. The most complete edition was published by the author's son-in-law, Jasper Peucer, in 4 vols. fol. 1601. [Vide Plate XIX]

MELANIPPE (Myth.) Μελανίππη, a daughter of Desmontes, or Æolus, who had by Neptune two sons, named Bœotis and Æolus. Varr. de Re. Rust. l. 2; Cic. de Offic. l. 1; Dionys. Hal. Rhet. c. 57; Hygin. Fab. 186.

MENGS, Anthony Raphael (Biog.) a modern painter, who was born at Aussig, in Bohemia, in 1726, and died in 1779, executed several works for Augustus III of Poland, and Charles III, king of Naples and Spain. One of his pictures, namely, our Saviour in the Garden, which is the altar-piece of All Soul's Chapel, Oxford, is reckoned the finest specimen of his art in this country. He was an author as well as a painter, and his works were published by the Chevalier d'Azara, with notes and a life of Mengs, in 2 vols. 4to. Parma, 1780, which were translated into English, and published in 2 vols. 8vo. 1796.

MENINSKI, Franciscus a Mesignien (Biog.) a German orientalist, was born in Lorraine in 1623, and died in 1698, leaving 'Thesaurus Linguarum Orientalium,' 4 vols. fol. 1680; to which was added in 1687 another volume, entitled, 'Complementum Thesauri,' &c.; a new edition was afterwards published at Vienna at the expence of the empress Maria Theresa, with this title, 'Francisci a Mesignien Meninski Lexicon Arabico-Persico-Turcicum,' &c. 4 vols. fol. 1780; of his other works, which were occasioned by a literary dispute between him and J. B. Podesta, an account may be found in his life, prefixed to the Dictionary.

MENIPPUS (Biog.) a cynic philosopher of Phœnicia, originally a slave, who obtained his liberty with a great sum of money, and became a griping usurer at Thebes, is said to have hanged himself in despair for the loss of a large sum of which he was robbed. He wrote 13 books of satires, which are all lost; but his reputation as a biting satirist has been preserved by Varro, who composed satires, which he called after him Menippean, and also by Lucian, who introduces him as the snarling satirical speaker in many of his Dialogues. The title, 'Satyre Menippée,' was from him applied to a composition which was published against the faction of the League, by Pierre le Roy, Rapin, and Florent Chrêtien.

MENIPPUS, a geographer of Pergamos, and an orator of Stratonice.

MENIUS (Hist.) a consul U. C. 417, A. C. 347, having gained a naval battle against the Latins and the Antiates, formed the rostrum at Rome with the rostra, or beaks of ships, which he had taken. Liv. l. 8; Plin. l. 34.

III,' &c.; 'Institutiones Œconomicæ,' &c.; 'Brevis Explicatio Sensus literalis totius Scripturæ;' 'De Republicâ Hebræorum,' &c.

MENŒCEUS (Myth.) Μενοικεύς, a young Theban, son of Creon, slew himself at the gates of Thebes to ensure victory to his countrymen, when Teresias foretold that success would attend their arms if the last of the race of Cadmus would offer himself a sacrifice. Sophocl. in Antigon.; Eurip. Phœn.; Apollod. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 25; Lactant. ad Theb. l. 7.

MENŒTIUS (Myth.) Μενοίτιος, a son of Actor and Egina after her amour with Jupiter, who was one of the Argonauts. Hom. Il. l. 1; Apollod. l. 3; Schol. in Apollon. &c.

MENON (Hist.) Μένων, a Thessalian commander in the expedition of Cyrus against his brother Artaxerxes. Diodor. l. 14.

MENOPHILUS (Hist.) a eunuch, to whom Mithridates, when conquered by Pompey, entrusted his daughter. Menophilus killed the princess for fear of her falling into the enemy's hands.

MENTEL, John (Biog.) a printer of Strasbourg, to whom some, but without sufficient authority, have ascribed the invention of printing. He was the first who introduced the art there, and begun the exercise of it by printing a Bible in 2 vols. fol. in 1466. He died in 1478, after having obtained great celebrity and opulence, and been ennobled by the emperor Frederick IV.

MENTOR (Myth.) Μέντωρ, a faithful friend of Ulysses, whose name has been immortalized by Homer.

MENTZ (Geog.) a considerable town of Germany, in the Lower Circle of the Rhine, and in the grand duchy of Hesse, situated on the left bank of the Rhine, immediately below the influx of the Main, 37 m. S. E. Coblentz, 99 N. by E. Strasburg. Lon. 8° 11′ E, lat. 49° 59′ N.

History of Mentz.

Mentz, which was well known to the Romans by the names of Moguntia, Moguntiacum, Mogontiacum [vide Moguntia], was laid in ruins during the struggles between the Romans and the Germans, and is supposed to owe its restoration to Charlemagne; but it was again almost entirely ruined by the emperor Frederic Barbarossa in 1158, and was not completely restored until the reign of the emperor Otho IV, who converted it into a free imperial town. In the mean time, its trade continued gradually to increase, but being much impeded by a banditti that infested those parts, this town formed, in the 13th century, an association similar to those of the Hans towns, which was distinguished by the name of the Rhenish Confederation. In the thirty years' war it was taken by the Swedes, and in 1688 by the French, to whom it surrendered in 1792, but the next year it was taken by the Austrians after a bombardment and siege of three months, when the greater part of the houses were burned to the ground. In 1797 it came again by the chances of war into the hands of the French, to whom it was formally ceded by the treaty of Luneville. Mentz was an archbishop's see from the year 745 to 1802, when it was made into a bishop's see.

MENTZEL, Christian (Biog.) a botanist, was born at Furstenwal, and died in 1701, at the age of 79, leaving 'Index Nominum Plantarum,' fol. 1696; 'Lexicon Plantarum Polyglotton Universale;' 'Natural History of Brazil,' &c.

MENZIKOFF, Alexander (Hist.) a Russian of obscure origin, who rose from a menial condition by the favour of the Czar Peter to the highest offices in the state, and was afterwards continued in the good graces of the empress Catherine, until his own follies, combined with the exertions of his enemies, brought on his disgrace, when he was banished to Siberia, and died in exile in 1729.

MENZINI, Benedict (Biog.) an Italian poet, who was born at Florence in 1646, and died in 1704, was the author of several elegies, hymns, &c., besides a treatise on the Irregular Construction of the Tuscan Language, &c. which have been collected in 4 vols. 4to. 1731, by Fabroni.

MERAIOTH (Bibl.) מריות, son of Ahitub, high-priest of the Jews. 1 Chron. ix. Also a priest of the race of Aaron, son of Zeraiah and father of Amariah. 1 Chron. vi.

MERARI (Bibl.) מררי, third son of Levi, and father of Mahali; also son of Ox, and father of Judith, of the tribe of Simeon. Exod. vi.; Judith viii.

MERCATI, Michael (Biog.) a physician and naturalist, was born in Tuscany in 1541, and died in 1593, leaving, besides a Treatise on the Plague, and a Dissertation on the Obelisks of Rome, also a posthumous work, entitled 'Metallotheca,' &c. edited and published by order of Clement XI, by Lancisci, his first physician, fol. Rom. 1717.

MERCATOR, Marius (Biog.) an ecclesiastical writer and friend of St. Augustine, who died about the year 451, wrote against the Nestorians and Pelagians. All his works, which are in 'Labbe's Councils,' and in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum,' were published in 1673 by Garnier, a Jesuit, with long Dissertations; 2 tomes in 1 vol. fol.; M. Baluze published a new edition of them in 8vo. Paris, 1684.

Mercator, Gerard, a geographer and mathematician, was born in 1512 at Ruremonde, in the Low Countries, and died in 1594, after having framed a method of laying down charts, which is still used, and known by the name of 'Mercator's Charts;' and a part of navigation is distinguished by the name of 'Mercator's Sailing.' [Vide Plate XXXIV]

Mercator, Nicholas, a mathematician and astronomer, whose name in High Dutch was Kauffman, was born about 1640 at Holstein, in Denmark, and died in 1694, leaving, 1. 'Cosmographia,' &c. 12mo. Gedan. 1651. 2. 'Rationes Mathematicæ subductæ Anno 1653,' 4to. Hafn. 3. 'De Emendatione Annuâ Diatribæ duæ,' &c. 4to. 4. 'Hypothesis Astronomica nova,' &c. fol. Lond. 1664. 5. 'Logarithmotechnia,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1668. 6. 'Institutionum Astronomicarum Libri duo,' &c. 8vo. Lond. 1676. 7. 'Euclidis Elementa Geometrica,' &c. 12mo. Lond. 1678; besides his papers in the 'Philosophical Transactions.'

MERCER, James (Biog.) a native of Scotland, and a scholar, who was born in 1745, and died in 1804, wrote several poetical pieces, the second edition of which was published with his name, under the title of 'Lyric Poems, by James Mercer, Esq.' &c.

MERCIA (Hist.) the seventh kingdom of the Saxon Heptarchy, which, though the last formed, was the largest of all, comprehending the 17 counties of Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, Worcestershire, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Rutlandshire, Northamptonshire, Lincolnshire, Huntingdonshire, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Staffordshire, Shropshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Cheshire, and part of Hertfordshire. It was founded by Crida in 585, and derived its name, according to some, from meark, mark or limit, because it was bounded by most of the other kingdoms. Wibba succeeded his father Crida, and had for his immediate successor Ceorl, his kinsman; but his son Penda finally mounted the throne at the age of 50, and was slain in battle against Oswy, king of Northumberland. Peada, his son and successor, introduced Christianity among his subjects, by the persuasion of his wife, a daughter of Oswy. He had for his successors Wolfhere, Ethelred, Kendred, Ceolred, Ethelbald, Offa, who seized the kingdom of East Anglia, Egfrith, Cuthred, Kenulph, Kenelm, Ceolulf, Beornulf, Ludican, and Wiglaff, the last prince of this kingdom, who was defeated by the victorious monarch Egbert, and his kingdom united with the rest into one monarchy.

History of Merida.

Merida, which was known to the Romans under the name of Augusta Emerita, in whose time it was one of the largest and most thriving places in Spain, fell gradually into decay in the wars between the Goths and the Moors. It was besieged and taken by the latter people in 713, when it became the capital of a Moorish kingdom; but it was retaken by the Spaniards in 1230. During the late peninsular war it fell into the hands of the French, from whom it was taken by General Hill in 1812. Although at present in a state of great decay, it contains many vestiges of its former prosperity in the ruins of temples, aqueducts, bridges, baths, and other public edifices erected by the Romans. Under the Goths, Merida was the see of an archbishop, which was removed in 1124 to Compostello, in Gallicia, by Callixtus II. A council was also held here in 666.

MERIONES (Myth.) Μηριόνης, son of Molus, a Cretan prince, was charioteer to Idomeneus, during the Trojan war, where he signalized himself by his courage, and received divine honours from his countrymen after his death. *Hom. MERSENNE, Marin (Biog.) a French mathematician, was born at Oyse, in the province of Maine, in 1588, and died in 1648, leaving, 'Quæstiones Celeberrimæ in Genesim,' &c.; 'Harmonicorum Libri;' 'De Sonorum Natura,' &c.; 'Cogitata Physico-Mathematica,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'La Verité des Sciences;' 'Les Questions inouies.'

MERTON, Walter de (Hist.) the illustrious founder of Merton College, was born at Merton, in Surrey; rose through various gradations of office in the Court of Chancery, to the post of Chancellor of England in 1258, was deprived in the same year by the barons, but restored in 1261; consecrated bishop of Rochester in 1274, and died in consequence of a fall from his horse while fording a river, in 1277, after having obtained the highest credit in affairs of state, and been consulted on all matters of importance, as a divine, a lawyer, and a financier. Having purchased several tenements on the ground where Merton College stands, he began his erection, and by charter dated 1264, established his foundation by the name of Domus Scholarum de Merton. This first charter, with the statutes prescribed in it, continued in force until 1270, when it was confirmed by a second, in which great additions were made to the endowments, by estates in Oxfordshire, and other counties. A third charter was granted in 1274, all which are now preserved in the library, and were consulted as precedents in the foundation of Peterhouse, the earliest college in the sister university. By the assistance of subsequent benefactors, Merton College was progressively raised to its present state, in which it consists of a warden, twenty-four fellows, two chaplains, fourteen portionistæ, or post-masters, four scholars, and two clerks. MERULA, Corn. (Hist.) a consul, who successfully fought against the Gauls, but afterwards killed himself in despair, during the civil distractions in the time of Marius and Cinna. Paterc. l. 2; Appian. de Bell. Civ. l. 1.

MERULA, Angelo (Ecc.) a native of Brille, was born in 1482, and after taking orders in the Romish church, he left it, in order to take up with Protestantism, for which, as he refused to abjure the new faith that he had embraced, he was sentenced to be burnt, but died as he was carried to the stake in 1557, when his body was committed to the flames.

MERULA, George (Biog.) an Italian, was born at Alexandria, in the duchy of Milan in 1420, and died in 1494, leaving 'Antiquitates Vicecomitum de Milan,' and 'Historiarum Mediolani decas Secunda,' which are both inserted in the 25th volume of the collection of the 'Historians of Italy;' 'Description du Mont Vésuve;' a Translation of Xiphilin's Abridgement of Dio; an edition of Juvenal, Martial, Ausonius, and the first edition of Plautus, published at Venice, fol. 1472; besides which, he first collected the 'Scriptores de Re Rustica,' fol. Venet. 1472, including Cato, Varro, Columella, and Palladius. His Juvenal is entitled 'Enarrationes Satyrarum Juvenalis, per Georgium Merulam Alexandrinum,' fol. Tarvis. 1478.

MERULA, Gaudentius, an author of the 16th century, wrote, among other things, a treatise 'De Gallorum Cisalpinorum Antiquitate ac Origine,' 8vo. Lugd. 1538.

MERULA, Paul, or Van Merle, grand nephew of Angelo Merula above-mentioned, was born at Dort in 1558, and died in 1607, leaving, 1. 'Q. Ennii Annalium Librorum XVIII Fragmenta collecta et Commentariis illustrata,' 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1595. 2. 'Eutropii Historiæ Romanæ Libri X,' 8vo. 1592; and with the Notes of Glareanus and Merula, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1594. 3. 'Urbis Romæ Delineatio et Methodica ex variis Autoribus Descriptio,' 1599. 4. 'Cosmographiæ Generalis Libri tres,' 4to. 1605. 5. 'Desiderii Erasmi ex ipsius Manu fideliter representata,' &c. 4to. 1607; besides other works mentioned by Foppen and Niceron. [Vide Plate XXVI]

MERWAN (Hist.) the name of two caliphs.

MERWAN, Ebn Al Hakem, was proclaimed caliph at Damascus, by the house of Ommayah, after the abdication of Mouwiyah II, and was poisoned, as is said, by his wife Yezid, within the first year of his reign.

MERWAN, Ebn Mohammed, succeeded Ibrahim Ebn Al Walid on his deposition; but being opposed by Abul-Abbas, the first caliph of the house of the Abbassides, he was defeated and slain in Egypt, in the year of the Hegira 131, A. D. 741, after a reign of not quite four years.

MESCHACH (Bibl.) מישך, a Chaldean name given to Mishael, the companion of Daniel, who was one of the three cast into the fiery furnace. Dan. ii.

MESCHECH (Bibl.) משך, or Mosoc, sixth son of Japhet. Gen. x. 2; Ezek. xxvii.

MESENGUY, Francis Philip (Biog.) a French divine, was born at Beauvais in 1677, and died in 1763, leaving, 1. 'Exposition de la Doctrine Chretienne,' 6 vols. 12mo.; which was condemned by Clement XIII. 2. 'Abrégé de l'Histoire de l'Ancien Testament,' 12mo. Paris, 1728; afterwards extended to 10 vols. 12mo.; besides some controversial pieces.

MESHA (Bibl.) מישע, son of Bela and Hodesh. 1 Chron. vii. 9.

MESHA, or Mesa, king of Moab, who revolted against Jehoram, king of Israel, by whom he was defeated. 2 Kings iii.

MESHA, eldest son of Caleb, son of Hesron. 1 Chron. ii.

MESHELEMIAH (Bibl.) משלמיהו, father of Zechariah, a Levite, and porter of the temple. 1 Chron. ix.

MESHELEMIAH, or Meselemia, son of Korah, and father of several sons who were guards or porters in the temple. 1 Chron. xxvi.

MESHILLEMITH (Bibl.) משלמית, father of Meshullam, and son of Immer. 1 Chron. ix. 12.

MESHILLEMOTH (Bibl.) משלמות, father of Berachiah, 2 Chron. xxvii. 12; also father of Ahasaia, Nehem. xi. 13.

MESHULLAM (Bibl.) משלם, son of Hodariah, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. ix. 7; also the son of Shephatiah; of Abihail; of Meshillemith; of Besodeiah; of Berechiah; and of Kohath. 1 Chron. v. ix; 2 Chron. xxxiv; Neh. iii. &c.

MESOMEDES (Biog.) a lyric poet in the reign of Adrian, of whose compositions nothing remain but a few Anacreontic verses on the spring, in the collection of ancient epigrams. Jul. Capitol. in Anton. P.

MESOPOTAMIA (Bibl.) Μεσοποταμια, a country of Asia, now called Diarbec [vide Diarbec], derives its ancient name from its situation μέσος, in the middle, and ποταμὸς, a river, i. e. between two rivers, namely, the rivers Tigris and Euphrates. The Hebrew name, ארם־נהרים, has the same signification, i. e. Aram-Naharaim, or Syria, between two rivers. This country is celebrated in Scripture as the first dwelling-place of men after the deluge, and as the birth-place of Abraham, Sarah, Rebecca, Rachel, and Leah, &c. It is sometimes called Padan-Aram, i. e. Mesopotamia of Syria. Gen. xxiv. 10, or xxxi. 18, &c.; Deuteron. xxiii. 4; Jud. iii. 8. By profane writers it was also called Osroene, Mygdonia, Sophanene, &c. The principal regions of Mesopotamia were Anthemusia, Chalcitis, Gauzanitis, Acabene, Ingine, and Ancoborites; the principal cities, Edessa, Nicephorium, Labbana, Seleucia, and Carræ, &c.; the principal mountains, the Masius and Singaras, which is now called Sima; the principal rivers flowing into the Euphrates, the Abora or Chaborus, now Chabu, and the Saocoras, now Hornitz. Mesopotamia was reduced to a province by Trajan; and after experiencing several vicissitudes under the subsequent emperors, it was ceded to the Persians by Philip. Polyb. l. 5; Strab. l. 16; Plin. l. 5; Ptol. l. 5; Ammian. Marcellin. l. 23; Eutropius, Zosimus, &c.

MESOPOTAMIA (Numis.) the situation of this country between two rivers is depicted on some medals of Trajan, as in the annexed figure, where two aged men, pouring out water from an urn, represent the Euphrates and the Tigris; between whom the emperor is standing, as it were in the act of treading on a female, intended to represent the conquered country: inscription ARMENIA ET MESOPO-

MESSALA (Hist.) a surname of the family of the Valerii and Vipsanii. [Vide Valeria and Vipsania, gens.]

MESSALINA, Valeria (Hist.) a daughter of Messala Barbatus, and fifth wife of the emperor Claudius, who disgraced herself by her cruelty and debauchery [vide Messalina under Numismatics]; for which she was at length put to death, A. D. 48. Juv. Sat. 10, v. 333; Tacit. Annal. l. 2, c. 27; Suet. in Claud. c. 26; Dio. &c.

Messalina, Statilia, the descendant of a consular family, and third wife of Nero, whom she survived, would have been married to Otho as her sixth husband, if he had not destroyed himself. Tacit. Annal. l. 15, c. 68.

Messalina, Aurelia, the wife of the unhappy Clodius Albinus, of whom Capitolinus makes mention. Capitolin. in Albin.

Messalina (Numis.) medals are extant of two of the empresses above-mentioned.

Messalina, Valeria, is known by her effigy, as in the annexed figure, and the inscriptions—VALERIA MESSALINA AUGUSTA.—ΟΥΑΛ. ΜΕΣΣΑΛΙΝΑ ΣΕΒΑΣΤΗ; on the reverse of some, TI. CLAUDIUS CAESAR AUG. GERMANICUS, &c.

Messalina, Statilia, is known by the inscriptions—ΜΕΣΣΑΛΙΝΑ ΚΑΙΣ. ΣΕΒΑΣΤΗ; on the reverse, ΝΕΡΩ ΚΛΑΥΔΙ ΚΑΙΣ. ΓΕΡΜΑΝΙΚΟΣ.

MESSALINUS, M. Valerius (Hist.) a Roman officer in the reign of Tiberius, who was appointed governor of Dalmatia, and distinguished himself by his opposition to Piso. Tacit. Annal. l. 3.

MESSANA (Geog.) Μεσσήνη, an ancient and celebrated town of Sicily, first called Zancle, which is said to have been founded 1600 years before the Christian æra, and to have been peopled by a colony of Messenians about 500 years A. C. when it was called after them Messana, and now Messina. [Vide Messina] It afterwards fell into the hands of the Mamertini, from whom it was taken by the Romans, and became for some time the second city in Sicily. [Vide Messana under Numismatics] Herodot. l. 7, &c.; Thucyd. l. 1; Liv. l. 31; Diod. l. 4; Strab. l. 6; Mel. l. 3; Ital. l. 14.

Messana (Numis.) some of the earliest medals of this town bear the inscription of its ancient name ΔΑΝΚΛΕ; others that of Messana, or its inhabitants the Messanians as ΜΕΣΣΑΝΙΩΝ, Messanensium; and others that of the Mamertini, as ΜΑΜΕΡΤΙΝΩΝ, Mamertinorum. The figure of a hare is their ordinary type. Haverk. Parut. Sicil. Discritt.

MESSENE (Geog.) Μεσσήνη, or Messena, a city in the Peloponnesus, and capital of the country called Messenia, the inhabitants of which rendered themselves famous for the wars which they carried on against the Spartans, distinguished by the name of the Messenian Wars. The first of these was begun 743 years A. C. which continued for 19 years with alternate success, until the taking of Ithome, after a ten years' siege, by which it was terminated in favour of the Spartans. The Messenians, however, ill brooking the insolence of the conquerors, determined again to endeavour to shake off the Spartan yoke, and began the second Messenian war by a sudden revolt, A. C. 685; but, notwithstanding some partial successes in the outset, they were a second time compelled to submit to the superior power of their adversaries, after a struggle of 14 years, during the greater part of which time they defended themselves in Ira. At the expiration of 200 years from this period, the Messenians availed themselves of the revolt of the Helots to make a third attempt to liberate their country; but they were soon compelled to submit, and finally to leave Peloponnesus, on the condition that if they ever returned they should be sold as slaves. Thus miserably exiled they applied to the Athenians for protection, from whom they obtained an asylum in Naupactus. Their descendants however returned to Peloponnesus after a banishment of 300 years. Thucyd. l. 1; Polyb. l. 4; Diodor. l. 2, &c.; Strab. l. 6; Paus. Mess.; Polyæn. l. 3; Plut. in Cim.

MESSENIA (Geog.) Μεσσηνία, a province of Peloponnesus, situated between Laconia, Elis, Arcadia, and the sea. Its chief towns were Messene, the capital, Pylus, Methone, Ithome, &c. [Vide Messene]

MESSENIACUS, Sinus (Geog.) a gulf in the neighbourhood of Messene, the capital of Messenia, now called the Gulf of Coron.

MESSENIUS, John (Hist.) a professor of Upsal, who died in prison in 1636, after 21 years' confinement, on a charge of holding a traitorous correspondence with the enemies of his country, was the author of 'Scandia illustrata,' 14 vols. Stockh. 1714.

Messenius, Arnold, son of the preceding, and author of a 'History of the Swedish Nobility,' was beheaded in 1648, for writing some satires against the royal family. His son, though but seventeen years of age, is said to have suffered with him.

MESSIER, Charles (Biog.) an astronomer, was born at Badonvilliers, in Lorraine, in 1780, and died in 1817, leaving numerous papers on astronomical subjects, which he communicated to the 'Memoires' of the Academy.

MESSINA (Geog.) a large city, north-east of the island of Sicily, situated on a straight called the Faro di Messina, and by the ancients Fretum Siculum, 50 miles N. N. E. Catania, and 130 E. Palermo. Lon. 50° 48′ E., lat. 38° 11′ S.

History of Messina.

This place, which was celebrated in antiquity by the name of Messana and Zancle, still retains its importance among the towns of Sicily, although it experienced in the last century the two misfortunes of the earthquake and the plague; the latter of which carried off in 1743 more than half the inhabitants, and the former did incalculable mischief to the city itself in 1783, which it has scarcely yet recovered. But it had the advantage of being the head-quarters of the British forces for several years prior to the peace of 1814.

MESSIS (Biog.) vide Matsys.

MESTON, William (Biog.) a burlesque poet of Scotland, was born at Midmar, in Aberdeenshire, about 1688, and died in 1745, leaving several pieces, as 'The Knight;' 'Mother Grim's Tale;' 'Mole contra Mole,' &c.; which were first collected and published at Edinburgh, in 12mo. 1767.

METABUS (Myth.) a king of the Privernates, and father of Camilla, whom he dedicated to the service of Diana. Virg. Æn. l. 11, v. 540; Hygin. Fab. 252; Serv. in Virg. loc. cit.

METAPONTUM (Geog.) a town of Lucania, in Italy, on the bay of Tarentum, said to have been founded by Metabus, the father of Camilla. It suffered much for the part it took in favour of the Carthaginians, and is supposed at present to be a village bearing the name of Torre di Mare. [Vide Metapontum under Numismatics] Strab. l. 6; Mel. l. 2; Liv. l. 1, 25, &c.; Ptol. l. 3; Justin. l. 12.

Metapontum (Numis.) medals of this town are known by the inscriptions, ΜΕΤΑΠΟ. ΜΕΤΑΠΟΝΤ. ΜΕΤΑΠΟΝΤΙΝΩ, i. e. Metapontinorum, vel ΜΕΤΑΠΟΝΤΙΩΝ. The Metapontians particularly honoured Ceres, as may be observed from the ears of corn, their ordinary type; besides which they represented the figures of Apollo, Mercury, and the Minotaur on their medals. Goltz. Magn. Græc.; Beger. Thes. Brand. tom. i.; Hunt. Num. Pop. et Urb; Froel. Notit. &c.

METASTASIO, Peter (Biog.) one of the most distinguished poets of modern Italy, whose real name was Trapassi, was born in 1698, and died in 1782, leaving a number of works, consisting of operas, oratorios, or sacred dramas, and occasional pieces, of which Dr. Burney, in his History of Music, has given a list in chronological order. They have been published collectively in different parts of Europe. [Vide Plate XXIX]

METAURUS (Geog.) now Metro, a town, with a small river of the same name, in the country of the Brutii. The river Metaurus fell into the Tyrrhene sea above Sicily, and is famous for the defeat of Asdrubal in its neighbourhood, by the consuls Livy and Nero. Horat. l. 4, od. 4; Mel. l. 2; Lucan. l. 2.

METCALF (Her.) the name of an ancient family which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1802 on sir Theophilus John Metcalfe. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a fesse wavy gules, between three calves, two and one sable, a sword fesse ways, the point to the sinister proper, pomel and hilt or.

Crest. A talbot sejant sable, the dexter supporting an escutcheon or, charged with a hand issuant from the clouds on the sinister, and holding a pen all proper.

History of Metz.

Metz, the Divodurum of the Romans, was the capital of the kingdom of Austrasia in the time of Theodoric, son of Clovis the Great; but during the divisions which distracted the kingdom of France, Metz became a free city governed by its own magistrates. In 1444 it was besieged by Charles VII for René, duke of Lorraine; but after sustaining a seven month's siege, it purchased a peace with its adversaries, and preserved its freedom until 1552, when it was taken by the constable Montmorency, general of the armies of France; and a citadel was built there by Henry II. It afterwards became a subject of contention between France and Germany, and was besieged by Charles V, who was, however, compelled to retire by the duke of Guise, its governor. Metz continued after this under the protection of the kings of France, and was finally ceded to that power at the peace of Westphalia in 1648. This city is the see of a bishop suffragan of Triers, and is said to have had St. Clement, a disciple of S. Peter, for its first bishop. It has also had some councils assembled within its walls, the first of which was held in 590 by Childebert, king of Austrasia; a second in 753 by Pepin; and others in 835, 859, 863, and 888. Greg. Tur. Hist. l. 10.

MICHAEL (Hist.) the name of several emperors of Constantinople and other princes.

Emperors of this Name.

MICHAEL I, succeeded Stauracius in 811, but his general, Leo the Arminian, having declared himself in 813, he retired to a monastery, where he ended his days.

MICHAEL II, a Phrygian of obscure origin, who rose to honours under Leo the Arminian, was imprisoned at the instigation of his enemies, and sentenced to be burnt, but Leo was strangled in the night preceding the day of his intended execution, and Michael was taken from his prison and seated on the imperial throne in 820. He died in 829, hated by his subjects for his cruelties and licentiousness.

MICHAEL III, surnamed the Drunkard, succeeded his father Theophilus in 842, and was assassinated by Basil the Macedonian in 867.

MICHAEL IV, surnamed the Paphlagonian, ascended the imperial throne in 1034 by favour of the empress Zoe, who caused her husband Romanus Argyrus to be assassinated in order to make way for Michael. The latter, stung by remorse of conscience, resigned his crown in 1041, after having been successful against the Bulgarians and Saracens, and retired to a monastery, where he died soon after.

MICHAEL V, surnamed Calafates, succeeded his uncle, Michael IV, in 1041, through the intrigues of Zoe, whom he soon after banished, but was deprived of his eyes the next year through the fury of the people, and sent to a monastery, where he ended his days.

MICHAEL VI, surnamed the Warrior, was raised to the throne in 1056 in his old age by the empress Theodora, but, having less talent for governing than conquering, he was obliged to yield his throne to Isaac Comnenus, and retire to a monastery, after a reign of not two years.

MICHAEL VII, surnamed Palæologus, son of Constantine Ducas, was deprived of his throne by the arts of his mother Eudoxia, who, marrying Romanus Diogenes, proclaimed him emperor. The defeat and captivity of Romanus by the Turks in 1071 enabled Michael to re-ascend the throne, but he was obliged in 1078 to fly from Nicephorus, who had revolted against him, and died archbishop of Ephesus.

MICHAEL, Palæologus VIII, son of Andronicus Palæologus, was named by Theodore Lascaris regent during the minority of his son, John IV, but he deprived the young prince both of his throne and of his eyes in 1260, and died in 1282, after having retaken Constantinople from Baldwin II, which had been in the hands of the French for 58 years.

Other Princes of this Name.

MICHAEL, son of Dobroslas, king of Servia, was raised to the throne in 1050, and died in 1077.

MICHAEL, the son of Bodin, and grandson of the preceding, succeeded his father about 1103, but was imprisoned by the nobility of the kingdom, and died, as is supposed, in exile.

MICHAEL, surnamed Fœderowitz, grand duke of Muscovy, was elected czar of Russia in 1613, and died in 1645, after a wise and happy reign.

MICHAEL, Koributt Wiesnoviski, a Pole of a good family, was elected king of Poland in 1669, and died in 1673, a day before the celebrated battle of Chiocosim, upon the Dniester.

MICHAEL, Cerularius (Ecc.) patriarch of Constantinople, succeeded Alexis in 1043, and died in exile in the island of Proconesus, after having written against the Latin Church, and prevented the union which was at that time contemplated between the two churches. Nicet. Choniat.

MICHAEL, surnamed Oxites, patriarch of Constantinople, succeeded Leo Stipiota in 1143, and, after governing this church for six years, he retired into a monastery. Nicet. Choniat.; Baron. Annal.

MICHAEL, a patriarch of Constantinople in the 13th century, was opposed by Thomas Morosino, who was then patriarch for the Latins. There were three other patriarchs of Constantinople named Michael, viz. Michael Cerularius, Michael Oxites, and Michael Anchialius.

MICHAEL of Thessalonica, having been condemned for holding the heresy of the Bogomiles in 1160, retracted and made a public confession of his faith.

MICHAEL, a patriarch of Syria, who flourished about 1193, wrote a universal history in Syriac, which was translated into Armenian by order of Constantine Pazerpert, a patriarch of Armenia.

MICHAEL, John, bishop of Angers, was elected to this see in 1438, in opposition to the wishes of pope Eugene IV, but his election being confirmed by Charles VII, he governed this see until his death in 1447.

MICHAEL Angelo Buonaroti (Biog.) the painter, sculptor, and architect. [Vide Angelo, and Plate XXXV]

MICHAEL Angelo du Caravagio, vide Caravagio.

MILAN (Geog.) a celebrated town of Italy, in a duchy of the same name, situated on the small river Olona, in a beautiful plain between the Ticino and the Adda, 75 miles E. N. E. Turin, 145 N. W. Florence, and 280 N. W. by N. Rome. Lon. 9° 11′ E. lat. 45° 20′ N.

History of Milan.

The duchy of Milan was the Insubria of the Romans, and Milan, the capital, the Mediolanum of the ancients, and the Milano of the Italians, was occasionally the residence of the Roman emperors on the decline of the empire; after which it suffered much from the barbarous invaders who desolated Italy. It was taken by Belisarius from the Ostrogoths, at the request of Dacius, its archbishop; and in 539 it was retaken by Vitiges, king of the same Ostrogoths, when 300,000 persons perished by the sword or by famine, but at length it became subject to the Lombards, and remained in their hands until the time of Charlemagne, when it was made a part of the empire, and increased exceedingly in wealth and power, so that the emperor Frederic I, found it necessary to make war upon the Milanese, and after having defeated them and taken the city in 1162, he punished their insolent treatment of his empress Beatrice, by nearly rasing the city to the ground, and imposing the greatest hardships on its inhabitants. This town was, however, rebuilt in 1171, when it had princes of its own by the title of duke, chiefly from the families of the Visconti and the Sforza. The first of any note of the family of Visconti, was Otho, who, as archbishop of Milan, conducted both the temporal and spiritual concerns of the city. His successors were Matthew, surnamed the Great, Galeazzo, Azzo, or Accius, Luchino, John, archbishop, as well as lord of Milan, Matthew II, Galeazzo II, Barnabo, John Galeazzo, John the first duke of Milan, Maria, Philip Maria, Francis, at whose death in 1448 the legitimate male line of the Visconti family became extinct; when Francis Sforza, who had married the natural daughter of Philip, succeeded as duke of Milan, and had for his successors, Galeazzo Maria Sforza, John Galeazzo II, Lewis Sforza, Louis XII of France, Maximilian, son of Lewis Sforza, king Francis I, and Francis Sforza, second son of Lewis, who, dying without issue, Charles V declared Milan an imperial fief. Several councils were held in Milan, namely, in 344 or 346, in 347, 355, 390 by St. Ambrose, the archbishop, 451, 1062, 1287, 1311, 1565, 1569, 1573, 1576, 1579, 1582, and 1584. Paul. Diacon. de Reb. Gest. Longob.; Paul. Jov. Elog.; Sigon. de Regn. Ital.; Volaterran; Merul. Hist. Med. &c.

MILLER, Philip (Biog.) a gardener and botanist, was born in 1691, and died in 1771, leaving his 'Gardeners' Dictionary,' which first appeared in folio in 1731, and went through eight editions in the life-time of the author, the last bearing date 1768. A much more ample edition has since been published by Professor Martyn, in 4 large volumes folio.

MILLER, James, a political and dramatic writer, was born in 1703, educated at Oxford, and died in 1744, leaving several plays and poems; among the latter, 'Harlequin Horace,' a satire.

MILLER, Edward, a doctor of music, and brother of a bookseller, well known to the literary world, was born at Norwich, and died in 1807, leaving 'The Elements of Thorough Bass and Composition,' 'The Psalms of David,' set to music and arranged for every Sunday through the year, which have been very generally adopted in the churches and chapels throughout England.

MILLES, Thomas (Ecc.) bishop of Waterford and Lismore, was educated at Oxford, and after attending the earl of Pembroke, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in 1707, into that kingdom, he was by him promoted to the see of Waterford, and died in 1740, leaving an edition of the works of St. Cyril, published at Oxford, in folio in 1703.

MILLES, Jeremiah (Biog.) nephew of the preceding, an English divine and antiquary, was born in 1714, educated at Oxford, and died in 1784, leaving several papers which he contributed to the Archæologia, &c.

MILLOT, Claude Francis Xavier (Biog.) a French historian, was born at Besançon in 1726, and died in 1785, leaving 'Elemens de l'Histoire de France,' &c. 3 vols. 12mo.; 'Elemens de l'Histoire d'Angleterre,' and other works which have been printed separately, as well as collectively, in 15 vols. 8vo. 1800. Some of them have also been translated into English.

MILMAN (Her.) the name of a family of Levaton, in Woodland, co. Devon, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1800 on sir Francis Milman, physician to the king; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Three sinister gauntlets argent.

Crest. A sinister gauntlet or.

MILNER (Her.) the name of a family of Appleton-Hall, co. York, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1716 on sir William Milner; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Party per pale or and sable, a chevron between three horses' bits counterchanged.

Crest. A horse's head couped argent, bridled and maned or, and charged on the neck with a bezant.

MILNER, Joseph (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Leeds in 1744, and died in 1797, leaving a 'History of the Church of Christ,' of which he lived to publish three volumes, and a fourth was prepared from his MSS. by Dr. Isaac Milner, his brother. He likewise wrote 'Some Passages in the Life of William Howard;' 'An Answer to Gibbon's Attack on Christianity;' 'Essays on the Influence of the Holy Spirit.'

MILNES (Her.) the name of a family of Gauley, in Leicestershire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1801 on sir Robert Shore Milnes; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Azure, a chevron between three windmill sails in cross or, a mullet for difference.

Crest. A garb or, bounded by a fess dancette azure, charged with three mullets pierced or.

MILO (Hist.) a general in the army of Pyrrhus, who was left governor of Tarentum after the defeat of his master by Manlius Curius Dentatus, but was compelled to surrender the place to the Romans U. C. 482, A. C. 271. Liv. l. 14; Polyæn. Stratag. &c.

MILO, T. Annius, a Roman, who had been adopted into the family of the Annii, was a native of Lanuvium, who in attempting to obtain the consulship, was opposed by Clodius with such violence that on their meeting in the Appian road a quarrel ensued, which ended in the death of the latter. Milo was in consequence brought to trial for the murder of Clodius, and, notwithstanding the eloquence of Cicero in his defence, was condemned and banished to Massilia. Cic. pro Mil.; Paterc. l. 2, c. 47; Dio. l. 40.

MILO (Ecc.) bishop of Palestrina, and a cardinal, died in 1106, after having been sent as legate into France by Urban II, and his successor Pascal II.

MILO (Biog.) an athlete of extraordinary strength, who is said to have borne a bullock four years old on his shoulders, and to have been seven times crowned at the Pythian, and six times at the Olympic games, but having attempted to rive a tree in two, when his strength was diminished by age, his hands were caught in the cleft which he had made, and he was devoured by wild beasts. Cic. de Senec.; Val. Max. l. 9; Strab. l. 16; Aul. Gell. l. 15; Plin. l. 37; Paus. l. 6; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 2.

MILSINGTON, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Portmore.

MILTIADES (Hist.) Μιλτιάδης, an Athenian, son of Cypselus, was appointed, according to an oracle of Apollo, to lead a colony of his countrymen to the Chersonesus, where he was invested with the sovereign power; but having engaged in an expedition against Lampsacus, he fell in an ambuscade, and was taken prisoner, but was released through the interference of Crœsus, king of Lydia, and died soon after his return.

MILTIADES, the son of Cimon, whom Cornelius Nepos makes the same as the preceding, succeeded in the government of Chersonesus; and afterwards acted a distinguished part in opposing the Persian invaders, over whom he obtained a signal victory at Marathon; but being some time after enengaged in an unsuccessful expedition against Paros, his enemies at home availed themselves of this circumstance to accuse him of holding a treasonable correspondence with the enemy; on which charge he was condemned to death; but the sentence was commuted for a heavy fine, which, as he was unable to pay, he was put into prison, where he died of his wounds 489 years before the Christian æra. His body was ransomed by his son Cimon, who was obliged to borrow 50 talents in order to procure his father a decent burial. Herod. l. 4; C. Nep. in Vit.

MILTON, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Fitzwilliam.

MILTON, John (Biog.) an English poet, who will never be forgotten for his poetry, and ought never to be remembered for his politics, was born in Bread-street, Cheapside, in 1608, educated at Cambridge, wrote his 'Comus,' in 1634; 'Lycidas,' in 1637; 'L'Allegro,' and 'Il Penseroso,' about the same time, but not published until 1645; 'Reformation,' in 1641, a treatise suited to the factious spirit of the times; also 'Prelatical Prelacy,' and 'The Reason of Church Government urged against Prelacy;' 'The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce,' to justify his separation from his wife; also 'The Judgement of Martin Bucer on the Subject of Divorce,' &c.; 'Tractate on Education,' 1644; 'Areopagitica; or, a Speech for the Liberty of unlicensed Printing;' 'The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates,' &c. a treatise in justification of king Charles's murder; 'Observations upon the Articles of Peace, which the Earl of Ormond had concluded at Kilkenny, on Jan. 17, 1648-9, in the King's Name and by his Authority, with the Popish Irish Rebels,' &c.; 'A History of England;' 'Iconoclastes, or the Image-Breaker,' an answer to the 'Icon Basilike,' written with republican malignity to blacken the memory of his sovereign; 'Defensio pro Populo Anglicano,' in answer to Salmasius' work entitled 'Defensio Regia;' 'Defensio secunda pro Populo Anglicano,' in answer to a work published at the Hague, entitled 'Regii Sanguinis Clamor ad Cœlum adversus Parricidas Anglicanos,' written by Peter de Moulin; 'Of the Civil Power in Ecclesiastical Causes,' in which he attempts to uphold his opinions at the time that they were becoming unpopular; this was followed by 'Considerations touching the likeliest Means to remove Hirelings out of the Church;' 'The ready and easy Way to establish a free Commonwealth;' and lastly, 'Brief Notes' on a loyal sermon preached by Dr. Matthew Griffith, one of the late king's chaplains, which terminated his political controversies. He was now employed on his 'Paradise Lost,' to which alone he owes his fame; this was first published in 1667, and was followed in 1671 by 'Paradise Regained;' by 'Samson Agonistes,' about the same time; by 'Artis Logicæ plenior Institutio ad Petri Rami Methodum Concinnata,' in 1672; 'A Treatise of True Religion,' &c.; and 'The best Means to prevent the Growth of Popery,' 1673; also a second edition of his 'Tractate on Education;' 'Epistolarum Familiarum Liber unus;' and 'Prolusiones Oratoriæ in Collegio Christi habitæ,' 1674. To him is ascribed, upon doubtful authority, a translation of the Declaration of the Poles; but he is with more probability considered the author of 'A brief History of Muscovy,' published about eight years after his death, which happened in 1674. [Vide Plate XXVIII]

MILTOWN, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Leeson [Vide Leeson]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Leeson, earl of Miltown, viscount and baron of Russborough.

Arms. Gules, a chief argent, on the lower part a cloud, and rays of the sun issuing from thence proper.

Crest. On a wreath, a demi-lion rampant, with the sun in his paws.

Supporters. The dexter a hunter; sinister a hound, both proper.

Motto. "Clarior e tenebris."

MIMNERMUS (Biog.) a Greek poet and musician of Colophon, in the age of Solon, who is supposed by some to have been the inventor of the pentameter verse. Fragments of Mimnermus are printed by Brunck in his 'Analecta,' and in the 'Gnomici Poetæ.'

MINCIO (Geog.) the ancient Mincius, a river of Italy, flowing southward from the lake of Garda, and falling into the Po, eight miles below Mantua.

MINCIUS (Geog.) now Mincio, a river of the Veneti, flowing from the lake Benacus, and falling into the Po.

Virg. Eclog. 7, v. 13.

Hic viridis tenerâ prætexit arundine ripas

MINDERER, Raymond (Biog.) a physician of Augsburg in the 17th century, wrote 'De Pestilentia Liber unus,' Vindob. 1608; 'Alvedarium Marocostinum,' ibid. 1616; 'De Calcantho, seu Vitriolo,' &c. 1617; 'Threnodia Medica,' 1619; 'Medicina Militaris, seu Liber Castrensis,' &c. 8vo. 1620.

MINEIDES (Myth.) the daughters of Minyas, or Mineus, king of Orchomenos, in Bœotia, who, having derided the Orgies of Bacchus, were inspired with an unconquerable desire to eat human flesh; and after having devoured the son of Leucippe, one of the three sisters, they were changed into bats. Ovid. Met. l. 4, fab. 12; Plut. Quæst. Gr. 38

MINELLIUS, John (Biog.) a Dutch grammarian, was born about 1625, at Rotterdam, and died about 1683, leaving editions of Terence, Sallust, Virgil, Horace, Florus, Valerius Maximus, and most of the classics.

MINERVA (Myth.) the goddess of wisdom, who issued in full armour from the head of Jupiter, when it was opened. [Vide Metis] She was called by the Greeks Ἀθήνη and Παλλὰς, and was likewise styled Parthenos, from her remaining in perpetual celibacy; Tritonia, because worshipped near the lake Tritonis; Glaucopis, from the blueness of her eyes; Agorea, from her presiding over markets; Hip- pia, because she first taught mankind how to manage the horse; Stratea and Area, from her martial character; Coryphagenes, because born from Jupiter's brain; Aedon, Luscinia, Musica, and Salpiga, from her supposed invention of the flute. Her worship was universally established in Egypt, Phœnicia, and all parts of Greece, Italy, Gaul, &c. where she had magnificent temples, and was particularly honoured on medals. [Vide Minerva under Numismatics] Among the festivals celebrated in honour of Minerva, the Panathenæa at Athens were the most celebrated of the kind. Hom. Il. et Odyss.; Hesiod. Theog.; Orpheus. Hymn.; Pind. Olymp. 7; Sophoc. in Œdip.; Apollon. in Argon. l. 1; Callim. in Cer.; Herodot. l. 5; Æschyl. in Evang.; Thucyd. l. 1; Aristot. Polit. l. 1; Apollod. l. 1; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 2; Horat. l. 1, od. 16; Diod. l. 5; Hygin. Fab. 168; Ovid. Met. &c.; Paus. l. 1; Lucian. Dial.; Arnob. cont. Gent. l. 3; Tzetzes, Suidas, &c.

MINERVA (Numis.) this deity is commonly represented with all the accompaniments of war, as the helmet, spear, shield, and even with the thunderbolt of Jupiter, which she was supposed to have the privilege of wielding, as in the annexed figure. On some medals, bearing the inscription, MINERVA PACIFERA, or PACIFICA, the olive branch was added as a particular tribute. Med. Impp. Roman.; Aisel. Num. Select.; Spence. Polym.

MINHO (Geog.) the ancient Minius, a large river of Spain and Portugal, rising near Mondonedo, among the mountains of Galicia, and running along the borders of the two countries, of which it forms the boundaries; it falls into the Atlantic 15 miles south-west of Tuy.

MINIUS (Geog.) a river of Hispania Taraconensis, now Minho.

MINORCA (Geog.) the second of the Balearic islands in the Mediterranean, 37 miles E. Majorca, and 120 from the coast of Spain, situated in the fortieth degree of north latitude. The chief towns are Ciudella, the capital, Port Mahon, Mayer, and Mercadel.

History of Minorca.

Minorca, called by the Romans Insula Minor, or simply Minor, in distinction from Major, or Majorca, the larger, was taken from the Spaniards by the English in 1708, and by the French in 1756, but restored in 1763. It fell again into the hands of the Spaniards in 1782; but was retaken by the English in 1798, and finally restored to the former power in 1802.

MINOS (Myth.) a son of Jupiter and Europa, and king of Crete, who gave laws to his subjects, A. C. 1406.

Ovid. Amor. l. 2, el. 10.

> Optavit Minos similes sibi legifer annos.

Hom. Odyss. l. 19, v. 178.

> Τοῖσι δ' ἐνὶ κνωσσὸς μεγάλη πόλις ἔνθατε Μίνως
> Εννέωρος βασίλευε Διὸς μεγάλε ὀαριστής.

He was, according to the poets, made one of the judges of hell for his equity.

Virg. Æn. l. 6, v. 431.

> Quæsitor Minos urnam movet, ille silentûm
> Conciliumque vocat, vitasque et crimina discit.

Horat. l. 1, od. 28.

> Et Jovis arcanis Minos admissos.

MINOS, a son of the preceding, if it be not the same, who, after waging war with the Athenians for the death of his son Androgeos, imposed the cruel tribute upon them that they should send him seven chosen boys, and as many virgins, to be devoured by the Minotaur, which was put an end to when Theseus destroyed the monster. In his reign Dædalus fabricated his wings, with which he escaped from Crete to Sicily.

Virg. Æn. l. 6, v. 21.

> Cecropidæ jussi (miserum) septena, quotannis
> Corpora natorum, stat ductis sortibus urna.

Catull. Carm. 63.

> Nam perhibent olim crudeli peste coactam
> Androgeoneæ pœnas exsolvere cædis,
> Electos juvenes simul, et decus innuptarum
> Cecropiam solitam esse dapem dare Minotauro.

Diod. l. 4; Ovid. Met. l. 8; Plut. in Thes.; Paus. l. 4, &c.

MINOT, Laurence (Biog.) an ancient English poet, who flourished in the 14th century, whose poems, lately discovered by Mr. Tyrrwhitt, were edited by Mr. Ritson, in 8vo. 1794.

MINOTAURUS (Myth.) a celebrated monster, half a man and half a bull,

Ovid. Ars Am. l. 2, v. 24.

> Semibovemque virum, semivirumque bovem.

the fruit of Pasiphae's amour with a bull.

Virg. Æn. l. 6, v. 26.

> Hic crudelis amor tauri, suppostaque furto
> Pasiphaë mixtumque genus, prolesque biformis
> Minotaurus inest.——

Hygin. Fab. 40; Plut. in Thes.

MINTHE (Myth.) a daughter of Cocytus, of whom Pluto being enamoured, Proserpine changed her into a herb. Ovid. Met. l. 10.

MINTO, Lord (Her.) a title enjoyed by the family of Elliot [vide Elliot]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. First and fourth, quarterly, 1st and 4th argent, a bugle-horn sable, stringed and horned gules; on a chief azure, three stars of the first, for Murray; 2d and 3d azure, a chevron argent, between three fleurs-de-lis or, for Kynynmound; second and third gules, on a bend engrailed or, a batton azure, with a bordure vaire, for Elliot; on a chief argent, a Moor's head couped in profile proper, the arms of Corsica.

Crest. A dexter hand issuing from the clouds throwing a dart, all proper.

Supporters. On the dexter an Indian sheep; on the sinister a fawn, both proper.

Motto. "Suaviter et fortiter."

MINTURNÆ (Geog.) a town of Campania between Sinuessa and Formiæ, now Garigliano, in the marshes of which Marius concealed himself to avoid the partisans of Sylla. Liv. l. 8; Strab. l. 2; Mela, l. 2; Paterc. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Lucan. l. 2.

MINTURNA (Numis.) a medal of this place bears the inscription MINTVRN, and another in Greek MINTYPN. Golz. Magn. Græc.

MINUTIA (Hist.) a vestal virgin who was buried alive on a charge of incontinence. Liv. l. 8, c. 15.

MINUTIA, or Minucia, gens, a patrician family, which produced many magistrates. [Vide Minutius]

MINUTIA Via (Topog.) a public road from Rome to Brundusium.

MINUTIA, gens (Numis.) medals of this family are extant, bearing the surnames of Augurinus, Rufus, and Thermus; as TI. MINUCI. C. F. AUGURINI, i. e. Tiberius Minucii Caii Filius Augurinus.—M. MINUCI. Q. F. RVFVS PROCOS., i. e. Marcus Minucius, Quinti Filius, Rufus Proconsul.—Q. TERMVS Q. F. i. e. Quintus Thermus Quintus Filius.

MINUTIUS AUGURINUS, M. (Hist.) was twice consul; namely, U. C. 257, A. C. 497, when the Romans instituted the Saturnalia; and again U. C. 263, A. C. 491, when Coriolanus was driven from Rome. Dionys. Hal. l. 6; Liv. l. 2; Cassiodorus, &c.

MINUTIUS AUGURINUS, L. a consul with C. Nautius Rutilus,

U. C. 296, A. C. 458, was defeated by the Æqui, and liberated by the dictator Cincinnatus. Liv. l. 3.

MINUTIUS, L. a tribune of the people, who accused Mælius of aspiring to the sovereignty of Rome, for which he was honoured with a brazen statue.

MINUTIUS RUFUS, M. a master of the horse to Fabius, who, impatient at the slow proceedings of the dictator, presumed to act for himself; but being defeated by Annibal, he acknowledged his fault, and submitted to the authority and directions of Fabius, by whom he was extricated from his difficulty.

MINUTIUS, L. a tribune who warmly opposed the views of C. Gracchus.

MINUTIUS RUFUS, Q. a consul, who, when refused the honours of a triumph for his conquests in Gaul, exhibited a triumphal procession on Mount Albanus. Liv. l. 33.

MINUTIUS THERMUS, Q. a prætor in Spain, who was afterwards engaged against the Ligurians, but being sent on a mission into Asia, was slain in a battle with the Thracians.

MINUTIUS, an officer under Cæsar in Gaul, who afterwards became one of the conspirators against his life. Cæs. de Bell. Gall.; Cic de Offic. l. 3.

MINUTIUS FELIX, M. (Ecc.) a father of the primitive church in the third century, is said to have been an African by birth; and becoming a proselyte to Christianity, he wrote an excellent dialogue, entitled 'Octavianus.' This was for some time attributed to Arnobius, until Francis Baldwin, a lawyer of Heidelberg, published it in 1560, with a Dissertation, in which he made it clear that Minutius was the author. It has since gone through many editions, the best of which is that printed at Cambridge in 1712, with the dissertation of Baldwin prefixed, and 'Commodiani Instructiones adversus Gentium Deos' added by way of appendix. A translation of this dialogue was published by lord Hailes in 1781, with notes and illustrations.

MIRABEAU, Honoré Gabriel, Comte de (Hist.) a French nobleman, who was born in 1749, and died in 1791, is still remembered as one of the chief promoters of, and actors in, the revolution which so long desolated France. He was the author of several political works of interest in that day.

MIRABEAU, Boniface Riquetti, Viscount de, brother to the preceding, after serving with distinction in America, declared himself in favour of the monarchy at the breaking out of the French revolution, and emigrating raised a regiment, with which he served under Condé, and died in 1792.

MIRABEAU, Victor Riquetti, Marquis de (Biog.) father of the preceding, and a political writer, of the sect of the economists, who died in 1790, was the author of several works, which were published collectively in 8 vols. 12mo.; among these was his 'Theorie de l'Impôt,' which was so offensive as to cause him to be imprisoned in the Bastile for a short time.

MIRABELLO (Geog.) a town of Candia, which is the ancient Heraclea, or, according to some, Panormus.

MIRÆUS, Aubertus (Biog.) a German writer, was born at Brussels in 1573, and died in 1640, leaving, 1. 'Elogia Illustrium Belgii Scriptorum,' 4to. 1609. 2. 'Opera Historica et Diplomatica,' the best edition of which is that of 4 vols. fol. 1724. 3. 'Rerum Belgicarum Chronicon.' 4. 'De Rebus Bohemicis,' 12mo. 5. 'Bibliotheca Ecclesiastica.' 6. 'Vita Justi Lipsii,' &c.

MIRANDULA, John Francis Picus, Prince of (Hist.) succeeded his father in 1499 in his principality; but meeting with opposition from the emperor Maximilian I, he was for a long time a fugitive from his home. He was, however, at length restored in 1515, and continued in peaceable possession of his government until 1533, when he was assassinated by his nephew Galeoti, who was at the head of 40 other conspirators. His works have been generally edited with those of his uncle, the subject of the following article.

MIRANDULA, John Picus (Biog.) an Italian nobleman, and uncle of the preceding, was born in 1463, and died in 1494, leaving several works, which were printed together in folio at Bologna in 1496, and again at Basil in 1601.

MITHREDATH (Bibl.) מתרדת, or Mithridates, a Chaldee or Persian name; the son of Gazabar, and treasurer to Cyrus, king of Persia, returned, by order of this prince, the vessels of the temple to Sheshbazzar, prince of Judah, which Nebuchadnezzar had removed. Ezr. i. 8; Joseph. Antiq. l. 11, c. 1.

MITHREDATH, or Mithridates, one who signed the letter written to Artaxerxes, king of Persia, against the Jews, to hinder them from rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem. Ezr. iv.

MITHRIDATES (Hist.) Μιθριδάτης, the name of several kings of Pontus.

MITHRIDATES I, the third king of Pontus, whom Xenophon calls a governor of Cappadocia, being a tributary to the king of Persia. Diodor. l. 11; Xen. Anabas.

MITHRIDATES II, grandson of the preceding, reigned about 26 years, and died at the advanced age of 84 years, A. C. 302. Appian. in Mith.

MITHRIDATES III, son of the preceding, enlarged his father's dominions, and died after a reign of 36 years. Strabo designates him by the title of Κτίστης, the founder.

MITHRIDATES IV, succeeded his father Ariobarzanes, who was the son of Mithridates III. He strengthened his interest by marrying his daughter Laodice to Antiochus the Great.

MITHRIDATES V, surnamed Evergetes, reigned over Pontus after Pharnaces I, from the year A. C. 154 to 124, when he was succeeded by MITHRIDATES VI, surnamed in history the Great, and on medals Eupator. This prince, who distinguished himself both in arms and letters, was, after a long career of victory, completely conquered by Pompey, and finding no place of refuge, he killed himself in the 72d year of his age, A. C. 63. The war which he long and successfully waged with the Romans, was distinguished by the name of the Bellum Mithridaticum. Cic. pro Man.; Diodor. l. 14; Val. Max. l. 4; Paterc. l. 2; Joseph Ant. l. 14; Plin. l. 2; Appian. Bell. Mithrid.; Plut. in Syll.; Dio. l. 30, &c.

MITHRIDATES (Numis.) many medals are extant, bearing the effigies of different princes of this name; but none can be ascribed with any degree of probability, except to the two last. Mithridates V, whose effigy is given as in the annexed figure, is known by the inscription ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΜΙΘΡΑΔΑΤΟΥ ΕΥΕΡΓΕΤΟΥ; and Mithridates VI, whose effigy is given in Plate III, is distinguished by the inscription ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΜΙΘΡΑΔΑΤΟΥ ΕΥΠΑΤΟΡΟΣ.

MITTARELLI, John Benedict (Biog.) an historian, of the order of the Camaldoli, was born at Venice in 1708, and died in 1777, leaving 'Annales Camaldulenses,' &c. 9 vols. fol. Venet. 1773; besides which he wrote 'Memoire del Monisterio della Santissima Trinità in Faenza,' Faenza, 1749; 'Ad Scriptores Rerum Italicarum Cl. Muratorii Accessiones Historicæ Faventinæ,' &c. Venet. 1771; 'De Litteratura Faventinorum,' &c. Venet. 1775; 'Bibliotheca Codicum Manuscriptorum Monasterii S. Michaelis Venetiarum,' &c. fol. ibid. 1779.

MITYLENE (Bibl.) Μιτυλήνη, the town of Lesbos described under Geography, through which St. Paul passed in his travels from Corinth to Rome, A. D. 58. Acts xx. 14.

MITYLENE (Geog.) or Mytilene, Μυτιλήνη, the capital city of the island of Lesbos, which received its name from Mitylene, the daughter of Macareus, a king of the country. It was the birth-place of Pittacus, Alcæus, Sappho, Terpander, Theophanes, Hellenicus, &c. and very long the seat of learning. It suffered much during the Peloponnesian war for its defection from the Athenians; and in the Mithridatic war the inhabitants took part, with Mithridates, against the Romans. Horat. l. 1, ep. 12.

MNESTHEUS (Myth.) a Trojan descended from Assaracus, who obtained the prize as the best sailor at the funeral games given by Æneas in honour of his father Anchises.

MNESTHEUS (Hist.) was sent into Egypt by the Jews to congratulate Ptolemy Philometor.

MOAB (Bibl.) מואב, son of Lot by his eldest daughter, whose descendants, the Moabites, dwelt beyond Jordan, east of the Dead Sea, and were frequently hostile to the Israelites. Gen. xix.; Deut. ii.; Judg. i. iii. &c.

MOADHAM, Al-Malek (Hist.) last king or sultan of Egypt, of the race of the Agabites, or the descendants of Saladin. Having taken St. Louis prisoner, and granted him his liberty without consulting the Mamaluks, they besieged him in one of his fortresses on the banks of the Nile, and when he attempted to make his escape by swimming, they pierced him with a thousand arrows, in the year of the Hegira 648, A. D. 1258.

MOAWIYAH (Hist.) the name of two caliphs.

MOAWIYAH I, a governor of Egypt, and general of the army of the caliph Othman, succeeded his master in the year of the Hegira 41, A. D. 651, after having killed his rival Ali, and died after a reign of 20 years.

MOAWIYAH II, son of Yesid, and grandson of the preceding, succeeded his father when he was only 21 years of age, and abdicating the government a few months after, died in the year of the Hegira 64, A. D. 674.

MOAWIYAH, the son of Hesham, and grandson of Abdulmalec, of the family of the Ommiades, escaped the fury of the Abbassides, by whom the rest of his family were slain, and going over into Spain, had a son named Abdalrahman, who founded the dynasty of Arabian kings in Spain.

MOCENIGO (Hist.) a noble family of Venice, which held the office of Doge, and otherwise distinguished itself on several occasions.

MOCENIGO, Thomas, was elected doge in 1413, and died in 1423, during whose government the Venetians made themselves masters of Friuli.

MOCENIGO, Peter, was elected doge in 1474, and governed with distinguished prudence for two years and a half.

MOCENIGO, John, succeeded in the office of doge in 1477, and died in 1485.

MOCENIGO, Andrew, who flourished in the sixteenth century, and was employed in many important concerns of state, wrote 'De Bello Turcarum,' &c. and 'La Guerra di Cambrai.'

MOCENIGO, Louis, was elected doge in 1570, and having entered into a league with the pope and the Spaniards, the Christian army obtained the victory at Lepanto in 1571, in which year he died.

MOCENIGO, Louis, another doge of the same family, was born in 1627, elected in 1700, and died in 1709.

MOCENIGO, Louis Sebastian, a commander of the Venetian fleet, was elected doge in 1722.

MOCHA (Geog.) an extensive city of Yemen, in Arabia, the principal port on the Red Sea, lon. 43° 20′ E. lat. 13° 20′ N. through which almost all the trade of Europe with this part of the world is carried on. This town is of recent date, not having been in existence 400 years ago. It was visited in 1513 by Alphonso Albuquerque, but the first attempt to open a trade with it was made in 1610, by the British expeditions under Sharpey and sir Henry Middleton, when the latter was treacherously surprised and made prisoner, with a number of his men, but having afterwards obtained his release, he compelled the government to give satisfaction for the injury. The Dutch were the first who established a factory there. They were followed by the French in 1708, and by the English soon after, which latter nation had nearly monopolized the trade, when the Americans stepped in and obtained their share.

MOCLAH, Ebn Moclah (Hist.) the surname of Abu-Ali Mohammed Ben Ali-Ben Hassan, vizier to the caliph Moctader, was displaced in the year of the Hegira 317, A.D. 927, restored to his post by Al Kaher Billah, the successor of Moktader, but soon after displaced again, and his right hand cut off by the caliph's order. On the deposition of Al Kaher, Moclah was reinstated in the post of vizier by Al Radhi, but falling under the displeasure of this caliph, he was deprived of his post, and sentenced to lose his other hand, and also his tongue, after which he died. This vizir is distinguished no less by his ingenuity than his misfortunes, for he it is who invented the modern Arabic characters, which are in present use, having, as is said, even framed these letters after his right hand was cut off.

MODENA (Geog.) a duchy in the north of Italy, situated between the Po on the north, and the Apennines on the south, comprehending the districts of Modena, Reggio, Mirandola, Correggio, Carpi, and Navellara. It was erected into a duchy by the emperor Frederic III, in 1452, in favour of Borgo d'Este, a lateral branch of the house of Austria, descended originally from a Saxon family, but taking its name from a small town in the Paduan, which they formerly possessed. The family is one of the most ancient in Europe. In 1796 the duke of Modena was expelled from his dominions by the French, but in 1814 the congress of Vienna restored to his son, the archduke Francis of Este, the territory of Modena, with the limits which it had before the peace of Campo Formio. Modena is the capital of this duchy, where Sigonius, Fallopius, and other distinguished persons were born.

MODENA, a large town in the north of Italy, capital of the duchy above-mentioned, situated in a delightful plain between the rivers Panaro and Secchia, 22 m. W.N.W. Bologna, and 30 E.S.E. Parma. Lon. 11° 12′ E. lat. 44° 30′ N. This town, which was known to the Romans by the name of Mutina, was ruined often during the reign of the Goths and Lombards, and rebuilt by the successors of Charlemagne, since which it has experienced but few vicissitudes, until the invasion of Italy by the French, when it suffered very considerably. Two councils were held here, namely, in 973 and 1565.

MOGUL (Geog.) or the Empire of the Grand Mogul, a name formerly given to Hindoostan, because this empire comprehended the greater part of India. The Moguls, or rather Munguls, a tribe of Tartars, are said to derive their name from one of their ancient emperors Mungul Khan, and owe their celebrity to the great conqueror Ghenghiz Khan, who after a few years, extended his dominions from a very confined territory, to more than 1800 leagues, from east to west. At his death in 1227, his successors, who reigned over China, Tartary, and the West, were Oktay Khan, Kayuk Khan, Mangu-Khan, Hupilay, or Kublay Khan, Timur, called by the Chinese Chintsong, Haysham or Vutsong, Ayyuli-palipata or Jintsong, Shotepala or Ingtsong, Hoshila or Mingtsong, Tûtemûr or Ventsong, and Towhantemur, styled by the Chinese Shunti, who, being expelled from China in 1368, the Mogul empire became divided and much weakened until the time of Timur Bek, or Tamerlane, who, by his conquests in India, laid the foundation of the empire, properly called the Mogul empire; his successors assuming the title of Grand Mogul. MOLAY, James de (Hist.) the last grand-master of the order of the Templars, whose riches and pride exciting the jealousy of Philip the Fair, he, with the consent of the pope, summoned the master to appear at Paris, and answer for his conduct. He obeyed the summons, attended by 60 of his knights, who were all immediately arrested, tried, and condemned to be burnt, which sentence was executed upon them in 1313, when Molay suffered with great resolution, protesting his innocence to the last.

MOLDAVIA (Geog.) a province in the north-east extremity of European Turkey, bounded on the E. by Russia, S. by Turkey, W. by Transylvania, and N. by Austrian Poland. This country was peopled in the 12th century, and governed by princes of its own, among whom Bogdan is distinguished in history, for the wisdom which he displayed in establishing the civil and ecclesiastical government of his country. For the better security of Moldavia from the attacks of its more powerful neighbours, this prince, with the consent of the people, offered the sultan Solyman I in 1529, both the Moldavias as a fief to the Ottoman empire, on honourable conditions, particularly that their religion should be preserved. Nevertheless, his successors, who took the title of Vaivod, were not left in peaceable possession of their territory, the greater part of them being killed, or violently deprived of their government, until 1620, when the sultans took upon themselves to dispose of Moldavia, and appointed vaivods, or deposed them as they thought fit. Since that period the peace of this country has been frequently disturbed by the wars between Russia and Turkey.

MOLESWORTH, Sir Walter de (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, attended king Edward I in his expedition to the Holy Land against the infidels, and afterwards filled the office of sheriff more than once, being in great favour with his sovereign.

MOLESWORTH, Robert Viscount, was born in 1656, took an active part in the revolution of 1688, was sent as Envoy Extraordinary in 1692 to Denmark, dismissed from that court after a three years' residence there, and died in 1725, leaving among his works as an author, 'An Account of Denmark,' occasioned by the circumstances of his dismissal; this went through several editions, and was reprinted as lately as 1758, and translated into several languages; 'Franco-Gallia,' the second edition, with additions, came out in 8vo. in 1721.

MOLESWORTH, Richard, third Viscount, was designed by his father for the profession of the law, but his inclination leading him to a more active life, he engaged as a volunteer under the earl of Orkney, and distinguished himself afterwards as aide-du-camp to the duke of Marlborough, at the battle of Ramillies, where he contributed to save that general's life, at the hazard of his own. He continued to serve with distinction during the war in Flanders, and was afterwards among the foremost at the battle of Preston Pans, against the Scots and English, under the earl of Marr.

MOLESWORTH (Her.) the name of a family anciently seated in the counties of Northampton and Bedford, the elder branch of which enjoys the peerage, conferred on Robert Molesworth, Esq. above-mentioned, who was created in 1716, by the titles of baron of Philipstown, and viscount Molesworth, of Swords. A junior branch of this family had previously received in 1688 the dignity of a baronet, conferred on sir Hender Molesworth. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Vair, on a bordure gules, eight croslets or.

Crest. On a wreath, an armed arm embowed at the elbow proper, holding a croslet or.

Supporters. Two Pegasuses; the dexter argent, crined, winged, and unguled or. The sinister gules, alike crined, winged, and unguled, and seme of croslets or.

MOLEVILLE, Bertrand de (Hist.) a French statesman, was born in 1744, and after having acted as Minister of the Marine to Louis XVI, he was obliged to leave his country at the breaking out of the revolution, and found an asylum in England, but returned to Paris at the restoration of Louis XVIII, and died in 1819, leaving Memoirs on the Revolution, and several other works.

MOLIERE, John Baptist Pocquelin de (Biog.) the well-known comic writer of France, whose original name was Pocquelin, was born at Paris about 1620, and died in 1673, as is said, while acting the part of a dead man, in his own play of 'Le Malade Imaginaire.' He was so much a favourite with the king, that the latter prevailed upon the archbishop of Paris not to refuse his being interred in consecrated ground. He was in consequence buried at St. Joseph's, which was a chapel of ease to the parish church of St. Eustace. [Vide Plate XXXI] Of the numerous editions of Moliere the French bibliographers point out as the best that by Bret, 6 vols. 8vo. 1773, with the engravings of the younger Moreau; and a splendid one by Didot, in 6 vols. 4to. 1792.

MOLYNEUX, Sir William (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in the battle of Navarret, in Spain, under Edward the Black Prince, where he was made a banneret in 1367, and continued to serve with distinction under that prince in all his Spanish and French wars.

MOLYNEUX, Sir Richard, signalized himself in the wars under Henry V, particularly at the battle of Agincourt, after which he was knighted.

MOLYNEUX, Sir Richard, was in high favour with his prince, Henry VI, and fought strenuously under James, lord Audley, for the House of Lancaster, in the great and bloody battle on Blore Heath, in Staffordshire, in 1459, when he and many other gentry were slain.

MOLYNEUX, Sir Thomas, was in arms for king Edward IV under Richard, duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III, for recovery of Berwick, and on St. James's eve was made a banneret.

MOLYNEUX, Sir William, his son, being a person of great command and power in Lancashire, brought a large reinforcement to the seasonable succour of the duke of Norfolk, with which he performed signal service at the battle of Flodden Field in 1513, and contributed very materially to the victory that was gained that day over the Scots, when James IV and many of the Scotch nobility were killed. On that occasion the king, Henry VIII, wrote to sir William a congratulatory letter.

MOLYNEUX, Sir Richard, Viscount, espoused the cause of his sovereign at the breaking out of the rebellion, and raising two regiments of horse served with distinction during the troubles until his death, which happened soon after the battle of Worcester. His brother, sir Caryll, the third viscount, who suffered much for his loyalty, was afterwards constituted L. L. and Cûs. Rot. of the county of Lancaster, and Admiral of the Narrow Seas by James II, and died in 1698, at the age of 77.

MOLYNEUX (Her.) the name of a family of great antiquity, which derives its descent from William des Moulins, or de Molines, a nobleman of high Norman extraction, who attended William the Conqueror into England. Several of this family were knighted for their valour as above-mentioned, and sir Richard Molyneux was the second who, on the institution of the order of baronets, was raised to that dignity in 1611. His son sir Richard, the second baronet, was created a peer of Ireland in 1628, by the title of viscount Molyneux of Maryborough; and sir Charles William, the ninth viscount Molyneux, was raised in 1771 to the dignity of earl of Sefton.

MOLYNEUX, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Sefton.

MOLYNEUX, William (Biog.) a mathematician and astronomer, was born at Dublin in 1656, and died in 1698, leaving, 1. 'Sciothericum Telescopium,' 4to. 1686 and 1700. 2. 'Dioptrica Nova,' 4to. 1692. 3. 'The Case of Ireland stated in relation to its being bound by Acts of Parliament made in England,' 1695; and a second edition in 8vo. 1720; besides several papers on philosophical subjects in the 'Philosophical Transactions.'

MOLYNEUX, Samuel, son of the preceding, was born in 1689, and died in the flower of his age, leaving his papers on the subject of optics to Dr. Robert Smith, who embodied them in his 'Compleat Treatise of Optics.'

MOLYNEUX, Thomas, uncle to the preceding Samuel, and brother to William Molyneux, a physician, who died in 1733, published some 'Letters to Mr. Locke,' 8vo. Lond. 1708; besides several pieces in the 'Philosophical Tranactions.'

MOLZA (Biog.) vide Molsa.

MOMBRITIUS (Biog.) or Mombrizio Boninus, a writer of Milan in the 15th century, was the author of some Latin poems, which were much esteemed; and also of 'Sanctuarium, sive Vitæ Sanctorum,' 2 vols. fol. without date or place, but supposed to have been printed at Milan about 1479.

MOMUS (Myth.) Μωμος, the god of pleasantry and son of Nox, who, making too free in his satire on the gods, was expelled from heaven. Hesiod. Theog. v. 215; Vitruv. in Præf. l. 2; Schol. in Pind. Olymp.; Lucian. in Herm.

MONA (Geog.) an island between Britain and Hibernia, mostly supposed to be the Isle of Man, although by some it is said to be the Isle of Anglesey. Tacit. Annal. l. 14.

MONACO (Geog.) a petty principality in the North-West of Italy, which was governed by its own princes under the protection of France until 1792, when the latter power incorporated it into their dominions; but in 1814 it was placed under the sovereignty of Sardinia. Monaco, its capital, the Monœci Herculis Portus of the ancients, is situated on a steep rock, 7 m. W. Nice.

MONÆSES (Hist.) a Parthian general, who favoured M. Antony against Augustus, and afterwards displayed his abilities against the Romans. Appian. de Bell. Parth.; Plut. in Ant.; Dio. l. 40.

'Admonitio ad Jacobum Peletarium de Angulo Contactus,' 4to. ibid. 1581. 3. 'Oratio pro suo in Regiam Cathedram Ritu,' ibid. 8vo. 1585. 4. 'Panegyricus dictus Henrico IV,' &c. 1594; translated into French in 1596. 5. 'Ludus Iatro-Mathematicus,' &c. 8vo. ibid. 1597. 6. 'Commentarius in Librum Aristotelis περὶ τῶν μηχανικῶν,' Gr. and Lat. 4to. ibid. 1599. 7. 'De Puncto Primo Geometriæ Principio Liber,' 4to. 1600. 8. 'Problematis omnium quæ 1200 Annis inventa sunt nobilissimi Demonstratio,' Paris. 1600.

MONARDES, Nicholas (Biog.) a Spanish physician, was born at Seville, and died in 1578, leaving, 1. 'De Secandâ Venâ in Pleuritide inter Græcos et Arabes Concordia,' Hispal. 1539. 2. 'De Rosâ et Partibus ejus,' and 'De Succi Rosarum Temperatura,' &c. 3. 'Dos Libros de las Casas que se tracn de las Indias Occidentales, que sirven al Uso de Medicina,' Seville, 1565, 1569, and 1580, and translated into Latin by Clusius under the title of 'Simplicium Medicamentorum ex novo Orbe delatorum, quorum in Medicina usus est Historia,' Antv. 1574. It was also translated into French, Italian, and English, the latter by Frampton, 4to. 1580. 4. Three other works in Spanish, which were translated by Clusius under the title of 'Nicolai Monardi Libri tres magna Medicinæ Secreta et varia Experimenta continentes,' Lugd. 1601. His name is perpetuated by the botanical genus called after him 'Monarda.'

MONBODDO, James Burnett, Lord (Hist.) a Scotch lawyer descended from the ancient family of the Burnetts, of Leys, in Kincardineshire, was born at the family seat of Monboddo in 1714, admitted to the Scotch bar in 1738, promoted to the bench, by the title of lord Monboddo, in 1767, and died in 1799. [Vide Plate XXXIX] He is principally known to the public as the author of a work entitled 'Origin and Progress of Language,' which was published in 1773.

MONCK (Hist.) vide Monk.

MONCK (Her.) a family originally from Devonshire, from which proceeded general Monk, duke of Albemarle, mentioned under History. [Vide Monk] This family has been ennobled in another branch in the person of Charles Stanley Monck, who was raised in 1797 to the Irish peerage, by the title of baron Monck, of Ballytrammon, co. Wexford, and in 1800 was advanced to the dignity of viscount Monck. His son, Henry Stanley Monck, was created in 1822 earl of Rathdown.

MONCK, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Rathdown.

MONCK, the name of a family which is changed from that of Middleton, and enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1662 on sir William Middleton, of Belsay Castle, co. Northumberland. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. A chevron checky or and sable, between three tigers' heads erased azure, collared and chained or.

Crest. A griffin extended azure, with wings erect or, erased at the loins on a mount proper.

MONCKTON, Sir Philip (Hist.) a loyalist of the family mentioned under Heraldry, who fought in his sovereign's cause at the several battles of Hessey Moor, Marston Moor, Aderton Moor, and Rowton Heath, near Chester, where he was wounded and taken prisoner. On his release he was afterwards engaged in the same cause, for which he suffered seriously from the usurpers both in his person and goods. He in consequence received a letter from Charles II, promising that if it should please God to restore him to his rights his faithful services should not be forgotten.

MONCKTON, Hon. Robert, grandson of the preceding, son of the first viscount Galway, and a major-general in the army, was born about 1728, served with distinction under general Wolfe at the siege of Quebec in 1755, where he was wounded; was afterwards at the taking of Martinique, and died in 1782, leaving the reputation of a brave and judicious officer.

MONCKTON (Her.) the family of this name, which have resided for many centuries in the north of England, and derive their descent from Simon Moncton, of Moncton, near Boroughbridge, in the county of York. They now enjoy the peerage, conferred on John, the eldest son of sir Philip Monckton above-mentioned, who was created in 1727 baron of Killard and viscount Galway. The family name is now changed to Monckton Arundel.

MONCONIS, Balthazar (Biog.) a traveller and native of Lyons, who died in 1665, was the author of 'Journal de ses Voyages en Portugal, Provence, Italie, Egypte,' &c. &c. 3 vols. 4to. Lyons, 1665-6.

MONCRIF, Francis Augustin Paradis de (Biog.) a member of the French Academy, was born at Paris in 1687, and died in 1770, leaving an 'Essay on the Necessity and Means of Pleasing;' besides some pieces of Poetry, &c.

MONDONVILLE, John Joseph Cassanca de (Biog.) a musical composer, and native of Narbonne, who died in 1772, at the age of 57, left a number of Sonatas, Symphonies, Operas, and also Sacred Pieces, which were much esteemed in his day.

MONGAULT, Nicholas Hubert (Biog.) a French writer, was born at Paris in 1674, and died in 1746, leaving an edition of Cicero's 'Epistolæ ad Atticum,' in 6 vols. 12mo. with a French translation; and a translation of Herodian from the Greek, the best edition of which is that of 1745 in 12mo.; besides two papers in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions.

MONK, George (Hist.) afterwards duke of Albemarle, memorable for having been the principal instrument in bringing about the Restoration, was born of the family mentioned under Heraldry at Potheridge, in Devonshire, in 1608, entered in 1625, when not quite 17, as a volunteer under sir Richard Grenville, then setting out under lord Wimbledon on the expedition against Spain, served afterwards in the Low Countries, and, on the breaking out of the rebellion in England, was engaged on the side of the king, and did much service in the suppression of the Irish rebellion. On the decline of the king's affairs he obtained his liberty by taking the covenant, was employed in 1646 as a major-general in Ireland, where he treated with the Irish rebels to the dissatisfaction of his employers; notwithstanding he was left commander-in-chief in Scotland in 1651, engaged with Blake and Dean in 1653, when by his presence of mind he contributed very materially to the victory gained on that occasion. In 1654 he was again sent as commander-in-chief into Scotland, and acted also as governor there until the period when, by dexterous manœuvring, he brought about that happy change which was then so much longed for. Immediately after this event he was loaded with pensions, honours, and employments, and died in the esteem and confidence of his sovereign in 1670. Among his works as an author are 'The Speech of General Monk in the House of Commons concerning the settling the Conduct of the Armies of three Nations for the Safety thereof;' another delivered at Whitehall, Feb. 21, 1659, to the members of parliament, at their meeting before the re-admission of their formerly secluded members; besides 'Observations upon Military and Political Affairs, written by the Honourable George, Duke of Albemarle,' &c. fol. London, 1671; and 'Letters relating to the Restoration,' London, 1714-15. [Vide Plate IX]

MONK, Nicholas (Ecc.) brother of the general above-mentioned, who was educated at Wadham College, was, at the restoration, raised to the see of Hereford, and died in 1661.

MONK (Her.) the name of a family of great antiquity in the county of Devon, has been rendered memorable by the general above-mentioned, who, in 1660, was created baron Monk, of Potheridge, Beauchamp, and Tees, earl of Torrington, and duke of Albemarle, which titles became extinct at the death of his son Christopher. Another branch of this family at present enjoys the peerage, conferred on Henry Monk, who, in 1797, was created baron Monk, and in 1800 viscount Monk.

MONK, Hon. Mary (Biog.) daughter of lord Molesworth, and wife to George Monk, esq. who died in 1715, wrote some poems, which were published under the title of 'Marenda, or Poems and Translations upon several Occasions,' 8vo. London, 1716. Some verses which she addressed to her husband while on her death bed are not included in this volume, but may be found in Vol. II. of the 'Poems of Eminent Ladies,' and in 'Cibber's Lives.'

MONETA (Myth.) the surname of Juno among the Romans, to whom a temple was raised by the senate on the spot where the house of Manlius Capitolinus stood. Cic. de Div. l. 1, c. 15; Liv. l. 7, c. 28; Ovid. Fast. l. 1.

MONMOUTH, James, Duke of (Hist.) natural son of Charles II, was born at Rotterdam in 1649, entered early into a military life, and rose to the rank of a general, when he formed a conspiracy to dethrone his father, which being detected and pardoned he retired into Holland, and, as soon as he heard that James II had ascended the throne, he invaded England and attacked the king's forces at Sedgemore, but was defeated and taken prisoner, when, notwithstanding the most humiliating supplications to the king, he was condemned to die, and was beheaded according to his sentence in 1685.

MONMOUTH and Peterborough, Earl of (Her.) vide Peterborough.

MONMOUTH, Earl of, the title conferred on sir Robert Cary by James on his carrying the news of queen Elizabeth's death, which became extinct at the death of his son, the second earl, in 1661.

MONRO, Alexander (Biog.) a Scotch divine, who was born in 1648, and died in 1713, wrote 'An Inquiry into the New Opinions,' in which he attacked the Presbyterians.

MONRO, Alexander, a physician, was born in Scotland in 1697, and died in 1767, leaving 'Osteology, or a Treatise on the Anatomy of the Bones,' which appeared in 1720, and passed through eight editions during his life. To the later editions of the work he subjoined a concise Neurology, or Description of the Nerves. He likewise set on foot the 'Medical Essays and Observations by a Society at Edinburgh,' to which he himself was a large contributor, and left several MSS. An edition of his whole works was published by Dr. Alexander Monro, his son, in 1780, in one volume, 4to.

Monro, Donald, second son of the preceding, who died in 1802, was the author of 'Observations on the Means of preserving the Health of Soldiers,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1780; and of a 'Materia Medica,' 4 vols. 8vo. 1788.

Monro, John, a physician, and descendant from an ancient family of that name, was born at Greenwich in 1715, educated at Oxford, and died in 1791, leaving 'Remarks on Dr. Battie's Treatise on Madness.'

MONS SACER (Topog.) a mountain near Rome, where the Roman populace retired in a tumult which was terminated by the election of the tribunes.

MONSON, Sir William (Hist.) an English admiral, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born at South Caillon, in Lincolnshire, in 1569, educated at Oxford, applied himself to a sea life, and, passing through the several gradations of rank with credit to himself, he was, in 1589, appointed vice-admiral to the earl of Cumberland in his expedition to the Azores; in 1591 he served a second time under the earl against the Spaniards. In 1604 he was appointed admiral of the Narrow Seas; but, notwithstanding his long and faithful services, he had the misfortune to fall into disgrace and to be imprisoned in the Tower in 1616, but, being soon restored to favour, he was employed in 1635 as vice-admiral in an armament against the French and Dutch, and, after performing his part with great honour to himself and advantage to the nation, he died in 1642, leaving 'Naval Tracts,' as the production of his pen, which were published in Churchill's 'Collection of Voyages.'

Monson, Sir John, the second baronet, and nephew of the preceding, adhered steadfastly to his king in the midst of rebellion, and, after having suffered much for his loyalty, he died in 1683.

Monson, Sir William, younger son of the preceding, was created by Charles I viscount Castlemain, in the kingdom of Ireland, but, unmindful of the favours of his sovereign, and his own allegiance, he was instrumental in his majesty's death, for which he was, in 1661, degraded of his honours, and sentenced, with sir Henry Mildmay and Mr. Robert Wallop, to be drawn in sledges, with ropes about their necks, from the Tower of London to Tyburn and back to the Tower, and there to remain prisoners during their lives.

Monson, Hon. George, a distinguished soldier, was born in 1730, and died in 1766, a Lieutenant-General in India, where he contributed by his valour and conduct to the successes which attended the English arms in that quarter.

Monson (Her.) the name of a family of some antiquity and distinction in history, of which mention is made as early as 1378, when John Monson, Mounson, or Munson, was denominated of East Reson, in Lincolnshire. His son John was in the wars of the victorious Henry V in France, and admiral Monson above-mentioned, was a worthy descendant of his. His brother, sir Thomas, was created a baronet in 1611, and sir John, the fifth baronet, was advanced to the dignity of the peerage in 1728 by the style and title of lord Monson, baron Monson, of Barton, co. Lincoln, and his second son Lewis, who assumed the name and arms of Watson, was created in 1760 a peer of Great Britain, by the style and title of baron Sondes, of Lees Court, co. Kent. The arms, &c. of the family of Monson are as follow:

Arms. Or, two chevronels gules.

Crest. On a wreath a lion rampant or, sustained by a pillar argent.

Supporters. On the dexter side a lion or, gorged with a collar azure, charged with three crescents or, with a cordon affixed thereto, passing betwixt the fore legs and reflexed over his back of the second. On the sinister a griffin with wings erected argent, the beak and fore legs azure, and gorged as the dexter.

Motto. "Prest pour mon paix."

MONSTRELET, Enguerran de (Biog.) a French historian, the descendant of a noble family, who died in 1453, was the author of a 'Chronique,' which was first printed without date, and afterwards in 3 vols. fol. in 1518, 1572, &c.; and an English translation has been presented to the public by Thomas Johnes, esq. printed at the Hafod press in 1810.

MONTAGU, William, Lord (Hist.) vide Salisbury.

Montagu, Sir Edward, of the same family as mentioned under Heraldry, was born at Brigstock, in the county of Northampton, studied law in the Middle Temple, and rising by his abilities in his profession, was chosen Speaker of the House of Commons; advanced to the office of Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench in 29 Henry VIII, which he exchanged in 1545 for that of Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas.' He was afterwards one of the Privy Council, and in such high favour with his sovereign that he was made one of the sixteen executors to his will, and one of the regents of the kingdom, and governors to Edward VI, his son; by whom he was continued in his office of Chief Justice; but at the death of the former he was imprisoned by queen Mary for the part which he was suspected to have taken in the affair of lady Jane Grey, and died in 1556.

Montagu, Henry, Lord, son of Margaret, countess of Salisbury and baroness Montagu, was summoned to Parliament in 30 Henry VIII; but arraigned of treason, and suffered death in the same year.

Montagu, Sir Sidney, the sixth and youngest son of sir Edward Montagu of Boughton, knight, was in the particular esteem of king James I, and also of Charles I, by whom he was made Master of his Court of Requests. He at first joined the party that was most in opposition to the earl of Strafford; but seeing the lengths that they were going to, to the destroying of the kingdom, he refused to sanction the commission given by Parliament to the earl of Essex as captain-general; for which he was imprisoned in the Tower in 1642, but released the same year, and died soon after. His second son Edward was the earl of Sandwich. [Vide Sandwich]

Montagu, Sir Henry, vide Manchester.

Montagu, Charles, Earl of Halifax, vide Halifax.

Montagu, Hon. Sidney Wortley, second son of the first earl of Sandwich, was an active partisan in favour of the revolution, and raising a considerable number of horse, marched at the head of them to the general rendezvous at York, when the prince of Orange was invited over.

Montagu, Edward Wortley, eldest son of the preceding, was appointed one of the Lords of the Treasury in 1714, which post he resigned on his appointment as Ambassador to the Porte in 1716, when he was accompanied by his lady, the celebrated letter writer, lady Mary Wortley Montagu.

Montagu, James (Ecc.) fifth son of Edward Montagu, the eldest son of the chief justice above-mentioned, was educated at Cambridge, and after various preferments was raised to the see of Bath and Wells, where he died in 1618, after having expended vast sums in repairing the cathedral of Bath, and been a considerable benefactor to Sidney College, as also to the University at large.

Montagu (Her.) or Montague, the name of a family which has been ennobled in a variety of its branches, and derives its descent from Drogó de Monte-acuto, who came over with the conqueror; whose great grandson William, [illegible]cute, was created earl of Salisbury. From a junior branch of this family descended Lord Chief Justice Montagu above-mentioned, whose eldest son Edward Montagu had six sons; three of whom were ennobled in their own persons, or those of their posterity. Sir Edward Montagu, the eldest of the six sons, was created lord Montagu of Boughton in 1622; and Ralph, his grandson, the third lord Montagu, was created earl of Montagu in 1689, and duke of Montagu in 1705; which titles became extinct at the death of the second duke in 1749; but was revived in 1766 in the person of George Brudenell, fourth earl of Cardigan, who married lady Mary Montagu, youngest daughter of the late duke; but became again extinct at his death in [illegible]. The title, however, of baron Montagu of Boughton, which had been conferred upon him in 1786, devolved to his grandson, Henry James Montagu Scott, second son of Henry, duke of Buccleugh, whose arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. The same as the duke of Buccleugh, quartering Montagu.

Crest, Supporters, and Motto, the same as the duke of Buccleugh.

Sir Henry Montagu, the third of the six sons above-mentioned, was created in 1620 a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Montagu of Kimbolton, co. Huntingdon, and viscount Mandeville, and in 1625 was raised to the dignity of earl of Manchester; and Charles, the fourth earl, was created duke of Manchester in 1719. [Vide Manchester] Charles Montagu, son of George, the younger son of Henry, the first earl of Manchester above-mentioned, was raised to the peerage by the title of lord Halifax in 1698; and in 1714 was created viscount Sunbury and earl of Halifax, which titles became extinct at the death of George, the second earl, in 1771. The third branch of this family was ennobled in the person of Edward Montagu, second son of sir Sidney Montagu above-mentioned under History, who was the youngest of the six grandsons of the Chief Justice, who at the restoration was created a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Montagu of St. Neot's, co. Huntingdon; viscount Hinchinbroke, in the same county; and earl of Sandwich, in Kent. [Vide Sandwich]

MONTAGU, Lord, the title enjoyed by Henry Pole, brother of the famous cardinal Pole, and son of Margaret, the celebrated countess of Salisbury, which at his death became extinct, he leaving two daughters, the eldest of whom, Catherine, was married to Francis, earl of Huntingdon, ancestor to the earl of Moira, and the present earl of Huntingdon.

MONTAGU, Viscount, a title conferred on Anthony Browne, in 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, which became extinct in 1793, at the death of George Samuel, the eighth viscount.

MONTAGU, Lady Mary Wortley (Biog.) eldest daughter of Evelyn Pierrepoint, duke of Kingston, was born about 1690, married in 1712 to Edward Wortley Montagu, esq. above-mentioned, accompanied him on his embassy to the Porte in 1716, and died in 1762, leaving several pieces of poetry, besides a collection of Letters, written during her residence at Constantinople, by which she is best known. They were at first surreptitiously published a year after her death; but have since been republished with her other productions, by permission of the earl of Bute, from her genuine papers, in 5 vols. 12mo. 1803, with Memoirs of her Life by Mr. Dallaway. [Vide Plate XXXVII]

MONTAGU, Edward Wortley, only son of the preceding lady Mary, was born in 1713, and died in 1776, after a dissolute and eccentric life, in which he abjured the Protestant for the Romish religion, and that for Mahometanism. He wrote 'Memorial of E. W. Montagu, Esq. written by Himself, in French, and published lately at Paris, against Payba, a Jew by Birth,' &c. 8vo. 1752; 'Observations upon a supposed Antique Bust at Turin;' 'New Observations on Pompey's Pillar;' and 'An Account of his Journey from Cairo, in Egypt, to the Written Mountains in the Deserts of Sinai,' &c.

MONTAGU, Elizabeth, the daughter of Matthew Robinson, esq. of West Layton, in Yorkshire, was born in 1720 at York, married in 1742 to Edward Montagu, esq. cousin to the Edward Wortley Montagu above-mentioned, and died in 1800, after having maintained her establishment in the learned and fashionable world for many years. She had early distinguished herself by 'Three Dialogues of the Dead,' published along with lord Lyttleton's, and afterwards by her 'Essay on the Genius and Writings of Shakspeare;' and since her death, four volumes of her Epistolary Correspondence have been published by her nephew and executor Matthew Montagu, esq. This lady, who was the friend and entertainer of all the literary characters who shone in her time, formed the literary society which has since been so well known by the name of the "Blue Stocking Club." She was also known for many years by her benevolent regard to the climbing boys, apprentices to the chimney sweepers in the metropolis, whom she entertained on May-day.

MONTAIGNE (Biog.) or Montagne, Michael de, a French writer of noble family, was born at the Castle of Montaigne in 1533, and died in 1592, leaving among other things, his 'Essays,' on which his literary reputation depends. They were first published by himself in 8vo. 1580; of the subsequent editions, those by P. Coste are reckoned the best, and of these, Tonson's edition in 3 vols. 4to. is highly commended by French bibliographers. [Vide Plate XXXVII]

MONTALEMBERT, Andrew de (Hist.) one of the bravest and wisest captains of his time, descended from the ancient house of Essé, in Poitou, was born about 1483, first signalized himself at the battle of Fournoue in 1495, and afterwards no less during all the wars which were carried on in the reigns of Louis XII and Francis I. In 1548 he was sent by Henry II with an armament into Scotland, where he obtained signal advantages over the English. He was recalled from Scotland to be engaged against the emperor, and in defending Terouenne, of which he was made the governor, he was killed at the breach in 1553. His death prevented him from receiving the marshal's staff, which was in readiness for him. Brant. Homm. Illustr.; Mez. Hist. de France.

MONTALEMBERT, Mark René, a French general of the same family, who was born at Angouleme, and died in 1802, at the age of 85, distinguished himself at the sieges of Kehl and Philipsburg, and was afterwards successfully employed by his country in the armies of the Swedes and Russians. Among his works as an author are 'La Fortification Perpendiculaire, ou l'Art Défensif supérieur à l'Offensif,' 11 vols. 4to. Paris, 1776-96.

MONTANUS (Ecc.) an heresiarch, who pretended to divine revelations, by which he drew aside many from the true faith, and thus became the leader of a sect called after him Montanists, whose peculiar tenet was, that God had vouchsafed to speak by the mouth of Montanus, and thereby taught a more perfect discipline than what had been communicated by the apostles. Of the death of this impostor nothing certain is known, but it has been said that he hanged himself. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 15; S. Hieron. Epist. 5; S. August. de Hæres.; S. Epiphan. de Hæres. 48.

MONTANUS, archbishop of Toledo, in Spain, who was distinguished in the sixth century for his learning and piety, presided at the second Council of Toledo in 527.

Montanus (Biog.) a poet, who wrote in hexameter and elegiac verse. Ovid. ex Pont. l. 4.

Montanus, Benedict Arias, a Spaniard, was born at Frexenel, in Estremadura, in 1527, and died in 1598, leaving a Polyglott Bible, which was printed in 8 vols. folio, at Antwerp; besides which he wrote, 1. 'Index Correctorius Lib. Theologicorum, &c. Antv. 4to. 1571. 2. 'Commentaria in Duodecim Prophetas Minores,' 4to. ibid. 1571, and reprinted in 1582. 3. 'Elucidationes in quatuor Evangelia et in Act. Apost.' ibid. 4to. 1575. 4. 'Elucidationes in omnia S. S. Apostolorum Scripta.' &c. 4to. ibid. 1588. 5. 'De Optimo Imperio, sive in Librum Josue Commentarius,' ibid. 1588. 6. 'De varia Republica,' &c. 4to. ibid. 1592. 7. 'Antiquitatum Judaicarum Lib. novem,' Lugd. Bat. 1593. 8. 'Liber Generationis et Regenerationis Adami,' &c. 4to. Antv. 1593. 9. 'Davidis, aliorumque Psalmi ex Heb. in Latinum Carmen conversi,' 4to. ibid. 1574. 10. 'Commentarii in Triginta Priores Psalmos,' &c.

MONTAUBAN (Geog.) a town of Querci, in France, in the modern department of the Tarn and the Garonne, situated on the Tarn, 30 m. N. Toulouse. Lon. 1° 20′ E., lat. 44° N. This town, called in Latin Mons Albanus and Mons Aureolus, was rebuilt in 1147, erected into a bishopric by pope John XXIII in 1317, and taken by the Huguenots in 1562; and in consequence exposed to several sieges, particularly in 1629 by Louis XIII. It was afterwards cleared of its principal inhabitants by the revocation of the edict of Nantes; but since the revolution its Protestant university and church have been restored.

MONTBELLIARD, Philibert Gueneau (Biog.) a French naturalist, was born in 1720 at Semur, in Auxois, and died in 1785, leaving 'Collection Academique,' a periodical; besides the share he had in Buffon's great work.

MONTCALM, Lewis Joseph de St. Veran, Marquis de (Hist.) a distinguished French general, descended from a noble family of Candiac, who, after having signalized himself on different occasions, particularly at the battle of Placenza in 1746, was made governor of Canada in 1756, where for a long time he maintained his ground against the English; but was killed on the conquest of Quebec, which also proved fatal to the victor, general Wolfe.

MONTECUCULLI, Count Sebastian (Hist.) an Italian count of Ferrara, was accused of having administered poison to the dauphin, son of Francis I, and on being put to the torture he confessed his crime, and implicated Ferdinand de Gonzaga, and even the emperor himself in his guilt; but the Imperialists retort the charge on Catherine de Medicis. Montecuculli was condemned to be torn in pieces by horses, which sentence was executed in 1536.

Montecuculli, Raymond de, a celebrated Austrian general, of a distinguished family in the Modenese, was born in 1608, and died in 1680, after having had the honour of maintaining his ground against Turenne and Condé. His 'Memoires' on the military art have been published several times; the edition of Strasburgh in 1735 is reckoned the best.

MONTEAGLE, Sir Edward Stanley (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, gave such signal proofs of his valour at the battle of Flodden Field, where he commanded the rear of the English army, that he received distinguished honours from his sovereign Henry VIII. He died in 1523.

Monteagle, William, Lord, son of Edward Parker, lord Morley, afterwards lord Morley and Monteagle, was the nobleman to whom a letter of caution was sent to abstain from his attendance in Parliament on the day intended for the execution of the gunpowder plot. He communicated this letter to the earl of Salisbury, and the latter to the king, which led to the discovery of what was passing.

Monteagle, Lord (Her.) the title which Henry VIII conferred on sir Edward Stanley before-mentioned, in reward for his great valour. This title passed into the family of Parker by the marriage of Elizabeth, daughter and sole heir of William, third lord Monteagle, with Edward Parker, lord Morley. [Vide Stanley and Morley, &c.]

MONTE-MAYOR, George de (Biog.) a Castilian poet, was born about 1520 at Monte-Mayor, and died in the prime of life in 1562, leaving, among other pieces, his 'Diana,' a pastoral romance, on which his reputation rests.

MONTESPAN, Athenais Mortimar, Madame de (Hist.) wife of marquis de Montespan, is best known as the mistress of Louis XIV, who exercised an uncontrolled authority in France from 1669 to 1675, when the passion of the king was turned towards Madame de Maintenon. She in consequence retired from court on a pension, and died in 1717.

MONTESQUIEU, Charles de Secondat, Baron de (Biog.) a French writer, of an ancient and noble family of Guienne, was born at the Castle of Brede, near Bourdeaux, in 1689, and died in 1755, leaving among his works 'L'Esprit des Loix;' 'Sur la Cause de la Grandeur et de la Décadence des Romains;' 'Le Temple de Gnide;' 'Lettres Persannes,' &c.

MONTETH (Biog.) or Monteith, Robert, a Scotch historian, who was born at Salmonet, between Airth and Grange, and was chaplain to cardinal de Retz, wrote an account of Scotland from the coronation of Charles I to the end of the rebellion, which was originally written in French, and translated into English, by J. Ogilvie, under the title of 'A History of the Troubles of Great Britain,' fol. 1735. This author is to be distinguished from Robert Monteth, or Monteith, a compiler of all the epitaphs of Scotland, published in 8vo. 1704, under the title of 'An Theater of Mortality.'

MONTE-VIDEO (Geog.) a town of South America, in the province of Buenos Ayres, situated on the north side of the river Plata, 120 m. E. N. E. Buenos Ayres. Lon. 56° 14′ W., lat. 34° 54′ S. This town was taken by the English in 1806, but evacuated the next year.

MONTEZUMA (Hist.) the last emperor of Mexico, displayed great firmness and talent in opposing the invasion of the Spaniards; but being at length seized by Cortez, he was wounded in a popular tumult by two arrows, and died a few days after in 1520, refusing all aliment, and rejecting every invitation to become a Christian. He left two sons and three daughters, who were all converted. The eldest son was enriched, and made by Charles V a count of Spain, where his posterity are still living. He died in 1608.

MONTFAUCON, Dom. Bernard de (Biog.) a Benedictine, of an ancient and noble family, was born in 1655 in the chateau of Soulage, in Languedoc, and died in 1741, leaving, 1. 'Analecta Græca, sive varia Opuscula,' Gr. and Lat. 4to. Paris. 1688. 2. 'La Verité de l'Histoire de Judith,' 1690. 3. An edition of the works of S. Athanasius, published in 3 vols. fol. 1698. 4. 'Diarium Italicum, sive Monumentum Veterum, &c. 4to. Paris. 1702, of which an English translation was published in folio, 1725. 5. 'Collectio nova Patrum,' 2 vols. fol. 1706; and again, with the works of S. Athanasius, in 4 vols. fol. Paris. 1777. 6. 'Palæographia Græca,' &c. fol. 1708. 7. 'Le Livre de Philon de la Vie contemplative,' &c. translated from the Greek of Philo-Judæus. 8. An edition of the Hexapla of Origen,' 2 vols. fol. 1713; and of the works of St Chrysostom, which were completed in 13 vols. fol. 1718-38. 9. 'Bibliotheca Coisliniana,' &c. fol. Paris. 1715. 10. 'L'Antiquité Expliquée,' &c. 5 vols. Paris, 1724. 11. 'Les Monumens de la Monarchie Françoise,' &c. 5 vols. fol. Paris, 1729—1733. 12. 'Bibliotheca Bibliothecarum MSS. nova,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1739; besides which he contributed many papers to the Memoirs of the Academy, &c. [Vide Plate XXXVII] and page to the duke of Guise, who died in 1667, was the author of Asdrubal, and some other pieces.

MONTFORD, Simon de (Hist.) vide Leicester.

MONTFORD, Lord (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Bromley [vide Bromley]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly per pale dovetail, gules and or.

Crest. Upon a wreath a demi-lion rampant sable, issuing out of a mural crown or, holding a standard vert, charged with a griffin passant or, the staff proper, headed argent.

Supporters. On the dexter side, an unicorn cream-coloured gorged with a ducal coronet, thereto a chain reflexed over his back, horned and unguled or. On the sinister side, a horse argent, pelleted (or spotted sable) collared dovetail azure, thereon three lozenges or.

Motto. "Non inferiora secutus."

MONTFORT, Simon de (Hist.) a great French general, distinguished himself in the crusades against the Albigenses, whom he treated with great severity. In 1213 he defeated Peter of Arragon, and was killed in 1218 at the siege of Toulouse by a woman, who threw a stone on his head from the ramparts. His younger brother or son was the earl of Leicester so famous in English history. [Vide Leicester]

MONTGAILLARD, Bernard de (Biog.) a mendicant friar, who was born in 1553, and died in 1628, was a celebrated preacher in his day.

MONTGERON, Lewis Basil Carré de (Biog.) a Parisian, who, from an infidel and a debauchee, became a fanatic, and wrote an account of his conversion at the tomb of M. Paris, the deacon, and of the miracles said to be wrought there. He presented his work, a quarto volume, to the king, but was sent to the Bastille for his extravance, and died in the citadel of Valence in 1754, at the age of 67.

MONTGOLFIER, Stephen James (Biog.) the inventor of air-balloons, was born at Aunonay, and died in 1799. He made his first experiment in 1782 at Avignon; and, after other trials, exhibited before the royal family in 1783 a balloon near 60 feet high, and 43 in diameter, which ascended with a cage containing a sheep, a cock, and a duck, and conveyed them through the air in safety to the distance of about 10,000 feet. This was followed by another machine of Montgolfier's construction, in which a M. Pilatre de Rozier ascended, but lost his life in the attempt in consequence of the balloon taking fire.

MONTGOMERIE, Lord, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Eglintoun.

MONTGOMERY, Roger de (Hist.) a noble knight, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the nobles who accompanied William the Conqueror into England, and commanded the body of his army at the memorable battle of Hastings.

MONTGOMERY, Robert de, eldest son of the preceding, was knighted by the Conqueror in the sixth year of his reign, and always enjoyed his favour; but upon his death, he adhered to Robert Curthose against Henry I, and assisted him at the battle where he was routed and taken prisoner. This exasperated Henry so much that he banished this earl, and discountenanced his friends; for which reason it is supposed that the family of Montgomery passed over into Scotland at this period.

MONTGOMERY, Sir John, Knight, was in the expedition against the English at the battle of Otterburn in 1388, where he behaved very gallantly, and took Henry Percy, son to the earl of Northumberland, prisoner, whom he obliged, as his ransom, to build the castle of Punoon, the chief messuage of the lordship of Eglesham.

MONTGOMERY, Sir Hugh, eldest son of the preceding, was slain at the battle of Otterburn above-mentioned.

MONTGOMERY, Sir John, second son of sir John above-mentioned, was sent into England as one of the hostages for the ransom of king James I in 1423, and afterwards sat as one of the peers upon the trial of Murdoc, duke of Albany.

MONTGOMERY, Sir Alexander, the second peer, was chosen as a Privy Counsellor by James I, and was sent into England on different important missions. To him the family of Montgomery is said to owe its subsequent greatness.

MONTGOMERY, Hugh, second earl of Eglintoun. [Vide Eglintoun]

MONTGOMERY, Gabriel, Count de, a French nobleman of Scotch extraction, having been called upon by Henry II to enter the lists with him in a tournament given by this monarch on the marriage of his daughter with the king of Spain, he had the misfortune to wound the king so severely in the eye that he died 11 days after. He was afterwards engaged in the civil wars on the side of the Protestants; but being taken prisoner by Matignon, the governor of Normandy, he was conducted to Paris, and there beheaded in 1574 by order of Catherine de Medicis.

MONTGOMERY, Philip, Earl of, afterwards earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, was a great favourite with James I on account of his attachment to field sports, and was recommended by this king to his son, Charles I; but he afterwards showed himself unworthy of the confidence reposed in him, and abused his influence, as Chancellor of the University, to serve the party of committee men and Presbyterians, who were committing their outrages upon this learned body. He died in 1649-50, leaving a worthless character that was held in esteem by none.

MONTGOMERY (Her.) the name of a family which traces its descent from Roger de Montgomery, the companion and kinsman of William the Conqueror above-mentioned. His descendants going afterwards into Scotland acquired the favour of the Scotch kings, and advanced themselves both in honour and wealth. Several of them enjoyed the rank and title of baron before they were advanced to the higher dignity of the earl of Eglintoun, which was conferred in 1502 on Hugh Montgomery, who was in favour with James IV. Hugh Montgomery, the twelfth earl, was created a British peer in 1806 by the title of lord Ardrossan. [Vide Eglintoun]

MONTGOMERY and PEMBROKE, Earl of, vide Pembroke.

MONTGOMERY, other families of this name enjoy the dignity and title of a baronet, as

MONTGOMERY of Magbie Hall, co. Peebles, of which was sir William Montgomery, created a baronet in 1774. The arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth azure, three fleurs-de-lis or; second gules, three rings or, gemmed azure, over all a cross wavy.

Crest. An arm in armour holding a dagger.

MONGOMERY of Stanhope, co. Peebles, of which was sir James, brother of sir William above-mentioned, created in 1801. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. As above with a crescent for difference.

Crest. A female figure representing Hope, with hair dishevelled, vested azure, trained argent, supporting in her dexter hand an anchor proper, and in her sinister a saracen's head couped.

Motto over the crest. "Gardez bien."

MONTGOMERY of the Hall, co. Donegal, of which sir Henry Montgomery was created in 1808. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly azure and gules three fleurs-de-lis, one and four, three rings gemmed, two and three.

Crest. A dexter hand and arm couped at the shoulder in armour, holding a spear broken.

MONTGON, Charles Alexander (Biog.) a French ecclesiastic, was born at Versailles in 1690, and died in 1770, leaving 'Memoires,' in 8 vols. 8vo.

MONTI, Joseph (Biog.) professor of botany at Bologna, who died in 1750, was the author of 'Plantarum Varii Indices,' 4to.; 'Exoticorum Simplicium Indices,' 4to. &c.

MONTICELLI, Andrew (Biog.) a painter of Bologna, who died in 1716, at the age of 75, excelled in flowers and fruits. He is to be distinguished from another of the same name, who was eminent for landscapes, &c.

MONTIGNE, Stephen Mignot de (Biog.) a member of the Academy of Sciences, who died in 1782, aged 68, introduced into France the manufacture of English stuffs, and contributed many papers to the 'Memoires' of the Academy.

MONTJOSIEU, Lewis de (Biog.) a native of Rouergne, who attended the duke de Joyeuse on his travels to Rome, was the author of 'Gallus Romæ Hospes,' 4to. which was reprinted, with Vitruvius, at Amsterdam.

MONTLUC, Blaise de (Hist.) a gallant French officer, who gradually rose by his merits to the rank of a marshal of France, and died in 1577, at the age of 77, first served in Italy, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Pavia in 1525. He afterwards assisted at the brave defence of Marseilles against the emperor Charles V; retook Boulogne from the English in 1547; raised the siege of Berne, which was attacked by the Spaniards in 1551; maintained himself in Tuscany against Marignan in 1554; and served, with equal distinction, throughout all the wars which desolated Guienne. He was the author of his own life, published at Bourdeaux in fol. 1592.

MONTLUC, Peter Bertrand de, son of the preceding, distinguished himself in India in forming settlements for the French in Mozambique, and the neighbouring parts.

MONTLUC, John de, natural son of John de Montluc, bishop of Valence, and a marshal of France, distinguished himself on the side of the league, but afterwards made peace with Henry IV.

MONTLUC, John de (Ecc.) bishop of Valence and Die, in Dauphiny, and brother of Blaise de Montluc, died in 1579, after having been employed in not less than 16 embassies.

MONTMORENCI (Hist.) one of the oldest, noblest, and most illustrious houses in France, which has produced constables, marshals, admirals, and great men in every department of the state.

MONTMORENCI, Matthew II de, surnamed the Great, began early to signalize himself as a warrior at the siege of Chateau Gaillard, whither he had followed the king, Philip Augustus, in 1203, and pursued the same honourable course in the taking of many places, and in many battles, particularly against the English in Poitou. He crusaded against the Albigenses in 1226, took Bellune from the duke of Brittany in 1228, and died in 1230.

MONTMORENCI, Matthew IV de, also surnamed the Great, admiral and great chamberlain of France, assisted Charles I, king of Naples and Sicily, against his rebellious subjects, accompanied Philip the Bold in his expedition to Arragon in 1285, served as admiral during the war in Flanders in 1303, and died in 1304 or 5.

MONTMORENCI, Charles de, chamberlain to the king, and marshal of France, took an important part in all the affairs of his time, during the reigns of John and Charles V, both as a soldier and a negociator, and died in 1381.

MONTMORENCI, John II de, grand chamberlain of France, risked his life and his property in re-establishing his sovereign Charles VII on his throne, and died in great honour in 1447, at the age of 76.

MONTMORENCI, Anne de, marshal and constable of France, first signalized himself at the battle of Marignan in 1515, was at the interview between the kings of France and England in 1519, was sent into England by Francis I some time after to oppose the designs of the emperor; defended the town of Mezieres in 1521 against the imperialists; served as captain general in Switzerland and the Milanese in 1522. He was at the battle of Pavia in 1525; commanded the armies of the king in Picardy in 1536 against the Imperialists, whom he pressed very hard. He was afterwards in disgrace for a time; but being restored to his honours and employments by Henry II, he took the Boulonnois in 1550; Metz, Toul, and Verdun in 1552, when he was again driven from the court by the intrigues of Catherine de Medicis. He was recalled under Charles IX to head the armies against the Huguenots, whom he defeated at Dreux in 1562, although he himself was taken prisoner. On obtaining his release the next year, he retook Havre de Grace from the English, and defeated the Calvinists under Condé in 1567 at the battle of St. Denis, where he was slain after performing prodigies of valour. [Vide Plate XIII]

MONTMORENCI, Francis de, Duke de Montmorenci, eldest son of the preceding, marshal and grand-master of France, began his career as a soldier at the siege of Lanz, in Piedmont, in 1551; and, accompanying the king afterwards to the frontiers of Germany, he was present at most of the sieges and engagements of that campaign. In 1558 he was at the capture of Calais; and, after being sent on an embassy to England, he again signalized himself at the battles of Dreux, St. Denis, and on other occasions. In 1572 he was sent on a second embassy to England, when he was honoured with the collar of the garter by queen Elizabeth; but this was followed by his disgrace at his own court through the intrigues of Catherine de Medicis, and his consequent imprisonment. He was, however, released before his death, which happened in 1579.

MONTMORENCI, Henry de, second son of Anne de Montmorenci, duke de Montmorenci, marshal and constable of France, signalized himself at the siege of Mentz, and on other occasions, particularly at the battle of Dreux, when he took the prince of Condé prisoner. He received the marshal's staff in 1566; fought at the battle of St. Denis in 1567, when his father was killed; commanded the armies of the king in the fourth civil war in 1572; but shared in the disgrace in which Catherine de Medicis involved his family, and died in 1614, after having been restored to his honours and employments by Henry IV.

MONTMORENCI, Charles de, third son of Anne de Montmorenci, distinguished himself at the battle of St. Quentin, where he was made prisoner with his father, after which he was employed by Francis II and Henry IV, on various important concerns, and died in 1612, at the age of 75.

MONTMORENCI, Henry II de, son of the first Henry abovementioned, was made admiral of France at the age of 18, after which he gave the most distinguished proofs of his valour and conduct against the Calvinists, but joining the disaffected party of the duke of Orleans, he was wounded and taken prisoner in 1632, by the marshal de Schomberg, when, at the instigation of Richelieu, he was tried on a charge of high treason, found guilty, and condemned to lose his head, which sentence was executed in the same year.

MONTMORENCI, Charlotte Margaret de, sister to the preceding, and wife of the prince of Condé, was distinguished for her beauty, which captivated the amorous monarch Henry IV; to avoid whose importunities she was removed to Brussels, by her husband, until the death of Henry, when she returned to France, and died in 1650, at the age of 57. She was the mother of the great general Condé.

MONTMORENCY (Her.) or Morres, the name of a family in Ireland, descended from the noble family of Montmorenci, in France, which came over with William the Conqueror, and was ennobled in the person of Harvey Morres, or Mountmorency, who was created in 1756, baron Mountmorris, and in 1763 viscount Mountmorris.

MONTMORT, Peter Raymond de (Biog.) a mathematician, was born at Paris in 1678, and died at the age of 41, leaving 'Essai d'Analyse sur les Jeux de Hazard,' 1708 and 1714, besides which, he edited the work of M. Guisnée entitled 'Application de l'Algebre à la Geometrie,' and that of Newton, on the Quadrature of Curves, and was employed, at the time of his death, on an History of Geometry.

MONTPELLIER (Geog.) a large town of Lower Languedoc, in the South of France, capital of the modern department of the Herault, situated between the small rivers Masson and Lez, 32 m. W. S. W. Nismes, 100 W. N. W. Marseilles. Lon. 3° 52′ E. lat. 43° 30′ N.

History of Montpellier.

It is called in the Latin of the middle ages Mons Pessulus, Mons Pessulanus, Monspellium, Mons Pellarum, and Mons Peslerius, and is said to have been founded on the ruins of Maguelone, which Charlemagne destroyed because it served as a harbour for the Saracens. One of the counts de Sustantion, gave it as a marriage portion to one of his daughters named Eustorgia, whose two daughters, inheriting Montpellier as coheirs, gave their property to the church in 975. A gentleman named Guy, afterwards held it as a fief of the church, on condition of defending it against the Saracens, and his posterity continued to enjoy the seignory of Montpellier. In 1292 the bishop and chapter of Maguelone ceded their rights in Montpellier to Philip the Fair, for a revenue of 500 livres, from which time it became a fief of the crown until 1349, when James III, king of Majorca, and lord of Montpellier, being deprived of his states by Peter, king of Arragon, the latter sold the seignory of Montpellier to Philip de Valois. Montpellier has been long the seat of a celebrated university, particularly famous for its school of medicine, founded, as is said, by the disciples of Averrhoes in 1196.

Ecclesiastical History.

Montpellier is a bishop's see, suffragan of Narbonne, which was transferred from Maguelone in 1533. A council was held here by Arnustus, archbishop of Narbonne in 894, another in 1215, a third in 1258, besides a synod in 1225.

MONTPENSIER, Anne Maria Louisa d'Orleans, Duchess de (Hist.) daughter of Gaston, duke of Orleans, was born in 1627, and after taking an active part in the factions of the times, she retired to the austerities of a convent, where she died in 1693, at the age of 66, leaving her 'Memoires,' which were published in 8 vols. 12mo. at Amsterdam, 1735; besides some romances and books of devotion.

MONTPER, Jesse (Biog.) a painter of the Flemish school, in the 16th century, whose pieces, when viewed at a distance, appeared to advantage.

MONTPETIT, Arnold Vincent (Biog.) a painter and mechanic, who died in 1800, at the age of 87, discovered a method of painting called Eludoric, in which water colours were covered with a coat of oil.

MONTPEZAT, Anthony de (Hist.) a French general, who was taken prisoner at the battle of Pavia, rose afterwards in favour with Francis I, by the fidelity which he displayed during the monarch's captivity. He was created a marshal of France, and died in 1544.

MONTREAL (Geog.) a town of Upper Canada, 120 miles S.W. Quebec, 220 N. by W. Boston, and 286 N.E. Niagara. Lon. 73° 35′ W. lat. 45° 31′ N. This town, which is the next in importance to Quebec, took its rise in a few log-houses which were set up in 1640, after which it rapidly increased, and is now a handsome city. It was taken by the English under general Amherst in 1760, and was occupied by the Americans for a short time in 1775, but was soon after evacuated.

MONTROSE, William, second Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the peers to whom the regent duke of Albany committed the charge of the young king, James V, when he himself went to France. In 1536 he was one of the commissioners of regency appointed by this king to manage the public concerns during his majesty's absence in France; and in 1543 he was appointed by the parliament, along with lord Erskine, to remain continually in the castle of Stirling with queen Mary, for the sure keeping of her person.

MONTROSE, John, third Earl of, who succeeded his grandfather, the second earl, in 1571, was chancellor of the Jury on the trial of the earl of Morton in 1581; was appointed one of the Extraordinary Lords of session in the years 1584, 1591, and 1596; constituted High Treasurer of Scotland in 1584, and High Chancellor in 1598. After the accession of James VI to the throne of England, the earl of Montrose presided in the Parliament of Perth in 1604, and giving up the chancellor's place, he was appointed to the highest dignity a subject could enjoy, being constituted Viceroy of Scotland in 1606, which he held till his death in 1608.

MONTROSE, James, fifth Earl, and first Marquis of, at first joined the disaffected party in Scotland known by the name of the Covenanters, and lead the army into England, which afterwards banded with the English rebels, but becoming disgusted with their proceedings, he entered into an association with some other noblemen to support the cause of the king, and returning to Scotland, raised an army, with which he defeated the covenanters at Inverlochy in 1645; and three times afterwards in the same year, but his victorious career was stopped by a reverse which he met with at Philiphaugh, where he was totally defeated by general Leslie, and his army dispersed. He then retired into the North, and thence, on the ruin of the royal cause, to the Hague, where Charles II resided, from whom he received a commission in 1649 to repair to Scotland, for the purpose of raising an insurrection in his favour; but soon after his landing in Orkney, he was defeated by Strachan in 1650, and escaped to the house of Macleod, of Assint, by whom he was betrayed to general Leslie. After meeting with every indignity which the insolence of upstart rebels could offer to a gallant soldier, he was hanged, at the age of 38, by their order, on a gibbet 30 feet high, his head affixed to the common gaol, his limbs to the gates of the principal towns, and his body interred at the place of execution. After the restoration his scattered remains were collected and deposited in the abbey church of Holyrood house, where they remained till 1661, when the body was, with the greatest solemnity and magnificence, carried to the cathedral church of St. Giles, and interred in the family aisle. [Vide Plate XIV]

MONTROSE, James, second Marquis of, obtained the appellation of the good Marquis, in distinction from his father, who was denominated the Great. He was born in 1631, and after being restored to all his honours, and appointed one of the Extraordinary Lords of Session in 1668, he died in 1669.

MONTROSE, James, fourth Marquis, and first Duke of, was appointed High Admiral of Scotland in 1705, and President of the Council in 1706, when he steadily supported the Union and the Protestant succession. At the death of queen Anne, he was appointed by king George, one of the Lords of Regency, sworn a Privy Councillor in 1717, constituted Keeper of the Great Seal in Scotland in 1716, removed from that office in 1733, in consequence of his opposition to sir Robert Walpole, and died in 1742.

MONTROSE, Duke of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Graham, [vide Graham] which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Graham, duke of Montrose, marquis of Montrose, Graham, and Buchanan, earl of Montrose, Kincardine, and Belford, viscount Dundaff, lord Graham, Aberruthven, Mugdock, Fintrie, and Graham, of Belford.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth or, on a chief sable, three escallops of the first for Graham; second and third argent, three roses gules, barbed and seeded proper, for the title of Montrose.

Crest. An eagle, wings hovering or, preying on a stork on its back proper.

Supporters. Two storks argent, beaked and membered gules.

Motto. "Ne oublie."

MONTUCLA, John Stephen (Biog.) a French mathematician, was born at Lyons in 1725, and died in 1800, leaving 'Histoire des Mathematiques,' 2 vols. 4to. 1758, enlarged and completed by Lalande, in 4 vols. 4to. 1799—1802, also translated into English and published in 4 vols. 8vo.; besides which, he edited several mathematical works, as the 'Recreations Mathématiques,' &c. of Ozanam, in 4 vols. 8vo. 1778, and contributed his assistance to the French Gazette.

MOOR, Michael (Biog.) a divine of the Romish church, was born at Dublin in 1640, and died in 1728, leaving among his works 'De Existentia Dei,' &c. 8vo. Paris. 1692; 'Hortatio ad Studium Linguæ Græcæ et Hebraicæ,' 12mo. 1700; and 'Vera Sciendi Methodus,' 8vo. Paris. 1716, against the philosophy of Des Cartes.

MOOR, Karel de, a portrait painter of Leyden, a disciple of Gerard Douw, was born in 1656, and died in 1730, leaving among other specimens of his skill, the portraits of prince Eugene and the duke of Marlborough, for the emperor of Germany, which, when he saw, he made the painter a knight of the empire.

MOORE, Sir Edward (Hist.) of the first family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in the armies of queen Elizabeth, by his courage and conduct during the troubles which then prevailed in Ireland, for which he was knighted in 1579, by sir William Drury, Lord Justice.

MOORE, Sir Garrett, vide Drogheda.

MOORE, Sir John, an English officer, was born at Glasgow in 1761, entered the army as an ensign in 1776, and rose by his merits to the rank of a general in 1795; after which he distinguished himself in the West India islands, under sir Ralph Abercrombie, and under the same commander in Ireland and in Egypt, particularly at the battle of Alexandria, when the commander-in-chief fell in the moment of victory, to which general Moore had materially contributed. In 1808 General Moore was appointed to the chief command of an army in Spain, when, advancing too far into the country, he found it necessary to retreat with the utmost precipitancy towards Corunna, where, making his stand against the pursuing army of the French, he defeated them in every quarter, but was desperately wounded at the close of the engagement, and died a few hours after in 1809. [Vide Plate XIII]

MOORE, John (Ecc.) an English prelate, and native of Market-Harborough, in Leicestershire, was educated at Cambridge, and after various preferments, was advanced in 1691 to the see of Norwich, from which he was translated to that of Ely in 1707, and died in 1714, leaving a valuable library, consisting of 30,000 volumes, which was purchased by George I, and presented to the university of Cambridge.

MOORE, John, another English prelate, was educated at Oxford, and, after different preferments, was raised to the see of Bangor in 1776, from which he was translated in 1783 to the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury, and died in 1805, at the age of 74.

MOORE (Her.) the name of two families in Ireland, probably of the same descent, both of which enjoy the peerage. Moore, of Drogheda, was first ennobled in the person of sir Garret Moore, son of sir Edward Moore above-mentioned, who was created in 1615, baron Moore, of Mellefont, and in 1621 viscount Moore, of Drogheda; Henry, the third viscount, was advanced to the dignity of earl of Drogheda; and Charles, the sixth earl, was created in 1791 marquis of Drogheda. [Vide Drogheda] Stephen Moore, of the second family, was advanced to the peerage of Ireland in 1764, by the title of baron Kilworth, of Moore Park, and in 1766 was created viscount Mount-Cashell. His son Stephen, the second viscount, was created earl Mount-Cashell in 1781. [Vide Mount-Cashell]

MOORE, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the marquis of Drogheda.

MOORE, Philip (Biog.) an English divine, and chaplain to bishop Wilson, who died in 1783, in the 78th year of his age, superintended the revision of the translation of the Manks Bible, and also that of the Book of Common Prayer, and other religious pieces, which he performed at the request of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

MOORE, Sir Jonas, a mathematician, was born in 1620, at Whitby, in Yorkshire, and died in 1679, leaving a 'General Treatise on Artillery,' &c. which was published after his death, in 4to. 1681.

MOORE, Robert, a great penman, who died in 1727, published The Writing Master's Assistant, and other similar works.

MOORE, Edward, a poetical and miscellaneous writer, was born in 1711, and died in 1757, leaving 'Fables for the Female Sex,' 'The Gamester,' a popular tragedy, and 'The World,' to which he contributed sixty-one papers, and edited the whole, when they were collected into volumes for a second edition. [Vide Plate XXIX]

MOORE, John, a medical and miscellaneous writer, and father of general Moore above-mentioned, was born in 1730, and died in 1802, leaving 'A View of Society and Manners in France, Switzerland, and Germany,' in 2 vols. 8vo. 1778; 'A View of Society and Manners in Italy,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1781; 'Medical Sketches,' 1785; 'Zeleuco,' a novel; 'A View of the Causes and Progress of the French Revolution,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1795; 'Edward,' &c. another novel, 1796; and 'Mordaunt, or Sketches of Life, Characters, Manners,' &c. 2 vols. 8vo.

MOPINOT, Simon (Biog.) a Benedictine, was born at Rheims in 1685, and died in 1724, leaving some Latin Hymns, which are much admired; besides which, he had a share in the Collection of the Popes' Letters, published by Father Coustant.

MOPSUS (Myth.) Μόψος, a soothsayer of Titaressa, in Thessaly, son of Ampyx and Chloris, who attended the Argonauts on their expedition, and died on their return by the bite of a serpent in Libya. Hesiod. in Theog. v. 181; Orph. in Argon. v. 127; Apollon. l. 1; Stat. Theb. l. 3, &c.

MOPSUS, a son of Apollo and Manto, a celebrated soothsayer at the Trojan war, who predicted miseries to the Greeks, in opposition to his rival Chalcas, who predicted successes. He was honoured as a god after his death. Strab. l. 9; Paus. l. 7; Tertull. de Anim. c. 46; Plut. de Orac. Defect.; Origen.cont. Cels.; Ammian. l. 14.

MORABIN, James (Biog.) a French writer, who died in 1762, published 'Histoire de l'Exil de Ciceron;' 'Histoire de Ciceron,' 2 vols. 4to. 1745; 'Nomenclator Ciceronianus;' also a translation of Cicero's treatise 'De Legibus,' and of Boetius' 'De Consolatione.'

MORALES, Ambrose (Biog.) a Spanish priest, was born in 1513, at Cordova, and died in 1590, leaving, 1. 'Coronica General de España, Prosiguiendo Adelante los cinco Libros,' &c. fol. Complut. 1574. 2. 'De las Antigüedades de las Ciudades de España,' &c. fol. 3. 'Un Discurso del' Linage y Decendencia del Glorioso Doctor Santo Domingo,' &c. A complete edition of his works was published at Madrid in 1791-92.

MORAND, Sauveur Francis (Biog.) a French surgeon, was born at Paris in 1697, and died in 1773, leaving 'Traité de la Taille au haut Appareil,' &c. 1728, besides some other works connected with his profession.

Morand, John Francis Clement, son of the preceding, was born at Paris in 1726, and died in 1784, leaving, 1. 'Histoire de la Maladie singuliere et de l'Examen d'une Femme devenue en peu de Tems contrefaite par un Rammollissement General des Os,' Paris, 1752; 'Nouvelle Description des Grottes d'Arcy;' 'Eclaircissement abrégé sur la Maladie d'une Fille de St. George;' 'Memoire sur les Eaux Thermales de Bains en Lorraine,' &c.

MORANT, Philip (Biog.) an antiquary and biographer, was born in 1700 at St. Saviour's, in the Isle of Jersey, educated at Oxford, and died in 1770, leaving, according to his own account, 1. 'An Introduction to the Reading of the New Testament,' &c. 4to. 1725, 1726. 2. 'The Translation of the Notes of Messrs. de Beausobre and Lenfant on St. Matthew's Gospel,' 4to. 1727. 3. 'The Cruelties and Persecutions of the Romish Church displayed,' &c. 8vo. 1728, translated into French by Thomas Richards, curate of Coychurch, in Glamorganshire, 1746. 4. 'I epitomized those Speeches, Declarations, &c. which Rapin had contracted out of Rushworth, in the Life of King James I, King Charles I, &c.' 1729, 1730. 5. 'Remarks on the Nineteenth Chapter of the Second Book of Mr. Selden's Mare Clausum,' printed at the end of Mr. Falle's 'Account of Jersey,' 1734. 6. 'I compared Rapin's History with the Twenty Volumes of Rymer's Fœdera and Acta Publica,' &c. 1728, 1734. 7. 'Translation of the Notes in the Second Part of the Ottoman History, by Prince Cantimir,' fol. 1735. 8. Revised and corrected 'The History of England, by way of Question and Answer,' &c. 9. Revised and corrected Hearne's 'Ductor Historicus.' 10. 'Account of the Spanish Invasion in 1588,' &c. 11. 'Geographia Antiqua et Nova,' taken partly from Dufresnoy's 'Méthode pour étudier la Geographie, with Cellarius' Maps,' 4to. 1742. 12. 'A Summary of the History of England,' fol. &c. 13. 'The History and Antiquities of Colchester,' fol. 1748, second edition in 1758. 14. 'All the Lives in the Biographia Britannica marked C.' 1739, 1760, 7 vols. fol.; 'I also composed Stillingfleet, which hath no mark at the end.' 15. 'The History of Essex.' 2 vols. fol. 1760, 1768. 16. 'I prepared the Rolls of Parliament for the Press as far as the 16 Henry IV.' 17. 'An Answer to the first part of the Discourse of the Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion, in a Letter to a Friend,' 1724, presented in MS. to Edmund Gibson, bishop of London.

MORATA, Olympia Fulvia (Biog.) a learned Italian lady, was born at Ferrara in 1526, and died at the age of 29, leaving several works, which were collected by Cælius Secundus Curio, and published under the title of 'Olympiæ Fulviæ Moratæ, Fœminæ doctissimæ ac plane Divinæ, Opera omnia quæ hactenus inveniri potuerunt,' &c. 8vo. Basil. 1558, and often reprinted. They consist of orations, dialogues, letters, and translations.

MORAVIA (Geog.) a large province of the Austrian empire, which was known to the ancients as the country of the Quadi and the Marcomanni, who were formidable enemies to the Romans. They were in their turn expelled from this part by the Moravani, a tribe of Sclavonians, who formed an independent state that was called after them Moravia. This latter people were exposed to many attacks from their more powerful neighbours, the Bohemians and Hungarians, to whom they were at different times subject, until the 16th century, when Ferdinand I succeeding to the crown of Hungary and Bohemia, Moravia was added to the dominions of the House of Austria.

MORAY, James, Earl of (Hist.) natural son of James IV, was one of the Commissioners in 1529 for treating of peace with the English, held in 1530 the office of Lieutenant General of the kingdom, proceeded in 1535 to France on an embassy to negotiate the marriage of James V, and died in 1544.

Moray, James, Earl of, natural son of James V, by Margaret, daughter of John, fifth earl of Marr, was born in 1533, constituted Prior of St. Andrew's in 1538, repulsed the English in a descent on the coast of Fife in 1548; made an irruption into England in 1557; was one of the commissioners appointed by Parliament to witness the marriage of queen Mary and Francis, dauphin of France, in 1558; became a leader of the Protestant and disaffected party in Scotland in 1559; was sent to France in 1561 to invite queen Mary to return home; and, on her return, was sworn one of her Privy Council, and possessed the power of prime minister. He warmly opposed the queen's marriage to Darnley, for which he was obliged to abscond, and was pronounced an outlaw. He was invited to return in 1566 by the conspirators against Rizzio; and, being received into the favour of the queen, was detached from the party most disaffected to the government. After the murder of Darnley, he went abroad with the queen's permission; but soon returned in 1567 to take upon himself the regency, when he defeated the forces that wished for the release of the queen, and went to England for the purpose of charging her with the murder of Darnley. On his return to Scotland, he pursued the same hostile course towards her and her adherents, and was assassinated in 1569, in the 37th year of his age, by Hamilton, of Bothwelhaugh. By the commonalty he was styled the Good Regent, but his goodness appears to have consisted in the basest ingratitude and inhumanity towards a female, from whom he had received favours, and to whom he was bound by ties of kindred, and in outrageous rebellion to his sovereign, under the pretence of religion.

Moray, James, Earl of, who is known in history by the appellation of the Bonny Earl of Moray, was much in the good graces of Anne of Denmark, which drew upon him the hatred of his hereditary enemy, the earl of Huntley, who, having obtained a commission from the king to pursue Bothwell and his associates, invested and set fire to the house of Dunibersel, where Moray was, on pretence that he was engaged with Bothwell. The earl, in attempting to make his escape, was set upon by the followers of Huntley and murdered in 1591.

Moray, Alexander, Earl of, was stripped of a great portion of his property in the time of the usurpation, admitted one of the Lords of the Treasury in 1678, appointed Secretary of State in the room of the Duke of Lauderdale in 1680, and an Extraordinary Lord of Session in the same year. He was advanced to the high office of Commissioner to the Parliament of Scotland in 1686, deprived of all his employments at the revolution, and, retiring to his country seat, died in 1700.

Moray, Francis, Earl of, second son of the preceding, was one of those summoned on suspicion of disaffection on the breaking out of the insurrection in favour of prince Charles in 1715.

Moray, or Murray, Sir Robert, one of the founders of the Royal Society, descended of an ancient and noble family in the Highlands of Scotland, is said to have taken part at first with the Presbyterians, to whom he was much inclined, but afterwards to have attached himself to his sovereign Charles I, for whose escape he had formed a design in 1646, that might have been carried into execution had the king not disapproved of it. Upon the restoration he was appointed a Privy Councillor for Scotland, and died in the favour and confidence of the king in 1673. He communicated some papers to the Royal Society, and acted as its president for some time.

Moray, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred in 1501 by James IV on his natural son, James Stewart above-mentioned, who, dying without issue, the earldom reverted to the crown, and was conferred in 1561 on James Stewart, the natural son of James V above-mentioned, and afterwards devolved on James Stewart, son of James, lord Doun, who married lady Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the regent Moray. This James, earl of Moray, is reckoned the first in the present line of succession. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Stuart, earl of Moray, baron Doun, and baron Stuart, of Castle Stuart.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant within a double tressure flowered and counter-flowered gules, within a bordure gobonated argent and azure, the arms of the regent Moray; second or, a fess chequee argent and azure, for Stuart of Doun; third or, three cushions pendant within a double tressure gules, for Randolph, earl of Moray.

Crest. A pelican in her nest, feeding her young proper.

Supporters. Two greyhounds proper.

Motto. "Salus per Christum redemptorem."

MORDAUNT, John, Lord (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of those appointed in 1520 to attend the queen of Henry VIII at the interview with Francis I of France, and in 1522 waited upon the king at Canterbury, at his second meeting in England with the emperor Charles V. He afterwards accompanied king Henry in 1532 on his going in great state into France, landing at Calais, and proceeding to a magnificent interview with king Francis I at Boulogne. He died in 1560, after having been engaged all his life in public affairs, and enjoyed the confidence of his sovereign.

MORDAUNT, John, second Lord, took up arms at the death of Edward VI in favour of queen Mary, and was immediately sworn of her Privy Council.

MORDAUNT, Lewis, third Lord, had the honour of knighthood conferred on him by queen Elizabeth in 1567; was one of the peers who sat in judgment on Thomas, duke of Norfolk; also on Mary, queen of Scots, at Fotheringay, and died in 1601.

MORDAUNT, Henry, fourth Lord, was imprisoned and fined in the Star-Chamber, on suspicion of his having some knowledge of the Gunpowder Plot.

MORDAUNT, John, fifth Lord, and first Earl of Peterborough, vide Peterborough.

MORDAUNT, John, second son of the first earl of Peterborough, who afterwards bore the title of baron Mordaunt, and viscount Avalon, was very active in the service of Charles II during the usurpation, and obtained a commission from the king to raise an insurrection, which being discovered he was brought to trial, but, by considerable management on the part of his friends, he procured an acquittal, and afterwards embarked with still greater zeal in the cause which finally triumphed, and by his instrumentality more than that of any single private individual.

MORDAUNT, John, Lord, eldest son of the famous earl of Peterborough, displayed his valour in 1704 at the battle of Hochstet or Blenheim, where he lost an arm, and died in 1710.

MORDAUNT, Henry, younger son of the earl of Peterborough, was bred to the sea service, and, like his noble father and brother, distinguished himself by his gallant behaviour, particularly by maintaining a fight with his single ship against a French fleet of six men-of-war, and, when he found it impossible to get clear of the enemy from the shattered state of his vessel, he ran her a-ground, and, after setting her on fire during the night, that she might not fall into the enemy's hands, he and his ship's company got safe on shore with whatever was valuable in her. He died unmarried in 1709.

MORDAUNT (Her.) the name of a family of Norman extraction, which derives its descent from Osbert le Mordaunt, who came over with the Conqueror. The first of this family who was ennobled was John Mordaunt above-mentioned, who had summons to Parliament among the peers of this realm in 1532. John, the fifth lord, was advanced to the dignity of earl of Peterborough in 1627, and his second son, John, was created by Charles II lord Mordaunt, of Ryegate, and viscount Avalon in 1659, which titles devolved on Charles, the third and celebrated earl of Peterborough, who was advanced to the dignity of earl of Peterborough and Monmouth in 1689. [Vide Peterborough] At the death of Charles Henry, the fifth earl, the titles of earl of Peterborough and Monmouth, viscount Avalon, and baron Mordaunt, became extinct, but the ancient barony of Mordaunt, of Turvey, devolved on Frances Anastasia Grace Mordaunt, the earl's half-sister, at whose death in 1819 it devolved on Alexander Gordon, fourth duke of Gordon. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a chevron between three estoiles of six points.

Crest. In an earl's coronet or, the bust of a Moorish prince habited in cloth of gold, all proper, and wreathed about the temples argent.

Supporters. Two eagles argent, armed and membered sable.

Motto. "Nec placida contenta quiete est."

MORDECAI (Hist.) מרדכי, son of Jair, of the race of Saul, and a chief of the tribe of Benjamin, who was carried captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, and of whom a particular account is given in the book of Esther.

MORE, Sir Thomas (Hist.) chancellor of England in the reign of Henry VIII, and son of sir John More, knight, one of the judges of the King's Bench, was born in 1480 in Milk Street, London, and received the early part of his education at a free school in Threadneedle Street, called St. Anthony's, where archbishop Whitgift and other eminent men had been brought up. He was sent in 1497 to Canterbury College, now part of Christ Church, in Oxford, whence he was removed after two years to New Inn, London, in order to apply to the law, and soon after to Lincoln's Inn, where he continued his studies until he became a barrister. In 1508 he was appointed a Judge of the Sheriff's Court, in the city of London; in 1523 he was chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, and the following year joined in an embassy to France with cardinal Wolsey. After his return he was constituted Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and in 1529 he and his friend Bishop Tonstal, were appointed Ambassadors to negotiate a peace between the emperor, the king Henry, and the king of France, which was concluded at Cambray. Upon the disgrace of Cardinal Wolsey in 1530 he was entrusted with the Great Seal, which was followed in 1534 by his commitment to prison for refusing to take the oath which sanctioned the divorce of queen Catherine; and afterwards, on his refusing to take the oath of supremacy, he was brought to trial by the king's command at the King's Bench, Westminster, upon an indictment for high treason in denying the king's supremacy, and, being found guilty, he was beheaded according to his sentence in 1535. [Vide Plate VII]. Sir Thomas More was the author of many works, among which was his 'Utopia,' a work the most read, though the least deserving of notice. His English works were collected and published by order of queen Mary in 1557; his Latin works at Basil in 1563, and in 1566. The life of sir Thomas was written by Stapleton, by his grandson, Thomas More, by Hoddesdon, by his son-in-law, Roper, and since by Warner, Mr. Cayley jun., and Mr. Macdiarmid in his Lives of British Statesmen. Dr. Wordsworth has also given a life in his 'Ecclesiastical Biography,' from a MS. in the Lambeth Library, which he attributes to Harpsfield, of the family of Sir Thomas Harpsfield. The most distinguished among his children were his son and great-grandson, mentioned in the subsequent articles, and his eldest daughter, Margaret, who was married to William Roper, esq.; she had also a daughter, Mary, whose reputation for learning and abilities was equal to her mother's. [Vide Roper] His last male descendant is said to have been the Rev. Thomas More, who died at Bath in 1795.

More, John, the only son of the preceding sir Thomas, was committed to the Tower for refusing to take the oath of supremacy, and condemned, but afterwards pardoned and set at liberty, which favour he did not long survive.

More, Thomas, grandson of the preceding, and a zealous Roman Catholic, gave the family estate to his younger brother, and took orders at Rome, whence, by the pope's command, he was sent a missionary into England. He afterwards resided at Rome, where and in Spain he negotiated the affairs of the English clergy.

More, Henry (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Grantham, in Lincolnshire, in 1614, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1687, leaving among his works, which were all of a fantastical description, his 'Enchiridium Ethicum,' and 'Divine Dialogues.'

More, Alexander, a French Protestant preacher, was born in 1616, and died in 1670, leaving, among other things, 'De Gratia et Libero Arbitrio;' 'De Scriptura Sacra, sive de Causa Dei;' 'A Reply to Milton's Second Defence of the People,' &c.

More, Sir Antonio, an artist of Utrecht, was born in 1519, and died in 1575, leaving among the admired specimens of his skill, The Ascension of our Saviour, which is in the gallery of the Louvre; besides portraits of Philip II of Spain, John III of Portugal, and others.

More, or Moore, Sir Francis, a lawyer, was born at East Hildesley in 1558, educated at Oxford, studied law at the Middle Temple, and died in 1621, leaving 'Cases Collected and Reported,' fol. 1663. A MS. of his, consisting of reports of cases principally agreeing with those in print, but with a great number of references to authorities, is in the hands of Mr. Brooke, compiler of the 'Bibliotheca Legum Angliæ.'

More, or Moore, James, an English writer, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1734, was the author of the 'Rival Modes,' and a sarcastic periodical paper entitled 'The Inquisitor.' He is enrolled among the heroes of the Dunciad by Pope.

MOREA (Geog.) the ancient Peloponnesus, an extensive peninsula, forming the South-East part of European Turkey, to which it is joined by the Isthmus of Corinth, lying between the gulfs of Lepanto and Engia.

Extent and Division. It is about 150 miles from North-West to South-East, that is, from Patras to Cape St. Angelo, and 120 broad from Cape Tornese to Cape Skyllo, and is divided into three provinces.

Towns. The principal towns are Tripolitza, Misitra, Argos, Coron, Modon, Patras, Napoli di Romania, and Napoli di Malvasia. [Vide Græcia, &c.]

Rivers. The Morea abounds in rivers, the principal of which are the Alpheus, Eurotas, and the Pamisos.

History. The Morea, after having remained tranquil for some centuries in subjection to the lower empire, was attacked by the Turks in 1432, when sultan Amurath II laid siege to and forced the wall which defended the entrance of the Isthmus of Corinth, but did not penetrate into the interior, which was reserved for Mahomet II, the conqueror of Constantinople, who invaded and occupied the Peninsula, with the exception of Modon, Coron, and some other maritime stations, which remained in the hands of the Venetians until the end of the 17th century. In 1770 the Russians made an unsuccessful attempt to wrest the Morea from the dominion of the Turks, and, notwithstanding the sufferings which the inhabitants experienced from their savage masters, they were among the first to commence the present struggle for regaining their independence.

MOREAU, James (Biog.) a French physician, who was born at Chalons sur Soane in 1647, and died in 1729, was the author of Consultations on the Rheumatism; a Treatise on the Knowledge of Continual Fevers, &c.

Moreau, Jacob Nicholas, historiographer of France, and librarian to the queen, was born at St. Florentine in 1717, and died in 1799, leaving, 1. 'Depot des Chartres et de Legislation;' a collection of old records, &c. which he made and put in order. 2. 'Observateur Hollandais;' a kind of political paper, written against the measures of the English court. 3. 'Memoire pour servir à l'Histoire des Cacouac,' 12mo. 1757, a satire. 4. 'Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire de notre Tems,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1757. 5. 'Devoirs d'un Prince,' 8vo. 1775, 1782. 6. 'Principes de Morale Politique et du Droit Public, ou Discours sur l'Histoire de France,' 4 vols. 8vo. 1777.

MOREL (Biog.) the name of a family of French printers, who distinguished themselves in the 16th century.

Morel, William, the successor of Turnebus, as director of the royal printing office in 1555, employed his attention principally on Greek authors, for which reason his editions are much esteemed. He died in 1564, after having compiled a Greek, Latin, and French Dictionary.

Morel, Frederic, who succeeded his father in 1581, as king's printer, was well versed in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, and published from the MSS. in the king's library a number of authors, particularly the Fathers, with annotations of his own. He died in 1638, at the age of 78.

Morel, Claude, brother of the preceding, who was nominated king's printer in 1602, published valuable editions of the Greek Fathers and other authors, to which he prefixed prefaces of his own composition He died in 1626, while engaged in an edition of S. Athanasius and Libanius, which was completed by his son Claude, who succeeded him in the business.

Morel, Giles, grandson of Frederic, printed an edition of Aristotle, Greek and Latin, in 4 vols. fol.; and the 'Bibliotheca Patrum,' in 17 vols. fol.

Morison, Fines (Biog.) vide Moryson.

Morison, Robert, a botanist, was born at Aberdeen in 1620, and died in 1683 in consequence of an injury which he received from the pole of a coach as he was crossing one of the streets of London. He left a new and an enlarged edition of Abel Brunyer's Catalogue of the Plants in the Garden of Gaston, duke of Orleans, under the title of 'Hortus Blesensis,' and an original work, entitled 'Plantarum Historia Universalis Oxoniensis,' fol. 1680, a second volume of which was published by Jacob Bobart.

Morland (Her.) the name of a family which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet originally enjoyed by the family of Bernard, and conferred in 1769 on sir Francis Bernard, descended from Godfrey Bernard, of Wanford, in the east riding of York, who was living there in the reign of Henry III. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first argent, a bear rampant sable, muzzled and collared or, for Bernard; second azure, semé of leopards' heads jessant de lis, and a griffin segreant or, for Morland; third — —; fourth — —.

Crest. A demi-bear, &c. as in the arms.

Motto. "Bear and forbear."

MORLAND, Sir Samuel (Biog.) a mechanist and a politician, son of the Rev. Thomas Morland, rector of Sulhamstead, in Berkshire, was born about 1625, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1696. He acted for a length of time with Cromwell, and his adherents; but becoming dissatisfied with the party, and his own conduct, he took an active part in promoting the restoration, to which he contributed materially. Among his mechanical inventions are reckoned that of the speaking-trumpet, to which Kircher also laid claim; the fire-engine; a capstan for heaving anchors; and two arithmetical machines, of which he published a description under the title of 'The Description and Use of two Arithmetic Instruments,' &c.; a copy of this work is in the Bodleian, bearing date 1673. The invention of the steam-engine is also ascribed to him; the merit of which has since been claimed by captain Savery, although the Harlean Collection of MSS. in the British Museum contains a book of Morland's, in which he not only showed the practicability of the plan, but went so far as to calculate the power of cylinders. Morland was likewise the author of, 1. 'The Count of Pagan's Method of delineating all Manner of Fortifications from the exterior Polygon, reduced to English Measure, and converted into Herotectonick Lines,' Lond. 1672. 2. 'A new and most useful Instrument for Addition and Subtraction, &c. with a perpetual Almanack,' 8vo. ibid. 1672. 3. 'The Doctrine of Interest, both Simple and Compound, explained,' 8vo. ibid. 1679. 4. 'Description of the Tuba Stenborophonica,' or the Speaking Trumpet, fol. ibid. 1671. 5. 'Hydrostatics, or Instructions concerning Water Works,' 1697.

Morland, George, an English artist, and the son of an artist, was born in 1764, and died in 1804, after a dissolute life wasted in intemperance. His early productions were landscapes, and he painted one or two small conversation pieces, but his favourite subjects were animals, chiefly of the domestic kind, which he painted in a masterly manner. At the Exhibition of the Royal Academy in 1791, he produced a picture representing the inside of a stable, with horses and draymen, &c. larger than a half-length canvass, which was esteemed his master-piece.

MORLEY, George (Ecc.) an English prelate, son of Francis Morley, esq. by a sister of sir John Denham, was born in Cheapside, London, in 1597; became a student of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1615, where he took his degrees A. B. and A. M. in 1618 and 1621; and obtained a canonry of Christ Church in 1641, the first year's profit of which he gave to his majesty towards the charge of the war then begun. He was employed by the king to engage the university not to submit to the parliamentary visitation, which he executed with such success that the convocation had the spirit to pass an act for that purpose with only one dissentient voice, although they were in the power of the enemy; after which he was appointed by the university, with others, to negociate the surrender of the Oxford garrison to the usurping powers, which he managed with considerable address. Although permitted to attend upon the king at Newport, in the Isle of Wight, as one of his chaplains, he was deprived of all his preferments; and leaving England in 1649, he continued in a state of exile until the restoration, when he was sent over by Chancellor Hyde to contribute his endeavours towards the attainment of this object. In 1660 he was raised to the see of Worcester; in 1662 was translated to that of Winchester, and died in 1684. He spent above 8000*l.* in repairing Farnham Castle, and above 4000*l.* in purchasing Winchester-house at Chelsea; he founded five scholarships of 10*l.* per annum each in Pembroke College, and bequeathed in his will 1000*l.* to purchase lands for the augmenting of some small vicarages, besides many other benefactions. He was the author of several pieces; as 'Epistola Apologetica et Prænetica ad Theologum quendam Belgam Scripta,' 4to. 1663, and reprinted in 1685, in which he endeavoured to clear king Charles II from the imputation of popery; 'The Sum of a Conference with Darcey, a Jesuit at Brussels,' 1649; 'An Argument drawn from the Evidence and Certainty of Sense, against the Doctrine of Transubstantiation;' 'Ad Virum Janum Ulitium Epistolæ duæ de Invocatione Sanctorum;' all these, with some others, except the first and second, were printed together in 4to. 1683. [Vide Plate XII]

Morley, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Parker [vide Parker], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Parker, earl of Morley, viscount Boringdon, and baron Boringdon, co. Devon. The title borne by the eldest son is viscount Boringdon.

Arms. Sable, a stag's head caboshed between two flaunches argent.

Supporters. Dexter, a stag argent; sinister a greyhound regardant sable, each collared or, and thereto antique shields appendant gules, that on the dexter charged with a horse's head couped argent, bridled or, the sinister with a ducal coronet or.

Motto. "Fideli certa merces."

MORLEY, Lord, a title formerly enjoyed by the family of Lovel, from which it passed to Henry Parker, son of Sir William Parker. Edward, third lord Morley, having married Elisabeth, sole daughter of William Stanley, lord Monteagle, his son and heir William (through whom the Gunpowder Plot was discovered) became lord Morley and Monteagle, which title became extinct at the death of Thomas, the last lord Morley and Monteagle in 1684.

MORNAY, Philip de (Hist.) Seigneur du Plessis, a Protestant, and Privy Counsellor to Henry IV, was born at Buhi in 1549, and died in 1621, after having taken an active part in the wars and religious dissensions of his time. He wrote many things on the subject of religion, as 'Traité de la Verité de la Religion Chrétienne;' 'Le Mystere d'Iniquité;' 'De la Mesure de la Foi;' 'Du Concile;' 'Des Meditations;' besides his 'Memoires et Lettres,' printed in 4 vols. 4to.

MORNINGTON, Earl of (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the marquis of Wellesley.

MOROCCO (Geog.) a kingdom which, with that of Fez, forms one great empire, situated on the western borders of Barbary, and once formed a part of Mauritania.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the W. by the Atlantic, N. by the Mediterranean, E. by Algiers and Tafelet, and S. by Darah. Its greatest length is above 600 miles, and it is from 200 to 380 in breadth.

Towns. The principal towns are Morocco, the capital of the empire; Fez, the second city and capital of the kingdom of Fez; Mequinez; Buragra, or Sallee, the ancient Cele; Tangier, anciently Tingis, and the capital of Tingitania; Alcassar, or Alcazar, formerly Cæsar al Cabiris; Arzilla, the ancient Zitia; Ceuta; Tetuan; Messa; Tagost; Taphilet, &c.

Rivers. The principal rivers are Mulwyah, Taga, Cebu, Ommirabeh, or Marbea, Tensift, Hued Agmed, &c.

Mountains. The Atlas surrounds this empire on the south in the form of a crescent, and divides it from the province of Darah. This is called the Great Atlas, in distinction from the Little Atlas, which is another ridge that extends along the Barbary coast from the straits of Gibraltar quite to the district of Bona, in the kingdom of Algiers, and is called by the natives Erriff. Both chains, being of a vast height, and covered with snow so as to be seen at a great distance off at sea, are called by the Spaniards Montes claros, or Bright Mountains; and by the natives formerly Dyris and Adyris, according to Strabo.

History. This country, after having continued four centuries under the Roman yoke, from the invasion of Julius Cæsar to the declension of the empire, fell under the Goths, who crossed over from Spain and established a new government there, which lasted until about 600, when the Saracens and Arabians overran this part, and formed themselves into a number of petty kingdoms and principalities, which waged perpetual war with each other until the 11th century, when Abu Teschifien, the first king of the family of the Almoravides, built the city of Morocco, and conquered the kingdom of Fez. His son Joseph completed the work which his father had begun, and brought all the Moorish states, both in Africa and Spain, under his dominion. These were all lost in the reigns of his grandson and great grandson Abu Ali and Ibrahim, or Abraham, at whose tragical end the sovereignty passed to the family of the Mohadins, or Almohades, and continued in this line for three generations, when Mahommed, the son of Al Mansur, lost the famous battle of Sierra Morena, wherein 20,000 Moors were slain. This disaster weakened his power so much that the viceroys of Fez, Tunis, and Tremecen, shook off the yoke; and, on the death of Ceyed, one of Mahommed's grandsons, the power of the Almohades was supplanted by that of the Merini, who, in the person of Abdallah, made himself master of Morocco and Fez. The Merini, or Benemimerini, were ousted in their turn by the Oatages, who, by their ill-conduct and government, gave a handle to the old sheriff Hascen, or Hassan, who pretended to be a descendant of Mahomet, to drive them from the throne. His successors, who have retained the empire ever since, were Mohammed, who succeeded his father Hassen in 1516, Abdallah, Muley Mohammed, Muley Moluch, Muley Hammed Zidan, Abdelmelech, Muley Elwaly, Muley Hammed, Muley Archy, Muley Ishmael, Muley Hammed Deby, Abdelmelech, Abdallah, &c.

MORON, John (Ecc.) a cardinal and bishop of Modena, and one of the most celebrated prelates of his time, was made bishop of Modena by Clement VII, and sent as nuncio into Germany in 1542, when he displayed such abilities at the council of Trent that the pope gave him a cardinal's hat in the same year. He was afterwards employed by Julius III in the capacity of legate at the diet of Augsburg, and continued to render essential services to the Holy See until the death of this pope in 1555. Paul IV, instigated by the insinuations of Moron's enemies, caused him to be arrested on pretence of his leaning to Protestantism, and kept him in confinement until his death, when he was set at liberty by Pius IV, and employed by him and his successor, Gregory XIII, on the most important concerns of the church. This cardinal died in 1580, just as he had returned from Germany, after the fulfilment of one of those missions on which he had been so honourably engaged the greater part of his life.

MOROSINI (Hist.) a noble and ancient family of Venice that held the highest offices in the state.

MOROSINI, Dominico, was elected doge in 1148, when he sent assistance to the Christians in Palestine, and governed the republic for eight years with distinguished prudence until his death in 1156.

MOROSINI, Marino, was elected doge in 1249, and died in 1252, after having reduced the town of Padua, and rendered other important services to the state.

MOROSINI, Michael, died of the plague four months after his election in 1381, during which time he reduced the Isle of Tenedos.

MOROSINI, Francis, a doge of Venice, and one of the greatest captains which the Venetian republic ever had, begun his glorious career at the age of 20, and continued to display his valour and skill in a series of bold and, for the most part, successful enterprizes against the Turks until his death in 1694, during which time he had been made generalissimo of the Venetian forces four several times, and was acting in that capacity against the Turks at the time of his death. It was in his time that Candia was taken, but not until after a siege of 28 months, during which he sustained more than 56 assaults, and 40 subterraneous encounters, and sprung the mines of the besiegers more than 460 times, so that the Turks lost in this siege 120,000 men, and the Venetians more than 30,000. A monument was erected to him with this inscription, FRANCISCO MAUROCENO PELOPONNESIACO SENATUS ANNO MDCVIC.

MOROSINI, N. another of this family, was sent on an embassy to Savoy, and afterwards to France, &c.

Morosini, Mark (Ecc.) of the family above-mentioned, was bishop of Venice in 1235, and governed the church for 20 years.

Morosini, Peter, a cardinal, and one of the ablest civilians of his time, obtained the cardinal's hat from Gregory XII in 1408, after which he was at the council of Constance, and died in 1424. He was sent as legate by Martin V to the kingdom of Naples for the crowning of queen Joan II, and employed in divers other missions.

Morosini, John Francis, a cardinal, was born at Venice in 1537, and, after having been sent on different embassies to Poland, Spain, France, and Constantinople, embraced the ecclesiastical profession, when he was sent as nuncio into France by Sixtus V, from whom he received the cardinal's hat in 1588. He died in 1596, having fulfilled his missions, both political and ecclesiastical, with fidelity, zeal, and prudence.

Morosini, John Francis, patriarch of Venice, was elevated to this dignity in 1644, and died in 1678, at the age of 72.

Morosini, Andrew (Biog.) although not so elevated as those of the same name above-mentioned, yet maintained the honour of his family in the different offices which he filled, but particularly that of historiographer to the republic, in which he succeeded Paul Paruta, and died in 1618, at the age of 60. He was employed in continuing Paruta's History, which he brought down to 1615. It was published at Venice in folio, 1623, and 4to. 1719, in the collection of the Historians of Venice. He likewise published 'Opuscula et Epistolæ,' and 'L'Impresse e Espeditioni di Terra Santa,' &c. 4to. Venice, 1627.

Morosini, Paul, brother of the preceding, and also historiographer to the republic, gave an entire History of the Venetian State from its origin to the year 1487, which was published in the Italian language.

MORPETH, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Carlisle.

MORPHEUS (Myth.) the son and minister of the god Somnus, who is generally supposed to preside over sleep. Ovid. Met. l. 11.

MORRIS (Her.) the name of a family of great antiquity in North Wales, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred on sir John Morris in 1802. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, on a saltire engrailed ermine, a bezant charged with a cross couped gules.

Morton, or Reynolds Moreton, the family name of lord Ducie, which title was first conferred in 1720, on Matthew Ducie Moreton.

MORVEAUX, Lewis Bernard Guyton de (Biog.) a French chemist, was born in 1737 at Dijon, and died in 1815, leaving among his works, a Course of Chemistry, 4 vols. 8vo. besides numerous papers in the 'Annales de Chimie.'

MORYSON (Hist.) or Morisoh, Sir Richard, a statesman of Essex, who, according to Wood, spent some time at Oxford, was afterwards sent by Henry VIII to Charles V, where he continued during the reign of Edward VI, and died in 1556, leaving among his works as an author, 1. 'Apomaxis Calumniarum, Convitiorumque, quibus Johannes Cochlæus Homo Theologus, &c. Henrici VIII Nomen obscurare, &c. Epistolà studuit,' 4to. Lond. 1537, to which Cochlæus answered in his 'Scopa in Araneas Ricardi Morysini,' 4to. Lips. 1538. 2. 'An Exhortation to stir up Englishmen in Defence of their Country,' 8vo. 1539. 3. 'Invective against the great and detestable Vice, Treason,' 8vo. ibid. 1539. 4. 'Comfortable Consolation for the Birth of Prince Edward, rather than Sorrow for the Death of Queen Jane.'

Moryson, Fines (Biog.) a native of Lincolnshire, was born in 1566, educated at Cambridgeshire, and died about 1614, leaving 'An Itinerary containing ten Years' Travels through the twelve Dominions of Germany,' &c. fol. Lond. 1617; and 'An History of Ireland, from 1599 to 1603, with a short Narration of the State of the Kingdom from the Year 1169,' 2 vols. 8vo. Dublin, 1735.

MOSA (Geog.) a river of Gallia Belgica, falling into the German Ocean, now called the Maese, or Meuse. The bridge over it called Mosæpons, is supposed to be the site of the present Maestricht. Tacit. Hist. l. 4, c. 66.

MOSCHION (Biog.) the name of four different writers, of whom nothing is known except by some fragments of their writings, some few verses, and a treatise, 'De Morbis Mulierum,' edited by Gesner, 4to. Basil. 1566. The effigy of Moschion the comic poet is given in Plate XXX.

MOSCHOPULUS, Emanuel (Biog.) the name of two authors, the first of whom, a native of Candia, flourished in the 14th and 15th centuries, and left a work entitled 'Quæstiones Grammaticæ,' 1392; the second, who was his nephew, was born at Constantinople, which he left for Italy in 1455. He was the author of 'Lectiones Atticæ.'

MOSCHUS (Biog.) a Greek Bucolic poet in the age of Ptolemy Philadelphus, whose writings are commonly joined with those of Bion, his cotemporary, and the cotemporary of Theocritus. The few remains of these two poets are to be found in all editions of the 'Poetæ Minores;' and of separate editions, that at Bruges, 4to. 1565; that of Schwebelius, 8vo. Venet. 1746; and that of Heskin, 8vo. Oxon. 1748, are reckoned the best. Politian translated Moschus into Latin verse with considerable success.

MOSCOVY (Geog.) a considerable region in Europe, and a part of the ancient Sarmatia, which now bears the name of Russia. [Vide Russia]

MOSCOW (Geog.) or Moskow, a city of Russia, capital of the government of Moscow, and formerly the capital of the whole empire, 397 miles S.E. Petersburg, 142 E. by N. Vienna. Lon. 37° 33′ E. lat. 55° 45′ N.

History of Moscow.

Moscow, or Moskwa, according to the Russians, which derives its name from the river Moskwa, running on the south side of it, is not a place of great antiquity, having been founded about 1166, previous to which Kiov, or Krie, was the residence of the government. It was progressively enlarged in the 13th and 14th centuries, but in 1382 was taken after a short siege by Tamerlane, and soon after evacuated. It subsequently fell into the hands of the Tartars more than once, by whom it was burned to the ground in 1572, but they were unable to force the Kremlin, to which the czar had retired. It was taken by the Poles in 1611, burnt a second time in 1698, a third time in 1699, when more than 20,000 houses were consumed; but the most important event which has befallen Moscow was reserved to the present century, when, on the occasion of Bonaparte's invasion of Russia, the governor, count Rostopchin, after having surrendered the city to the French, found means to cause such a conflagration as obliged them to retreat, and served as one of the grand steps towards the defeat and annihilation of the French army. Nearly three-fourths of the city were consumed by this fire, but such activity was employed both by the government and individuals, at the conclusion of the peace, that a new city was raised from its ruins in the year 1818.

MOSELLA (Geog.) now Moselle, a river of Belgic Gaul. Tacit. Annal. l. 13, c. 53; Flor. l. 3.

MOSELLE (Geog.) a large river, called by the ancients Mosella, which rises in the Vosges, whose waters, Epinal and Toul, receives the Meurte below Nancy, and passing by Metz, Thionville, and Treves, enters the Rhine at Coblentz. A modern department of France is called after this river, of which Metz is the capital.

MOSELEY, Benjamin (Biog.) a physician, and native of Essex, who died in 1819, distinguished himself in his day by his opposition to the vaccine inoculation; he also wrote 'Observations on the Dysentery of the West Indies,' and 'Two Treatises on Coffee and Sugar.'

MOSER, George Michael (Biog.) an artist, was born at Schafhausen in 1705, and died in 1783. He excelled in chasing, and was also reckoned one of the best medallists in his time, besides which, he left many specimens of his skill in painting in enamel. His daughter has since distinguished herself by her skill in painting flowers.

MOSES (Bibl.) משה, son of Amram and Jocabed, was born in Egypt A. M. 2433, A. C. 1571, and exposed in an ark of bull-rushes on the banks of the Nile, from which he was rescued by Pharoah's daughter, after which he was chosen by the Almighty to be the deliverer and lawgiver of the Israelites, whom he led through the wilderness, although he was not permitted to enter the land of Canaan. Moses is the most ancient writer, sacred or profane, of whom there remains any authentic works. He has left us the Pentateuch, or the first five books of the Old Testament, which, by the concurrent consent of Jews and Christians, are acknowledged to be authentic and inspired, notwithstanding the cavils which infidels have at different times started on this point. Joseph. Antiq.; Phil. Jud. Vit. Mos.; Euseb. in Chron. et in Præp. Evang. &c.; Clemen. Alexand. Strom. l. 1; Theodoret, Usserius, Genebrard, &c.

Moses (Hist.) a celebrated impostor in the fourth century, who passed himself off upon the Jews of Crete, as their deliverer, and caused the destruction of vast numbers, for whom he promised that he would open a way through the sea. Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 7; Baron. Annal. 432.

Moses, Chorenensis (Ecc.) an Armenian archbishop, who flourished about the year 462, was the author of a History of Armenia, which was first published in Armenian in 1695, by Thomas Vanandensis, an Armenian bishop, from one single MS. It was reprinted with a Latin version in 1736, to which was added 'An Abridgment of Geography,' by William and George, the sons of the famous William Whiston, with a preface, concerning the literature of the Armenians, and their version of the Bible; and an appendix containing two epistles, the one of the Corinthians to Paul the Apostle; the other of Paul the Apostle to the Corinthians, entire from a MS. 4to.

MOSES-BAR-CEPHA (Ecc.) bishop of the Syrians in the 10th century, wrote a Commentary on Paradise, which was translated from the Syriac into Latin, by Andrew Masius, of Brussels. Bellarmin. de Script. Eccles.; Spond. an Annal.

MOSHEIM, John Lawrence (Biog.) a German divine of a noble family, was born at Lubeck in 1695, and died in 1755, leaving, 1. 'Observationes Sacræ et Historico-Criticæ,' 8vo. Amst. 1721. 2. 'Vindiciæ antiquæ Christianorum Disciplinæ adv. J. Tolandi Nasareum,' 8vo. Hamb. 1722. 3. 'De Ætate Apologetici Tertulliani, et Initio Persecutionis Christianorum sub Severo Commentatio,' 4to. Helm. 1736. 5. 'Historia Tartarorum Ecclesiastica,' 4to. Helm. 1741. 6. 'De Rebus Christianorum ante Constantinum Magnum Commentarii,' 4to. ibid. 1753. 7. 'Historia Mich. Serveti,' &c.; but the book by which he is best known in England is his Church History, which was at first a small work, published under the title of 'Institutiones Historiæ Christianæ,' of which he printed an enlarged edition in 1755, just before his death. An edition of this by Dr. Charles Coote, in 6 vols. 8vo. 1811, is reckoned the best.

MOSS, Charles (Ecc.) an English prelate, and native of Norfolk, was educated at Cambridge, nominated to the see of St. David's in 1766, translated to that of Bath and Wells in 1774, and died in 1802, leaving a tract in defence of Sherlock's 'Tryal of the Witnesses of the Resurrection,' entitled 'The Evidence of the Resurrection cleared from the Exceptions of a late Pamphlet, entitled The Resurrection of Jesus considered by a moral Philosopher, in answer to the Trial of the Witnesses,' &c. London, 1744, which afterwards appeared under the title of 'The Sequel of the Tryal,' &c. besides which, he published 'A Charge to the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Colchester, occasioned by the uncommon Mortality and quick Succession of Bishops in the See of London, at a Visitation holden in May, 1764.' His son, Dr. Charles Moss, who was educated at Oxford, became a bishop of that diocese in 1807, and died in 1811.

Moss, Robert (Biog.) an English divine, and uncle to the preceding, was born at Gillingham, in Norfolk, in or about 1666, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1729, leaving 'The Report Vindicated from Misreports, being a defence of my Lords the Bishops, as well as the Clergy of the Lower House of Convocation, in a Letter from a Member of that House to the Prolocutor,' &c. He also wrote some Latin poetry in his early days. A Latin Ode of his is printed in 'Mœstissimæ ac lætissimæ Academiæ Cantabrigiensis affectus decedente Carolo II, succedente Jacobo II;' and a Latin poem, and an English ode, in the 'Lacrymæ Cantabrigiensis in Obitum serenissimæ Reginæ Mariæ,' besides several other poems.

MOSSOM, Robert (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, who was promoted to the see of Derry in 1666, and died in 1679, was the author of 'The Preacher's Tripartite,' fol. Lond. 1657, and another 'Variæ colloquendi Formulæ, in Usum Condiscipulorum in Palæstrâ Literariâ,' &c. Lond. 1659; 'A Narrative panegyrical on the Life, &c. of George Wild, Bishop of Derry,' 1665; and 'Zion's Prospect in its first View, in a Summary of Divine Truths, viz. of God's Providence, Decrees,' &c. 4to. 1654, reprinted for the third time in 1711.

History of Munich.

This town, which in the Latin of the middle ages is called Munachum, was built in 962, and surrounded by walls in 1156 or 1157. It surrendered to the Swedes and German Protestants under Gustavus Adolphus; in the war of 1704, between the Austrians and Bavarians, it fell into the hands of the former after the battle of Blenheim. It was also exposed to the vicissitudes of the war of 1741, when the elector made an attempt to attain to the imperial dignity; but was exempt from any farther troubles and commotions until 1796, when the French under Moreau approached the city and obliged the elector to make a separate treaty. It was again occupied by the French in 1800, and continued in alliance with France until the fall of Bonaparte.

History of Murcia.

This town was probably not known to the Romans, being first mentioned in history in the year 713, when it was taken, after a desperate resistance, by the Moors, who afterwards made it the capital of a separate kingdom. On its capture by Alphonsus X of Castile in 1265 he fortified it, and peopled it with Catalans. In the war of succession Murcia declared for the Bourbon branch, and its bishop, Belluga, took such measures, by turning the course of the river, as to prevent the advance of the archduke's army.

MURETUS, Marc Anthony (Biog.) a French critic, descended from a good family, was born at Muret, a village near Limoges, in 1526, and died in 1585. His works, consisting of poems, orations, various readings, and epistles, were collected and printed in 5 vols. 8vo. Veron. 1727-30; a selection from them by Checotius in 1741; but the edition in 4 vols. 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1789, printed by Ruhnkenius, is reckoned the best.

MURILLO, Don Bartolome Estivan (Biog.) a Spanish painter. [Vide Morillos]

MURPHY, Arthur (Biog.) a dramatic and miscellaneous writer, was born in 1727 at Clooniquin, in the county of Roscommon, in Ireland, and died in 1805, leaving among his dramatic pieces, his 'Three Weeks after Marriage;' 'Zenobia;' 'The Grecian Daughter,' and others, which are still favourite pieces; besides his Translation of Tacitus, in 4 vols. 4to.; with 'An Essay on the Life and Genius of Tacitus;' 'A Life of Garrick,' &c.

MURRAY, Earl of (Hist.) the name by which the regent Moray and others of the same family are mentioned in English history. [Vide Moray]

MURRAY, Sir William, of Tullibardine, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, took part with John Baliol, and was one of the barons that went to Berwick, the place of meeting for giving decision in favour of the claimants, and where he gave his oath of fealty and subjection to king Edward as direct and superior lord.

MURRAY, Moravia, or Moray, Sir Andrew, of Bothwell, of the family spoken of under Heraldry, was appointed regent in 1332 during the infancy of David II, but, being attacked by Baliol at Roxburgh, he was taken prisoner and carried to England. After being set at liberty in 1334, he assembled an army and kept on a more successful warfare against the English until his death in 1338.

Murray, or Moravia, Thomas de, son of the preceding, was one of the seven hostages sent to England when David II was permitted to visit his dominions, and was afterwards one of the commissioners appointed to treat with the English for the redemption of that monarch in 1357; as also one of the three lords who placed themselves in the hands of the English as a guarantee for the performance of the conditions of the treaty. He died in England in 1361.

Murray, Sir William, of Tullibardine, who was in a high degree of favour with king James III, was concerned in 1495 in a treaty with the English for the keeping of a good understanding betwixt the two realms.

Murray,* Sir William, was very instrumental in bringing about the reformation, but, upon the queen's return from France in 1561, he was much in her favour and confidence, being appointed one of her Privy Council, and in 1565 Comptroller of the Kingdom. Upon the murder of king Henry by Bothwell, he was one of the barons who entered into an association for the defence of the young prince, king James VI. He was of the Privy Council to the regents, and, upon the death of the earl of Marr, he and sir Alexander Erskine, of Gogar, were appointed governors of the young king, and, as soon as the latter constituted a new Privy Council, he was one of the number, in which office he continued until his death in 1583.

Murray, Sir Andrew, of the family of the Murrays of Arngosk, who was afterwards lord Balvaird, was bred to the church, and comported himself in those troublesome times so much to the satisfaction of the king, that he honoured him with the peerage in 1641, notwithstanding he was in the ministry. He, however, fell in so far with the rebel faction as to take the covenant, and died in 1644. His death is said to have been hastened by the distractions which then tore the kingdom asunder.

Murray, vide Atholl.

Murray (Her.) the name of a noble and far spread family in Scotland, the common ancestor of which, according to all antiquaries, was one Friskinus, a gentleman of note and figure in the reign of king David I, who came to the throne in 1122. This Friskinus obtained the lands of Duffus, Rossill, &c. in the shire of Murray: and William, the third in descent from him, assumed the name of William de Moravia, which was afterwards changed to that of Moray, or Murray. Of this family the oldest branch is that of the Murrays of Tullibardine, of whom the first that was ennobled was John Murray, who was created in 1604 lord Murray, of Tullibardine, and in 1606 earl of Tullibardine. William, second earl of Tullibardine, was created earl of Atholl in 1629; his son John, the second earl, was advanced in 1676 to the dignity of marquis of Atholl; his son John was created duke of Atholl in 1704; John, the fourth earl, was created a peer of England in 1786, by the title of Earl of Strange, being also, in right of his mother, baron Strange. [Vide Atholl] Lord Charles Murray, second son of John, first duke of Atholl, was created in 1686 earl of Dunmore, viscount of Fincastle, lord Murray, of Blair, &c. [Vide Dunmore]; and James Murray, second son of John, the fourth duke of Atholl, was created in 1824 an English peer, by the title of lord Glenlyon, of Glenlyon, co. Perth.

Murray of Elibank, another branch of the same family, has been ennobled in the person of sir Patrick Murray, who was created a peer in 1643, by the title of lord Elibank. [Vide Elibank]

Murray of Arngosk, a third branch, was ennobled in the person of sir David Murray, who, in 1605, was created lord Scone; in 1621 was farther advanced to the dignity of viscount Stourmont; and William Murray, fourth son of David, the seventh viscount Stourmont, was created in 1776 earl of Mansfield. [Vide Mansfield]

Murray, Lord, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Mansfield.

Murray of Laurie, co. Perth, the name of a family which derives its descent from the race of the Mac-Gregors, although in the last two or three generations they have assumed the name of Murray. Of this family was John Murray, who was created a baronet in 1795; their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a sword in bend azure, and an oak tree eradicated in bend sinister proper, in chief a crown gules.

Crest. A lion's head crowned with an antique crown with points.

Supporters. On the dexter (alluding to their royal descent) an unicorn argent, crowned and horned or; and on the sinister a deer proper, tyred azure.

Motto. "E'en do, bait spair nocht."

MURSA (Geog.) now Essek, a town of Hungary, where the Drave falls into the Danube.

MUSA, Antonius (Biog.) a freedman, and physician of Augustus, to whom have been attributed two small treatises, namely, 'De tuenda Valetudine;' and 'De Herba Botanica,' but on doubtful authority. Schol. Plin. l. 19; Dio. l. 53.

MUSÆ (Myth.) goddesses who presided over poetry, music, dancing, and the liberal arts; of these there were nine in number, namely, Clio, Euterpe, Thalia, Melpomene, Terpsichore, Erato, Polyhymnia, Calliope, and Urania. [Vide Clio, &c.] They were, according to Hesiod, the daughters of Jupiter and Mnemosyne.

Hesiod. Theog. v. 52.

Μῦσαι Ὀλυμπίαδες, κῦραι Διὸς αἰγιόχοιο
Τὰς ἐν Πιερίῃ κρονίδῃ τέκε πατρὶ μιγεῖσα

They are called Pierides, from Mount Pierius, where they were born.

Ovid. de Art. Amand. l. 3.

Vatibus Aoniis faciles estote, puellæ;
Numen inest illis; Pierides que favent.

Tibull. l. 1, el. 3.

Dicite Pierides, quonam donetur honore
Seu mea, seu fallor, cara Neæra tamen
* * * * *
Per Vos, auctores hujus mihi carminis, oro
Castaliamque umbram, Pieriosque lacos.

The mountains Helicon and Parnassus are made the ordinary seats of the Muses on earth.

Virg. Georg. l. 3.

Aonio rediens deducam vertice Musas.

Hom. Hym. in Mus.; Æschin. in Tim.; Apollod. l. 1; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 13; Diodor. l. 1; Fest. de Verb. Signif.

Musæ (Numis.) the Muses were commonly represented as young and beautiful virgins, sometimes dancing in a chorus, to denote the alliance between the liberal arts, and commonly appeared in different attire, according to the arts and sciences over which they presided, as in the annexed figures of Calliope holding a roll of parchment; Clio with a harp;

Calliope.

Clio.

Urania.

a mask in her hand; Thalia, the inventrix of comedy, in a singular habit and bifrons, resting with her right hand on a club, holding in her left a mask, having a sword by her side, and her head covered with the skin of a lion; Melpomene, or Polyhymnia, with a lyre; and Terpsichore with a pipe.

Melpomene, or Polyhymnia. Terpsichore.

MUSÆUS (Biog.) an ancient Greek poet, supposed to have been the son of Linus and Orpheus, whose memory Virgil has honoured by placing him in the Elysian fields attended by a great multitude. None of this poet's compositions are extant; but there is another Museus, called the Grammarian, who is supposed to have lived in the fourth century; whose poem on the Loves of Hero and Leander is preserved, and has been frequently reprinted, both in collections and separately. The edition of Rover, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1727, and that of Schroder, Gr. and Lat. 8vo. Leovard. 1742, are esteemed the best. Virg. Æn. l. 6, v. 677; et Serv. in Loc.; Grac. de Poet. Hist. l. 2.

MUSCULUS, Wolfgang (Biog.) a German divine and reformer, was born in 1497 at Dieuze, in Lorraine, and died in 1563, leaving translations of the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomenes, Theodoret, Evagrius, and the History of Polybius, &c.

MUSGRAVE, Sir Philip (Hist.) a zealous loyalist in the time of the rebellion, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was made commander-in-chief of Westmoreland and Cumberland in 1644, and afterwards governor of Carlisle, upon the surrender of which garrison, the last that yielded to the rebels, he attended the king at Cardiff. He was taken prisoner at Rowton Moor in 1645, but afterwards took Carlisle by surprize, and was a second time appointed its governor. After the battle of Worcester sir Philip attended on king Charles II in France and Holland, and thence went to the Isle of Man, which he bravely defended under the countess of Derby, who did not surrender it until it was reduced to the last extremity. At the restoration he was a third time made governor of Carlisle.

MUSGRAVE, Sir Christopher, second son of the preceding, was very active in the royal cause, both during the war and at its termination, being concerned in sir George Booth's rising, for which he suffered a long imprisonment. At the restoration, he succeeded his father as governor of Carlisle, and was one of the Tellers of the Exchequer in the reign of queen Anne.

MUSGRAVE (Her.) the name of a family which came over with the Conqueror, and settled at Musgrave, in Westmoreland. The first of the name on record is Peter Musgrave, who lived in the time of Stephen, from whom the 18th in descent was sir Richard, father of sir Philip above-mentioned, who was created a baronet in 1611. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Azure, six annulets or, three, two, and one.

Crest. Two arms in armour proper, gauntled and grasping an annulet or.

Motto. "Sans changer."

MUSGRAVE, William (Biog.) a physician and antiquary, descended from the family above-mentioned, was born at Charlton-Musgrave, in Somersetshire, in 1657, educated at Oxford, and died in 1721, leaving, 1. 'De Arthritide Symptomatica Dissertatio,' 8vo. 1703. 2. 'De Arthritide Anomala, sive interna, Dissertatio,' 8vo. 1707. 3. 'Julii Vitalis Epitaphium, cum Commentario,' 8vo. 1711. 4. 'De Legionibus Epistola.' 5. 'De Aquilis Romanis Epistola,' 8vo. 1713. 6. 'Inscriptio Tarraconensis cum Commentario.' 7. 'Geta Britannicus,' 8vo. 1715. 8. 'Belgium Britannicum,' 8vo. 1719; all the above tracts on antiquity were published together at Exeter in 4 vols. 8vo. 1720.

MUSGRAVE, Samuel, grandson of the preceding, a scholar and critic, who died in 1782, was the author of 'Exercitationum in Euripidem Libri duo,' 8vo. 1762; Apologia pro Medicina Empirica,' 4to. 1763; besides his notes and readings on Euripides, which were incorporated in an edition of that classic, in 4 vols. 8vo. Oxon. 1778; and two Dissertations on the Grecian Mythology, and the Chronology of the Olympiads, published by Mr. Tyrrwhitt after his death.

MUSGRAVE, Sir Richard, an historian, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born about 1758, and died in 1818, leaving 'Memoirs of the Rebellions in Ireland,' 4to.

MUSITAN, Charles (Biog.) a physician and native of Calabria, who died in 1714, at the age of 80, was the author of a number of works on medicine, which, after being published separately, were collected and published in 2 vols. fol. Genev. 1716.

MUSIUS, Cornelius (Ecc.) an ecclesiastic and native of Delft, was born in 1503, and put to a cruel death in 1572 by the Calvinists, who, irritated at the attempt which was made to establish the inquisition in that part, vented their fury upon Musius, whom they hanged at Leyden, after having mutilated his body in different parts.

MUSKERRY, Lord (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Deane [vide Deane]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, two bars ruby.

Crest. In a ducal coronet a demi-wolf.

Supporters. Two angels habited and winged argent, holding in their exterior hand a palm-branch proper.

Motto. "Forti et fideli nihil difficile."

MUSONIUS, Caius Rufus (Biog.) a stoic philosopher, who was banished by Nero for the freedom of his remarks, and recalled by Vespasian. Tacit. Hist. l. 3.

MUSS, Charles (Biog.) a painter, who died in 1824, at the age of about 43, was particularly happy in enamel painting, in which branch of the art he was lately employed by his majesty.

MUSSASA (Hist.) a warlike princess, who succeeded her father Dongy as sovereign of Congo, and, exchanging her dress for the male habit, often led her soldiers to battle, and to victory, by which she extended her conquests.

MUSSARD, Peter (Biog.) a Protestant of Geneva, was born in 1626, and died in 1681, leaving 'Conformités des Ceremonies Modernes avec les Anciennes,' &c. reprinted in 12mo. Amsterdam, 1744, with the addition of a letter by Conyer Middleton on the same subject.

MUSSARD, Claude, a native of Autun, and author of a work, entitled 'Chronica Samotheorum.'

MUSSATO, Albertin (Hist.) a statesman and historian of Padua, rose by his merits to the first offices of the state in his native city, by which he was sent on an embassy to the emperor Henry VII, and obtained advantageous terms for his countrymen. He was afterwards chosen to treat of peace with Can Scaliger; but the troubles being renewed at Padua, and the city falling into the hands of the enemy, he died in exile in 1330, at the age of 70, leaving, 'Historia Augusta Henrici VII Imp. et alia quæ extant Opera, cum Notis Lauri Pignorii,' &c. fol. Venet. 1636. Mussato's poetical works consist of eclogues, elegies, epistles, two tragedies, &c., which, with his other works, were reprinted in the 'Thesaurus Histor. Ital.' vol. vi. p. 2.

MUSSCHENBROCK, Peter de (Biog.) a mathematician and natural philosopher, was born at Leyden in 1692, and died in 1761, leaving, 1. 'Disputatio de Aeris Præsentia in Humoribus Animalibus,' 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1715. 2. 'Epitome Elementorum Physico-Mathematicorum,' 4to. ibid. 1729. 3. 'Physicæ Experimentales et Geometricæ Dissertationes,' &c. 4to. ibid. 1729. 4. 'Tentamina Experimentorum Naturalium in Academia del Cimento ex Ital. in Lat. conversa,' 4to. ibid. 1731. 5. 'Elementa Physicæ,' 8vo. 1734; translated into English by Colson, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1744. 6. 'Introductio ad Philosophiam Naturalem,' 2 vols. 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1762; and a French translation, in 3 vols. 4to. Paris, 1769, under the title of 'Cours de Physique Experimentale,' &c.; besides some papers chiefly on meteorology, printed in the 'Memoires' of the Academy for 1734-60.

MUSSO, Cornelio (Ecc.) bishop of Bitonto, was born at Placentia in 1511, and raised to the see of Bertinoro, in Romagna, by Paul III, from which he was translated to that of Bitonto. He assisted at the council of Trent, and died in 1574, after having been sent into Germany by the pope Pius IV. Besides his sermons, for which he acquired a great reputation, he left the Acts of the Synod which he held at Bitonto, and other pieces of theology, &c.

MUSTAPHA (Hist.) the name of three emperors of the Turks.

Mustapha I, son of Mahomet III, succeeded his brother Achmet in 1617, and was strangled in 1623 by the jainssaries after a turbulent reign, in which he had been once deposed and reinstated.

Mustapha II, son of Mahomet IV, succeeded his uncle Achmet II in 1695, and after defeating the Imperialists, Venetians, Poles, and Russians, he was, by a reverse of fortune, compelled to make peace, and shortly after, from the discontents of his subjects, to resign his crown in 1703, in which year he died of melancholy.

Mustapha III, son of Achmet III, succeeded in 1757, and died in 1774, before the conclusion of the fatal war which was carrying on between the Turks and Russians.

Mustapha, eldest son of the sultan Soliman I, was strangled by order of his father, at the instigation of Roxolana, who charged him with conspiring against the latter.

MUSURUS, Marcus (Ecc.) a native of Candia, and archbishop of Malvasia, was elevated to that see by Leo X, and died in 1517, at the age of 36. He is still remembered for his Greek verses, which he first prefixed to his edition of Plato's works, printed by Aldus in 1513, which have since been published separately by Muncker, 4to. Amst. 1676, also by Mr. Foster, in his work on the Greek accents, and subsequently by Samuel Butler, at Cambridge, in 1797. Besides his Plato, the learned world is indebted to Musurus for the first editions of Aristophanes and Athenæus, the former published in fol. 1498, and the latter, which is a far less correct work, in fol. Venet. 1514.

MUTA (Myth.) a goddess, who presided over silence among the Romans, and is supposed to be the same as Lara, or Larunda, daughter of Almon. Ovid. Fast. l. 2, v. 580; Lactant. Instit. l. 1, c. 20.

MUTIA (Hist.) a daughter of Q. Mutius Scævola, and sister of Metellus Celer, was the third wife of Pompey, whom he divorced for her incontinence. She was afterwards married to M. Scaurus. Plut. in Pomp.

MUTIANO (Biog.) or Mutian, Jerome, a painter of Brescia, in Italy, was born in 1528, and died in 1590, after having been a successful imitator of Titian.

MUTIANUS (Biog.) an ecclesiastical writer in the sixth century, and the friend of Cassiodorus, translated, at the request of the latter, the Commentaries of Chrysostom, on the Epistles of St. Paul to the Romans, from the Greek into the Latin.

MUTINA (Geog.) now Modena, a Roman colony of Cisalpine Gaul, between the Apennines and the Po, where M. Antony besieged Brutus, whom the consuls Pausa and Hirtius delivered. Two battles were fought in this neighbourhood, in which Antony was defeated and obliged to retire.

MUTIUS Scævola, C. a Roman, whose extraordinary valour and patriotism have procured him lasting renown. When Porsenna, king of Etruria, was besieging Rome in order to reinstate the Tarquins, he disguised himself in the habit of a Tuscan, and obtaining admittance into the tent of Porsenna, he stabbed the secretary of the king to the heart, mistaking him for his royal master, and when brought before Porsenna, he thrust his right hand into a fire that was burning on an altar, and informed the monarch that 300 young Romans had conspired against his life, determining either to destoy him or to perish in the attempt. Upon which the king made peace with the Romans, and retired from the city.

Mart. l. 1, ep. 22.

MYSORE (Geog.) properly Maisoor, a large province in the peninsula of Hindostan, lying between the W. and E. ridges of the Gauts, between the 11th and 15th degrees of north latitude.

History of Mysore.

This country, which is now subject to the presidency of Madras, was subdued, with some other territories, by the famous Hyder Ali, who usurped the throne of Mysore in 1759, and made Seringapatam his capital. He was succeeded by his son Tippoo Saib, who, inheriting his father's hatred to the English, continued the war which the former had begun, but was compelled to make peace in 1784. The war was, however, renewed in 1799, and terminated by the death of Tippoo, and the capture of Seringapatam, when the British reinstated Krishna Odiaver, the son of the last rajah, in the throne of his ancestors.

MYTHECUS (Biog.) a sophist, who, having learnt the art of cooking, went to Sparta, where he practised it with much success, until he was expelled by the magistrates, who said that hunger was the best seasoning. Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 4.

NAIRNE, Robert, Lord (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was a strenuous loyalist during the rebellion, and being taken prisoner at the battle of Worcester was confined in the Tower until the restoration, when he was appointed one of the Lords of Session in 1661, one of the Judges of the Court of Justiciary in 1671, and died in 1683.

Nairne, William, Lord, son-in-law of the preceding, was bred to the sea-service, in which he gave signal marks of valour; but having joined the insurrection in favour of prince Charles in 1715, he was taken at Preston and brought to trial, when he pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to die, but was afterwards pardoned, and died in 1725.

Nairne, Hon. John, eldest son of the preceding, was taken with his father at Preston in 1715, after which he obtained a partial reversal of his attainder; but engaging in the insurrection which took place in 1745, he retired to France, and died in 1770, at the age of 79.

Nairne (Her.) or Narne, the name of a family, of which mention is made as early as 1406, when Michael de Narne witnessed a charter of Robert, duke of Albany. His descendant, Robert Nairne, of Strathord, the loyalist abovementioned, was created a Scotch peer in 1681, by the title of lord Nairne, which was forfeited by William Murray, his son-in-law, and son of the marquis of Athol in 1715; but was restored in 1824 to William Nairne, his great grandson.

NAIRONI, Anthony Faustus (Biog.) a Maronite of Mount Lebanon, who died at Rome in 1711, at the age of 80, wrote 'Euoplia Fidei Catholicæ ex Syrorum Monumentis adversus Ævi nostri Novatores;' 'Dissertatio de Origine, Nomine ac Religione Marouitarum.'

NALSON, John (Biog.) an historical writer, was born about 1638, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1686, after having testified his loyalty in the midst of rebellion, leaving, 1. 'An impartial Collection of the great Affairs of State, from the Beginning of the Scotch Rebellion in 1639, to the Murder of King Charles I,' &c. 2 vols. fol. Lond. 1682-3. 2. 'The Countermine; or, a short but true Discovery of the dangerous Principles and secret Practices of the Dissenting Party, especially the Presbyterians, shewing that Religion is pretended but Rebellion intended;' 8vo. Lond. 1677. 3. 'The Common Interest of King and People, shewing the Original, Antiquity, and Excellency of Monarchy, compared with Aristocracy and Democracy, and particularly of our English Monarchy; and that absolute, papal, and presbyterian popular Supremacy are utterly inconsistent with Prerogative, Property, and Liberty,' 8vo. ibid. 1678. 4. 'A true Copy of the Journal of the High Court of Justice for the Trial of Charles I, as it was read in the House of Commons, and attested under the hand of Phelps,' Clerk to that Infamou Court,' fol. ibid. 1684. 5. NAMUR (Geog.) one of the seventeen provinces composing the Netherlands, which is inland, and bounded partly by the French frontier, and partly by the Belgic provinces of Hainault, South Brabant, and Liege. Before the French revolution it belonged to Austria; but in 1794 the whole was overrun by the French, in whose hands it remained until 1814, when the Austrian part was incorporated with the new kingdom of the Netherlands, and the French part was added to the Belgic frontier.

NAMUR, a considerable town in the capital of the province above-mentioned, situated between two rising grounds at the conflux of the Sambre and the Maese, 30 m. S. W. Liege. Lon. 4° 51′ E. lat. 50° 28′ N.

History of Namur.

Namur, in the Latin of the middle ages Namurcum, had originally princes of its own, who were called counts, but the county of Namur at length reverted in the 15th century to the counts of Flanders. It is noted in military history by the siege it stood in 1692 against Louis XIV by whom it was taken, and in 1695 against William III of England. It was seized by the French at the beginning of the 18th century, but ceded to Austria in 1713. In 1746 it was taken by the French, and in 1794 again occupied by the same people, with the rest of the province. [Vide Namur]

NANCEL, Nicholas de (Biog.) a physician, so called from the place of his birth, who was born in 1539, and died in 1610, was the author of, 1. 'Stichologia Græca Latinaque Informanda et Reformanda,' 8vo. 2. 'A Treatise on the Plague,' 8vo. 3. 'Tractatus de Deo, de Immortalitate Animæ contra Galenum,' &c. 8vo. 4. 'Declamationum Liber,' &c. 8vo. 5. 'Petri Rami Vita,' 8vo.

NANCY (Geog.) in French Nanci, and in the Latin of the middle ages Nancium, a city in the north-east of France, in the ancient province of Lorraine, and capital of the modern department of the Meurthe, 30 m. S. Metz, 16 W. Strasburg, 230 E. Paris. Lon. 6° 10′ E, lat. 48° 41′ N. This town, which was the ancient residence of the dukes of Lorraine, was built about the 11th century, and in the 18th century it became the seat of several literary institutions; as, a Royal Academy of Sciences, founded in 1751, a College of Medicine the next year, and a College of Surgery in 1770, and the University of Pont à Mousson, which was transferred hither in 1768. All these institutions, which fell to the ground at the revolution, owed their rise to Stanislaus I, who made it his residence after he was driven from the throne of Poland.

NANGIS, William de (Biog.) a French historian in the reign of St. Louis, and a Benedictine monk of the Abbey of St. Denys, wrote the Lives of St. Louis and Philip le Hardi, and two chronicles. The lives were printed for the first time in Pithou's Collection in 1596, and the second chronicle in the 'Spicilegium' of D'Achery. The Life of St. Louis was reprinted with Joinville's history of the same prince, &c. fol. Paris, 1761.

NANI, John Baptist (Hist.) a noble Venetian, was born in 1616, sent on an embassy into France in 1641; on another embassy to the imperial court of Germany in 1654; and again into France in 1660, when he was present at the marriage of Louis XIV. He died in 1678, after having served his country on many other occasions, particularly by writing its history, under the title of 'Istoria della Republica Veneta dal 1613 insino 1673,' the second part of which was printed in the year of his death; an English translation of the first part was published by sir Robert Honeywood, fol. 1673. He likewise wrote an Account of his Second Ambassage into France in 1660.

NANNI, or Nannius, in his native language Nanningh, Peter, a philologer and general scholar, was born at Alcmaer, in Holland, in 1500, and died in 1557, leaving among his works, of which Foppen has given a list, Commentaries on Cicero, on Virgil, and Horace's Art of Poetry; translations of some parts of Demosthenes, Synesius, Apollonius, Plutarch, St. Athanasius, St. Basil, and St. Chrysostom, &c.; besides 'Miscellaneorum Decas,' and 'Dialogismi Heroinarum,' &c.

NANTERRE (Geog.) a town in the Isle of France, about five miles W. Paris, between that city and St. Germaine, near the Seine, is celebrated as the birthplace of St. Genevieve, the patron of Paris. It is called in the Latin of the middle ages Nemptodorum, or Nemetodurum, as the place where a council was held in 591 for the baptism of king Clotarius II. Greg. Turon. l. 10, c. 18.

NANTES (Geog.) a large commercial town in the west of France, in the ancient province of Upper Britany, and capital of the modern department of the Loire Inferieure, situated on the Loire and Ardre, 58 m. S. by E. Rennes, 217 S. W. Paris. Lon. 1° 33′ W. lat. 47° 13′ N.

History of Nantes.

Nantes, which was known to the ancients by the name of Nannetum Condovicum, is said by some fabulous writers to have been built by Nantes, one of the descendants of Noah, but of its origin nothing authentic is recorded. It had princes of its own by the name of counts, and was the residence of the dukes of Britany. The University, founded in 1460, was converted during the revolution into a Lyceum; besides which it has a School of Anatomy, and other public institutions. This town has suffered much at different times. It was taken in 841 by Nomenoi, a descendant from the ancient kings of Britany, and retaken in 844 by count Lambert, who put all the inhabitants to the sword. In 1342 the English besieged this city, but without success; and in 1355 they took the castle, which was retaken by Guy de Rochefort, who refused the garrison quarter. King Henry IV of France visited this city in 1598, when he issued the celebrated edict in favour of the Protestants, which was revoked in 1685 by Louis XIV. Nantes had its full share of suffering from the revolution, the civil war of La Vendee having extended to its very gates. It is the see of a bishop, suffragan of Tours, and has had many councils assembled within its walls, as in 655, 1125, 1139, 1276, &c.

NANTEUIL, Robert (Biog.) an engraver, was born at Rheims in 1630, and died in 1678, leaving 240 prints as specimens of his skill, including portraits of all the most distinguished persons in France at that period.

NANTIGNI, Louis Chazot de (Biog.) a genealogist, was born in 1692 at Saulz le Duc, in Burgundy, and died in 1755, leaving 'Genealogies Historiques des Rois, des Empereurs, et de toutes les Maisons Souveraignes,' 4 vols. 4to.; 'Tablettes Geographiques,' 12mo. 1725; 'Tablettes Historiques, Genealogiques, et Chronologiques,' 1748, &c. 9 vols. 24mo.; and 'Tablettes de Themis,' 12mo. 1755.

NANTILDA (Hist.) a queen of France and wife of Dagobert, governed the kingdom with great prudence in 638, and during the minority of her son, Clovis II, and died in 641.

NAOGEORGUS (Biog.) or Kirchmaer, Thomas, a Protestant divine, was born in 1511 at Straubingen, in Bavaria, and died in 1578, leaving 'Regnum Papisticum,' 8vo. 1553, and 1559, a poem; the later of the two editions sometimes contains 'Sylva Carminum,' and 'Sylvula Carminum;' besides which he wrote 'Pamachius Tragedia,' 8vo. 1538; 'Incendia, sive Pyrgopolinices Tragedia,' 8vo. 1538; 'Agricultura Sacra,' 8vo. 1551; 'Hieremias Tragedia,' 8vo. 1551; 'Mercator Tragedia,' 8vo. 1551. There are two editions of the French translation of the 'Converted Merchant,' 8vo. 1558, and 12mo. 1561; and a third in 12mo. 1591, in which is Beza's 'Comedie du Pape Malade.'

NAOMI (Bibl.) נעמי, wife of Elimelech, who retired into the land of Moab on occasion of a famine in Judæa. Her daughter-in-law, Ruth, returned with her afterwards to Judæa, and dwelt with her at Bethlehem, as narrated in the Book of Ruth.

NAOUDHAR (Hist.) the tenth king of Persia, of the first race or dynasty, denominated Pischdadians, succeeded his father Manugeher, but was opposed by Afrasiab, king of Turkestan, and, after many battles, was finally defeated and taken prisoner, when he was put to death by his rival.

NAPIER, Sir Alexander (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the ambassadors sent to England in 1451, and in 1468 was sent with the Lord Chancellor to negotiate the marriage between king James III and the king of Denmark's daughter. He died in 1473, after having been employed on other public occasions.

NAPIER, Sir Archibald, first Lord, was appointed Gentleman of the Privy Chamber to James VI, whom he accompanied to England, was sworn a Privy Councillor in 1615, constituted Lord Justice Clerk, and one of the Lords of Session in 1623. On the breaking out of the rebellion he took a decided part in favour of his sovereign, was one of those who signed the association at Cumbernauld in 1641; was imprisoned in the Castle of Edinburgh the same year, and, after obtaining his release by means of his son Archibald, accompanied the marquis of Montrose to the south of Scotland, and died in 1645, at the age of 70. He was the author of 'A True Relation of the Unjust Pursute against the Lord Napier, written by himself,' containing an account of some court intrigues, in which he was the sufferer; this was published by Francis, seventh lord Napier, under the title of 'Memoirs of Archibald, first Lord Napier, written by himself, published from the original MS. in the possession of the present Lord Napier,' Edinburgh, 1793.

NAPIER, Archibald, second Lord, continued during his whole life true to his duty, and, after making his escape from his confinement, which he shared with his father, he joined his uncle, the marquis of Montrose, at Cardross in 1645; displayed signal valour at the battle of Alderne; commanded the reserve at the battle of Alford; and, after the victory of Kilsith, was sent by Montrose to take the city of Edinburgh under his protection, when he had the satisfaction to release his father and friends who were there imprisoned. In 1646 he was besieged by general Middleton at Kincardine, in a house of the marquis of Montrose, and, being compelled to capitulate, he made his escape, and, joining the marquis, he retired with him to the continent, where he died in 1660.

NAPIER (Her.) or, as it was originally written, Naper, the name of a family of which mention is made as early as 1280, when John de Napier, who had considerable estates in the county of Dunbarton, is mentioned in a charter of Malcolm, earl of Lennox. He was one of those who defended the castle of Stirling against Edward, but were obliged to surrender in 1304. His descendant, sir Archibald Napier, of whom honourable mention is made under History, was created a peer of Scotland in 1627 by the title of lord Napier, of Merchistoun. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, a saltire engrailed cantoned with four roses gules, for Napier; second and third or, on a bend azure, a mullet pierced betwixt two crescents of the first, within a double tressure flowered and counter-flowered of the second, for Scott of Thirlestane.

Crest. A right arm couped from the elbow, grasping a crescent proper.

Supporters. Dexter, an eagle proper; sinister, a chevalier in a coat of mail, holding a spear with a pennon, all proper. Below the shield, by way of compartment, on the embattlement of a tower argent, masoned sable, six lances disposed saltireways.

Motto. "Sans tache," and "Readdy, aye, Readdy."

NAPIER, John (Biog.) baron of Merchistoun, of the family abovementioned, and the inventor of logarithms, was born in 1550, and died in 1617, leaving, 1. 'A Plain Discovery of the Revelation of St. John,' 1593, in which he made erroneous calculations on the fulfilment of the prophecies. 2. 'Logarithmorum Canonis Descriptio,' 1614. 3. 'Rabdologia, seu Numerationis per Virgulas Libri duo,' 1617; this contains the descriptions of the rods or bones since known by the name of Napier's Bones. 4. 'Mirifici Logarithmorum Canonis Constructio,' &c. 1619; besides his Letter to Anthony Bacon, the original of which is in the archbishop's library at Lambeth, entitled 'Secret Inventions, profitable and necessary in these Days for the Defence of this Island, and withstanding Strangers, Enemies to God's Truth and Religion,' dated June 2, 1596.

NAPHTHALI (Bibl.) נפתלי, sixth son of Jacob by Billah, Rachel's handmaid. His sons were Jahzeel, Guni, Jezer, and Shillim. The tribe of Naphthali encamped in the wilderness, north of the tabernacle, between Dan and Manasseh. Gen. xxx. 8, xlix.; Numb. ii.; 2 Kings xv.

NAPHTHUHIM (Bibl.) נפתחים, fourth son of Mizraim. Gen. x. 13.

NAPLES (Geog.) a kingdom in the south of Europe, comprising the southern part of Italy.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. W. by the Ecclesiastical States, N. E. by the Gulf of Venice, and on every other side by the Mediterranean. It is 300 miles in length, and 100 in breadth, extending from 13° to 18° E. lon. and from 37° to 42° N. lat. in an irregular shape, not unlike a boot in form.

Division. It is divided into twelve provinces, namely, Napoli, or Naples, Terra di Lavoro, the ancient Campania, Principato, Citra and Ultra, Molise, Basilicata, Calabria, Citra and Ultra, Capitanata, Terra di Bari, and Terra d'Otranto, the last three forming the ancient Apulia, now Puglia.

Towns. The principal towns are,

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Garigliano, the Volturno, Basiento, the Pescara, the Sangro, and the Ofanto, the ancient Aufidus.

Lakes. The principal lakes are the Celano, Agrano, Averno, Licola, Fusaro, Patrea, Lesina, Fondi, and Falerno.

Mountains. The kingdom of Naples is traversed by the great chain of the Apennines, which, entering it from the north, run in a south-east direction for nearly 100 miles, when they throw off a large lateral branch to the east, terminating in the peninsula of Monte Gargano. The highest summits of the chain are the Gran Sasso d'Italia, the Velino, the Sila, the Volture, Monte Barbara, Cape Miseno, and Vesuvius, less remarkable for its height, which does not much exceed 3900 feet, than for its volcanic eruptions.

History. After the destruction of the kingdom of the Lombards in Italy, the kingdom of Naples was distinguished by the name of the dukedom of Benevento, being for the most part subject to the dukes of Benevento. Arechis, who had married one of the daughters of the last king of the Lombards, and governed the dukedom at this period, submitted and took the oath of allegiance to Charlemagne, but a few years after renounced his allegiance to the French, and declared himself an independent sovereign. He was, however, reduced to submission by the emperor, and was succeeded by his son Grimoald, whose successors were Grimoald II, Sico, Sicardo, Radelchis, Radelgarius, Adelgise, Gwideris, Radelchis II, Aio, and Radelchis, who was restored to his dukedom, but was finally deprived of it by the Saracens under Atenulphus, count of Capua, who, with the Greeks, became masters of the principal part of Italy. Atenulphus was succeeded by his son Landulph, whose successors were Landulph II, Landulph III, Gisulphus, and Pandulphus, Landulphus IV, Landulphus V, at whose death in 981 the emperor invaded Italy, when he defeated the Infidels, and took most of their possessions from them. But to the Normans was reserved the honour of clearing not only the country of Naples, but all Italy, of the Saracens, which they effected in the 11th century, when Robert Guiscard, a Norman captain, having conquered Calabria and Apulia, caused himself to be proclaimed duke of Apulia and Calabria in 1059. He was succeeded by Robert I, who added Sicily also to his other conquests. The following is a list of the princes of Naples and Sicily who succeeded this Robert:

Philip V	1701

By the treaty of Utrecht this king yielded the kingdom of Naples to the emperor Charles VI, who governed it until 17..5, when the Spanish troops entered Naples and took possession of it for the infant Don Carlos, son of Philip V, to whom the kingdom of Naples was ceded by a treaty of peace concluded between the emperor and the French. In 1806 this kingdom was seized by Bonaparte, who caused his brother Joseph to be proclaimed king; this latter was in 1808 succeeded by Murat; but, after the final defeat of the Neapolitan army by the Austrians and the death of Murat, in 1815, it reverted to its rightful sovereign, Ferdinand. *Paul. History of Naples.

Naples, called by the Latins Neapolis, by the Italians Napoli, and by the Spaniards Napoles, has suffered at different periods from war, earthquakes, and the eruptions. It was exposed to the vicissitudes which befel the kingdom above-mentioned, of which it was the capital, but has, notwithstanding, progressively increased in wealth and prosperity. During the late revolutionary war it was twice occupied by a French army, and surrendered in 1815 to a British squadron, which was stationed there to support the interests of the rightful sovereign, Ferdinand. Naples contains several literary establishments, as the Royal Military School, the Naval College, and others; besides its University, which was founded in 1224. It is the see of an archbishop, having for its suffragans Aversa, Puzzuoli, Acerra, Nola, and Ischia. Councils were held here in 1568 and 1576.

NAPLOUS (Geog.) or Napolose, a considerable town of Palestine, capital of the Samaritans, which is called in Scripture Sichem, and by the Latins Neapolis. Lon. 35° 20′ E. lat. 32° N. The chief objects here venerated and visited are the tombs of Joseph and Joshua, but Jacob's well is regarded with peculiar reverence by the inhabitants. It was a body of Naplousians who were exposed to the massacre at Jaffa by the order of Bonaparte, called in an engagement in October of that year, fighting valiantly, and refusing quarter from the enemy.

NASSAU, William Henry de Zulestein, son of the preceding, was greatly in the confidence of William III, on his coming over into England, and continued in his service until his death in 1708.

NASSAU de Zulestein (Her.) the family name of the earl of Rochford, of which was William Henry Nassau de Zulestein, who was created in 1695 baron of Enfield, in the county of Middlesex, viscount Tunbridge, co. Kent, and earl of Rochford, co. Essex. [Vide Rochford]

NATOLIA (Geog.) or Anatolia, a country formerly called Asia Minor, the most western part of Turkey in Asia, bounded on the N. by the Black Sea, E. by Caramania, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by the Archipelago and the Sea of Marmora. It is crossed from W. to E. by a chain of mountains formerly called Taurus. Kiutaga is the capital.

NATTA, Mark Anthony (Biog.) an Italian lawyer, of a noble family at Asti, in the 16th century, wrote 'De Pulchro;' 'De Deo;' 'De Immortalitate;' 'De Passione Domini;' each of which treatises forming a folio volume was printed in 1553—1587.

NATTIER, John Mark (Biog.) a French artist, was born at Paris in 1685, and died in 1766, leaving several designs for the Luxembourgh gallery, which have been engraved. Another artist of this name, who died at St. Petersburgh in 1763, was successful in the engraving of intaglios, and published a treatise on gems.

NAVA (Geog.) now Nape, a river of Germany, falling into the Rhine at Binjun, below Mentz. Tacit. Hist. l. 4.

NAVARRE (Geog.) a country of Europe, and formerly a kingdom, one part of which, called Upper Navarre, at present belongs to France, and the other, called Lower Navarre, to Spain. Pampeluna is the capital of the Spanish part, which is now by distinction known by the name of Navarre. The principal rivers are the Ebro, Arga, and Egba. The western part of the Pyrenees divides this province from France, and covers a great part of its surface, forming a number of passes or defiles, the principal of which are Lescou, Bastan, Roncal, and Roncesvalles, famed for the defeat of the rear-guard of Charlemagne, and the death of Roland.

History of Navarre.

The name of Navarre is supposed by some to be derived from Nava, Spanish for a pass, on account of the numerous passes in Navarre; but as the word Navarri occurs first in the Latin, for the name of a people, this etymology is very doubtful. The kingdom of Navarre took its rise from small beginnings, consisting at first of the inhabitants of the Pyrenees, who formed themselves into a principality for their protection against the Moors, when they chose Don Garcia Ximenes, as their first chief, who was succeeded by Garcias Inigo; Fortunio; Sancho Garcias; another Garcias; and Inigo Ximenes, surnamed Arista, who is supposed to have been the first who assumed the title of king, in the 9th century; he had for successors Ximenes Inigo; Inigo Ximenes; Garcias Inigo, who reigned from 850 to 870; Sancho Garcias I, who died in 905; Garcias Sancho II, who died in 925; Sancho II, surnamed Abarca; Garcias III; Sancho III, surnamed the Great, who died in 1035; Garcias IV, who was killed in 1054; Sancho IV, who was killed in 1076; Ramirez; Ramirez II, who died in 1116; Garcias Ramirez, who died in 1150; Sancho VI, surnamed the Wise, who died in 1194, and Sancho VII, who was deposed, and died in prison, as is said, in 1234. In him ended the male line of Inigo, which had held the kingdom of Navarre for near 400 years. By the marriage of his younger sister Blanche, of Navarre, with Thibaut V, earl of Champagne, the succession devolved to Thibaut, the fruit of this alliance, who succeeded his uncle Sancho in 1234; the following is a list of the kings of Navarre from this period, in chronological succession:

Kings.	Began to Reign.		Reigned.
Thibaut	1234		16 years
Thibaut II	1253		7

On the accession of Henry III of Navarre, and IV of France, to the throne of France, the crowns of Navarre and France became united, but the kings of Spain asserted a right to Upper Navarre, which, although strongly disputed by the kings of France, has ever since remained in their hands. Marian. Hist. Hisp.; De Marca Hist. Gener.; de Bearn.; Texeira Vies de quelques Rois de Navarre; Mezer. Hist. de France; Saint Marthe Gall. Christ.

NAVARRETE, Juan Hernandes (Biog.) a Spanish painter, was born in 1562 at Logronno, and died in 1579, leaving a Holy Family as his master-piece; besides his works at Valencia, Salamanca, and Estrella, which are little inferior.

NAVARRETTA, Ferdinand (Ecc.) a Spanish Dominican, and a native of Old Castille, was sent in 1646 on a mission to China, where he remained until his death in 1689. He wrote a work entitled 'Tradados Historicos, Politicos, Ethicos, y Religiosos, de la Monarchia de China;' the first volume was printed in folio at Madrid in 1676, and has since been inserted in Churchill's Voyages; the second volume was suppressed by the Inquisition, and the third was never printed.

NAUCLES (Hist.) a general of the mercenary troops of the Lacedemonians, against the Thebans.

NAUCRATES (Biog.) a Greek poet, who was employed by Artemisia to write a panegyric upon Mausolus. Cic. Orat. l. 2.

NAUCRATIS (Geog.) Ναύκρατις, a town of Egypt, in the Delta, not far from the mouth of the Nile, which was the birth-place of Athenæus, and was celebrated for its commerce. Herod. l. 2, c. 97; Strab. l. 17; Plin. l. 5; Athen. l. 11.

NAUDE (Biog.), or Naudæus, Gabriel, a French biographer, was born at Paris in 1600, and died in 1653, leaving 'Avis pour dresser une Bibliotheque,' Paris, 1627, and again in 1644, with Louis Jacob's 'Traité des plus Belles Bibliotheques;' 'Apologie pour les Grands Hommes soupçonnes de Magie,' 8vo. 1625; 'Bibliographia Politica,' 16mo. 1642; 'Hieronymi Cardani Vita,' 8vo. Paris. 1643; 'Jugement de tout ce qui a été imprimé contre le Cardinal Mazarin,' &c.

NAUDE, Philip, a mathematician and divine, was born at Metz in 1654, and died in 1729, leaving a 'System of Geometry,' in German; besides 'Meditations Saintes;' 'Morale Evangelique,' 2 vols. 8vo. &c.

NAUGERIUS (Biog.) or Navagero, Andrew, an Italian scholar and poet, was born in 1483, at Venice, of a patrician family, and died in 1529. His works were published under the title of 'Andreæ Naugerii Patricii Veneti Orationes duæ, Carminaque nonnulla,' fol. Venet. 1530. Aldus dedicated to him his 'Rhetorica Ciceronis.'

NAUMACHIUS (Biog.) a Greek poet, some fragments of whose verses are preserved in the collection of Greek poets.

NAUMBURG (Geog.) in the Latin of the middle ages Neoburgum, a town of Misnia, in Saxony, 18 m. S. S. W. Merseburg, and 28 W. S. W. Leipsig. Lon. 11° 40′ E, lat. 51° 8′ N. The princes of Saxony took this town during the civil wars on account of religion in 1552. It is the see of a bishop, which was transferred there from Saltz in 1028.

NAUNTON, Sir Robert (Hist.) a statesman in the reign of Elizabeth and James I, was born of an ancient family in Suffolk, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1635, after having been employed on different missions. He left 'Fragmenta Regalia,' which was first printed in 4to. in 1641, and still preserves his memory.

NAUPACTUS (Geog.) or Naupactum, Ναύπακτος, or Ναύπακτον, now Lepanto, a city of Ætolia, at the mouth of the Evenus, so called from ναῦς, a ship; and πήγνυμι, to build; because the Heraclidæ built the first ship there, which carried them to Peloponnesus. It first belonged to the Locri Ozolæ, and afterwards fell into the hands of the Athenians, who gave it to the Messenian fugitives. Philip, of Macedon, took it and gave it to the Ætolians, for which reason it has been generally reckoned one of their cities. Thucyd. l. 1; Apollod. l. 3; Strab. l. 4; Mel. l. 2; Ovid. Fast. l. 2; Paus. l. 4.

NAUPACTUS (Numis.) some medals of this town are known by the inscriptions ΝΑΥ.; ΝΑΥΠΑΚΤΙΩΝ, i. e. Naupactiorum; sometimes with the name of their magistrates, called Ephori, as ΑΓΑΣΙΚΛΗΣ ΕΦΩΡΟΥ. They honoured Minerva and Diana on their medals. Goltz. Græc.; Hunt. Num. Urb.; Peller. Rec. des Med. &c.

NAUPLIA (Geog.) Ναυπλία, a maritime city of Peloponnesus, near Argos, which was the naval station of the Argives. Strab. l. 8; Paus. l. 2.

NAUPLIUS (Myth.) Ναύπλιος, a son of Neptune and Amymone, and father of Palamedes, so unjustly sacrificed to the resentment of Ulysses, during the Trojan war. He, or another person of the same name, was one of the Argonauts. Orph. Argon.; Apollon. l. 1; Apollod. l. 2; Virg. Æn. l. 2; Hygin. Fab. 14; Schol. Eurip. in Orest.; Serv. in Virg. &c. &c.

NAUPORTUS (Geog.) a town of Pannonia, on a river of the same name, now called Ober, or Upper Laybach. Vell. Pat. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Tacit. Annal. l. 1.

NAUSICAA (Myth.) Ναυσικάα, a daughter of Alcinous, king of the Phæaceans, who procured a hospitable reception for Ulysses, when he was shipwrecked on the coast, and afterwards married Telemachus, by whom she had a son called Perseptolis. Hom. Odyss. l. 6; Hygin. Fab. 126; Paus. l. 5; Eustath. Odyss. &c.

NAUSITHOUS (Myth.) Ναυσίθοος, a king of the Phæacians, father to Alcinous. He was the son of Neptune and Peribœa. Hesiod. Theog. v. 1016; Eustath. Odyss. 6.

NAUSTATHMUS (Geog.) now Bondaria, a port of Cyrenaica. Strab. l. 17.

NAUTES (Myth.) a Trojan soothsayer, who comforted Æneas when his fleet was burnt in Sicily. He is said to have been the progenitor of the family of the Nautii, in Rome. Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 5, et Serv. in Loc.

NAXIA (Geog.) or Naxos, an island of European Turkey, in the Grecian Archipelago, 15 miles long, and 50 broad, 5 miles E. Paros. It is the ancient Naxos, [vide Naxos] which was long in the possession of the Venetians, and the residence of the governors or dukes, of the family of the Sanutians, to whom they gave the government of this and the adjacent islands in 1210. They retained possession of Naxos until 1516, when Selim I became master of it. Its capital, Naxia, which is defended by a castle, is situated on the S. side of the island. Lon. 25° 32′ E. lat. 37° 8′ N. The only remains of antiquity in that island are the ruins of a temple of Bacchus. Its highest mountain is called Zia, which signifies Jupiter.

NAXOS (Geog.) Νάξος, an island and town in the Ægean Sea, anciently called Strongyle, Dia, Dionysias, and Calli-polis, now Naxia. [Vide Naxia.] It received its name of Naxos, from Naxus, the leader of a Carian colony, which settled in this island. The Naxians were at one time governed by kings of their own, whom they exchanged for a republic, but fell soon after into the hands of the Persians. They sided, however, with the Greeks, when attacked by the Persians; and in the Peloponnesian war, they took the part of the Athenians. Near the town of Naxos the Lacedæmonians were defeated by Chabrias, A.C. 377. [Vide Naxos under Numismatics] Herodot. l. 5; Thucyd. l. 1; Pind. Pyth. od. 4; Diod. l. 5; Hygin. Fab. 28; Virg. Æn. l. 3; Ovid. Met. l. 3; Paus. l. 6.

Naxos, an ancient town on the eastern side of Sicily, founded 759 years before the Christian æra. This name was also sometimes given to another town in Sicily, otherwise called Taurominium.

Naxos (Numis.) many medals are extant bearing the inscription ΝΑΞΙΩΝ, some of which are ascribed to the island Naxos, from the type of Bacchus, who was particularly honoured there; but others are ascribed to the town of Sicily, from the additional inscription of ΑΣΣΙΝΟ, i. e. Asine, the name of a river in Sicily. Goltz. Sicil.; Beger. Thesaur. Pellar. Rec. des Med. &c.

NAYLER, James (Hist.) a quaker, who first served in the rebel army under Lambert, but leaving the military life in 1649, he took up with quakerism, which he carried to such a pitch of extravagance, that he was condemned as a blasphemer to be pilloried, whipped, branded on the forehead, and to have his tongue bored through with a red-hot iron, all which having been inflicted upon him, he was imprisoned till 1660, when he died just after his liberation.

NAZARETH (Bibl.) נצרת, a little town of Zebulun, in Lower Galilee, west of Tabor, and east of Ptolemais, the residence of our SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST for the first thirty years of his life. Luke ii. 51, &c. Epiphanius says, that in his time it was only a village, and that to the reign of Constantine the Great, it was inhabited by Jews alone, exclusive of Christians. It was afterwards erected into a bishop's see, suffragan of the patriarch of Jerusalem, and had two churches, but it is now fallen into decay, being an inconsiderable village, one-third of whose inhabitants are Mahometans. Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem.

NAZIENZUS (Geog.) a town of Cappadocia, where St. Gregory was born, who is thence called Nazianzenus.

NEÆTHUS (Geog.) now Neto, a river of Magna Græcia, near Crotona. Ovid. Met. l. 15.

NEAL (Biog.) or Nele, Thomas, an English divine, was born at Yeate, in Gloucestershire, educated at Oxford, and died after 1590, but in what year is not precisely known, leaving 'Rabbi Davidis Kimchi Commentarii supra Hoseam, &c. Latini redditi per Thomam Nelum Heb. Linguæ Profess. Oxonii et Reginæ Elizabethæ inscripti,' a MS. which he presented to queen Elizabeth, during her visit in Oxford, and which is now in the British Museum. He also presented her majesty with a little book of Latin verses, containing the description of the colleges, and halls, &c. which were afterwards published by Hearne, at the end of 'Dodwell de Parma Equestri.'

Neal, Daniel, a dissenter, and the historian of the Puritans, was born in London in 1678, and died in 1743. The first volume of his History of the Puritans, was published in 1732, the second in 1733, the third in 1736, and the fourth in 1738. His work was animadverted upon by several writers, on its first appearance, particularly by Dr. Grey, but its character is now too well known to need any animadversion.

NEALE (Her.) the name of a family which has been changed from that of Burrard, and enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1769 on sir Harry Burrard. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow Arms. Azure, a lion passant between three etoils argent.

Crest. A dexter hand and arm embowed, couped at the elbow, brandishing a sword proper.

NEANDER, Michael (Biog.) a scholar, who was born in 1525 at Soraw, in Lower Silesia, and died in 1595, was the author of, 1. 'Erotemata Græcæ Linguæ, cum Præfatione Philippi Melancthonis de Utilitate Græcæ Linguæ,' 8vo. Basil. 1553, the last edition of which was published at Leipzig, in 8vo. 1589. 2. 'Græcæ Linguæ Tabulæ,' 8vo. Basil. 1554, and Wittemb. 1581. 3. 'Linguæ Hebraicæ Erotemata,' &c. 8vo. Basil. 1556, and often reprinted. 4. 'Aristologia Pindarica Græco-Latina,' &c. 8vo. Basil. 1556. 5. 'Aristologia Græco-Latina Euripidis,' &c. 4to. ibid. 1559. 6. 'Anthologicum Græco-Latinum,' 8vo. ibid. 1556. 7. 'Gnomonologia Græco-Latina, sive insigniores Sententiæ Philosophorum,' &c. 8vo. 1558. 8. 'Opus Aureum et Scholasticum,' Lips. 1577. 9. 'Sententiæ Theologicæ Selectiores,' &c.

NEANTHES (Biog.) an orator and historian of Cyzicum, who flourished A. C. 257.

NEAPOLIS (Geog.) the name of several towns, of which the most considerable is the town of Campania, now so well known by the name of Naples, which Horace designates by the epithet otiosa, to denote its refinement.

Horat. Epod. 5.

> Et otiosa credidit Neapolis.

Martial calls it docta, l. 5, ep. 79.

> Et quas docta Neapolis creavit.

It was anciently called Parthenope, from Parthenope, one of the Syrens, and is frequently mentioned under that name.

Virg. Georg. l. 4.

> Illo Virgilium me tempore dulcis alebat
> Parthenope, studiis florentem ignobilis otii.

Dionys. Perieg.

> Τῇ δ' ἐπι Καμπανῶν λιπαρὸν πέδον ἤχι μέλαθρον
> Αγνῆς Παρθενόπης, ςαχύων βεβριθὸς αμάλλαις
> Παρθενόπης, ἣν πόντος ἑοῖς ὑπεδέξετο κόλποις.

Sil. l. 12.

> Sirenum dedit una suum et memorabile nomen
> Parthenope muris Acheloias; æquore cujus
> Regnavere diu cantus; quum dulce per undas
> Exitium miseris caneret non prospera nautis.

Stat. Sylv. l. 1, carm. 2.

> At te nascentem gremio mea prima recepit
> Parthenope; dulcisque solo tu gloria nostro
> Reptasti.

Columel. Rust. Rer. l. x.

> Doctaque Parthenope, Sebethide roscida lymphâ.

Ovid. Met. l. 15, v. 711.

> Herculeamque urbem, Stabiasque, et in otia natam
> Parthenopen.

Neapolis is said to have been founded by a colony from Cuma.

Scymn. Perieg.

> Ἐκδὲ τῆς Κύμης, τῆς πρὸς Αόρνῳ κειμένης
> Κτίσιν κατὰ χρησμὸν ἔλαβεν ἡ Νεάπολις.

But other authors have ascribed a different origin to it. Polyb. l. 6; Strab. l. 5; Mela, l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Ptol. l. 2; Solin. c. 8; Cluv. Ital. Antiq. l. 4, c. 3.

C. 375, and was assassinated by Tachos, or Taos, after a reign of twelve years. Diodor. 15; Jul. African.; Usser. Annal.

Nectanebus II, grandson of the preceding, and the son of Tachos, made an alliance with Agesilaus, king of Sparta, by whose assistance he quelled a rebellion of his subjects. He was afterwards defeated by Darius, king of Persia, and, seeing no hope of succour, fled to Æthiopia, where he died A. C. 350. From that time Egypt became tributary to Persia. Diod. l. 16, &c.; C. Nep. in Ages.; Plin. l. 36.

NECTARIUS (Ecc.) a patriarch of Constantinople, and native of Tarsus, who succeeded St. Gregory Nazianzen on his abdication in 381, and was succeeded by St. John Chrysostom in 397.

NEEDHAM (Her.) Nedeham, or Nedham, the name of a family of great note in the counties of Salop and Chester, descended from William de Nedeham, lord of Staunton, in the last named county, living in 1154. The first of this family that was ennobled was sir Robert Needham, who was created in 1625 viscount Kilmorey, and his brother Francis was created in 1822 earl of Kilmorey.

Needham, Marchamont (Biog.) a political writer, was born at Burford, in Oxfordshire, in 1620, educated at Oxford, and died in 1678, leaving his 'Mercurius Britannicus,' which he wrote to favour the rebellion; 'Mercurius Pragmaticus,' which was against his party; and 'Mercurius Politicus,' by which he reconciled himself to them again. He published a number of other scurrilous things suitable to the temper of the times.

Needham, John Tuberville, a divine of the Romish church, and a philosopher, was born in 1713 in London, and died in 1781, leaving 'New Microscopical Discoveries,' Paris, 1745, and the same enlarged in 1750; 'De Inscriptione quadam Ægyptiaca Taurini inventa,' &c. 1771; 'On the Generation of Organized Bodies,' &c.; besides a number of papers inserted in the Philosophical Transactions.

NEEFS, Peter (Biog.) an architectural painter of Antwerp, was born in 1570, and died in 1651. His favourite subjects were the interior of churches, &c. of which he represented the decorations and every architectural member with extraordinary precision.

NEEMAN, Stephen (Biog.) a son of Desa, king of Servia, succeeded his father in 1173, and reigned peaceably with his brothers until 1189, when his country was invaded by the emperor Isaac Angelus, and he was killed in battle. Neeman II, surnamed Crapalus, succeeded him in 1234, and died in 1254, after having made himself master of some provinces in Albania, which he took from the Greeks.

NEER, Arnold Van der (Biog.) a landscape painter, who was born at Amsterdam in 1619, and died in 1683, left several pictures, which are held in general esteem.

Neer, Eglon Hendrick Van der, son of the preceding, and his pupil, who died in 1703, at the age of 60, executed subjects in every branch of the art with considerable success, but particularly portraits.

NEERCASSEL, John de (Biog.) a Roman Catholic bishop of Castoria, in Holland, was born at Gorcum in 1626, and died in 1686, leaving, 1. 'De Sanctorum et præcipuè B. Mariæ Virginis Cultu,' &c. Colon. 1675, and a French translation in 1679. 2 'Tractatus de Lectione Scripturarum,' &c. 12mo. Embric. 1677. 3. 'Amor Pœnitens, seu de Divini Amoris ad Pœnitentiam Necessitate,' &c. Embric. 1685, &c.

NEGROPONT (Geog.) called by the Turks Egribos, anciently Eubœa, the largest island in the Archipelago, separated from the N. E. coast of Livadia by the Strait of Negropont, the ancient Euripus, and is joined to the main-land in its narrowest part by a bridge. Negropont, the capital of the island, and the ancient Chalcis, is situated on the west coast. Lon. 23° 30′ E. lat. 38° 30′ N. having on the south side a port corresponding to the ancient Aulis, and capable of containing several hundred vessels in, perfect safety. In 1205 the Venetians conquered Negropont as well as all the other islands of the Archipelago; but in 1469 the town was besieged by an army of Turks, consisting of more than 120,000 men, with the sultan Mahomet II at their head, who, after a month, compelled the small garrison to surrender, when all were put to death with much barbarity. It was besieged again in 1688 by Francis Morosini, but without success, he being obliged to raise the siege, after having stormed the place with a general assault. Negropont is the see of an archbishop, of which Caristo, the ancient Carystus, is suffragan. The two principal promontories are Capo Figera, or Capo d'Ora, the ancient Caphareus, and Capo Lithar, the ancient Ceneus, or Cæneus. Coronell. Descrip. de la Mor.; Spon. Voy.

NEGRONI, John Francis (Biog.) a cardinal of a noble family of Geneva, was born in 1629, created cardinal by Innocent XI in 1686, and died in 1713, after having been employed by Alexander VII, Clement IX and X, and Innocent XI, in the most important concerns.

NEHEMIAH (Bibl.) נחמיה, son of Hachaliah, was born at Babylon during the captivity; became cupbearer at the court of Artaxerxes Longimanus, and by the permission of this king rebuilt and fortified Jerusalem; corrected the abuses which had crept into the worship of the Jews, and died in peace, after having governed the people of Judah about 30 years. He is the author of the second book which bears the name of Esdras in the version, but that of Nehemiah in the Hebrew, although there are some things in this book which might lead to the supposition that it was compiled by another hand, probably from memoirs which Nehemiah wrote of his own government. Esdras i. ii.; Euseb. in Chron. et Dem. Evang. l. 8; Usser. Annal. &c.

NEHUSHTA (Bibl.) נחשתא, daughter of Elnathan, and mother of Jehoiachim, king of Judah. 2 Kings xxiv.

NELEUS (Myth.) Νηλεὺς, a son of Neptune and Tyro, brother of Pelias, and father of Nestor, whose twelve sons were all killed by Hercules except the latter. [Vide Nestor] Hom. Odyss. l. 11, &c.; Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 10; Paus. l. 4; Ovid. Met. l. 6.

NELSON, Horatio, Earl (Hist.) the illustrious admiral, was born at Burnham Thorpe in 1758, entered on board the Raisonnable of 64 guns at the age of 12 under his maternal uncle, captain Maurice Suckling; accompanied the expedition in 1773, which was sent under the command of captains Phipps and Lutwidge, on a voyage of discovery to the North Pole; rose to the rank of lieutenant in 1777, and to that of post-captain in 1779 under admiral Peter Parker; gave a signal display of his intrepidity in 1780 in the attack upon Fort Juan, in the Gulf of Mexico, when, by gallantly storming the outposts, he contributed to the reduction of the place. He next commanded the Janus of 44 guns, from which he was removed to the Albemarle, and continued on the American station with sir Samuel Hood until the peace. On the breaking out of the revolutionary war a field was opened for the display of those supereminent talents which placed him at the head of our naval heroes. In 1793 he obtained the command of the Agamemnon of 64 guns, and assisted under lord Hood at the taking of Toulon and the siege of Bastia. He afterwards encountered five French ships of war, and acted in 1795 under lord Hotham in the two engagements in March and July of that year. As commodore he contributed largely to the victory obtained by admiral Jervis's fleet in 1797, when he compelled the St. Nicholas, 80 guns, and the San Joseph of 112, to strike. In his attack on the town of Santa Cruz, in the same year, he lost his right arm, and was enabled to say in his memorial to his majesty on that occasion that he had been engaged with the enemy 120 times. The battle of the Nile rendered the name of Nelson glorious throughout Europe; and, after a desperate conflict with the Danes in the attack on Copenhagen, he closed his valuable life in the midst of victory at the battle of Trafalgar in 1805, after having done more than any one man in destroying the power of the enemy at sea. [Vide Plate XVI] In addition to the honours and rewards which were heaped upon him while living, he received the singular honour of a public funeral at his death, which was accompanied with every circumstance that could betoken the deep national feeling on such an occasion.

NELSON (Her.) this name, which has become so illustrious by the deeds of the hero above-mentioned, has also been amply honoured by the titles which were successively conferred on him, as that of baron Nelson of the Nile and of Hilborough, co. Norfolk, in 1801; viscount Merton, and earl Nelson of Trafalgar, and of Merton, co. Surrey, 1805; and duke of Bronte, in Sicily, in 1806. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Or, a cross flory sable, a bend gules, surmounted by another of the field, charged with bombs fired proper; a chief undulated argent, thereon the waves of the sea, from which a palm-tree issuant between a disabled ship on the dexter, and a ruinous battery on the sinister, all proper. Over all on a fess wavy the word "Trafalgar."

Crests. 1. On a wreath of the colours, the stern of a Spanish man-of-war proper, thereon inscribed "San Joseph." 2. On a naval crown or, the chelenck, or plume of triumph, presented to Nelson by the grand seignior.

Supporters. On the dexter, a sailor armed with a cutlass and pair of pistols in his belt proper, the exterior hand supporting a staff, thereon hoisted a commodore's flag gules, in the other hand a palm-branch; on the sinister, a lion rampant regardant proper, in his mouth a broken flag-staff, therefrom flowing a Spanish flag or and gules; in the lion's paw a palm-branch granted 1797, augmented 1798, and again 1809.

Motto. "Palmam qui meruit ferat."

NELSON, Robert (Biog.) an English gentleman, who, from the character of his writings and the course of his life, obtained the name of the Pious Nelson, was born in 1656 in London, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1714, after having remained a nonjuror till two years before his death. He wrote, 1. 'Transubstantiation contrary to Scripture,' &c. 2. 'A Companion for the Festivals and Fasts,' 8vo. 1704; and reprinted several times since. 3. 'A Letter on Church Government,' in answer to a pamphlet, entitled 'The Principles of the Protestant Reformation,' 8vo. 1705. 4. 'Great Duty of frequenting the Christian Sacrifice,' &c. 8vo. 1707. 5. 'The Practice of true Devotion,' &c. 8vo. 1708. 6. 'Life of Bishop Bull,' 8vo. 1713. 7. 'Letter to Dr. Samuel Clarke,' prefixed to 'The Scripture Doctrine of the Most Holy and undivided Trinity vindicated against the Misrepresentations,' &c. 8vo. 1713. 8. 'An Address to Persons of Quality and Estate,' 8vo. 1715. 9. 'The whole Duty of a Christian, by Way of Question and Answer,' &c. 10. 'Thomas à Kempis' Christian Exercise.' 11. 'The Archbishop of Cambray's (Fenelon's) Pastoral Letter.' 12. 'Bishop Bull's important Points of Primitive Christianity maintained;' and other posthumous works of that prelate.

NELTHORPE (Her.) the name of a family of Gray's Inn, co. Middlesex, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1666 on sir John Nelthorpe. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a pale sable, a sword erect of the first, hilt and pommel or.
Crest. An arm couped lying fessways holding in the hand a sword erect argent, hilt and pommel or.

NEMÆA (Myth.) Νεμέα, a town of Argolis, between Cleonæ and Philiris, where Hercules, in the 16th year of his age, killed the Nemean lion, whence the Nemean games were renewed, which had been originally instituted in honour of Archemorus. Pind. in Nem. et Schol.; Apollod. l. 1, 3; Liv. l. 27; Hygin. Fab. 30, &c.; Strab. l. 8; Ovid. Met. l. 9; Paus. l. 2, &c.

NEMAUSUS (Geog.) a town of Gallia Narbonensis, now Nismes [vide Nismes], so called from Nemausus, its founder. A colony was sent thither by Augustus, which is commemorated on some medals. [Vide Nemausus under Numismatics] Strab. l. 4; Plin. l. 3.

Nemausus (Numis.) this town struck medals as a colony of Augustus; and also some as an independent place, bearing the inscription—NEM. COL. i. e. Nemausus Colonia; and on the reverse of some, the heads of Augustus and Agrippa, inscription—IMP. DIVI F.

NEMESIANUS, Aurelius Olympius (Biog.) a Latin poet, and native of Carthage, in the reign of Carus, whose poem, entitled 'Cynegeticon,' and four eclogues, are still extant. They were published by Paulus Manutius in 1538; by Bertholet in 1613; and with the notes of Janus Vlitius, Lugd. Bat. 1653. This Nemesianus was also author of two other poems mentioned by Vopiscus, namely Alieutica and Nautica. There was likewise another poet of the same name, and of the same age, who wrote a piece entitled, 'Ixeutica,' which is published among the 'Poetæ Rei Venaticæ,' 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1528; and among the 'Poet. Lat. Min.' 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1731. Vopisc. in Vit. Numerian.

NEMESIS (Myth.) Νέμεσις, one of the infernal deities, daughter of Nox and Oceanus, or of Jupiter and Necessitas. She was the avenger of crimes.

Eurip. Phœniss. v. 189.

> ἰὼ Νέμεσι, καὶ Διὸς
> βαρύβρομοι βρονταὶ, > κεραυνίον τε πῦρ αἰθαλόεν
> σύ τοι, μεγαληγορίαν

Callim. Hymn. ad Cer. v. 57.

> Νέμεσις δὲ κακὰν ἐγράψατο φωνάν.

Catull. Epig. 51. de Nemes.

> Est vehemens Dea, lædere hanc caveto.

She was called Rhamnusa, because worshipped at Rhamnus, and Adrastia, from the temple which Adrastus, king of Argos, erected to her when he went against Thebes. Apollod. l. 3; Hygin. Poet. Astronom.; Plin. l. 11; Lactant. de Fals. Relig. c. 21.

Nemesis (Numis.) this goddess is commonly represented with a wheel at her foot, or in her hand; and sometimes a sistrum, or a sort of roller, with one hand lifted up towards her mouth. Vaillant. Præst.; Beg. Thes. &c.

NEMESIUS (Ecc.) a Greek philosopher, who on embracing Christianity was made bishop of Emesa, in Phœnicia, where he was born about 370. A treatise of his is still extant, entitled, 'De Naturâ Hominis.' This treatise was edited in Greek, with the Latin version of Ellebodius, 12mo. Antv. 1565; and again 8vo. Oxon. 1671; and also inserted in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum.'

NEMESTRINUS (Myth.) a deity who presided over the feasts celebrated at Rome, under the name of Nemora. Arnob. cont. Gent. l. 4.

NEMETACUM (Geog.) vide Atrebates.

NEMETES (Geog.) a people of Germany, who inhabited the town and country now called Spire. Tacit. de German.

NEMOSINUM (Geog.) the Latin name for Nemours.

NEMOSUS (Geog.) the capital of the Arverni, in Gaul, now Clermont.

NEMOURS (Geog.) in Latin Nemosinum, a small town in the central part of France, situated in a low district on the river Loiny, 11 m. S. Fontainbleau, 52 S. E. Paris. It was the scene of an action between the French and Austrians in 1814.

NEMUEL (Bibl.) נמואל, son of Eliab, of Reuben, brother of Dathan and Abiram.

Nemuel, son of Simeon, and head of a family.

NENNIUS (Biog.) a British historian, who flourished in the seventh century, was the author of several works, of which the only one extant is his 'Historia Britonum,' or, 'Eulogium Britanniæ,' which has been printed in Gale's 'Historiæ Britanniæ Scriptores.'

NEOBULE (Biog.) a daughter of Lycambe, betrothed to the poet Archilochus. [Vide Lycambe]

NEOCLES (Biog.) an Athenian philosopher, father, or, according to Cicero, brother to the philosopher Epicurus.

NEOMAGUS (Geog.) the Latin name for Nimeguen.

NEOPTOLEMUS (Myth.) Νεοπτόλεμος, a king of Epirus, son of Achilles and Deidamia, called also Pyrrhus, from the yellow colour of his hair. He was the first who entered the wooden horse at the siege of Troy, and distinguished himself by his fierceness and cruelty. He was slain in an attempt to plunder the temple of Delphos. Hom. Odyss. l. 11; Pind. Nem. 7; Eurip. Androm. et Schol.; Sophocl. Philoct.; Apollod. l. 3; Virg. Æn. l. 2; Hygin. Fab.; Paterc. l. 1; Ovid. Met. l. 13; Paus. l. 10; Eustath. in Odyss. &c.

Neoptolemus (Hist.) an uncle of the celebrated Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, who assisted the Tarentines. He was put to death for attempting to poison his nephew. Plut. in Pyrrh.

Neoptolemus, one of Alexander's relations, who was the first that climbed the walls of Gaza, when that city was taken by the conqueror. After the king's death he received Armenia as his kingdom, and made war upon Eumenes, by whom he was killed, A. C. 321. C. Nep. in Eumen.

Neoptolemus, one of the officers of Mithridates the Great, who was beaten by Lucullus in a naval engagement. Plut. in Luc.

Neoptolemus (Biog.) a tragic poet of Athens, who was greatly in favour with Philip, king of Macedon. Diod. l. 16.

NEPEAN (Her.) the name of a family in Dorsetshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1802 on the right hon. sir Evan Nepean. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:
Arms. Gules, a fesse wavy erminois, between three mullets argent.
Crest. On a mount vert, a goat passant sable, charged on his side with ermine spots in fesse or, collared and attired or.

NEPHELE (Myth.) Νεφέλη, the first wife of Athamas, king of Thebes, and mother of Phryx and Helle, who was repudiated under the pretence of being subject to fits of insanity, and was afterwards changed into a cloud. Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 2; Ovid. Met. l. 11; Flacc. l. 11, &c.

NEPHERITES (Hist.) a king of Egypt, who assisted the Spartans against Persia when Agesilaus was in Asia. Diod. l. 14.

NEPOS, Julius (Hist.) son of Nepotianus, by a sister of Marcellinus, the patrician, caused himself to be proclaimed emperor, in opposition to Glycerius, in 474, and was assassinated in 480, by two of his people, whom Glycerius had corrupted. Evagr. Hist. Eccles. l. 2; Jornand. in Chron.

Nepos (Numis.) the medals of this usurper bear his effigy, as in the annexed figure, inscriptions—D. N. JULIUS NEPOS. AUG.—D. N. JUL. NEPOS. P. F. AUG.—FL. JUL. NEPOS. PERP. P. F. AUG.; on the reverse VICTORIA AUGG.—URBS ROMA.—VOT. V. MULT. X. Vaill. Præst.; Du Cange Fam. Byzant.; Beg. Thes. Brand.; Med. Imper. Rom. &c.

Nepos, Cornelius (Biog.) a Latin historian who flourished in the time of Julius Cæsar, and lived, according to St. Jerome, to the sixth year of Augustus. According to Catullus he was an Italian by birth, and born at Hostilia, a small town in the territory of Verona, in Cisalpine Gaul; but Ausonius makes him a Gaul by birth. He was the intimate friend of Cicero and Atticus, and wrote the Lives of the Greek Historians, as also three books of Chronicles; but of all his compositions nothing remains except his Lives of the Greek and Roman Generals. Among the many good editions of this author, that of Verheyk, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1773, and that of Glasgow, 12mo. 1761, may be reckoned the best.

NEPOTIANUS, Flavius Popilius (Hist.) a son of Eutropia, sister of Constantine, caused himself to be proclaimed emperor after the death of Constans; but was murdered by Anicetus, after a reign of 28 days. Aurel. Vict. Epit.; Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 2; Zosim. Hist. l. 2.

Nepotianus (Numis.) medals are extant of the above-mentioned prince, bearing his effigy as in the annexed figure, inscriptions—NEPOTIANUS CAESAR.—FL. NEP. CONSTANTINUS AUG.; on the reverse, URBS ROMA FELIX.—GLORIA ROMANORUM, &c. Stad. Imp. Roman.; Tristan. Comment. Hist.; Med. Imp. Rom. &c.; Mus. Pembroch. &c.

NEPTUNUS (Myth.) Neptune, in the Greek Ποσειδάων, son of Saturn and Ops, and brother to Jupiter, Pluto, and Juno. He was devoured by his father on the day of his birth; but restored to life by means of Metis, who gave Saturn a potion. Neptune shared with his brothers the empire of Saturn, and received as his portion the empire of the sea.

Non illi imperium pelagi sævumque tridentem,
Sed mihi sorte datum.

He is said to have first taught the art of horsemanship, wherefore a horse was commonly sacrificed to him. Hom. Il. passim.; Hesiod. Theogn.; Herodot. l. 2; Apollod. l. 1; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 2; Hygin. Fab. 157; August. de Civ. Dei, c. 18, &c.

Neptunus (Numis.) this deity is mostly represented under the form of an old man with a trident, and sometimes accompanied with a dolphin, which he holds in his hand, while resting his feet on the beak of a ship, to denote his dominion over the sea, as in the annexed figure; sometimes with the inscription—NEPTUNO REDUCI.—NEPTUNO AUG. &c.

NEQUAM (Biog.) vide Neckham.

NEREUS (Myth.) Νηρεὺς, a sea deity, son of Oceanus and Terra, who married Doris, by whom he had several daughters, called Nereides. He was generally represented as an old man with a long flowing beard, &c. Hom. Il. l. 18; Hesiod. Theog. v. 240; Orph. Argon.; Euripid in Iphig.; Apollod. l. 3, &c.

NERI, St. Philip de (Ecc.) founder of the congregation of the Oratory in Italy, was born in 1515, of a noble family at Florence, and died in 1595. The congregation founded by St. Philip de Neri was confirmed in 1574 by pope Gregory XIII, and took the name of the Oratory, because the original assemblies which gave rise to its establishment were held in an oratory of St. Jerome's church.

NERIUM (Geog.) or Artabrum, a promontory of Spain, on the Atlantic, now Cape Finisterre.

NERIUS (Hist.) duke of Athens, succeeded Antony Acciaioli, natural son of Rainier Acciaioli, but was expelled by Chalcondylus. His brother, Antony Nerius, succeeded him, and had another Nerius for his successor, who was expelled by an usurper named Francus; but the latter was deprived of his government by the Turks, who took possession of Athens, and placed a garrison in it.

NERLI, Francis (Ecc.) a cardinal, was born at Florence in 1636, sent as nuncio into Poland, Germany, and France, by Clement X, from whom he received a cardinal's hat in 1673, and died in 1708.

Nerli, Philip de (Biog.) an historian, was born at Florence in 1485, and died in 1556, leaving 'Commentari de' Fatti Civili,' fol. Augsburg, 1728.

NERO (Hist.) one of the surnames of the gens Claudia, which, during the times of the republic, was honoured with twenty-eight consulships, five dictatorships, six triumphs, seven censorships, and two ovations. They assumed the name of Nero, because in the Sabine language this word signified strong and warlike. Sueton. Tib.

Nero, Tib. Claudius, vide Tiberius.

Nero, Claudius Drusus, a son of Germanicus and Agrippina, and brother of Drusus the Younger, was ruined by Sejanus, and banished by order of Tiberius to the island of Pontia, where he died. Sueton. in Tib.

Nero, Claudius Domitius, the emperor, son of Caius Domitius Ahenobarbus and Agrippina, the daughter of Germanicus, was adopted by the emperor Claudius, A. D. 50, succeeded him four years after, and killed himself in the 32d year of his age, after a reign of thirteen years and eight months, in which he had rendered himself so odious to his subjects, that they willingly acknowledged Galba as emperor in his place, and sentenced the degraded prince to be thrown down the Tarpeian rock. He escaped the execution of this sentence by a voluntary death. Several conspiracies had been set on foot against him, previous to that in which Galba succeeded; but none was so formidable as that of Piso, which was frustrated by the confession of a slave. Among the atrocities which marked this reign was the persecution of the Christians, which was begun by Nero, and carried on with greater barbarity than in any subsequent reign. The apostles Peter and Paul suffered on this occasion, the former of whom was crucified with his head downward, and the latter was beheaded. Under pretence that the Christians had set Rome on fire, which all believed to be his own act, he ordered many of them to be sewn up in the skins of wild beasts, and exposed to dogs, and others to be sewed up in pitched coverings, and then set on fire, besides a variety of other tortures, by which he contrived to increase their sufferings. The name of Nero has therefore since become proverbial for cruelty and extravagant tyranny. Plin l. 7; Suet. in Vit.; Plut. in Galb.; Dio. l. 64; Aurel. Vict. in Epit.

Nero (Numis.) numerous coins and medals are extant of this emperor, bearing his effigy [vide Plate I], and inscriptions denoting his titles and dignities, as CAESAR PRINC. JUVENT. NESTOR (Biog.) a monk, of the convent of Petchersti, at Kiof, in Russia, was born in 1056, at Bielzier, and is supposed to have died about 1115. He was the author of a Chronicle, or History of Russia, of which a translation was published by Muller in 1732. Nestor was followed by three annalists, namely, Sylvester, abbot of the convent of St. Michael, at Kiof, and bishop of Perislaf, who died in 1123, whose Chronicle commences from 1115 and continues to 1123; which was continued by two anonymous writers to 1203.

NESTOR, Dionysius, a scholar, who flourished in the 15th century, was the author of a Latin dictionary, which was published under the title of 'Onomasticon,' fol. Mediol. 1483; and reprinted in 1488, 1496, 1502, and 1507.

NESTORIUS (Ecc.) an heresiarch, and bishop of Constantinople, was born at Germanica, a city of Syria, in the fifth century, and raised to the see of Constantinople on account of his reputed piety in 429; after which he began to disturb the peace of the church by broaching doctrines of his own respecting the Trinity, and became the leader of a sect called after him Nestorians.

NESTUS (Geog.) or Nessus, Νέσος, now Nesto, a small river of Thrace, rising in mount Rhodope, and falling into the Ægean Sea above the island of Thasos. Herod. l. 7.

NETHANIAH (Bibl.) נתניה, of the blood royal of Judah, and father of Ishmael, who slew Gedaliah. 2 Kings xxv. 23.

NETSCHER, Gaspard (Biog.) a painter of Prague, was born in 1639, and died in 1684, leaving, among other specimens of his skill, a Lady and a Dog; a Lady with her Hands joined; Lord Berkeley of Stratton, his Lady, and a Servant, in one piece, date 1676, &c.

NETSCHER, Theodore, his son, and pupil, who died in 1732, at the age of 71, principally excelled in portrait painting.

NETSCHER, Constantine, another son, who died in 1722, at the age of 52, was also reckoned a skilful portrait painter.

NETTERVILLE (Her.) the name of a family in Ireland, which enjoys the dignity of viscount, conferred in 1622 on sir John Netterville. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a cross gules, fretty or.
Crest. On a wreath, a demi-lion rampant gules, bezanty.
Supporters. The dexter, a sea-horse, parti per fess gules and proper, the mane, legs, fins, and tip of the tail or; the sinister, a lion gardant gules, bezanty.
Motto. "Cruci dum spiro, fido."

NETTLETON, Thomas (Biog.) a physician, and miscellaneous writer, was born in 1683, at Dewsbury, and died in 1742, leaving a treatise, entitled, 'Some Thoughts concerning Virtue and Happiness, in a Letter to a Clergyman,' 8vo. 1729, 1736, and 1751; besides a number of papers inserted in the Philosophical Transactions.

NETTUNO (Geog.) a town of Campagna di Roma, near the ruins of the ancient Antium, at the mouth of the Loracina, 24 m. S. by E. Rome.

NETUM (Geog.) a town of Sicily, now Noto, on the east of Syracuse. Sic. in Ver. l. 4; Plin. l. 3.

NEUBRIGENSIS, Gulielmus (Biog.) or William of Newborough, or Newburgh, an English historian, whose real name is said to have been Petit, was born in 1136, at Bridlington, in Yorkshire, but at what period he died is not known. His History from the Norman Conquest to the Year 1197, was published at Paris, with Picard's notes, 8vo. 1610, next by Gale, and lastly by Hearne, in 3 vols. 8vo. Oxon. 1719.

NEVE, Timothy (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1694, at Wotton, in Shropshire, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1727, leaving an 'Essay on the Invention of Printing,' &c. His son Timothy, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1798, published 'Animadversions on Philips's Life of Cardinal Pole,' 8vo.; besides his Bampton Lectures, &c.

NEVERS (Geog.) a town of France, capital of the former province of Nivernois, and of the modern department of the Nievre, situated on the right bank of the Loire, 30 m. N. N. W. Moulins, 116 N. W. Lyons, 145 S. by E. Paris. This town, which was known to the ancients by the name of Noviodunum, has since been called Nivernæ, Nivernium, Vadicassium, &c. It was erected into a county under the first race of French kings, and into a duchy by Charles VII in 1457. A council is said to have been held here in 763.

NEVILE (Biog.) or Nevyle, Alexander, an English poetical writer, descended from the family of Neville, mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1544, and died in 1614, leaving, 1. 'Kettus, sive de Furoribus Norfolciensium Ketto Duce,' 4to. Lond. 1575; reprinted in 1582, in Latin and English; and in English in 1615 and 1623. 2. 'Apologia ad Walliæ Proceres,' 4to. Lond. 1576. 3. A translation or paraphrase of 'Œdipus,' which was inserted in the collection of Seneca's Tragedies, translated by Studley, Nuce, Heywood, &c.

NEVILE, or Nevil, Thomas, brother to the preceding, who died Dean of Canterbury in 1615, was a great benefactor to Trinity College, Cambridge, having expended more than 3000*l.* in rebuilding the quadrangle which retains the name of Nevile's court.

NEVILE, or Neville, Henry, a republican writer, was born in 1620, and died in 1694, after having joined in the rebellion until the protectorate of Cromwell, whom he opposed. He wrote 'Plato Redivivus; or, a Dialogue concerning Government,' 1641; which Mr. Hollis, in his republican zeal, reprinted in 1763; 'The Parliament of Ladies;' 'Shuffling, Cutting, and Dealing,' &c. a satire on Cromwell; 'The Isle of Pines,' 4to. Lond. 1668.

NEVILLE (Hist.) or Nevil, Robert de, governor of the castles of Norham and Werke, in the reign of Henry III, was made captain-general of all the king's forces beyond the Trent, &c.; but afterwards fell off to the rebellious barons.

NEVILLE, or Nevile, Ranulph, his grandson, who held many high employments in the state in the time of Edward III, was once taken prisoner in a skirmish with the Scots, and retained some time in the custody of Patrick, earl of Dunbar; but afterwards had an eminent command at the battle of Durham, and attended the king into France.

NEVILLE, John de, son of the preceding, served a long time and with great distinction in the wars of France, and reduced the province of Aquitaine, of which he was governor, to a state of quiet, that had been overrun by the French. He won, or had surrendered to him, eighty-three walled towns, castles, and forts.

NEVILLE, Ralph de, vide Westmoreland.

NEVILLE (Her.) the name of an illustrious family, from which have sprung six earls of Westmoreland, two earls of Salisbury and Warwick, an earl of Kent, a marquis Montacute, a baron Ferrers, several barons Latimer, and Abergavenny, one queen, five duchesses, besides countesses and baronesses, an archbishop of York, and a number of gentry. The Nevilles are descended in the male line from Gospatrick, earl of Northumberland. The first that was ennobled was Ralph de Neville, who was advanced to the title of earl of Westmoreland in 21 Rich. II. This title was forfeited by Charles Neville, the sixth earl, in 1569. Richard de Neville, eldest son by a second marriage of the first earl of Westmoreland, became earl of Salisbury in right of his wife; and his son Richard was earl of Salisbury and Warwick, commonly known by the name of the king-maker; and John, the second son of the first earl of Salisbury, was created marquis of Montacute; and his son George was advanced to the dignity of duke of Bedford, but degraded afterwards for want of a sufficient livelihood, in consequence of his father's attainder. William de Neville, second son of Ralph, the first earl of Westmoreland by the second marriage, became lord Fauconberg in right of his wife, and was created earl of Kent; but at his death these titles became extinct. George Neville, brother of the two preceding, Richard and William, was summoned to Parliament by the title of lord Latimer; which title became extinct at the death of John, fourth lord Latimer. Edward Neville, a fourth son of the first earl of Westmoreland, and own brother to the preceding, obtained the castle and manor of Bergavenny in right of his wife, and was summoned by writ by the title of lord Bergavenny to the Parliament held in 29 Henry VI. George Neville, the fifth lord Abergavenny, was advanced in 1784 to the dignity of viscount Neville and earl of Abergavenny. [Vide Abergavenny] The descendant from a junior branch of the lords Abergavenny is now in possession of the barony of Braybrooke, to which Richard Aldworth Neville Griffin succeeded in 1798.

Neville, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Abergavenny.

NEUMANN, Caspar (Biog.) a chemist, was born at Zullichan in 1682, and died in 1737, leaving a number of works, which were published in English by Dr. Lewis, under the title of 'Chemical Works abridged and methodized.'

NEWARK, David Leslie, Lord (Hist.) vide Leslie.

Newark, Lord (Her.) the title conferred in 1661 on general Leslie [vide Leslie], which became properly extinct at the death of the second lord; although the title was assumed by two other members, until it was lost by the decision of the House of Lords in 1793.

Newark, Viscount, the title borne by the eldest son of earl Manvers.

NEWBOROUGH, Lord (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Wynn [vide Wynn]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Sable, three fleurs-de-lis argent.

Crest. On a wreath, a dexter arm in armour, holding in his hand proper, a fleur-de-lis or.

Supporters. Two lions rampant gules, the dexter gorged with a collar or, charged with three fleurs-de-lis sable; the sinister with a collar argent, charged with three crosses pattee gules.

Motto. "Suaviter in modo, fortiter in re."

NEWBURGH, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Radcliffe [vide Radcliffe and Livingston]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Radcliffe, earl of Newburgh, viscount of Kinnaird, and lord Livingston of Flacraig.

Arms. Argent, on a bend between three gilly flowers, gules, an anchor of the first, all within a double tressure vert.

Crest. A Moor's head proper, banded gules and argent, with pendants argent, at his ears.

Supporters. Dexter, a savage proper, wreathed about the head and middle vert; sinister, a horse argent, furnished gules.

Motto. "Si je puis."

Newburgh, William of (Biog.) vide Neubrigensis.

NEWBURY (Geog.) a market and borough town of Berkshire, in England, 17 m. W. by S. Reading, and 56 W. London. Lon. 1° 20′ W. lat. 51° 20′ N. Two battles were fought here between Charles I and his rebellious subjects in 1643 and 1644.

NEWCASTLE, William, Duke of (Hist.) of the family of Cavendish [vide Cavendish], distinguished by the epithet of the Loyal Duke of Newcastle, was signally active in the cause of Charles I, to whom he was a privy councillor, as he was also to Charles II, and died full of honours in 1676, at the age of 84, leaving among his works as an author, 1. 'La Methode nouvelle de dresser les Chevaux,' fol. Antwerp, 1658. It was first written in English, and translated into French. 2. 'A New Method and Extraordinary Invention to dress Horses,' &c.; a work distinct from the former, Antwerp, 1649. 3. Some Plays, as, 'The Exile;' 'The Country Captain;' 'Variety,' 12mo. 1649; 'The Humourous Lovers,' 4to. 1677; 'The Triumphant Widow;' besides some Poems, which are scattered among those of his duchess. [Vide Plate VIII]

Newcastle, Margaret, Duchess of, second wife to the preceding, and youngest daughter of sir Charles Lucas, was appointed one of the maids of honour to Henrietta, queen of England, whom she accompanied into France during the rebellion. She was married to the duke in 1645 at Paris, and, after contributing materially to his happiness, both abroad and on their return, she died in 1673, leaving among her works as an authoress, 1. 'The World's Olio,' fol. London, 1655. 2. 'Nature's Picture,' &c. fol. London, 1656. 3. 'Orations of divers sorts,' &c. fol. Lond. 1662. 4. 'Plays,' Lond. 1662. 5. 'Philosophical and Physical Opinions,' fol. London, 1663. 6. 'Observations upon Experimental Philosophy,' &c. fol. London. 7. 'Philosophical Letters,' &c. fol. 1664. 8. 'Poems and Phancies,' fol. London, 1664. 9. 'CCXI Sociable Letters,' fol. Lond. 1664. 10. 'The Life of the thrice noble, high, and puissant Prince William Cavendishe, Duke, Marquis, and Earl of Newcastle,' &c. fol. London, 1667, which was translated into Latin under the title of 'De Vitâ et Rebus gestis nobilissimi, illustrissimique Gulielmi,' &c. fol. London, 1668. 11. Plays, &c.; besides three folio volumes of Poems in MS. In 1676 a folio volume was printed, containing Letters and Poems in honour of the incomparable princess Margaret, duchess of Newcastle.

Newcastle, Henry, Duke of, son of the preceding duke and duchess, was a privy councillor to James II, but, disapproving of the revolution, he retired from public life, and died in 1691, in the 67th year of his age.

Newcastle, Thomas Holles, Duke of, of the family of Pelham [vide Pelham], a statesman who for a long time took the lead in the public affairs of England, was born in 1693, chosen in 1718 one of the Commissioners to sign, in conjunction with the Imperial Plenipotentiary and others, the treaty of alliance between the emperor, his Britannic majesty, and the king of France. In 1719 he was declared one of the Lords Justices for the administration of the government during his majesty's absence, which office he held also in the years 1720, 1723, 1725, 1727, &c.; in 1724 was appointed Principal Secretary of State; and in 1754 First Commissioner for executing the office of Treasurer of his Majesty's Exchequer, and died in 1768. [Vide Plate IX]

Newcastle, Duke of (Her.) a title which has been enjoyed by more than one family. That of Cavendish was the first upon whom it was conferred, in the person of sir William Cavendish, second son of sir Charles, the younger brother of the first earl of Devonshire, who was created earl of Newcastle in 1628, marquis of Newcastle in 1644, duke of Newcastle in 1665, all which titles became extinct at the death of the second duke, but was revived in the person of John Holles, fourth earl of Clare, who, marrying Margaret, daughter and coheir of Henry Cavendish, the second duke of Newcastle above-mentioned, was created Duke of Newcastle in 1694, which titles became extinct at his death, but that of duke of Newcastle was again revived in the person of Thomas Holles Pelham, his sister's son, by Thomas, lord

Pelham, who assumed the name and arms of Holles, and was, in 1756, created duke of Newcastle, which title descended at his death to his nephew Henry Fiennes Clinton, ninth earl of Lincoln. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Fiennes Pelham Clinton, duke of Newcastle, and earl of Lincoln.

Arms. Argent, six cross crosslets fitchy, 2, 3, and 1 sable, on a chief azure, two mullets or, pierced gules, the arms of Clinton, which are now quartered with those of Pelham.

Crest. In a ducal coronet gules, five ostrich feathers proper, banded azure.

Supporters. Two greyhounds argent, plain collared and lined gules.

Motto. "Loyaulté n'a honte."

Newcastle (Geog.) a borough and sea-port in Northumberland, situate on the N. side of the Tyne, and called Newcastle-upon-Tyne, to distinguish it from a borough in Staffordshire, called Newcastle-under-Lyne, 270 m. N. by W. London. Lon. 1° 37′ W. lat. 54° 50′ N.

History of Newcastle.

It is supposed by some to have been the Gabrosentum of the Romans, and a military station, where the Thracian cohort was quartered. The wall of Adrian, extending nearly across the island, terminated here, and that of Severus passed through the middle of the town. From the number of coins and other Roman antiquities which have been found at different times, it is known to have been a place of some importance, although no particular mention is made of it until the Norman conquest, when it derived its present name, rendered in Latin Novum Castrum, from a new castle which was built on the site of an old fortress in 1080 by Robert, son of William the Conqueror, which is in part still standing. In the hall of this castle John Baliol did homage to Edward I for the crown of Scotland; and David Bruce was a prisoner here under John Copland. In 1644, when the town, after an obstinate siege and defence, surrendered to the Scottish army, the mayor, sir John Marley, held out several days. The circumference of the walls, which are still standing, is reckoned to be upwards of two miles. Newcastle was made a borough by William the Conqueror, and has sent two members to parliament ever since the reign of Edward I, being one of the first boroughs summoned so to do. Its present opulence and importance are derived from the collieries.

Newcastle-under-Line, or Lyne, a market town in Staffordshire, nearly in the centre of the potteries, is situated on the eastern bank of the river Line, 15 m. N. Stafford, 149 N. W. London. Lon. 2° 13′ W. lat. 53° 1′ N. It derives its name from a castle now in ruins, called New Castle, to distinguish it from an older one at Chestertown, in the neighbourhood, and is moreover denominated 'Under-Line,' to distinguish it from the Newcastle above-mentioned. The first charter of incorporation was granted to this town in the reign of Henry VIII, and was confirmed by Elizabeth and Charles II. It sends two members to parliament, and has done so since the reign of Edward III.

NEWCOMB, Thomas (Biog.) an English divine and poet, and great grandson, by the mother's side, to the famous Spenser, was born in 1675, educated at Oxford, and died about 1766, leaving, 1. 'Bibliotheca,' a poem, preserved in Nichols' 'Select Collection of Miscellany Poems.' 2. 'The Last Judgement of Men and Angels,' &c. fol. 1723. 3. A number of miscellaneous Poems. 4. 'The Manners of the Times,' in seven satires. 5. 'A Collection of Odes and Epigrams, &c. occasioned by the Success of the British and Confederate Arms in Germany.' 6. 'Novus Epigrammatum Delectus,' &c. 8vo. 1760; besides a number of other pieces.

NEWCOME, William (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, descended from a nonconformist family, was born at Barton le Clay, in Bedfordshire, in 1729, educated at Oxford; promoted in 1765 to the see of Dromore; translated to that of Ossory in 1775; to that of Waterford in 1779; and to the archiepiscopal see of Armagh in 1796, leaving 'Attempt towards Revising our English Translation of the Greek Scriptures, or the New Covenant of Jesus Christ,' which has afforded the Unitarians an opportunity to offer to the public, under the authority of his name, a version of the New Testament fashioned after their manner.

NEWCOMEN, Viscount (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Newcomen, in the county of Longford, which was conferred in 1803 on Charlotte Newcomen, descended from a collateral branch of this family, which had for some time enjoyed a baronetcy. The title became extinct in 1822.

NEWCOURT, Richard (Biog.) principal registrar of the diocese of Canterbury, who died in 1716, was the author of 'Repertorium Ecclesiasticum Parochiale Londinense,' which was published in 2 vols. fol.; the first in 1708, and the second in 1710. He was probably the Richard Newcourt, gent. who assisted in publishing 'An Exact Delineation of London,' &c. in 1658.

NEWDIGATE, Sir Roger, Bart. (Hist.) a scholar and benefactor to the University of Oxford, was born in 1719, educated at Westminster, and University College, Oxford, and died in 1806, after having been elected five several times as representative for his Alma Mater, to whom, among other donations, he gave the Candelabra in the Radcliffe Library, which cost 1800l., and 1000l. to be vested in the public funds in the name of the Vice-Chancellor and the Master of University College for the time being in trust, part of it to go for an annual prize for English verses on ancient sculpture, painting, and architecture, and the remainder to accumulate as a fund towards the improvements and repairs of the lodgings of the Master of University College.

NEWFOUNDLAND (Geog.) an island on the E. coast of N. America, between 47° and 52° N. latitude, was discovered by Sebastian Cabot, and after many disputes with the French, it was ceded to the English in 1713.

NEWLAND, Peter (Biog.) a Dutch author, was born in 1764, and died in 1794, leaving some Poems in the Dutch Language; a Treatise on Navigation, &c.

NEWPORT, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Bradford.

NEWRY, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Kilmorey.

NEWTON, Thomas (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1704, educated at Cambridge, promoted to the see of Bristol in 1761, and died in 1782, leaving among his works, Dissertations on the Prophecies, &c. all which were published in 1782, in 2 vols. 4to. reprinted in 6 vols. 8vo. 1787, to which latter edition is prefixed some account of his life. He also edited the works of Milton, to which he prefixed a Life of the poet.

Newton, Thomas (Biog.) a Latin poet, and an English divine, schoolmaster, and physician, who died in 1607, wrote, 1. 'A notable History of the Saracens,' &c. 4to. London, 1575. 2. 'A Summary or brief Chronicle of the Saracens and Turks,' &c. printed with the former. 3. 'Approved Medicines,' &c. 8vo. ibid. 1580. 4. 'Illustrium aliquot Anglorum Encomia,' 4to. ibid. 1589, at the end of Leland's Encomia. 5. 'Atropoion Delion,' &c. a poetical Discourse of our late Queen Elizabeth, 4to. 1603. 6. 'A pleasant New History,' &c. besides translations of several books, as 'Touchstone of Complexions from Levinus Lemnius;' 'Commentary on the two Epistles general of St. Simon and St. Jude,' from Luther, 4to. ibid. 1581; Seneca's tragedy entitled, the 'Thebais,' published with the other translated plays. 'The Herbal to the Bible,' is also attributed to him, being a translation of 'Levini Lemnii Ex-plicatio Similitudinum quæ in Bibliis ex Herbis et Arboribus sumentur.'

NEWTON, John (Biog.) an English divine and mathematician, was born in 1622, at Oundle, educated at Oxford, and died in 1678, after having maintained his loyalty during the rebellion, leaving, 1. 'Astronomia Britannica,' &c. in three parts, 4to. 1656. 2. 'Help to Calculation,' &c. 4to. 1657. 3. 'Trigonometria Britannica,' in two books, fol. 1658, one composed by our author, and the other translated from the Latin of Henry Gellibrand. 4. 'Chiliades centum Logarithmorum,' printed with, 5. 'Introduction to Astronomy.' 19. 'Introduction to Geography,' 8vo. 1678.

NEWTON, Sir Isaac, an English mathematician and philosopher, of the first rank among the moderns, was born in 1642, at Woolsthorpe, in the parish of Colsterworth, of the family of sir John Newton, bart. and lord of the manor of Woolsthorpe, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and died in 1727, after having obtained an extraordinary credit for sagacity in the discovery of new truths in mathematics and philosophy. Although some have called in question the reality of his inventions and discoveries, yet the greater part of philosophers have embraced his system, and many have employed their pens in illustrating his various works, of which the following is a list, 1. Several papers relating to his 'Telescope,' and his 'Theory of Light and Colours,' printed in the Philosophical Transactions, Vol. VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI. 2. 'Optics, or a Treatise of the Reflections, Refractions, and Inflections,' &c. 4to. 1704, a Latin translation by Dr. Clarke, 4to. 1706, and a French translation by Pet. Coste, 2 vols. 12mo. Amsterdam, 1729. 3. 'Optical Lectures,' 8vo. 1728, also in several letters to Mr. Oldenburg, secretary of the Royal Society. 4. 'Lectiones Opticæ,' 4to. 1729. 5. 'Naturalis Philosophiæ Principia Mathematica,' 4to. 1687; a second edition in 1713, with a Preface by Roger Cotes; the third edition in 1726, under the direction of Dr. Pemberton; an English translation by Motte, 2 vols. 8vo. 1729, printed in several editions of his works, in different nations, particularly an edition with a large Commentary, by the two learned Jesuits Le Seur and Jacquier, in 4 vols. 4to. in 1739, 1740, and 1742. 6. 'A System of the World,' translated from the Latin original, 8vo. 1727. 7. 'Several Letters to Mr. Flamstead, Dr. Halley, and Mr. Oldenburg.' 8. 'A Paper concerning the Longitude,' drawn up by order of the House of Commons. 9. 'Abrégé de Chronologie,' &c. 1726, under the direction of the Abbé Conti, together with some observations upon it. 10. 'Remarks upon the Observations made upon a Chronological Index of Sir I. Newton,' &c. in Phil. Transactions, Vol. XXXII, also the same, Vol. XXXIV and XXXV. 11. 'The Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms amended,' &c. 4to. 1728. 12. 'Arithmetica Universalis,' &c. published under the inspection of Mr. Whiston, in 8vo. at Cambridge, as, is supposed, without the author's consent; there are English editions of the same, particularly one by Wilder, with a Commentary, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1769, and a Latin edition, with a Commentary by Castilion, 2 vols. 4to. Amst. &c. 13. 'Analysis per Quantitatum Series,' &c. 4to. which had been previously published, with another on the Quadrature of the Curves, &c. under the title of 'Tractatus duo de Speciebus,' &c. 14. Several Letters relating to his dispute with Leibnitz, upon his right to the invention of Fluxions, printed in the 'Commercium Epistolicum D. Johannis Collins, et aliorum,' &c. 16. 'The Method of Fluxions and Analysis by Infinite Series,' translated into English from the original Latin,' &c. 4to. 1736. 17. 'Observations on the Prophecies of Daniel, and the Apocalypse of St. John,' 4to. 1733. 18. 'Tables for purchasing College Leases,' 12mo. 1742. 19. 'Is. Newtoni Elementa Perspectivæ Universalis,' 8vo. 1746, besides a number of smaller pieces. He also published 'Barrow's Optical Lectures,' 4to. 1669, and 'Bern. Varenii Geographia,' 8vo. 1681. The whole works of Newton were published by Dr. Horsley, in 5 vols. 4to. 1779. He likewise left a vast quantity of MSS. and papers relative to Chronology and Church History, many of which are only copies of the works already published. [Vide Plate XXXIV]

NEWTON, Richard, an English divine, was born about 1676, educated at Oxford, and died in 1753, after having made himself known for a time by his foundation of Hertford College, at Oxford, which is now entirely fallen into decay, and the site occupied by Magdalen Hall.

NEWTON, John, an English clergyman, and the friend of the poet Cowper, was born in 1725, and died in 1807, leaving a number of works, consisting of Sermons, Review of Ecclesiastical History, Hymns, &c. which were published after his death.

NEWTOWN, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Lanesborough.

NICÆA (Geog.) Νικαία, a town of Bithynia, now Nice, or Isnik, built by Antigonus, son of Philip, king of Macedonia, was originally called Antigonia, and afterwards Nicæa, by Lysimachus, after his wife, the daughter of Antipater. [Vide Nice] Strab. l. 12; Mela, l. 2.

NICÆA (Numis.) many medals are extant of this town, struck either as an independent state, or in honour of Augustus. Claudius, Messalina, Nero, Vespasian, Domitian, Trajan, Adrian, L. ΠΡΩΤΟΙ. ΤΗΣ ΕΠΑΡΧΙΑΣ.—ΤΟΝ ΚΤΙΣΤΗΝ ΝΙΚΑΕΙΣ ΠΡΩΤΟΙ Π. ΚΑΙ ΒΙΘ, i. e. Conditorem (colunt) Nicæenses Primi Ponti et Bithyniæ.—ΣΜΥΡ. ΝΙΚΑΙΕ. ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛ, i. e. Smyrnæensium, Nicæensium, Metropolis; also with the name of their magistrates, as ΕΠΙ ΓΑΙΟΥ ΠΑΠΙΡΙΟΥ ΚΑΡΒΩΝΟΣ, i. e. Sub Caio Papirio Carbone, &c. and likewise with the variations, CΩΤΗΡΙ ΑCΚΛΗΠΙΩ ΝΙΚΑΙΕΙC, i. e. Servatori Æsculapio Nicæenses.—ΘΗΑ ΔΗΜΗΤΗΡ. ΝΕΙΚΑΙΕΙC, &c.—ΔΙΟΝΥCΟΝ ΚΤΙCτὴν ΝΙΚΑΙΕΙC.—ΑΓΑΘ. ΤΥΧΗ.—ΑCΚΛΗΠΕΙΑ, i. e. Asclepia certamina. The Nicæenses particularly honoured Æsculapius, Hygeia, Ceres, Bacchus, Cybele, and Diana, on their medals. Vaillant. Græc.; Patin. Impp.; Tristan. Comment. Hist.; Harduin. Oper.

NICAGORAS (Biog.) a sophist of Athens, and son of the orator Mneseus, and father of the sophist Minucianus, flourished in the third century under Philip and Decius. He wrote the lives of illustrious men, according to Suidas. He is to be distinguished from the Nicagoras who flourished in the reign of Alexander, and was called the Mercury of his time, as mentioned by Clemens Alexandrinus.

NICAISE, St. (Ecc.) a martyr, and, according to some, the first archbishop of Rouen, preached the gospel in this city at the time that St. Denys was preaching at Paris. He is said to have been murdered with his brother Quirinus, A. D. 250. Baillet Vies des Saintes.

Nicaise, St. a bishop of Rheims, was beheaded by the Vandals when they invaded Gaul, and took Rheims, with some other cities, in 407.

Nicaise, Claude (Biog.) an antiquary, of a good family at Dijon, was born in 1623, and died in 1701, leaving 'Une Explication d'un ancien Monument trouvé en Guienne,' &c. 4to. Guienne, 1689; 'De Nummo Pantheo Adriani Imperatoris,' 1689; 'Une Dissertation sur les Syrenes,' &c. 4to. Paris, 1691; 'Un Discours sur la Musique des Anciens,' &c.; A French Translation of a piece from the Italian of Bellori, containing a description of the pictures in the Vatican, to which he added, a Dissertation upon the Schools of Athens and Parnassus.

NICANDER (Hist.) son of Charillus, and a king of Sparta, of the family of the Proclidæ, begun to reign A. C. 806, and died after a reign of 39 years. Paus. l. 2.

Nicander (Ecc.) and Martianus, both saints and martyrs in the fourth century, who suffered in the persecution of Diocletian. They were in the army, and being commanded to offer incense to idols, they refused, and were in consequence beheaded. Baillet. Vies des Saintes.

Nicander (Biog.) a grammarian, poet, and physician, of Colophon, who flourished about the 160th Olympiad, A. C. 140, was the author of several works, two only of which are remaining, one entitled 'Theriaca,' describing in verse the accidents which attend wounds made by venomous beasts, with the proper remedies; the other 'Alexipharmaca,' a poem, treating of poisons and their antidotes. These two poems are inserted in the 'Corpus Poetarum Græcarum,' and among the separate editions is that of Gorræus, with a translation in Latin verse by Grevins, 8vo. Paris, 1549, and 4to. 1557; and that of Salvinus, with an Italian version, 8vo. Florent. 1764, which are reckoned the best. The Editio Princeps, with the Greek scholia, published by Aldus, fol. Venet. 1499, and annexed to Dioscorides, is also highly esteemed, as is the reprint by Aldus, in 1522-23. Cic. de Orat. l. 1; Plin. l. 37; Athen. l. 7, &c.; Macrob. l. 5; Suidas, &c.

NICANOR (Bibl.) Νικάνωρ, one of the first seven deacons who were chosen and appointed at Jerusalem, soon after the descent of the Holy Ghost. Acts vi. 5. According to the Roman Martyrology, he suffered martyrdom January 10, in the island of Cyprus.

Nicanor (Hist.) or Nicator, vide Demetrius.

Nicanor, a governor of Munychia, who seized the Piræus, and was at last put to death by Cassander, because he wished to make himself absolute over Attica. Diod. l. 18.

Nicanor, son of Patrocles, general of the army of Syria, was sent into Judæa by Antiochus, A. M. 3839, with Gorgias, and fought two battles against Judas, in both of which he was defeated, and in the last was himself slain, when the Jews cut off his head and his right hand, which he had contemptuously and sacrilegiously stretched out against the temple, and hung them up in sight of Jerusalem. This happened A. M. 3843, A. C. 161. 2 Maccab. xiv.

Nicanor, a tribune in the army of Vespasian, who was killed at the siege by an arrow shot at him as he was exhorting the Jews to surrender.

Nicanor, a Samian, who wrote a treatise on rivers, &c.

NICARIA (Geog.) an island in the Archipelago, anciently called Icaria, having Samos on the E, Naxia on the W, Chios on the N, and Patmos on the S.

NICASTRO (Geog.) a town of Calabria Ultra, in the kingdom of Naples, 15 miles N. W. Squillace, and 24 N. N. E. Mileto. It is the ancient Neocastrum, and has an old castle in which Henry, the rebellious son of Frederick II, king of Naples, was for some time confined. This town was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1638.

NICATOR (Hist.) a surname of Seleucus, from his numerous conquests.

NICAULIS (Hist.) a queen of Æthiopia, who, according to Josephus, was the same as the queen Sheba, who went to visit Solomon, A. M. 3047, A. C. 988. Joseph. Antiq. l. 8.

NICCOLI (Biog.) or Niccolo, in Latin Nicolaus, founder of the library of St. Mark, and son of Bartholomew Niccoli, a merchant of Florence, was born in 1363, and died in 1437, leaving a vast collection of transcripts from Greek, Roman, and oriental authors, which were deposited in the Dominican monastery of St. Mark, at Florence, and served as the foundation of the library above-mentioned.

NICE (Geog.) a town in the states of Sardinia, in the N. W. of Italy, and capital of a province of the same name, 92 miles S. W. Genoa, and 92 S. by W. Turin.

History of Nice.

Nice, called by the Greeks Νικαία, and by the Latins Nicæa, was successively subject to the kings of Burgundy, counts of Provence, and dukes of Savoy. It came into the hands of the latter in the 13th century, when Amadeus VII took it from Joan, countess of Provence, while she was occupied with the troubles of the kingdom of Naples. It was in this city that an interview took place between the pope Paul III, the emperor Charles V, and the king Francis I, in 1538. It was afterwards taken by Louis XIV in 1691, and again in 1705, but was restored to the duke of Savoy by the treaty of Utrecht.

Nice, the town of Bithynia, which is spoken of under its ancient name of Nicæa, is mostly known by the council general which was held here in 325, under the pontificate of S. Sylvester, and the reign of Constantine, on the subject of the Arian heresy, which was attended by some of the most illustrious fathers of the Christian church, who had suffered for their faith; among these was Alexander, patriarch of Alexandria, with his deacon, the celebrated St. Athanasius, Eustathius of Antioch, Macarius of Jerusalem, Leontius of Cæsarea, Paphnutius of Upper Thebais, &c. This council made twenty canons for the discipline of the church, which have ever since been of force throughout Christendom; besides which a formula of faith was drawn up in direct reference to the Arian heresy, which is now well known by the name of the Nicene Creed. Another general council was held at Nice in 787, on the subject of worshipping images. Euseb. Vit. Constant.; Sozom. Hist. Eccles. l. 1; *Nicephor. in Chron.; Baron. Annal.; Hermant. Vit. NICEPHORUS (Hist.) the name of three emperors of Constantinople.

Nicephorus I, surnamed Logothetes, revolted against Irene, widow of Leo, and, having banished her to the island of Mitylene, in violation of a treaty concluded between them, took possession of the throne in 802, and was killed by the Bulgarians, who surprized him by night in his tent in 811. Theophan. Chronog.; Zonar. et Cedren. Annal.

Nicephorus II, surnamed Phocas, son of Bardas Phocas, a successful general, and governor of Cappadocia under Constantine Porphyrogenitus, succeeded Romanus in 963, and died in 969, after having obtained numerous advantages over the Saracens. Zonar. Cedren. &c.

Nicephorus III, surnamed Botoniates, a general of the empire in Asia, caused himself to be proclaimed emperor in 1078, and was dethroned by Alexis Comnenus in 1081, when he retired to a monastery. Joannes Curopalates, Anna Comnenus, Zonaras, Cedrenus, &c.

Nicephorus, son of Artabazus, was honoured with the title of emperor in 741 by the Catholics, who had revolted against Constantine Copronymus, but, being defeated by the latter, he had his eyes put out.

Nicephorus, second son of Constantine Copronymus, was invested with the title of Cæsar by his father in 769, but was banished to Chersonesus by his brother Leo. He had his eyes put out in 792, and was put to death five years after at Athens by order of the empress Irene, because he was very popular, and was suspected of having views towards the empire.

Nicephorus, Brienne, vide Brienne.

Nicephorus, St. (Ecc.) a martyr of Antioch in the time of the persecution under Valerian and Gallienus, was beheaded about 260, because he refused to offer incense to idols.

Nicephorus, the name of two patriarchs of Constantinople.

Nicephorus I, succeeded Tarasius in 806, and was banished in 815 by the emperor Leo the Armenian, on account of his zeal for the worship of images, which this emperor opposed. This patriarch composed an abridgement of history, entitled 'Historiæ Breviarium,' which was published by Petavius in 1616, and another work, entitled 'Chronologia Tripartita,' which Anastasius Bibliothecarius translated into Latin, and Joseph Scaliger, as well as others, have published. Theophan. Chronog.; Theod. Stud. Epist.; Zonar. et Cedren. Annal.; Baron. Ann.; Du Pin, Biblioth.

Nicephorus II, archbishop of Ephesus, was promoted to the see of Constantinople after Arsenes in 1260, and died the same year. Gregoras. l. 4.

Nicephorus, Cartophylax (Biog.) a writer who lived in the eighth and ninth centuries, wrote some pieces, which have been translated into Latin, and inserted in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum.'

Nicephorus, a Greek author of Phrygia, wrote a history of his own time, mentioned by Curopalates.

Nicephorus, surnamed Basilacius, a professor of rhetoric at Constantinople about 1281, left some small treatises, collected with those of Heraclitus, Libanius, and some other writers, by Leo Allatius, and printed at Rome in 1641. Nicet. l. 7; Manuel. Comn. et Hist. Rom. l. 4.

Nicephorus, Blemmidas, a priest and monk of mount Athos, who refused the patriarchate of Constantinople, was the author of two Treatises on the Procession of the Holy Ghost, which were printed in Greek and Latin by Leo Allatius. He also wrote a letter on his expelling from her convent Marchesine, mistress of the emperor John Ducas. Leo Allat. Græc. Orthodox. &c.; Spondan. Contin. Baron. &c.

Nicephorus, Gregoras, a Greek historian in the 13th century, who flourished in the reigns of the Andronici, John Palæologus, and John Cantacuzenus, compiled the Byzantine History from 1204 to 1341, which, with a Latin version by Jerome Wolfe, was printed at Basil in 1562, and again at Geneva in 1615. A new version by Bouvin the younger has since been published by Bouvin in the edition printed at the Louvre in 1702, in 2 vols. fol.

Nicephorus, Callistus, a monk of Constantinople in the 14th century, wrote in Greek an Ecclesiastical History, which was translated by Langius, and has gone through several editions, of which the Paris edition, published in 1630, is reckoned the best. His abridgement of the Bible in Iambic verse, was printed at Basil in 1536; and his Homilies on St. Mary Magdalen are inserted in Bandini's 'Monumenta,' Vol. III. 1762.

NICERON, John Francis (Biog.) a mathematician, was born at Paris in 1613, and died in 1646, leaving, 1. 'L'Interpretation des Chiffres,' &c. a translation from the Italian of Cospi on the art of decyphering. 2. 'La Perspective Curieuse,' &c. fol. Paris, 1638. 3. 'Thaumaturgus Opticus,' &c. fol. Paris, 1646.

Niceron, John Peter, a well known French biographer, of the same family as the preceding, was born at Paris in 1685, and died in 1738, leaving 'Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire des Hommes Illustres dans la Republique des Lettres;' the first volume of which was published in 1727, and the other volumes, as far as the 39th, in the subsequent years until 1738; the 40th volume was published after his death; besides this work, by which he is best known, he translated, 1. 'Le Grand Febrifuge,' &c. translated from the English of John Hancock, which passed through three editions, the last of which appeared under the title of 'Traité de l'Eau Commune,' 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1730. 2. 'Les Voyages de Jean Ouvington à Surate,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1725. 3. 'La Conversion de l'Angleterre au Christianisme comparée avec sa prétendue Réformation,' from the work of an English Catholic. 4. 'Geographic Physique,' &c. 4to. Paris, 1735, from the English of Dr. Woodward.

NICETAS, St. (Ecc.) a Goth by birth, and a martyr, was put to death by burning, according to some accounts, in the persecution set on foot by Athanaric, king of the Goths, in consequence of his brother Fritigerne having been converted to the Christian faith.

Nicetas, St. an abbot of Bithynia, who was banished to the Propontis, in consequence of his opposing the intrusion of Theodosius to the see of Constantinople in the place of Nicephorus.

Nicetas, the name of two patriarchs of Constantinople.

Nicetas I, a Sclavonian by birth, and a eunuch, was raised to the see of Constantinople by the emperor Constantine Copronymus in 766, in consequence of his zeal against the worship of images, and died in 780. Curopalat. et Cedren. Compend.

Nicetas II, succeeded Basilius Camaterus, whom the emperor Isaac Angelus had deposed in 1186, and governed the church for six years and a half. Nicet. Chomat. in Isaac Angel.; Baron. Annal.

Nicetas, David (Biog.) a Greek historian, whom some make a native of Paphlagonia, flourished in the ninth and tenth centuries, and wrote a Life of St. Ignatius, which Frederic Mutius, bishop of Termuli, has translated, and also Father Raderus, whose version was printed at Ingolstad in 1604. This Nicetas also wrote some other works.

Nicetas, surnamed Scidus, was the author of a treatise against the usurpations of the see of Rome, mentioned by Leo Allatius. Allat. de Occid. et Orient. Eccles. Consens.

Nicetas, surnamed Serron, a deacon in the church of Constantinople, cotemporary with Theophylactus, in the 11th century, composed a commentary upon the 'Orationes Funebres' of Gregory Nazianzen, which is inserted in the works of this father. There is also ascribed to him a 'Catena' on the book of Jacob, consisting of passages taken from the fathers, which was printed by Junius, Gr. and Lat. fol. Lond. 1637; also 'Catenæ' on the Psalms, &c. printed at Basle in 1552; and a 'Commentary upon the Poems of Gregory Nazianzen,' printed at Venice.

Nicetas, Achominates, or Choniates, a Greek historian, so named because he was a native of Chone, or Colossus, a town in Phrygia, who died in 1206, wrote Annals from the death of Alexis Comnenus in 1118, to that of Baldwin, the French emperor of Constantinople, in 1205, entitled 'Nicetæ Acominati Choniatæ Hist. Gr. et Lat. edit. An. Fabroto,' fol. Paris. 1647, which is reckoned the best edition; but it had been printed with a Latin version by Jerome Wolf at Basle in 1557, and at Geneva in 1593. It has since been inserted among the 'Byzantinæ Historiæ Scriptores varii,' &c.

NICETIUS, St. (Ecc.) a bishop of Triers, in the sixth century, and one of the most distinguished prelates of his time, assisted at the first council of Clermont in 535, at the second in 549, at the fifth council of Orleans in the same year, and the second council of Paris in 555, and died in 566, after having displayed the greatest zeal in opposing the heretics of his day. He wrote two letters; one to Clodosinde, wife of Alboin, king of Lombardy, to exhort her to draw the king from Arianism, to which he was inclined; and the other to Justinian, to draw him from the errors of the Eutychians, into which he had fallen; the latter is preserved in the works of Gregory of Tours; besides which he wrote two ascetic pieces, given by D'Acheri in his 'Spicilegium.'

NICHOLAS (Ecc.) vide Nicolas.

NICHOLAS, Abraham, an English penman, who died in 1744, at the age of 52, was the author of the 'Penman's Assistant,' &c.

NICHOLS (Biog.) or Niccols, Richard, a poet, was born in London in 1584, educated at Oxford, and died after 1616. His principal works are 'The Mirror for Magistrates;' 'The Cuckow, a Poem,' London, 1607; 'Monodia, or Waltham's Complaint,' &c. 1615; 'England's Eliza,' &c. annexed to his edition of the Mirror in 1610, &c.

NICHOLS, William, an English divine, was born at Donnington, Bucks, in 1664, educated at Oxford, and died in 1712, leaving, 1. 'An Answer to an Heretical Book, called The Naked Gospel, which was condemned and ordered to be publicly burnt by the Convocation of the University of Oxford,' &c. 4to. 1691. 2. 'A Short History of Socinianism,' &c. 3. 'A Practical Essay on the Contempt of the World,' 8vo. 1694. 4. 'A Treatise of Consolation to Parents for the Death of their Children,' &c. 8vo. 1701. 5. NICODEMUS (Bibl.) Νικόδημος, a disciple of Jesus Christ, whom our Saviour entitled a Master in Israel. John iii. Some heretics have ascribed to him a gospel.

NICODEMUS (Hist.) an Athenian commander of a fleet, who was appointed by Conon to go to the assistance of Artaxerxes. Diod. l. 14.

NICODEMUS, a tyrant of the Centuri-pini in Italy, was expelled by Timoleon in the second year of the 110th Olympiad, 339 A. C. Diod. l. 16.

NICODORUS (Biog.) a wrestler of Mantinea, who studied philosophy in his old age. Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 2.

NICOLAI, John (Hist.) of an ancient and illustrious French family, was employed by Charles VIII on various missions, and continued also in the service of Louis XII in the capacity of master of requests until his death in 1504.

NICOLAI, John (Biog.) a Dominican, was born in 1594, and died in 1673, leaving, 1. 'Galliæ dignitas adversus præposterum Catalaniæ assertorem vindicata,' &c. 4to. Paris. 1644. 2. 'Ludovici XIII Justi nuncupati, Galliæ et Navarræ Regis, triumphalia Monumenta,' fol. Paris. 1649. 3. 'Judicium, seu Censorium Suffragium de Propositione Antonii Arnoldi,' &c. 4to. Paris. 1656, &c.; besides editing the works of S. Thomas Aquinas.

NICOLAS (Bibl.) Νικόλαος, a proselyte, and one of the first seven deacons of the church of Jerusalem. Acts vi. 5. He has been charged by some with being the founder of the sect of Nicolaites, who maintained a plurality of wives, and gave in to the excesses and impurities of paganism. Although he is acquitted of this charge, yet it is most generally admitted that he gave rise at least to this sect (however innocently on his part) by having returned to his wife, who was very beautiful, after he had left her to devote himself to a life of continence. S. Iren. l. 1; S. Ignat. Epist. ad Trallian. &c.; Clem. Alexandrin. Strom. l. 3; Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 3; S. Epiphan. Hæres.; Theodoret. Hæres. Fab. l. 3; Baron. Annal. ann. 68; Du Pin, Biblioth.

NICOLAS (Hist.) a king of Denmark, seized the throne in 1105, to the detriment of his nephew Canute, who was put to death in 1133. Shortly after Nicolas was killed in his palace, with most of his guards.

NICOLAS, Stur, son, as is said, of Stenon Stur, king of Sweden, was raised to the throne by the voice of the nation after the death of his father in 1520; but Christina, his mother, wishing to marry Gustavus, disowned her son, and gave him out as an impostor; in consequence of which he was obliged to fly the kingdom, and afterwards falling into the hands of Gustavus, he was condemned to lose his head as an impostor and a rebel.

NICOLAS (Ecc.) the name of several popes, prelates, &c.

Popes of this Name.

NICOLAS I, surnamed the Great, was elected after Benedict III in 858, and died in 867, after having testified his zeal against the deposition of S. Ignatius, and the usurpation of the patriarchate of Constantinople by Photius. In his day the schism between the Greek and Latin churches was completed. He had Adrian for his successor.

NICOLAS II, surnamed Gerard of Burgundy, became archbishop of Florence, after which he was elected to the papal chair in 1058, and died in 1061, when he had Alexander III for a successor. He was at first opposed by John, who assumed the name of Benedict X; but the latter finding himself unable to support his pretensions, gave up the contest and submitted to his rival. He held a council at Rome for the purpose of preventing the troubles which attended the election of popes, and extended the papal authority over Lombardy.

NICOLAS III, a Roman by birth, of the house of the Ursini, succeeded John XXI in 1277, after the see had been vacant six months and four days, and died in 1280. He sent missionaries into Tartary, and gave encouragement to learning. Martin IV succeeded him.

NICOLAS IV, a Franciscan, named Brother Jerome, and a native of Ascoli, succeeded Honorius IV in 1288, after an interregnum of nearly eleven months, and died in 1292, leaving the character of a philosopher and a theologian, of which he gave testimony in some Commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. He published a crusade to the Holy Land, and laboured at the conversion of the Tartars and Sclavonians. He was succeeded by Celestin V.

NICOLAS V, named before his elevation Thomas de Sarzanne, bishop of Bologna, and a native of Luni, was elected in 1447, on the death of Eugenius IV, and died in 1455. It is said that the conspiracy formed against him and the cardinals by Stephen Porcario, and the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, and the consequent calamities of the Christians, accelerated his end. Calixtus III succeeded him. [Vide Plate X]

NICOLAS, antipope, vide John XXII.

Prelates, and other distinguished Persons of this Name.

NICOLAS, the name of three patriarchs of Constantinople.

NICOLAS, surnamed the Mystic, succeeded Antony in 895, and died in 925, after having been deposed by Leo VI, and restored by Alexander, the second son of Leo the Wise. He sent legates to the pope, John II, respecting the union of the Greek and Latin churches. Curopalat. Compend.

NICOLAS II, surnamed Chrysoberg, succeeded Antony Studite in 983, and governed the church until 996. Curopalat.

NICOLAS III, surnamed the Grammarian, succeeded Eustathius in 1084, and died in 1111, after having made some canons, and divers decrees, &c. Zonar. Annal.; Phot. in Nomoc. tit. 13, &c.

NICOLAS, S. a bishop of Myra, in Lycia, at the commencement of the fourth century, was sent into exile during the persecution of Licinius; but on his return, after the death of this tyrant, he caused all the pagan temples and idols to be thrown down which he found in his diocese.

NICOLAS, bishop of Methone in the 11th and 12th centuries, composed a treatise on the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ.

NICOLAS, bishop of Butrinto, was employed by the emperor, Henry VII, during the troubles which at that time disturbed Italy, and afterwards wrote an account of that emperor's journey into Italy from 1810 to 1813, which was published by M. Baluze, at the end of the second volume of his Lives of the Popes of Avignon, and inserted by Muratori in the eleventh volume of his Collection of the Historians of Italy.

NICOLAS de Cusa, or Cusanus, a cardinal, was born in 1401, sent by Eugenius IV on an embassy to Constantinople, as also into France and Germany, and was created a cardinal by Nicolas V in 1448, who gave him the bishopric of Brixen. He afterwards went into Germany as legate a latere, in order to rouse the German princes to engage in a crusade against the Turks, and died in 1464, leaving a number of theological works, of which a list was given, first by Trithemius, afterwards by Stapleton, with additions, and a third time by Bellarmin; this last is not so imperfect as that of Trithemius, and not so ample as that of Stapleton.

NICOLAS of Munster, founder of a fanatical sect called the Family, or House of Love; gave himself out to be inspired by the Holy Spirit, and to be superior to Jesus Christ. He endeavoured to propagate his doctrines by various publications, as the Land of Peace; the Gospel of the Kingdom, &c.

NICOLAS (Numis.) medals are extant of the fifth pope of this name, bearing his effigy, as in Plate X.

NICOLAS de Lyra (Biog.) so called from the place of his birth, near Evreux, in Normandy, a Jewish convert to Christianity, took the habit of the Minor Friars in 1291, and died in 1340, leaving Commentaries on the Bible, 6 vols. fol. Antv. 1634.

NICOLAS of Pisa, an architect and sculptor of the 13th century, built a church and convent at Bologna for the fraternity of the preachers; and also a tomb for the body of St. Dominic.

NICOLAS, Eymeric, a Dominican of Gironne, and inquisitor against the Vaudois, under Innocent VI, was the author of the Directory of the Inquisitors, fol. 1687, and died in 1399.

NICOLAUS (Biog.) a Syracusan, who made a powerful but ineffectual appeal to his countrymen in favour of Nicias and his fellow prisoners.

NICOLAUS, Damascenus, a philosopher, who flourished in the reign of Augustus, wrote several treatises on the philosophy of Aristotle, of which fragments have been preserved and published by J. C. Orellius, under the title of 'Nicolai Damasceni Historiarum excerpta et Fragmenta quæ supersunt,' Gr. and Lat. 8vo. 1804.

NICOLE, Claude (Biog.) a French poet, who was born in 1611, and died in 1685, published a collection of his pieces in 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1660, which consist chiefly of translations from the Classics.

NICOLE, Francis, a French mathematician, and cousin-german to the preceding, was born in 1683 at Paris, and died in 1758, leaving a number of treatises, which have all been published in the different volumes of the Memoires of the Academy.

NICOLE, Peter, a French divine, was born in 1625, and died in 1695, leaving among his works, which consisted of an hundred articles, as mentioned by Moreri and Niceron, 1. 'Reflexions sur la Traité de la Grandeur de l'Eglise Romaine,' &c. 2. 'Belga Percontator,' &c. 1657. 3. 'Régles pour les Temps de Persecution,' &c. 4. 'Prejugés legitimes contre les Calvinistes,' 1671. 5. 'Essais de Morale,' 1678, and frequently reprinted. 6. 'Les pretendus Reformés convaincus de Schisme,' Paris, 1686, &c.; besides a number of controversial tracts, and letters on different subjects.

NICOLINO, Grimaldi (Biog.) commonly known by the name of Nicolini, a great singer and actor in the 18th century, was highly esteemed in England as a performer at the Italian operas. He was living in 1723.

NICOLO (Biog.) vide Abati.

NICOLSON, William (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born at Orton, in Cumberland, in 1655; educated at Queen's College, Oxford, in 1679; raised to the see of Carlisle in 1702; translated to that of Londonderry in 1718; and died Feb. 1726-7, just as he was nominated to that of Cashell. He was a great antiquary, and published, 1. 'English Historical Library,' the first part of which appeared in 1696, and the remaining two others in 1699; these were followed by a similar 'Library' for Scotland in 1702, and for Ireland in 1724, which were published together in folio, and afterwards in 4to. in 1776. 2. 'Leges Marchiarum; or, Border Laws,' &c. 8vo. Lond. 1705; besides a preface to Chamberlayne's collection of the Lord's Prayer in one hundred different languages; and also to Dr. Wilkins's 'Leges Anglo-Saxonicæ.' He left also three MS. volumes, fol. to the dean and chapter of Carlisle, from which many articles were transcribed into the 'History of Cumberland,' by his nephew Joseph Nicolson, esq. and Dr. Richard Burn.

NICOMACHUS (Hist.) one of Alexander's friends, who discovered the conspiracy of Dymus. Curt. l. 6.

NICOMACHUS (Biog.) the father of Aristotle, whose son bore the same name, for whom the philosopher composed his ten books of morals, entitled, 'Nicomachia.'

NICOMACHUS, a tragic poet, who obtained a prize in a contest with Euripides and Theognis.

NICOMEDES (Hist.) the name of four kings of Bithynia.

NICOMEDES I, the son of Zipoetes, the founder of the monarchy of Bithynia, succeeded his father in the 125th Olympiad, A. C. 278, and carried on a successful war against his brother Zipoetes, who reigned over the maritime Bithynia. He also founded a town which he called after his own name Nicomedia. Liv. l. 38; Justin. l. 25; Paus. in Eliac, &c.

NICOMEDES II, surnamed ironically Philopater, because he drove his father Prusias from his kingdom, and caused him to be assassinated A. C. 149, died after a reign of 59 years, during which he was deprived of Paphlagonia by the Romans, who also took Cappadocia from his rival Mithridates. Diodor. apud Phot.; Liv. Epit. l. 50; Justin. l. 29, &c.

NICOMEDES III, son and successor of the preceding, was dethroned by his eldest brother Socrates, and afterwards a second time by the ambitious Mithridates; but was restored by the help of the Romans, who enabled him to make reprisals upon the king of Pontus. He was afterwards expelled a third time from his dominions, but was re-established by Sylla.

NICOMEDES IV, succeeded his father Nicomedes III, under the protection of the Romans, and died A. C. 75, leaving his kingdom to the Roman people, by whom it was converted into a province. Appian. de Bell. Mithrid. &c.; Justin. l. 38.

NICOMEDES (Numis.) medals are extant bearing the effigies of the first three kings above-mentioned, as in the subjoined figures; inscription, for the most part, ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΝΙΚΟ-

ΜΗΔΟΥ, sometimes with the addition ΕΠΙΦΑΝΟΥΣ, &c. Vaill. Hist. Bithyn.; Spanh. Præst.; Beg. Thes. Brand.; Froel. Notit.

NICOMEDES (Biog.) a geometrician, cotemporary with Eratosthenes, celebrated for his invention of the curve called the Conchoid. Montuc. Hist. Math.

NICOMEDES, an historian who wrote an account of Orpheus. Athen. l. 14.

NICOMEDIA (Geog.) Νικομηδία, a city of Bithynia, otherwise called Astacus, now Isnikmid, or Ismid, by the Turks. It was built by Nicomedes I, A. C. 262, and became the capital of the country, and afterwards the residence of the emperors of the East for some time. The emperor Constantine died in this city, which was reckoned the fourth in the empire, and was said to surpass Antioch in beauty. Diocletian endeavoured to make it equal to Rome. Many Greek and Latin inscriptions, and other memorials of its former greatness, are still remaining. In 1719 it was exposed to one of the most terrible earthquakes which was ever felt, whereby a vast number of houses and works were thrown down. Strab. l. 12; Mel. l. 1; Plin. l. 5; Paus. in Eliac.; Ptol. l. 5, c. 1; Trebell. Poll. in Gallien.; Ammian. Marcellin. l. 17; Niceph. Hist. Eccles.; Zosim. l. 1, &c.

NICOMEDIA (Numis.) many medals of this town are extant, bearing the inscriptions—ΝΙΚΟ. ΝΕΙΚΟΜ. ΝΙΚΟΜΗΔΕΩΝ, with the addition of its titles, as that of Metropolis, having received this dignity in the reign of Claudius. To this it also added the title of prima Bithyniæ; and by the use of these two titles preserved its superiority over the city of Nicæa, which only assumed the title of Prima; ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛΙC ΝΙΚΟ. ΠΡΩΤΗ ΠΟΝΤΟΥ ΚΑΙ ΒΙΘΥΝΙΑC, i. e. Metropolis Nicomedia Prima Ponti et Bithyniæ.—ΝΕΙΚΟΜΗ. ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛΙC ΚΑΙ ΠΡΩΤΗ ΒΕΙΘΥΝΙΑC.—ΜΗΤ. ΚΑΙ ΠΡΩΤΗΣ ΝΙΚΟΜΗΔΕΙΑΣ. Goltzius has also given a medal, with the title of ΙΕΡΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΑΣΥΛΟΥ, i. e. Sacræ et inviolabilis; but it occurs on no medals known to other antiquaries. The emperor Adrian added to the dignities of Nicomedia that of the Neocoria, which they designated on their medals, as ΝΙΚΟΜΗΔΕΩΝ ΜΗΤ. ΝΕΩΚΟΡ. and also designated him ΘΕΟΣ ΟΛΥΜΠΙΟΣ; and as he conferred the dignity of Metropolis upon Amasia, the town of Pontus, the alliance of these two places is also commemorated, as ΝΕΙΚΟ. ΜΗΤΡ. ΑΜΑCΕΩΝ ΟΜΟΝΟΙΑ, i. e. Nicomediensium Metropoleos Bithyniæ et Amasiensium Ponti Concordia. They enjoyed the Neocoria a second time under Commodus, and a third time under Valerian, which they have marked by ΔΙC vel ΤΡΙC ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ, i. e. bis vel ter Neocororum. The epocha which is marked on some medals is dated, according to Froelich, from U. C. 466, A. C. 287. This town struck medals either as an independent state, or in honour of Julius Cæsar, Augustus, Germanicus, Caligula, Agrippina, Claudius, Britannicus, Nero, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Trajan, Antinous, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, Faustina, jun., L. Verus, Commodus, Crispina, Septimius Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, Geta, Macrinus, Diadumenianus, Heliogabalus, Julia Mæsa, Alexander Severus, Julia Mamæa, Maximus, Gordianus Pius, Tranquillina, Philip, sen., Otacilia, Philip, jun., Trajan Decius, Herennia, Trebonianus Gallus, Volusianus, Valerianus, sen., Gallienus, Salonina.

NICON (Ecc.) a Russian prelate, was born in a village under the government of Nishnei Novogorod in 1613, and after a variety of preferments was raised to the archbishopric of Novogorod, and finally to the patriarchate of Russia, which last dignity however he was compelled to abdicate in 1658, and was for some time imprisoned through the malice of his enemies; but at length he obtained permission to return to his favourite cell, which he had left to take upon him his ecclesiastical dignities, and expired whilst he was on the road in 1681. He compiled a regular series of Russian Annals, from Nestor, the earliest historian of that country, to the reign of Alexis Michaelovitz; which is sometimes called from its author the Chronicle of Nicon, and sometimes, from the place where it was begun and deposited, 'The Chronicle of the Convent of Jerusalem.'

NICON (Biog.) an athlete of Thasos, who obtained the victory

14 times at the Olympic Games, and for whom a statue was erected. But this having fallen upon a man and crushed him to death, was ignominiously thrown into the river, until the people, visited by a famine and warned by an oracle, restored it to its place. Suidas.

NICOPHANES (Biog.) a famous painter of Greece, whose pieces are mentioned with commendation by Pliny. Plin. l. 35, c. 10.

NICOPHON (Biog.) Νικοφῶν, a comic poet of Athens, some time after the age of Aristophanes. Athen. l. 7; Syl. Gyrald. Hist. Poet.

NICOPOLI (Geog.) or Nikopoli, or Nigeboli, a large town in the interior of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, situated on a hill on the left bank of the Danube, 164 m. N. W. Adrianople, 276 N. W. Constantinople. Lon. 24° 8′ E., lat. 43° 45′ N. This town, which is the ancient Nicopolis, in Mœsia, is celebrated as the scene of a victory gained by the Turks over the Christians in 1396.

NICOPOLIS (Bibl.) Νικόπολις, a town where St. Paul passed his winter, A. D. 64, whence he addressed an epistle to Titus. Tit. iii. 12. It is generally supposed to be the town of Epirus, mentioned under Geography, although some have imagined it to be the town of Thrace.

NICOPOLIS (Geog.) the name of several towns, the principal of which are, 1. A town of Epirus, otherwise called Cassiopæa, now Prevesa, which was founded by Augustus in commemoration of his victory at Actium, U. C. 723, A. C. 31. Strab. l. 7; Plin. l. 4; Paus. l. 7; Sueton. in Aug. 2. A town of Mœsia, near the Ister, which was founded by Trajan after his victory over Decebalus. This is the Nicopoli above-mentioned. Ammian. l. 30. 3. A town of Armenia, which was built by Pompey in commemoration of his victory over Mithridates. Castellus supposes it to be the present Gianich, and other authors think it to be Chiorme. This town was the see of a bishop, suffragan of Sebaste, and was much troubled after the death of its bishop, Theodorus, by the Arians, who forced one of their party into the see. 4. A town of Thrace, built on the banks of the Nestus by Trajan, and so called by him, as is supposed, in commemoration of a victory which he obtained there over the barbarians. 5. A town near the Bay of Issus, which was either founded by Alexander, or received its name from him in consequence of his victory over Darius. Strab. l. 14.

NICOPOLIS (Numis.) medals are extant which are ascribed to three of the above-mentioned towns.

NICOPOLIS of Epirus commemorated its origin on its medals, and the victory of Augustus, whom it denominated as its founder; it also assumed the title of sacred and navarch, as, CEBACTOY KTICTOY; i. e. Augusti Conditoris; NIKOΠOΛ; NIKOΠOΛEΩΣ IEPAC NAYAPXIΔOC; i. e. Nicopoleos Sacræ et Classicæ; sometimes it was entitled IEPAC NEICOΠOΛEΩC ACYΛOY. This town struck medals of Augustus, Tiberius, Agrippina, Nero, Trajan, Adrian, Antinous, L. Ælius, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, Faustina jun., Lucilla, Commodus, Sept. Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, Geta, Heliogabalus, Julia Paula, Julia Aquilia, Julia Sœmias, Julia Mæsa, Alexander Severus, Julia Mammæa, Balbinus, Gordianus Pius, Philip sen., Otacilia, Philip jun., Trajan Decius, Trebonianus Gallus, Valerian sen., Gallienus, and Salonina, bearing for their types very frequently the figure of Victory, with its symbols, a garland, a palm-branch, &c.; and sometimes standing on a trireme, in allusion to the battle of Actium; besides which it bore sometimes the head or figure of Apollo, Æsculapius, Diana, Jupiter, &c. &c.

NICOPOLIS ad Istrum, in Moesia, is known by its inscription on some medals, NICOΠOΛITΩN ΠPOC ICTP.; vel NEICOΠOΛEITΩN ΠPOC ICTPON; i. e. Nicopolitarum ad Istrum. The types on these medals are figures of Nemesis, Serapis, Bacchus, Hercules, &c. This town struck medals in honor of Trajan, Adrian, Commodus, Crispina, Sept. Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, Geta, Macrinus, Diadumenianus, Heliogabalus, Alexander Severus, and Gordianus Pius.

NICOPOLIS ad Mestrum, in Thrace, is known by its inscriptions on medals, which also bear the name of Vulpia, in honour of Trajan, as OYΛΠ. NIKOΠOΛEOC ΠPOC MEΣTPΩ. There are a few medals extant struck by this town in honour of Commodus, Crispina, Julia Domna, Caracalla, and Geta, bearing for their types the head or figure of Lunus, Bacchus, Mars, &c. Vaillant. Græc.; Harduin. Oper.; Mediob. Impp.; Froel. Notit. &c.

NICOSIA (Geog.) a considerable town of Sicily, the ancient Herbita, in the Val di Demona, 40 m. W. N. W. Catania, 60 E. S. E. Palermo. [Vide Herbita]

NICOSIA, a large city, capital of the island of Cyprus. Lon. 33° 26′ E. lat. 35° N. This town was of very great extent and importance under the Lusignans, kings of this island, but the Venetians on obtaining possession of it reduced it to a smaller compass, and surrounded it with very strong fortifications. In 1570 Selim II took it by assault, since which time it has remained in the hands of the Turks, and its fortifications have been continually going to decay.

NICOSTRATA (Hist.) a courtesan, who left all her possessions to Sylla.

NICOSTRATUS (Hist.) a soldier in the army of Alexander, who joined in the conspiracy of Hermolaus. Q. Curt. l. 8.

NICOSTRATUS, a general of the Achæans, who defeated the Macedonians.

NICOSTRATUS (Biog.) a painter, who expressed great admiration at the picture of Helen by Zeuxis. Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 14.

NICOSTRATUS, a comic poet of Argos, who lived after the age of Aristophanes, and supported some of the characters in his own plays with success, whence the proverb 'Ut Nicostratus omnia faciam,' to imply a successful undertaking. Diogen. in Polem.; Gyrald. de Poet. Hist. l. 7.

NICOSTRATUS, an orator of Macedonia, in the reign of the emperor M. Antoninus.

NICOSTRATUS, an historian of Trebizonde in the reign of Claudius and Valerian, who wrote a life of Philip, Gordian, Decius, &c. Evag. Hist. Ecc. l. 5.

NICOT, John (Biog.) a French scholar of Nismes, who died in 1600, published an edition of the life of Aimon, a Benedictine of the abbey of Fleury, improved Aimar de Ranconnet's French Dictionary, but is principally known by his introduction of the tobacco plant into Europe, which from him received its botanical name of Nicotiana.

NICOTERA (Geog.) a town of Calabria Ultra, situated near the sea coast, in the kingdom of Naples, 32 m. N. by E. Reggio, and 50 S.S.E. Cosenza; it was partly destroyed by the great earthquake of 1783.

NIEUWENTYT, Bernard (Biog.) a Dutch philosopher and mathematician, was born in 1654 at Westgraafdyck, in North Holland, and died in 1718, leaving, 1. 'Considerationes circa Analyseos ad Quantitates infinitè parvas applicatæ Principia,' &c. 8vo. Amst. 1694. 2. 'Analysis Infinitorum, seu Curvilineorum Proprietates ex Polygonorum Natura deductæ,' 4to. ibid. 1695. 3. 'Considerationes Secundæ circa Differentialis Principia, et Responsio ad Virum nobilissimum C. G. Leibnitzium,' 8vo. ibid. 1696. 4. 'Le Veritable Usage de la Contemplation de l'Univers,' &c.; translated from the Dutch, and printed three or four times under the title of the 'Religious Philosopher,' 3 vols. 8vo.; besides some other things.

NIEUWLAND, Peter (Biog.) professor of mathematics at Leyden, was born at Diemermeer, a village near Amsterdam, in 1764, and died in 1794, leaving some Poems, and two Essays on Science.

NIFO (Biog.) vide Niphus.

NIGER, C. Pescenninus (Hist.) or Nigerus, surnamed Justus, a governor of Syria, well known by his valour as a soldier, was declared emperor at the death of Pertinax, and aimed at restoring the ancient discipline of the Roman armies, but was killed after a year's reign by his rival Severus, who defeated him A. D. 194. His head being cut off and fixed to a long spear, was carried in triumph through the streets of Rome. Herod. l. 3; Eutropius, &c.

NIGER (Numis.) the medals of this emperor bear his effigy as in the annexed figure; inscriptions, IMP. CAES C. PESC. NIGER JUST. AUG.; i. e. Imperator Cæsar Caius Pescenninus Niger Justus Augustus. —IMP. CAES. C. PESC. NIGERUS, &c.; and in the Greek—AYT ·K. Γ. ΠΕCΚ. ΝΙΓΡΟC ΙΟΥCΤ. C.; vel ΑΥΤΟΚράτωρι ΚΑΙCΑΡι Γαιῳ ΠΕCΚΕννίῳ ΝΙΓΡΩ Δίκαιῳ; on the reverse—ROMAE AETERNAE.—SALUTI AUG.—SPEI FIRMAE.—VIRTUTI AUG.—PIETATI AUG.—FORTUNAE REDUCI.—INVICTO IMPERATORI.—MARTI VICTORI, &c. Vaill. Pr. tom. ii.; Patin. Impp.; Beg. Thes. Brand.; Med. Impp.; Harduin. Oper.

NIGER (Geog.) a river of Africa, called by Pliny Nigris, by Ptolemy Νίγειρ, by Agathamerus Νιγιρ, of which but little is known to the moderns, and still less was known to the ancients.

NIGHTINGALE (Her.) the name of a family of Kneesworth-House, Cambridgeshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1628 on sir Thomas Nightingale. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Per pale ermine and gules, a rose counterchanged, besides other quarterings.

Crest. An ibex sejant argent, tufted, armed, and maned or.

NIGHTINGALE, Joseph (Biog.) a native of Chaubert, in Lancashire, who died in 1824, in the 49th year of his age, was the author of several volumes of the 'Beauties of England and Wales;' 'English Topography,' &c.; 'A Portraiture of Methodism;' and some other pieces on the same subjects.

NIGIDIUS FIGULUS, Publius (Hist.) a philosopher of Rome, and an intimate friend of Cicero, whom, in his capacity of prætor and senator, he assisted in detecting the conspiracy of Catiline. In the civil wars he followed the interests of Pompey, for which he was banished by Julius Cæsar, and died in exile. He was famous for his knowledge of astrology, by which he got the reputation of a conjuror.

Lucan. l. 1, v. 639.

> At Figulus, cui cura Deos, secretaque cœli
> Nosse fuit, quem non stellarum Ægyptia Memphis
> Æquaret visu, numerisque moventibus astra.

He wrote 'De Augurio;' 'De Animalibus;' 'De Extis;' 'De Vento,' &c.; but nothing remains of his composition except a few fragments of his commentaries on Grammar, which have been collected and published by James Rutgersius, who has also inserted among them the Greek translation of 'A Treatise of Nigidius,' by John Laurentius, of Philadelphia. Cic. ad Fam. l. 4, ep. 13; Plin. l. 29; *Aul. NIGRINIANUS (Numis.) a Roman prince, of whom nothing is known except by some medals bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscription DIVO NIGRINIANO; and on the reverse, CONSECRATIO, with the figure of an altar. Tristan and Mediobarbus have supposed him to be the son of the tyrant Alexander, but others have supposed that he lived between the reigns of M. Aurelius and Diocletian. Tristan. Comm. Hist.; Spanheim. Dissert.; Beg. Thes. Brand.; Med. Impp.

NIGRITÆ (Geog.) Νιγρῖται, a people of Africa, dwelling near the Niger, the country of which has been called Nigritia, but now most commonly Soudan. [Vide Niger]

NILEUS (Myth.) Νιλεὺς, a son of Codrus, who conducted a colony of Ionians to Asia, where he built Ephesus, &c. Paus. l. 7.

NILUS, St. (Ecc.) a prefect of the city of Constantinople, and a disciple of St. Chrysostom, who embraced a monastic life after the example of his wife and daughter, and died in 1150, leaving among his works as an author, an Account of the inroad of the Saracens, when they killed the monks of the monastery of Mount Sinai, and carried away many others as prisoners, among which was his own son. This work was published in Greek and Latin by Father Poussines, 4to. 1639; and also inserted by Bollandus in his Lives of the Saints. Father Poussines also published a collection of Letters of this saint, in Greek and Latin; besides which he wrote a form of prayer, and some other things.

NILUS, St. surnamed the Younger, of Greek extraction, but a native of Italy, died in 1002, after having founded a monastery, and acquired a great reputation for sanctity. His life was written in Greek by Barthelemi, abbot of Grotto-Ferrata, and inserted in the 6th volume of 'Amplissima Collectio veterum Scriptorum et Monumentorum,' &c. of the Benedictine fathers Martenne and Durand.

NILUS, archbishop of Thessalonica in the 14th century, wrote two treatises against the primacy of the popes. Spondan. Contin. Annal.

NILUS, a patriarch of Constantinople, succeeded Macarius in 1378, and governed that church about 20 years.

NILUS, a metropolitan of Rhodes, and adversary of the Barlaamites, in the 14th century, finished his abridged history of the Œcumenic Councils, including that of Constantinople, against Barlaam under Isidorus; this was printed by Justel in 'Bibliotheca Juris Canonici.'

NILUS, Doxopatrius (Biog.) a Greek writer, composed, by order of Roger, king of Sicily, a treatise on the five patriarchates, which Leo Allatius has inserted in his work 'De Consensu Eccles. Occident,' &c. Phot. Bibl. cod. 153, &c.; Nicephor. Hist. Eccles. l. 14; Sext. Sen. &c.

NILUS (Geog.) Νεῖλος, a celebrated river of Africa, which, according to Diodorus, received its name from a certain Nileus, a king of Egypt; and, according to Eustathius, from Nilus, a grandson of Atlas, but some have derived the name from νέας ἰλὺς, novus limus, i. e. the fresh mud which it throws up every year, to which Nonnus and Dionysius allude.

Nonn.

> Νεῖλον ἐφημίξαντο φερώνυμον, ἕνεκα γαίης

The source of the Nile was sought for in vain by the ancients, nor have the moderns been more fortunate in their researches, whence the proverb Nili caput quærere, for any vain labour. The poets frequently allude to this particularity in the Nile.

Tibull. l. 1, el. 7.

> Nile pater, quânam possum te dicere causâ,
> Aut quibus in terris occuluisse caput?

Ptolemy describes the Nile as formed by the union of a number of streams descending from the Mountains of the Moon, situated south of Ethiopia, and this is now become the most prevalent opinion of the moderns; for the Bahr el Abaid, which is now supposed to represent the head of the Nile, is formed by the conflux of numerous small streams descending from a very lofty range called the Mountains of Donga, which appear to be the same as those which are called by Ptolemy the Mountains of the Moon. This stream then flows eastward at the foot of these mountains some distance, and turning to the waters Kordofan and Sennaar, receives its main tributary river, the Bahr el Azrek, which has, till very lately, been taken for the source of the Nile; so that Mr. Bruce, acting under this persuasion, considered that he had accomplished the great task of visiting the source of the Nile, when he traced the river of Abyssinia to its fountain head. The Nile, after the junction of these two streams, flows a considerable space farther before it receives the Tacazze, when, during the course of a thousand miles, it has not the accession of even a rivulet. Before it reaches Egypt it forms two celebrated cataracts, the magnitude of which is said to have been considerably exaggerated. In passing through Upper Egypt it is confined between two mountain ranges, which leave only a narrow strip on each side; but as it approaches Cairo, the valley widens, and the Nile, after spreading itself over the wide and level plain of the Delta, separates into branches, of which two only of any importance are remaining, namely, the Rosetta, and the Damietta branch. The seven mouths mentioned by the ancients are the Ostium Canopicum, which is supposed to answer to the narrow canal extending to the lakes Mareotis and Maadie, called the canal of Alexandria; Bolbitinum, now the Rosetta branch; Sennyticum, which probably terminates in what is now the Lake of Bourlos; Bucolicum, the Damietta branch; Mendesium, Saiticum, and Pelusiacum, which appear to have fallen into the sea at different points, of what is now the Lake Menzaleh. Of these seven mouths the Ostium Bolbitinum, and Bucolicum, were supposed to have been dug, but the others were considered as natural streams. The cause of the Nile's inundation was also an object of curiosity to the ancients, who accounted for it in various ways, some supposing it to be the effect of the Etesian winds blowing from the north at a certain season, of which Lucretius takes notice.

Lucret. l. 6.

Nilus in æstate crescit, campisque redundat
Unicus in terris Ægypti totius amnis
Is rigat Ægyptum, medium persæpe calorem:
Aut quia sunt æstate Aquilones ostia contra,
Anni tempore eo quo Etesia flabra feruntur,
Et contra fluvium flantes remorantur, et undas
Cogentes rursus replent, coguntque manere.

Others, among whom was Anaxagoras, ascribed it to the melting of the snows, which were collected on the mountains of Æthiopia, to which Euripides alludes.

Euripid. in Helen.

Νεῖλε μὲν αἵδε καλλιπάρθενοι ῥοαί,
Ὃς ἀντὶ δίας ψεκάδος Αἰγύπτε πέδων
Λευκῆς τακείσης χιόνος, ὑγραίνει γύας.

Which hypothesis Lucan objects to.

Lucan. l. 10, v. 219.

Vana fides veterum, Nilo, quo crescat in arva
Æthiopum prodesse nives, non Arctos in illis
Montibus, aut Boreas, testis tibi sole perusti
Ipse color populi, calidique vaporibus Austri.
Adde, quod omne caput fluvii, quodcunque soluta
Præcipitat glacies, ingresso vere tumescit
Prima tabe nivis; Nilus neque suscitat undas
Ante Canis radios nec ripis alligat amnem.

According to another hypothesis, the Egyptian land having many gaps and fissures, attracted the moisture during the winter, which was drawn out by the heat of summer, to which Lucan refers.

Lucan. l. 10, v. 247.

Sunt qui spiramina terris
Esse putent, magnosque cavæ compagis hiatus.
Commeat hac penitus tacitis discursibus unda
Frigore ab Arctoo medium revocat sub axem;
Cum Phœbus pressit Meroën, tellusque perusta
Illuc duxit aquas, trahitur Gangesque Padusque
Per tacitum mundi; tunc omnia flumina Nilus
Uno fonte vomens, non uno gurgite perfert.

A fourth hypothesis supposes the waters to be drawn by the sun from the ocean, to supply the Nile, to which Lucan alludes.

Lucan. l. 10, v. 255.

Rumor, ab Oceano, qui terras alligat omnes,
Exundante procul violentum erumpere Nilum
Æquoreosque sales longo mitescere tractu
Nec non Oceano pasci Phœbumque polumque
Credimus; hunc, calidi tetigit cum brachia Cancri
Sol rapit, atque unda plus quàm quod digerat aër
Tollitur: hoc noctes referunt——

The poet adds his own opinion to the rest.

Ibid. l. 10, v. 262.

Ast ego, si tantam jus est mihi solvere litem,
Quasdam, Cæsar, aquas post mundi sera peracti
Secula, concussis terrarum erumpere venis
Non id agente Deo, quasdam compage sub ipsâ
Cum toto cœpisse reor, quas ille creator
Atque opifex rerum certo sub jure coërcet.

Among the moderns, Pococke ascribes it to the Etesian winds, according to the first hypothesis of the ancients, but it is now supposed to be ascertained that it arises from the periodical rains which fall from June to September, throughout the northern tropical regions. The rise begins to be felt about the middle of June, and continues till August, when the river is at its height, and all the level parts of the country are overflowed. In Upper Egypt, however, the stream being confined within high banks, as in Nubia, the country is watered by canals formed where the bank is lowest, and the mouths of which are shut, unless when the water is to be introduced. The canal of Cairo is the principal, which is opened when the Nile has attained the height of 32 feet. This river is supposed to have a course of about 2000 miles, which does not surpass some of the rivers even of the Old Continent, and its magnitude does not bear a proportion to its length, of course.

NILUS (Numis.) this river is depicted on several medals under the usual figure of a bearded old man, lying on the ground, and accompanied sometimes with an hippopotamus, a crocodile, or some other symbol of Egypt; inscriptions, NILUS —DEO SANCTO NILO, &c.

NIMEGUEN (Geog.) an ancient town of Guelderland, in the Netherlands, situated on the left bank of a great branch of the Rhine, called the Waal, 50 miles S. E. Amsterdam. Lon. 5° 50′ E, lat. 51° N. It is called by Latin writers Noviomagus, and was often taken and retaken by the Dutch and Spaniards; but was finally ceded to the former in 1591. Louis XIV took it from the Dutch in 1672, but restored it to them again shortly after. It is particularly known in history by the peace which was concluded here in 1678, which was thence called the Peace of Nimeguen.

NINEVEH (Bibl.) נינוה, capital of Assyria, founded by Ashur. It stood on the banks of the Tigris, and in the time of the prophet Jonah, who was sent thither under Jeroboam, the second king of Israel; its circuit was three days' journey. It repented from the preaching of Jonah, and was for a time preserved, but it was afterwards taken by Arbaces and Belesis, A. M. 3257, A. C. 747, in the time of Ahaz, king of Judah, about the time of the foundation of Rome, and again by Astyages and Nabopolassar, from Chinaladan, king of Assyria, A. M. 3378, A. C. 626. It is supposed that the prophecy of Nahum refers to this second capture, from the effect of which the city of Nineveh never recovered. Gen. x; Jonah iv; Nahum. ii; Matt. xi. &c. This city, which was called Ninus, by profane writers, after its founder, Ninus, was entirely destroyed in the time of Lucian, of Samosata, who lived in the reign of Adrian, but it was rebuilt by the Persians, and again destroyed by the Saracens in the seventh century. The ancient site is still called Nugia, but the town, which stands opposite to it on the left bank of the Tigris, is called by the Turks Mosul, the capital of the district of Dzegire. Herod. l. 1; Diodor. l. 2; Strab. l. 1; Plin. l. 6; Lucan. in Charon.; Paus. l. 8.

NINUS (Hist.) Νίνος, the son of Belus, and first king of the Assyrians, began to reign over the kingdom, of which he was properly the founder, A. M. 2737, A. C. 1267, about the time of the government of Deborah and Baruk, in Israel, and is said to have reigned 50 years. He was honoured as a god after his death. Herod. l. 2; Diodor. l. 2; Justin. l. 1; Euseb. in Chron.

NINYAS (Hist.) a son of Ninus and Semiramis, who succeeded his mother on the throne of Assyria, led an effeminate life, in which he was followed by his successors until the ruin of the kingdom. Diod., Justin., &c.

NIOBE (Myth.) Νιόβη, a daughter of Tantalus, king of Lydia, by Euryanassa, or Dune, who married Amphion, the son of Jasus, by whom she had, according to Homer, six daughters, and as many sons. They were all destroyed by Diana and Apollo, on account of her arrogance in comparing herself to Latona, and the mother, struck at the sudden reverse of fortune, was turned into a stone.

NISÆA (Geog.) Νισαία, a naval station on the coast of Megaris.

NISÆA (Numis.) this place is distinguished on some medals by the inscription—ΝΙΣΑΙΩΝ.

NISIBIN (Geog.) at present only a village of Persia, 78 m. S. E. Diabekir, and 70 m. N. W. Mosul, is entitled to notice as the site of the ancient fortress of Nisibis [vide Nisibis], which, after being taken from the Persians by the Saracens, fell into gradual decay. The foundation of the walls, about three miles in circumference, and several detached towers, may still be seen; but otherwise the greater part of the site of the ancient city is now covered with the black tents of the Kurds.

NISIBIS (Geog.) now Nisibin, a town of Mesopotamia, built by a colony of Macedonians on the Tigris, which formed for some time a barrier between the provinces of Rome and the Persian empire during the reign of the Roman emperors. It was taken by Lucullus from Tigranes, king of Armenia, and afterwards stood three memorable sieges by the Persian monarch, to whom at length it was surrendered by the treaty of Dura. Strab. l. 11; Joseph. l. 20; Plin. l. 6; Ammian. l. 25.

NISMES (Geog.) or Nimes, a large and ancient town in the south-east of Lower Languedoc in France, the capital of the modern department of the Gard, situated 30 m. N. E. Montpelier, 70 N. W. Marseilles, and 470 S. S. E. Paris. Lon. 4° 20′ E. lat. 43° 50′ N.

History of Nismes.

This town, which is so celebrated for its antiquities, was known to the Romans by the name of Nemausus [vide Nemausus], and passed from their hands successively into those of the Vandals and Goths, which last people possessed it in the time of Charles Martel. It was afterwards subject to princes of its own, named counts; the last of whom, named Bernard, ceded all the rights which he had in the county of Nismes in 1214 to Simon, count of Montfort, since which period it has been united to the crown of France. It was the rallying point for the Calvinists in the religious wars of the 16th century; but was reduced by the arms of Louis XIII. It suffered severely during the revolution, and also since, from the dissensions of the Roman Catholics and the Protestants, owing to their equality in numbers and influence. Nismes abounds with antiquities more than any other city in Europe, with the exception of Rome. The most considerable is its amphitheatre, which is almost as large as the Colosseo of Rome, and in a better state of preservation. The Maison Quarrée, supposed to be an ancient mausoleum, is a building 74 or 76 feet in length, 38 in breadth, and 64 in height. An inscription which has been discovered shows that it was built in the time of Augustus—C. CAESARI AUGUSTI F. COS. L. CAESARI AUGUSTI F. COS. DESIGNATO PRINCIPIBUS JUVENTUTIS. There is likewise still to be seen a temple of Diana, and a fountain spoken of by Ausonius.

Also a large ancient tower above 200 feet in height, which is situated on an eminence at the north side of the city, and was formerly surrounded by a circle of open columns; besides the remains of statues, and other antiques. Nismes had formerly a university, which was founded in 1540, by Michael Briconnet, bishop of Nismes, conjointly with the clergy, the nobility, and opulent part of the inhabitants. It was confirmed with all the privileges of a university in 1542; but it fell into decay at the revolution. Its academy of sciences, which was founded in 1682, has also shared the same fate; but it has a royal college and an academy of fine arts, with several other literary institutions. It also continues to be the see of a bishop, and had a council assembled within its walls in 389, another in 886, a third in 897, and a fourth in 1096.

NISROCH (Bibl.) נסרך, a god of the Assyrians, whom Sennacherib was worshipping when one of his sons fell upon him and murdered him. 2 Kings xix. The Seventy call him Νεσρὰχ, and Josephus calls him Ἀράσκης. Joseph. Antiq.

NISSA (Geog.) in Latin Nessus, or Nisum, a town of Servia, in European Turkey, situated on the river Nissawa, 245 m. N. W. Constantinople, and 150 E. N. E. Ragusa. Lon. 21° 36′ E. lat. 43° 31′ N. In 1689 the prince of Baden, general of the Imperial army, defeated the Turks near this town, and took the place, which was retaken by the Turks in 1690.

NISUS (Myth.) Νῖσος, a king of Megara, and son of Mars, whose fate depended upon a yellow lock of hair, which as long as it remained on his head, according to an oracle, ensured him life and success. This lock was, however, perfidiously cut off by his daughter Scylla, who, afterwards throwing herself into the sea, was changed into a lark, and her father into a hawk, whence an animosity has subsisted between these two birds ever since.

Virg. Georg. l. 1.

NISUS, a son of Hyrtacus, who was born on mount Ida, near Troy, attempted to save his friend Euryalus from the darts of the enemy, and thus perished with him, as narrated by Virgil.

NISYRUS (Geog.) Νίσυρος, now Nisaro, according to Sophianus, a small island in the Carpathian sea, which was originally joined to Cos. Apollod. l. 1; Strab. l. 10; Mel. l. 2.

NITHARD (Biog.) a French historian of the ninth century, wrote an account of the divisions between the sons of Louis le Debonnaire, in four books, of which the first three were written in 842, and the fourth is lost. It was published first by M. Pithou, in his 'Annalium et Historiæ Francorum Scriptores,' &c. 8vo. Francof. 1594; and has since been inserted by Duchesne and Bouquet in their Collection of French Historians; and also translated by Cousin in his 'Histoire de l'Empire d'Occident.'

NITHSDALE, Robert, Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was named in 1625, by king Charles I, commissioner for obtaining unconditional surrender of the tithes; but was deterred by the violent opposition of the proprietors from effecting his object. He afterwards joined the marquis of Montrose in support of the royal cause, and died in 1646.

NITHSDALE, Robert, second Earl of, and son of the preceding, also joined the marquis of Montrose in the same cause, and was taken prisoner at the capture of Newcastle, when he retired from the contest, and died in 1667. He was commonly styled the Philosopher.

NITHSDALE, William, fifth Earl of, engaging on the side of prince Charles in 1715, was taken prisoner that year at Preston, in Lancashire, and conveyed to the Tower. In 1716 he was tried by his peers, found guilty, and sentenced to be executed, along with the earl of Derwentwater, and the viscount of Kenmure; but by the courage and resolution of his countess he effected his escape, of which a circumstantial account from the pen of that lady was published in the Transactions of the Society of Antiquaries in Scotland, Vol. I.

NITIOBRIGES (Geog.) a people of Aquitania, who inhabited the country now called Agenois. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 7.

NITOCRIS (Hist.) Νίτωκρις, a celebrated queen of Babylon, who built a bridge across the Euphrates, and dug a number of reservoirs for the superfluous waters of that city. She ordered herself to be buried over one of the gates of the city, and an inscription to be placed on her tomb, signifying that her successors would find great treasures within if ever they stood in need of money, but that their labour would be fruitless if they presumed to open it without necessity. Darius was tempted to open it through curiosity, when he found only this inscription—"If thy avarice had not been insatiable, thou never wouldst have violated the monuments of the dead." Herod. l. 1, c. 185.

NIVARIA (Geog.) an island at the west of Africa, supposed to be Teneriffe, one of the Canaries. Plin. l. 6.

He also wrote a treatise 'De veris Principiis et verâ Ratione Philosophandi,' &c.

NOAH (Bibl.) נח, son of Lamech, was born A. M. 1056, A. C. 2948, made an ark for himself and family by the command of God A. M. 1656, A. C. 2340, and died 350 years after the deluge, leaving three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japhet. Gen. vi. &c.; Usser. Annal.

NOAILLES, Anne Julius, Duc de (Hist.) a marshal of France, was born in 1650, and entering early into the military profession, distinguished himself so much during the war of that period, as to be made a marshal of France in 1671, and died in 1708, after having been engaged in the service of his sovereign all his life.

NOAILLES, Adrian Maurice, Duc de, son of the preceding, and also a marshal of France, was born in 1678, attended his father in the campaigns of Catalonia in 1693 and 1694, accompanied the young king of Spain in 1700 to Madrid, and in the war of the Spanish succession maintained the honour of his nation and his family. For his services in Spain he was made a Spanish grandee by Philip V, and at the death of Louis XIV he was made by the regent President of the Council of the Finances, and also admitted one of the Council of the Regency. In the campaign of 1733 he again signalized himself as a commander; but after abandoning the military profession, he continued to serve his country in a civil capacity until his death in 1766.

NOAILLES, Francis de (Ecc.) bishop of Dax, of the same family, a distinguished prelate and statesman, was employed on several important embassies to England, Rome, and Venice; and was also sent by Charles IX on an embassy to Selim II, emperor of the Turks, where he rendered important services to Christianity. He died in 1585, after having enjoyed the confidence of Henry III and Catherine de Medicis.

NOAILLES, Louis Antony de, cardinal and archbishop of Paris, second son of Anne, duke de Noailles, was born in 1651; promoted to the bishopric of Cahors in 1679; translated to that of Chalons in 1680, and to the archbishopric of Paris in 1695; created a cardinal in 1700, at the nomination of the French king; assisted the same year in the conclave which elected Clement XI; and died in 1729; after having distinguished himself by his approbation of the Moral Reflexions of Pasquin Quesnal, which in the opinion of the Jesuits savoured of heresy, and were condemned by the pope in his famous bull 'Unigenitus.'

NOBLE, Eustace de (Biog.) a French writer, was born at Troyes in 1643, and died in 1711, leaving 'Dialogues sur les Affaires du Tems;' 'Le Bouclier de la France,' &c.; 'Relation de l'Etat de Gênes;' 'Hist. de l'Etablissement de la Republique d'Hollande;' and a number of other works, amounting to 19 vols. 12mo.

NOD (Bibl.) נוד, or the Land of Nod, a country whither Cain withdrew after his fratricide. Gen. iv.

NOEL (Her.) the name of a family of Norman extraction, which has enjoyed honours in different branches. From Andrew Noel, one of the justices of the peace in the reign of Henry VIII, descended sir Edward Noel, who was created a baronet in 1611, and in 1616 baron Noel of Ridlington; in 1629 he succeeded his father-in-law as baron Hicks of Limington, and viscount Campden. Edward, the fourth viscount, was created in 1683 earl of Gainsborough, which titles became extinct at the death of Henry, sixth and last earl, in 1798; but his nephew, sir Gerard Noel, succeeded to the title of baronet on the death of sir Charles Middleton, and married his daughter, who enjoys the title of baroness Barham in her own right. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Or, fretty of ten pieces gules, a canton ermine.
Crest. On a wreath, a buck at gaze argent, attired or.
Motto. "Tout bien, ou rien."

From Andrew, the third son of Andrew Noel abovementioned, descended Verney Noel, esq. who was advanced to the dignity of a baronet in 1660; and Edward, the sixth baronet, succeeded to the barony of Wentworth of Nettlested in 1745, at the death of Martha, baroness Wentworth, and was created in 1762 viscount Wentworth, of Wellesborough, co. Leicester. These titles became extinct at the death of the second viscount in 1815; but in consequence of the marriage of sir Ralph Milbanke, bart. with Judith Noel, sister of Thomas, the last viscount Wentworth, they have assumed the name of Noel only. The dignity of baronet was conferred on the family of Milbanke in 1661. The arms, &c. of this branch of the family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a bend ermine, on a canton or, a lion's head erased of the first, with different quarterings.
Crest. A lion's head erased gules, charged with a bend ermine.

NOETUS (Ecc.) an heresiarch of the third century, originally of Smyrna, who denied the Divinity of our Saviour, and maintained that the Father only united himself to the Man Christ. He and his followers were in consequence expelled the church. Du Pin, Biblioth.

History of Nola.

Nola was founded by a Tuscan, or, according to some, by an Eubœan colony, and became a Roman colony just before the first Punic war, when it was besieged by Annibal, and bravely defended by Marcellus. It is remarkable as the place where Augustus died, and where bells are said to have been first invented by St. Paulinus, bishop of that place, in the fourth century, whence they received the name of Nolæ, or Campanæ. Under the Romans Nola was much more flourishing than at present; but many remains of antiquity, particularly of Etruscan vases, are still to be seen. Paterc. l. 1; Sueton. in Aug.; Aul. Gell. l. 7; Liv. l. 23.

NOLDIUS, Christian (Biog.) a Danish divine, was born at Horgborgen, in Scania, in 1626, and died in 1683, leaving, 1. 'Concordantiæ Particularum Hebreo-Chaldaicarum Veteris Testamentis,' the best edition of which is that of Jena, 4to. 1734. 2. 'Historia Idumæa,' &c. 3. 'Sacrarum Historiarum et Antiquitatum Synopsis.' 4. 'Logica,' &c.

NOLI (Geog.) a town of the Sardinian states, situated on the sea coast, 30 m. S. W. Genoa, which is called in the Latin of the middle ages Naulium, or Naulum. It is the see of a bishop.

NOLLET, Dominic (Biog.) an historical painter, who died in 1736, at the age of 96, left several battle pieces and landscapes, which were much admired.

Nollet, John Anthony, a French ecclesiastic, was born at Pimpré in 1700, and died in 1770, leaving, 1. 'Recueils de Lettres sur l'Electricité,' 3 vols. 12mo. 1753. 2. 'Essai sur l'Electricité des Corps,' 1 vol. 12mo. 3. 'Recherches sur les Causes particulières des Phenomenes Electriques.' 12mo. 4. 'L'Art des Experiences,' 3 vols. 12mo. 1770.

NOLLIKINS, Joseph Francis (Biog.) an artist of Antwerp, who died in 1728, was much esteemed as a landscape painter.

Nollikins, Joseph, son of the preceding, and a distinguished sculptor, died in 1823, at the age of 86, leaving an immense fortune, amassed by habits of parsimony. He left 50,000l. to Dr. Kenrick, public librarian at Cambridge, and a similar sum to Francis Douce, the illustrator of Shakespear.

NOMADES (Geog.) Νομάδες, a name given to the wandering tribes of Scythia, India, Arabia, and Africa. Herodot. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 4; Dionys. Perieg. v. 186; Strab. l. 7; Mela, l. 2; Plin. l. 5.

NONIUS, Marcellus (Biog.) a grammarian and peripatetic philosopher, and a native of Tibur, whose treatise 'De variâ Significatione Verborum,' was edited by Mercer, 8vo. Paris, 1614.

'Libro de Algebra en Arithmetica y Geometra,' 1564.

Nonius, or Nonnius, Lewis, a physician of Antwerp, who flourished in the 17th century, was the author of a treatise entitled 'Dieteticon, sive de Re Cibaria,' 4to. Antv. 1646. He also printed a commentary in 1620 upon the Greek medals, as also those of Julius Cæsar, Augustus, and Tiberius, which had been engraved about 55 years before by Goltzius, and published in folio by James de Bie, another celebrated engraver. Besides these he wrote 'Hispania, seu de Oppidis Fluminibusque Hispaniæ,' 8vo. 1607; 'Ichthyographia, seu de Usu Piscium;' 'Epicædium Justo Lipsio,' &c.

NONNUS (Biog.) a Greek poet of the fifth century, surnamed Panopolites, from Panopolis, in Egypt, the place of his birth, was the author of, 1. 'Dionysiacorum Libri XLVIII,' printed by Falkenburgh, 4to. 1569; and afterwards translated by Eilhard Lubin, who reprinted it at Hanover in 1610, with the notes of various persons, in 8vo. There is also an Eton edition in 4to. 1610. 2. 'Paraphrasis,' a paraphrase in Greek verse upon the Gospel of St. John. The first edition of this piece is that of Aldus Manutius, 4to. Venet. 1501, which has been followed by several other editions, the last of which, by Heinsius, Gr. and Lat. 8vo. 1627, is reckoned the best.

NOODT, Gerard (Biog.) a civilian of Nimeguen, was born in 1647, and died in 1725, leaving, 1. 'Probabilia Juris,' in three books, the first of which was printed in 1674, and the other two in 1679, and again altogether in 1691. 2. 'De Civili Prudentia Oratio Inauguralis,' 1679. 3. 'De Causis Corruptæ Jurisprudentiæ Oratio Inauguralis,' 1684. 4. Two tracts, one entitled 'De Jurisdictione et Imperio;' the other, 'Ad Legem Aquileiam Liber singularis;' both subjoined to a new edition of his 'Probabilia,' in 1691. 5. 'De Fœnore et Usuris,' 1698. 6. 'De Jure summi Imperii et Lege Regia, Oratio habita,' 1698. 7. 'Julius Paulus, sive de Partus Expositione et Nece,' &c. 1699. 8. NORES (Biog.) vide Denores.

NORFOLK, Roger Bigod, Earl of (Hist.) was at the head of those who protested against the pretensions of the see of Rome, and insisted that king John had no right, without the consent of the barons, to subject the kingdom to the ignominious servitude of being vassal to the see of Rome.

Norfolk, Thomas de Brotherton, Earl of, eldest son of Edward I by his second marriage with Margaret of France, was induced by Isabella to enter into the league against his brother, Edward II.

Norfolk, Thomas de Mowbray, Duke of, and Earl of Nottingham, was invested in 1385 with the office of Earl Marshal, being the first who bore that title, his predecessors being simply styled marshals. He was accused by the duke of Hereford of having spoken many slanderous words of the king, Richard II, upon which the former gave him the lie, and offered to prove his own innocence by duel. The challenge was accepted; but on the day when the two champions appeared in the field accoutred for the combat, the king interposed, and ordered both the combatants to leave the kingdom, assigning one country for the place of Norfolk's exile, which he declared perpetual, another for that of Hereford, which he limited to ten years.

NORFOLK, John, Duke of, of the family of Howard, mentioned under Heraldry, was an eminent Yorkist of great consideration, who filled various posts of high trust in the reigns of Edward IV and Richard III, and fell in 1485 at the battle of Bosworth, fighting in the cause of the latter prince.

NORFOLK, Thomas, second Duke of, and Earl of Surrey, who is mentioned very frequently by this latter title, was committed to the Tower by Henry VII, where he continued about three years and a half, at the end of which he was received into favour, and restored to the honours which had been forfeited by his father's attainder. He was afterwards one of the most distinguished warriors and statesmen in his time, and died in 1524, after having made his name memorable as the victorious commander at the battle of Flodden-Field.

NORFOLK, Thomas, third Duke of, eldest son of the preceding, distinguished himself as Lord High Admiral of England in 1513, particularly at the battle of Flodden, when, landing with 5000 of his men, he assisted his father at that memorable engagement. In 1520 he was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, where he rendered his name terrible to all the rebellious chieftains of that country; and afterwards was sent to the borders of Scotland, where he displayed great skill, both as a soldier and a negociator; but, notwithstanding his numerous services, he fell into disgrace at the close of Henry's reign, when he was imprisoned, and continued in confinement until the accession of queen Mary, by whom he was restored to be duke of Norfolk. On the insurrection of sir Thomas Wyat in 1554 his grace was sent with a body of troops against the insurgents, and died in 1554, at the age of 80 and upwards.

NORFOLK, Thomas, fourth Duke of, is principally known by his intrigues to effect a marriage with the queen of Scots, and the consequent punishment of his ambition. After frequent warnings to discontinue his treasonable practices he was tried on a charge of high treason, found guilty, and beheaded, agreeably to his sentence, in 1572. [Vide Plate VII]

NORFOLK, Henry, sixth Duke of, was a great benefactor to the Royal Society, who assembled at his house after the fire in 1666; and also to the University of Oxford, to whom, at the motion of Mr. Evelyn, he gave the marbles collected by his grandfather, so well known by the name of the Arundelian marbles. An account of this nobleman's travels were published under the title of 'A Relation of a Journey of the Right Honourable my Lord Henry Howard from London to Vienna, and thence to Constantinople,' &c. 12mo. 1671.

NORFOLK, Henry, seventh Duke of, sided with the revolutionists in 1688, by whom the prince of Orange was placed on the throne of England, to the detriment of the reigning prince, James II. He was also among the lords who waited on his highness desiring him to call a free parliament, and to pursue the ends of his declaration; and, on the proclamation of the king and queen, he was sworn of the Privy Council.

NORFOLK, Duke of (Her.) a title which was at first enjoyed by the family of Mowbray, as mentioned under History, which became extinct in the male line at the death of John Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, in 1475. It was afterwards revived in 1477 in the person of sir Robert Howard, who married Margaret, eldest daughter of Thomas de Mowbray, and cousin and coheir of John de Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, by which marriage the inheritance of the Mowbrays and Fitz-Alans became vested in that of Howard [vide Howard], and by Isabel, the other coheir, in that of Berkeley. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. The most high, mighty, and most noble prince Howard, duke of Norfolk, earl marshal and hereditary marshal of England, earl of Arundel, Surrey, Norfolk, baron of Mowbray, Howard, Segrave, &c.; premier duke, earl, and baron of England, next the blood-royal, and chief of the illustrious family of the Howards.

Arms. Four grand quarters, viz. Howard, gules, on a bend, between six crosslets fitchy argent; and an augmentation in remembrance of the victory gained over the Scots at Flodden-Field; viz. on an escutcheon or, a demi-lion pierced through the mouth with an arrow, within a double tressure flory, counterflory gules. 2. Gules, three lions passant guardant in pale or, a label of three points in chief argent, for Thomas de Brotherton, earl of Norfolk. 3. Checky or and azure, for Warren, earl of Surrey. 4. Gules, a lion rampant argent, for Mowbray, duke of Norfolk. Behind the whole, two marshal's staves in saltire or, enamelled at each end sable, having the king's arms at the upper and his own at the lower end, the badge of his grace's hereditary office as earl marshal.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermines, a lion statant gardant or, his tail extended, gorged with a ducal coronet argent, as descended from Margaret, daughter and heir of Thomas de Brotherton, earl of Norfolk, fifth son of king Edward I. His grace has another crest, namely, on a wreath a mount vert, surmounted by a horse passant argent, holding in his mouth a slip of oak, fructed proper, as earl of Arundel; but the original crest of the family was upon a chapeau as before, a pair of wings displayed, each charged with the original arms of Howard.

Supporters. On the dexter side a lion, and on the sinister a horse, both argent: the latter holding a slip of oak, fructed proper; but before the match with the heiress of Arundel, the sinister was as the dexter.

Motto. "Sola virtus invicta."

NORFOLK (Geog.) a maritime county of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. and E. by the German Ocean, S. E. and S. by Suffolk, and W. by Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire. It is about 77 m. long from E. to W. and 45 broad from N. to S.

Principal Towns. Norwich, the capital, and a city, Yarmouth, Lynne Regis, Thetford, Cromer, &c.

Principal Rivers. The Ouse, the Nen, the Wawency, the Wensom, and the Bure.

History. This county was originally inhabited by the Iceni, and was the scene of many military transactions during the Danish incursions. When the Romans invaded this country it became a part of the province Flavia Cæsariensis, and during the Saxon Heptarchy it belonged to the kingdom of East Anglia. The Roman Way, called the Ermine Street, crosses the county from Suffolk to Yarmouth.

NORGATE, Edward (Biog.) an artist, who was made Windsor Herald for his skill in heraldry, died in that office in 1650, leaving the reputation of being the best illuminator of his time. His Letters, giving an account of the expedition against the Scotch in 1639, are among Dr. Birch's 'Historical Letters,' 3 vols. MS. in the British Museum.

NORIS, Henry (Ecc.) a cardinal, was born at Verona in 1631, honoured by Innocent XII with the purple in 1695, and died in 1704, leaving among his works as an author, 'Historiæ Pelagianæ;' 'Cenotaphia Pisani Caii et Lucii Cæsarum Dissertationibus illustrata,' fol. Venet. 1681; 'Annus et Epocha Syro-Macedonum in vetustis Urbium Syriæ Nummis præsertim Mediceis expositæ,' fol. Florent. 1691; with a number of other things, all which were published in 4 vols. fol. 1729—1732.

NORMANBY, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Musgrave.

NORMANDY (Geog.) a late province and duchy of France, comprehending the modern departments of Calvados, Eure, Manche, Orne, and Lower Seine.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the W. by the Atlantic, N. by the English Channel, E. by Picardy and the Isle of France, and S. by Perche, Maine, and Bretagne, being about 150 miles in length, and between 80 and 90 in breadth.

Principal Towns. Rouen, Dieppe, Lisieux, Alençon, Bayeux, Coutances, Caen, Evreux, Honfleur, Vire, Falaise. The only naval station is Cherburg. Rouen is an archiepiscopal see, having Lisieux, Bayeux, Coutances, Evreux, Avranches, and Seez, for suffragans.

Principal Rivers. The Seine, Eure, Rille, Touques, Dive, &c.

History. Normandy, which formed a part of Gallia Lugdunensis under the Romans, became afterwards a part of the kingdom of Neustria. It received the name of Normandy, or in the Latin Normannia, from the Normanni, Nortmanner, Normans, or Northern men, a tribe of people, who, issuing from Scandinavia under the command of Rollo their leader, settled here in the latter part of the ninth century, and compelled the French king, Charles the Simple, in 912, to make a formal cession of this territory to them. He moreover gave his daughter Gisle to Rollo, who became the first duke of Normandy, and on being baptized took the name of Robert. His successors were as follow:

Chronological Succession of the Dukes of Normandy.

Dukes.	Began to Reign.	Reigned.

Henry the younger, died in 1183
Richard IV, of England	1189	10
John, of England	1199

Normandy, which had hitherto been governed by princes of the same family, was wrested from the feeble hands of John in 1203; but became afterwards an object of conquest, and the theatre of successful invasion by some of his successors. Edward III began the memorable campaign of 1346 by overrunning Normandy; but a complete conquest of the country was not made until the reign of Henry V, who, by a series of victories, obtained a formal cession of this province to England in 1420. It remained however in the hands of the English but thirty years, when Charles VII, king of France, recovered it; after which three princes of the House of France bore the title of dukes of Normandy—John, son of Philip of Valois; Charles, son of king John; and Charles, the son of Charles VII, and brother of Louis XI, who returned it to the crown of France, from which it has not since been separated. Du Chesne Recherch. et Antiq. de Normand.; *Claude du Moul. NORMANTON, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Agar [vide Agar]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Ellis Agar, earl of Normanton, viscount Somerton, baron of Somerton, co. Kilkenny.

Arms. Azure, a lion rampant or, armed and langued gules.

Crest. On a wreath, a demi-lion of the field proper.

Supporters. Two lions rampant per fess or and azure, armed, chained, and collared gules.

Motto. "Via trita, via tuta."

NORMEL, John (Hist.) an English captain in the 14th century, who was governor of the town of Angouleme when John, duke of Normandy, laid siege to the place. Finding himself pressed and unable to hold out much longer, he begged a truce on the day of the Holy Virgin, which being granted, he marched with all his garrison out of the city in the sight of the enemy, who by virtue of the truce could not molest them.

NORREYS, Sir John (Hist.) a naval officer, descended from a respectable family in Oxfordshire, was entrusted in 1589 with a joint command, in which he had Drake for an associate, in an expedition intended to frustrate the plans of the Spaniards, wherein they succeeded in taking sixty prizes. The next year Norreys gained many successes over the French and Spaniards in Brittany, whence he proceeded to Ireland against the rebel Tyrone, but perished in the attempt to bring him to submission.

NORREYS, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Abingdon.

NORRIS, Sir John (Hist.) a naval commander, descended from a respectable family in Ireland, rose by his meritorious conduct at the battle of Beachy Head in 1690, from the rank of lieutenant to be commander of the Pelican fire-ship, from which he was gradually raised by his merits to the highest posts in the navy, and died in 1749, after having seen nearly sixty years of active and honourable service at sea. [Vide Plate XVI]

NORRIS, John (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1657, at Collingborne-Kingston, in Wiltshire, educated at Winchester and Exeter College, Oxford, and died in 1711, leaving, 1. 'The Picture of Love unveiled.' 2. 'Hierocles upon the golden Verses of the Pythagoreans,' 8vo. Oxford, 1682. 3. 'An Idea of Happiness, in a Letter to a Friend,' &c. 4to. London, 1683. 4. 'A Murnival of Knaves; or, Whiggism plainly displayed and burlesqued out of Countenance,' 4to. London, 1683. 5. 'Tractatus adversus Reprobationis absolutæ Decretum,' &c. 8vo. London, 1683. 6. 'Poems and Discourses, occasionally written.' 7. 'An English Translation of the last four Books of the Institution and Life of Cyrus,' from the Greek of Xenophon, 8vo. Lond. 1685; the first four books were translated by Mr. Francis Digby, of Queen's College. 8. 'A Collection of Miscel-lanies, consisting of Poems, Discourses,' &c. 8vo. Oxford, 1687; a fifth edition improved by the author was printed in 1710. 9. 'The Theory and Regulation of Love, a moral Essay,' 8vo. Oxford, 1688. 10. 'Reason and Religion,' &c. 8vo. London, 1689. 11. 'Reflections upon the Conduct of Human Life,' &c. 8vo. Lond. 1690, 1691. 12. 'Christian Blessedness,' &c.; to which he subjoined cursory reflections upon a book, called 'An Essay concerncerning Human Understanding.' 13. 'The Charge of Schism continued,' &c. 12mo. 1691. 14. 'Two Treatises concerning the Divine Light; the first in answer to a Letter of a learned Quaker, &c. the second being a Discourse concerning the Grossness of the Quaker's Notions respecting the Divine Light,' 8vo. Lond. 1692. 15. 'Spiritual Counsel,' &c. 8vo. Lond. 1694. 16. 'Letters concerning the Love of God,' &c. 8vo. Lond. 1695, 1705. The lady whose letters are published in this collection was Mrs. Astell. 17. 'An Essay towards the Theory of the Ideal or Intelligible World,' &c. 8vo. 1701; and a second part in 1704. 18. 'A Philosophical Discourse concerning the natural Immortality of the Soul,' &c.; which called forth for an Answer from Mr. Dodwell, 'The natural Mortality of the Human Soul clearly demonstrated from the Holy Scriptures, and the concurrent Testimonies of the Primitive Writers.' 19. 'A Treatise concerning Christian Prudence,' &c. 8vo. Lond. 1710. 20. 'A practical Treatise concerning Humility,' &c. 8vo. Lond.; besides some sermons and some letters of his to Mr. Thomas, in 'Pylades and Corinna.'

NORTH, Edward, first Lord (Hist.) a lawyer, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1494, and after being trained up in the study of the Laws, and having passed through various gradations of office, he rose to that of Chancellor of the Court of Augmentations in 36 Henry VIII, and at the death of this king was appointed one of the executors of his will, and one of the council to his son, in whose service, as in that also of his successors, Mary and Elizabeth, he continued to act with great zeal and prudence until his death, which happened in 1564. He was a considerable benefactor to Peter House, Cambridge, to which he gave the vicarage of Burwell.

NORTH, Roger, second Lord, and son of the preceding, was one of the peers who sat on the trial of Thomas, duke of Norfolk. He was made a knight banneret in 1586, by the earl of Leicester, for the valour which he displayed in the Netherlands; afterwards sent as Ambassador Extraordinary from queen Elizabeth to Charles IX of France; sworn of her Privy Council, and constituted Treasurer of her Household; which offices he held until his death in 1600.

NORTH, Dudley, third Lord, after having consumed the greatest part of his estate in the gallantries of king James' or rather prince Henry's court, retired to the country until the breaking out of the rebellion, in which he joined, and was nominated in the administration of the Admiralty, in conjunction with the earls of Northumberland, Essex, and Warwick. He died in 1666, at the age of 85, leaving among his works, as an author, 'A Forest of Varieties,' a first part; 'Exonerations,' a second part; 'Privadoes, or Extravagants,' a third part of a Miscellany, in prose and verse.

NORTH, Dudley, fourth Lord, and son of the preceding, sat in many Parliaments, until he was excluded by that which condemned the king, when he retired into the country, and lived privately at Tostock, in Suffolk, until his death in 1677, leaving among his works, as an anthor, 1. 'Observations and Advices Œconomical,' 12mo. Lond. 1669. 2. 'Passages relating to the Long Parliament.' 3. 'History of the Life of Edward, Lord North, the first Baron.' 4. 'Light in the Way to Paradise, with other Occasionals.' 8vo. Lond. 1682.

NORTH, Francis, Lord Keeper, and second son of the preceding. [Vide Guildford]

NORTH, Sir Dudley, third son of the fourth lord above-mentioned, was a Turkey merchant, and resided for many years in that country, where he amassed a large fortune, and rendered himself memorable for his city contests on the Tory side.

NORTH, William, sixth Lord, and also Lord Grey, served under the duke of Marlborough through the whole course of the war, and had his right hand shot off at the battle of Hockstet, or Blenheim.

NORTH, Frederick, second earl of Guildford, a statesman, better known by his inferior title of Lord North, was the eldest son of Francis, first earl of Guildford. He was born in 1732; educated at Eton School, and Trinity College, Oxford; was declared one of the Commissioners of the Treasury in 1759; appointed Joint Receiver and Pay-master of the Forces in 1766; sworn of the Privy Council in the same year; made Chancellor of the Exchequer and a Lord of the Treasury in 1767; and constituted first Lord Commissioner of the Treasury in 1770; which office he held until 1782, during the stormy period of the American war, and the consequent war with France, Spain, and Holland, the failure of which rendered his resignation necessary. He afterwards joined in the ministry with Mr. Fox; but this coalition lasted only a very short time, when his lordship finally retired from public life, and died in 1792; being at the time of his death Ranger and Warden of Bushy Park; Chancellor of the University of Oxford; a Knight of the Garter, Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Somerset; Recorder of Gloucester and Taunton; one of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House; President of the Foundling Hospital and the Asylum; and Governor of the Turkey Company and Charter-House. [Vide Plate IX]

NORTH (Her.) the name of a family which is mentioned as early as the reign of Edward IV, and was first honoured with the peerage in the person of Edward North, the lawyer, mentioned under History, who was created a baron of this realm by the title of lord North; and sir Francis North, second son of Dudley, fourth lord North, was created lord Guildford in 1683; and Francis, seventh lord North, was advanced in 1773 to the dignity of earl of Guildford. William, the fifth lord North, became also lord North and lord Grey, in right of his wife, which latter title became extinct at his death.

NORTH, Lord, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Guildford.

NORTH, John (Biog.) fourth son of Dudley, fourth lord North, and brother to the lord keeper Guildford, was born in London in 1645, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1683, Master of Trinity College, in that University. He published an edition of some pieces of Plato, under the title of 'Platonis de Rebus Divinis Dialogi selecti,' Gr. and Lat.; 'Socratis Apologia,' &c. 8vo. Cantab. 1673.

NORTH, Roger, younger brother of the preceding, and sixth son of the fourth lord North, who was bred to the law, and died in 1733, at the age of 83, published 'Examen into the Credit and Veracity of a pretended complete History, viz. Dr. White Kennet's History of England;' also the Lives of his three Brothers, the Lord Keeper Guildford, Sir Dudley North, and the Rev. Dr. John North. He left behind him in MS. 'Memoirs of Music,' of which Dr. Burney made use in his 'History of Music.'

NORTH, Dudleia, sister of William, lord North and Grey, having made herself mistress of Greek, Latin, and the Oriental Languages, died in consequence of intense application to study, leaving a choice collection of books in eastern literature.

NORTH, George, an English antiquary, was born at London in 1710, educated at St. Paul's School, and Benet College, Cambridge, and died in 1772, leaving 'An Answer to a scandalous libel entitled 'The Impertinence and Imposture of Modern Antiquaries displayed;'' A Catalogue of the Earl of Oxford's Coins, for the sale of them; 'Remarks on some Conjectures relative to a very Ancient Piece of Money lately found at Eltham, in Kent,' &c.; Remarks on the Money of Henry III, besides a MS. account of Saxon and English Coins by him, with drawings by Mr. Hodsol, of which the Rev. Mr. Ruding availed himself in his late History of the Coinage of Great Britain.

NORTHAMPTON, Sir Thomas Parr, Marquis of (Hist.) father to Catherine Parr, wife of Henry VIII, being instrumental, at the death of king Edward VI, in proclaiming lady Jane Grey, was arraigned and condemned to death, but execution being staid, he was restored in blood on the accession of queen Elizabeth, and died in 1571.

NORTHAMPTON, Henry, Earl of, of the family of Howard, younger son of the earl of Surry, was made a Privy Counsellor to king James I in 1603, and Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports in the same year, and died in 1614, after having stained his memory by a guilty participation in the murder of sir Thomas Overbury, of which he was suspected.

NORTHAMPTON, William, first Earl of, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was of the Privy Council to queen Elizabeth, and after her death continued in the service and confidence of James I, and Charles I, until his death in 1630.

NORTHAMPTON, Spenser, second Earl of, son of the preceding, and a noble loyalist, after having served his royal master as his minister and ambassador, took up arms in his defence, and brought not less than 2000 men into the field, as well disciplined and equipped as any nobleman's in the kingdom. With part of these he engaged the rebels under sir John Gell, near Stafford, in 1642, and after having routed them in all quarters, he had his horse killed under him whilst surrounded by his enemies; he killed, with his own hand, the colonel of foot, who first made up to him, and when his head-piece was stricken off, they offered him quarter, which he refused, saying that he scorned to take quarter from such base rogues and rebels as they were. After which he was slain by a blow with a halbert on the hinder part of his head, receiving at the same time another deep wound in the face. He had six sons, who all inherited his courage, loyalty, and virtue. Three of his sons were officers under him at the battle in which he was killed. [Vide Plate IX]

NORTHAMPTON, James, third Earl of, having voted in the House of Commons against the bill for attainting Thomas earl of Strafford, his name was posted up among the Straffordians, at the corner of sir William Brouncker's, in Old Palace Yard, Westminster. His lordship taking up arms with his father for king Charles I, was distinguished for his bravery, and performed many gallant acts in those times of confusion. He was at the battles of Edgehill, and Hopton Heath, where his father was killed, and he himself being previously wounded, was taken off the field; after which he was at the taking of Banbury and Lichfield, &c.; routed a party of the rebels at Middleton Cheyney, in Northampton, and afterwards commanded the horse at the first battle of Newbury, in 1643. During his majesty's confinement, he readily engaged to serve under the earl of Holland, who had received a commission from prince Charles, to be a general of an army to be raised for the redemption of the king from prison, but this project ended in the destruction of that commander. The earl of Northampton lived in retirement until the Restoration, when he was among the first to hail the return of order and good government. His lordship, on the magnificent entry of Charles II through his city of London in 1660, led a troop of gentlemen clothed in grey and blue. After which he was constituted Lord Lieutenant of the county of Warwick in 1660, Custos Rotulorum in 1671, admitted to the Privy Council in 1672, and died full of honours in 1681. He was interred among his ancestors at Compton, in the church which had been destroyed by the rebels, and which he had caused to be rebuilt in 1665.

NORTHAMPTON, George, fourth Earl of, son of the preceding, fell in with the Revolution which placed William and Mary on the throne of England, was sworn of the Privy Council in 1702, at the accession of queen Anne, and died in 1727, holding most of the offices in the state which had been held by his father and grandfather.

NORTHAMPTON, Charles, seventh Earl of, was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary to Venice, where he made his public entry with great magnificence in 1763, but died that same year, on his return from that embassy.

NORTHAMPTON, Marquis of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Compton, of which honourable mention is made under History as above, and also under the head of Compton. [Vide Compton] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Compton, marquis and earl of Northampton, earl and baron Compton, and baron Wilmington. The title of the eldest son earl Compton.

Arms. Sable, a lion passant gardant or, between three close helmets argent, garnished or.

Crest. On a wreath, a beacon sable, enflamed on the top proper; about the same, a label inscribed 'Nisi Dominus.' Another crest granted by Henry VIII to sir William Compton.

Supporters. Two dragons with wings expanded ermine, ducally collared and chained or.

Motto. "Je ne cherche que ung."

NORTHAMPTON, Marquis of, a title conferred in 1547 on sir Thomas Parr, which became extinct at his death in 1571.

NORTHAMPTON, Earl of, a title conferred in 1603 on lord Henry Howard above-mentioned, which became extinct at his death in 1613.

NORTHAMPTON (Geog.) a town of England, and capital of the county of the same name, stands on an eminence on the north bank of the river Nen, 66 m. N.W. London. Lon. 0° 44′ W, lat. 52° 14′ N. Not far from the town, on the London road, is a fine Gothic pillar called Queen's Cross, erected by Edward I, in memory of his queen Eleanor. The exchequer was removed from London by order of king John to this town, which was frequently the residence of Edward I. In the meadows below the town was fought in 1460, a decisive battle between the forces of Henry VI and the Yorkists, in which the former were defeated, and the king made prisoner. Northampton was visited by queen Elizabeth in 1563, and by Charles I in 1634. It was ravaged by the plague in 1637, and seized by the rebel forces in 1642, since which it has suffered more than once by fire. Several councils or synods were held here, particularly two against Thomas à Becket, in 1138 and 1164.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE (Geog.) an inland county of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. by the counties of Leicester, Rutland, and Lincoln; on the E. and S. by those of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Bedford, Buckingham, and part of Oxford; and on the W. by those of Oxford and Warwick. It is of such length as to stretch about 65 miles in an oblique direction along nine other counties, from Oxfordshire on the S. W., to Lincolnshire on the N. E., and its breadth only 25, but mostly 15.

Principal Towns. Northampton, the county town, Peterborough, a city, Daventry, Kettering, Towcester, Rockingham, Wellingborough, Thrapston, and Oundle.

Principal Rivers. The Avon, Nen, Charwell, Ouse, Welland, &c.

History. This county, which was anciently inhabited by the Coritani, was included in the Roman province of Flavia Cæsariensis; and belonged to the kingdom of Mercia, during the Saxon Heptarchy. The Roman Watling-street Road, on which were several Roman stations, crosses the country in a direct line from Stoney Stratford to Done Bridge.

NORTHCOTE (Her.) the name of a family which derives its descent from Galfridus Miles, who lived in the reign of Henry I. His descendant, John Northcote, was created a baronet in 1641. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, a fesse between three crosses moline sable; second and third argent, three crosslets in bend sable.

Crest. Upon a cap of dignity, a stag trippant argent.

Motto. "Christi crux est mea lux."

NORTHESK, John, Earl (Hist.) a loyalist in the time of the rebellion, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, suffered for his fidelity to his sovereign, but survived the Restoration, and died in 1667, at the age of about 80.

NORTHESK, William, eighth Earl of, was born in 1758, and being early destined for the sea-service, he rose by his merits to a distinguished rank in the navy, and had the honour of being third in command at the battle of Trafalgar, where he maintained his well earned reputation, by a display of the most undaunted valour, when, in the Britannia, he broke through the enemy's line astern of their fourteenth ship, and pouring in on each side a most tremendous and destructive fire, he continued engaging frequently on both sides, and with two or three at a time, with very little intermission for five hours, when all resistance ceased.

NORTHESK, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Carnegie, [vide Carnegie] which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Carnegie, earl of Northesk, lord Rosehill.

Arms. Or, an eagle displayed azure, a medal suspended from its neck, and in chief the word "Trafalgar."

Crest. First, the hull of a ship in flames; second, a demi-leopard proper, issuing out of a naval crown.

Supporters. Two leopards proper, each having a medal suspended from its neck, and embracing and bearing up a staff, with a flag displayed argent, charged with a cross gules, inscribed "Britannia victrix."

Motto. "Tache sans Tache."

NORTHINGTON, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred in 1764 on sir Robert Henley, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, which became extinct at the death of Robert, the second earl, in 1786.

NORTHLAND, Viscount (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Knox, which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Knox, viscount Northland, baron Welles, of Dungannon, co. Tyrone.

Arms. Gules, a falcon volant or; within an orle waved on the outer side, and ingrailed on the inner side argent.

Crest. A falcon proper perched.

Supporters. A falcon on each side, with wings expanded proper, ducally collared, chained, beaked, and taloned or.

Motto. "Moveo et proficior."

NORTHUMBERLAND, Edmund, Duke of (Hist.) of the family of Dudley, mentioned under Heraldry, insinuated himself so into the favour of Henry VIII, that he was made one of his sixteen executors, and at his death, grew into the favour and confidence of Edward VI, but attempting to place the crown on the head of his daughter-in-law lady Jane Grey, he was beheaded immediately after the accession of queen Mary. [Vide Plate VII]

NORTHUMBERLAND, Henry, first Earl of, of the family of Percy mentioned under Heraldry, father of sir Henry Percy, well known by the name of Hotspur, [vide Percy] distinguished himself early as a soldier in the wars of Edward III, whom he attended into France; assisted as Marshal of England at the coronation of king Richard II in 1377, and after serving this king on several public occasions, he was appointed Constable of England, and continued to hold this office under Henry IV, whom he had been instrumental in raising to the throne, but afterwards he set up the standard of rebellion against him, and collecting an army in Scotland, he invaded England, and proceeded as far as Weatherby, in Yorkshire, where he was met by Rokeby, sheriff of Yorkshire, with the posse comitatus in 1407, when a sharp fight ensued, in which the earl was slain, and his head, then white with age, was cut off and sent to London.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Henry, second Earl of, grandson of the preceding, remained an exile in Scotland until the accession of Henry V, when he was restored to his honours forfeited by the attainder of his father, and in the 28 of Henry VI, was appointed, in consideration of his acceptable services to the Lancastrian cause, Constable of England, but fell in the battle of St. Alban's in 1455, fought between the forces of Henry and the Yorkists, under the earl of Warwick. The battle of Pepperden, fought not far from the Cheviot Hills in 1436, between this earl and William Douglas, earl of Angus, is supposed to have given rise to the celebrated old ballad of Chevy Chace.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Henry, third Earl of, was employed in frequent negotiations with Scotland in the reign of Henry VI, and after the death of his father, he used all his influence in support of queen Margaret, for whom he collected considerable forces, and thereby, as also by his personal valour, contributed to the advantages which she gained over the Yorkists. He was, however, slain at the battle of Towton in 1461, when king Edward IV, after a desperate conflict, obtained a decisive victory.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Henry, fourth Earl of, was restored, after eight years' confinement in the Tower, to his honours and estates, and being constituted Warden of the east and middle marches towards Scotland, was employed in several negotiations with Scotland at different times, and afterwards commanded under Richard Plantagenet, duke of Gloucester, in his expedition into Scotland, which ended in the surrender of the town and castle of Berwick. This earl, who had been raised to the post of Lord High Chamberlain of England by Richard III, accompanied him to the battle of Bosworth Field, but not being hearty in his cause, he was taken into favour by Henry VII, by whom he was made one of his counsellors, and was afterwards killed in a popular tumult in 1489.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Henry Algernon, fifth Earl, who was born in 1477, was one of the chief commanders of the king's forces at the battle of Blackheath in 1497 against Touchet, lord Audley, and his adherents; and, on the marriage of the princess Margaret to James IV of Scotland, king Henry brought her from Richmond to Coln-Weston, in Northamptonshire, on her way, and then consigned her to the earl of Northumberland, as warden of the marshes, who, with a great company of lords, knights, &c. and a magnificent equipage, accompanied her to a village called Lamberton, in Scotland, where king James and his nobles were ready to receive her. He was afterwards employed as warden of the marshes in the reign of Henry VIII; was present with the king at the battle of the Spurs; and died in 1527. The system of his domestic economy is handed down to us in a book published by the duke of Northumberland, under the title of 'The Regulations and Establishment of the Household of Henry Algernon Percy, the Fifth Earl of Northumberland,' &c. 8vo. London, 1770.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Henry Algernon, sixth Earl of, was a rival to king Henry VIII in the affections of Anne Boleyn, whom he was prevented marrying through the interference of cardinal Wolsey. He was afterwards employed by the king as warden of the marshes, to arrest the cardinal at Cawood Castle, near York, and died in 1537.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Thomas, seventh Earl of, eldest son of sir Thomas Percy, knt., who was second son of the fifth earl of Northumberland, and brother of the preceding, having recommended himself to queen Mary by crushing the rebellion attempted by Thomas Stafford, was by her reinstated in the honours of his uncle, notwithstanding the attainder of his father; and afterwards, as warden of the marshes, obtained a victory over the Scots in 1557. He was not, however, equally faithful in the service of queen Elizabeth, against whom he headed an insurrection in favour of queen Mary, for which he was attainted, and beheaded in 1572.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Henry, eighth Earl of, and brother of the preceding, had, during the lifetime of the latter, distinguished himself against the Scotch, and was, on succeeding to his honours, no less active and successful in defeating the projects of the queen's enemies, particularly in quelling the rebellion in which his brother bore a part; but he afterwards fell into suspicion of favouring the succession of queen Mary, and was in consequence committed to the Tower, where he was found in 1585 dead in his bed, from the shot of a pistol, supposed to have been fired by himself.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Henry Percy, ninth Earl of, son of the preceding, took the first opportunity of signalizing his valour by embarking with Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, for the wars in the Low Countries. In the year 1588, when this nation was threatened with the Spanish invasion, he was one who hired ships at his own charge, and, joining the English fleet under the command of the Lord Admiral Howard, shared the glory of destroying the invincible Armada. He was one of the foremost to promote the accession of king James to the throne of England; but, being afterwards implicated in the Gunpowder Plot, in consequence of the active part his kinsman and agent, Thomas Percy, had taken in this matter, he was sentenced to be imprisoned for life, and to pay a fine of 20,000l. He was liberated after the payment of the fine and an imprisonment of fifteen years, and died in 1632, at the age of 70. [Vide Plate XV] This earl had the reputation of being a great mathematician, having as his constant companions during his imprisonment Hariot, Hues, and Warner, three celebrated mathematicians, who were usually called the earl of Northumberland's three Magi.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Algernon, tenth Earl of, attended Charles I in 1633 into Scotland, in order to his coronation, being one of the Privy Council; had the command of a royal fleet of sixty sail in 1636, when he destroyed the Dutch busses that were fishing on our coast; was constituted Lord High Admiral of England in 1637; appointed General of the army to act against the Scots in 1639; deserted the king's cause the next year, and lent his influence to the rebel party, who overthrew the state, and murdered the king. He did not, however, join in all their violent measures, but favoured the restoration, and died in 1668.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Duke of (Her.) this title was first conferred in 1551 by king Edward VI on Dudley, earl of Warwick, but, he having forfeited his title and his life as above-mentioned, the family of Percy, which had long enjoyed the title of earl of Northumberland, was restored to its honours by queen Mary, in the person of Thomas, the seventh earl. The title became extinct at the death of Joceline Percy, eleventh earl of Northumberland, but was revived in the family of Smithson, by the marriage of lady Elizabeth Seymour, grand-daughter of Charles, duke of Somerset, by lady Elizabeth Percy, with sir Hugh Smithson, bart., who assumed the name and arms of Percy, and, after succeeding to the title of earl of Northumberland, was, in 1766, raised to the ducal rank. The titles, arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. The most noble and puissant prince, Percy, duke and earl of Northumberland, earl Percy, lord Percy, Lucy, Poynings, Fitz-Payne, Bryan, and Latimer, and baron Warkworth, of Warkworth Castle.

Arms. Quarterly, the first and fourth quarterly; first and fourth or, a lion rampant azure, being the armorial bearings of the ancient dukes of Brabant; second and third gules, three Lucies or Pykes for Lucy; the second and third azure, five fusils in fess or, for Percy.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a lion passant azure, his tail extended.

Supporters. On the dexter side a lion azure; on the sinister an unicorn argent, collared gobone or and azure, with a chain appendant, and reflecting over his back or.

Motto. "Esperance en Dieu."

NORTHUMBERLAND (Geog.) the most northern county of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the E. by the German Ocean, S. by the bishopric of Durham, W. by Cumberland and Scotland, and N. by Scotland, and is of a triangular form, being 64 m. the greatest length, and 50 the greatest breadth.

Principal Towns. Newcastle, the largest town, Alnwick, the county town, Berwick, Hexham, Morpeth, Belford, Rothbury, Allendale, &c.

Principal Rivers. The Tweed, which divides it from the county of Berwick, the Tyne, and Derwent, which separate it from Durham, the Aln, Coquet, Blyth, &c.

Mountains. The lofty range of the Cheviot hills, which extend from the head of the river Coquet down to Allenton, and thence northward to Prendwich, Branton, Ilderton, Wooller, &c. occupying an area of at least 90,000 acres.

History. Northumberland, in Latin Northumbria, which derives its name from its situation north of the Humber, was anciently inhabited by the Ottadini, and formed part of the Roman province of Valentia, which extended from Tynemouth to the Frith of Forth. Besides numerous camps and castles, of which there are remains scattered throughout the county, the Romans had fourteen towns in it. Here also was the celebrated wall which extended from the mouth of the Tyne to the Solway Frith. During the heptarchy it formed one of the seven kingdoms, including also the counties of York, Lancaster, Durham, Cumberland, and Westmoreland. This kingdom was founded by Adelfrid, king of Bernicia, who married Acca, the daughter of Ella, king of the Deiri, and, expelling her infant brother, Edwin, united all the counties N. of the Humber into one monarchy. He was, however, dispossessed of his ill-gotten power by Edwin the rightful owner, who, when he came of age, procured assistance from Redwald, king of East Anglia, and, marching suddenly into Northumberland, fought a battle with Adelfrid, wherein the usurper was slain. In the reign of Edwin, who was one of the greatest princes in the Saxon heptarchy, christianity was introduced into Northumberland. After his death the kingdom was divided between Eanfrid, the son of Adelfrid, who governed Bernicia, and Osric, Edwin's cousin-german, who was king of Deiri, but was united again under Oswald, the brother of Eanfrid, who was succeeded by his brother Oswy, whose successors were Egfrid, Alfred, Osred, Osric, and Celwulph, who in 738 resigned the crown in favour of Eadbert, his cousin-german. He also retired to a monastery, leaving the throne to Oswolf, his son, who was slain in a popular tumult after a year's reign. Mollo, who was not of the royal family, seized the throne, but perished by means of Aihed, a prince of the blood, who was afterwards expelled by his subjects; Ethelred, the son of Mollo, experienced a similar fate; and his place was filled by Osred, his nephew, who, after the reign of a year made way for Ethelbert, another son of Mollo. Ethelbert also perished miserably, when a universal anarchy prevailed in the kingdom of Northumberland, which prepared the inhabitants for the subjection imposed upon them by Egbert. It was governed by earls till after the conquest, when it had a lord lieutenant and a sheriff, and was divided into baronies and wards. From that period till the union of the crowns of England and Scotland this county was the theatre of the border wars with which England and Scotland were harassed for so many centuries.

NORTHWICH, Lord (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Rushout [vide Rushout]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Sable, two lions passant gardant within a bordure engrailed or.

Crest. A lion passant gardant or.

Supporters. Two angels proper, winged and crined or, habited argent, powdered with fleurs-de-lis and mullets or, bound round the waist with a sash azure, holding in their hands a palm-branch vert.

Motto. "Par ternis suppar."

NORTON, Richard (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was among the number of those who joined in an insurrection with Charles Neville, earl of Westmoreland, and Thomas Percy, duke of Northumberland, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and was in consequence attainted.

NORTON (Her.) the name of a family which derives its descent from Adam Coigneers, or Conyers, of Norman extraction, who assumed the name of Norton, which was that of his mother's family. Fletcher Norton, a descendant of his, was created in 1782 lord Grantley, baron of Markenfield, in the county of York. [Vide Grantley]

NORTON, Thomas (Biog.) a writer, who died about 1583, assisted Sternhold and Hopkins in their noted version of the Psalms; translated Calvin's Institutes, and a Letter from Peter Martyn to Somerset the Protector, and is supposed to have had a hand in the dramatic piece entitled 'Forrex and Porrex,' which was composed by Thomas Sackville, afterwards earl of Dorset, and reprinted under the title of 'Gorboduc.'

NORWAY (Geog.) an extensive country in the north of Europe.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the E. by Sweden and Swedish Lapland, N. and W. by the German and Northern Oceans, S. by the narrow sea forming the entrance to the Sound and Baltic, extending from the Naze in lat. 57° 30′ to the North Cape in lat. 71°. Its breadth, which is very unequal, is from 40 to 280 m.

Division. It is divided into the four governments of Aggerhuys, in the south-east; Christiania, in the south-west; Bergen, in the west; and Drontheim, a long track extending to the north.

Principal Towns. Christiania, Drontheim, Bergen, Kongsberg, Frederickhall, Christiansand, and Stavanger, &c.

Islands. This country has a number of islands on its north coast, the principal of which are Maghero, Suro, Samen, Trommes, Wardhus, &c.

Mountains. The mountains are numerous, and generally clothed with pines, and firs. The grand Scandinavian chain, which runs from S. to N. dividing this kingdom from Sweden, is known by distinct appellations: the chief are the ridges of Langfial, Selbo, Dofri, Kolen, and Severnoi.

Rivers and Lakes. The rivers of Norway are also numerous; but, as in other mountainous countries, of little use for promoting intercourse: the principal are the Glomme, Drammer, Nid, &c. The principal lakes are those of Mias, Fœmund, and Sperdillen.

History. Norway, in the Latin of the middle ages Norvegia, in German Nortwegen, Swedish Norrige, and Danish Norge, signifies literally the Northern Way or Country, so called from its northern situation. It was governed from a very early period by princes of its own, of which historians have given a long list; but the following contains the names of those which may be deemed authentic.

Chronological Succession of the Kings of Norway.

Magnus VI	1281
Eric II	1299
Aquinus V	1319
Magnus VII	1374
Aquinus VI	1380

Aquinus having espoused Margaret, who was heiress to the crown of Denmark, he became king of Denmark and Norway, from which period the two crowns became united until the year 1814, when Bernadotti having established himself on the throne of Sweden, obliged the Danish court to make a cession of Norway to him in return for Swedish Pomerania and the island of Rugen. To this arrangement the Norwegians made some opposition, and elected Christian Frederick, hereditary prince of Denmark, first to the regency, and then to the throne of Norway; but the latter, after a short though spirited resistance, consented to a treaty, stipulating that he should resign his crown into the hands of the diet. This assembly was accordingly convened at Christiana, and came to the resolution that Norway should be permanently governed by the same king as Sweden; but as an integral state, and with the preservation of its constitution and laws. Sax.

NORWICH, George, Earl of (Hist.) of the family of Goring, mentioned under Heraldry, a steady loyalist, who long and faithfully served king Charles in all his troubles, and died in 1662.

NORWICH, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred first on sir Edward Denny, who was raised to the peerage in 3 James I, by the title of lord Denny, and created earl of Norwich in 2 Charles I; which titles became extinct at his death. But that of earl of Norwich was revived in the person of his nephew sir George Goring, who was raised to the peerage by the title of lord Goring of Hurst Pierpont, 4 Charles I; and farther advanced to the dignity of earl of Norwich shortly after the death of his uncle. These titles became extinct at the death of his second son Charles, the second earl; but the earldom of Norwich was conferred in 1784, as one of his English honours, on the duke of Gordon.

NORWICH (Geog.) an ancient city of England, in the county of Norfolk, situated on the banks of the river Wensom, 22 m. W. Yarmouth, 108 N. E. London. Lon. 1° 17′ E. lat. 52° 38′ N. This town, which in the Latin of the middle ages is called Norvicum, or Nordovicum, is distinguished by its castle, which was first erected in the sixth century, and in the twelfth century was made a place of confinement for the king's prisoners, since which it has been a common jail. It is a bishop's see, suffragan of Canterbury.

NOSTRADAMUS (Biog.) or Notre Dame, Michael, a physician and astrologer, who was born in 1503 at St. Remy, in the diocese of Avignon, and died in 1566, was the author of some predictions, which he published in verse, under the name of Centuries, the first edition of which was printed by Rigault, in 8vo. Lyons, 1568. He also wrote, 'Un Traité des Fardemens et des Senteurs;' 'Singuliers Recettes pour entretenir la Santé du Corps;' 'Traité des Confitures,' Antwerp, 1557, &c.

NOSTRADAMUS, Cæsar, eldest son of the preceding, who was born in 1555, and died in 1629, was the author of 'Histoire et Chronique de Provence,' fol. Lyons, 1614.

NOSTRADAMUS, Charles, the second son of Michael, was also a Provençal poet.

NOSTRADAMUS, John, youngest son of Michael, was the author of 'Vies des Anciens Poëtes Provençaux,' called Troubadours, 8vo. Lyons, 1575.

NOSTRE (Biog.) or Notre, Andrew le, comptroller of the royal edifices of France, was born in 1613 at Paris, and died in 1700, after having acquired great reputation for skill in planning of gardens.

NOTTINGHAM, Charles, first Earl of (Hist.) of the family of Howard, was sent on an embassy into France in 2 Eliz. on the death of the French king; went in 1562 as general of the horsemen against the earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, who were then in rebellion; was constituted Lord High Admiral of England in 1586; and in 1588 had the honour of conducting the expedition that destroyed the Spanish Armada. In 1596 he commanded the naval part of the expedition which took Cadiz; and in 1601 he was employed to suppress the insurrection headed by the earl of Essex. On the accession of James to the throne he was constituted Lord High Steward, in addition to the other offices which he held, and died in 1624, full of years and honours. [Vide Plate XV]

NOTTINGHAM, Heneage, first Earl of, of the family of Finch, was born in 1621; educated at Westminster School, and Christ Church, Oxford; studied law at the Inner Temple; and, after the restoration, he rose by his merits through the gradations of office to the post of Lord Keeper of the Great Seal in 1673; to that of Lord High Chancellor of England in 1675; and died in 1682. [Vide Plate XVII]

NOTTINGHAM, Earl of (Her.) a title enjoyed by John de Mowbray, who in the reign of Richard II was advanced to the dignity of duke of Norfolk. Lord Howard, of Effingham, a descendant of his in the female line, was created earl of Nottingham in 1596; which title became extinct at the death of Charles, third earl of Nottingham, in 1681. [Vide Howard]

NOTTINGHAM, Earl of, a title revived in the Finch family. [Vide Finch]

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE (Geog.) an inland county of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. by Yorkshire, E. by Lincolnshire, S. by Leicestershire, and W. by Derbyshire, being about 50 miles in its extreme length, and 25 in breadth.

Principal Towns. Nottingham, the capital, Newark, East Retford, Bingham, Mansfield, &c.

Principal Rivers. The Trent, the Idle, the Soar, &c.

History. Previous to the Roman invasion this county was inhabited by the Coritani, and afterwards included by Saxons under the kingdom of Mercia. The ancient fortress in the town of Nottingham, which was founded by the Conqueror, served as a prison for David, king of the Scots, and also for Roger Mortimer, earl of March. It was demolished by Charles II, on account of the active part taken by the inhabitants in the cause of the rebellion.

NOVARINI, Lewis (Biog.) an Italian monk, was born at Verona in 1594, and died in 1650, leaving 'Comment. in quatuor Evangel. et Acta Apostol.' 4 vols. fol.; 'Adagia Sanctorum Patrum,' 2 vols. fol.; 'Electra Sacra,' &c. 3 vols. fol.

NOVATIANUS (Ecc.) a priest of Rome, who got himself clandestinely elected bishop of Rome, and disturbed the peace of the church, by introducing innovations in point of discipline. Among other things he refused to hold communion with any who had ever fallen into idolatry, &c. whence his followers were called after him Novatians. S. Cyprian. ep. 46; Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 6; Epiphan. Hæres. S. August. Hær.; S. Hieron. de Script. Eccles.

NOVATUS (Ecc.) a priest of the church of Carthage, and companion of the preceding, with whom he has been sometimes confounded, composed a number of treatises on Easter, the Sabbath, Circumcision, &c.

NOUE, Francis de la (Hist.) surnamed Bras de Fer, i. e. iron-arm, a celebrated warrior, was born in 1531, and died of a wound which he received at the siege of Lambale in 1591, after having served with distinction on the side of the Calvinists, and afterwards under Henry IV. He wrote 'Discours Politiques,' 4to. Geneva, 1587.

NOUE, Odet de la (Biog.) son of the preceding, who died between 1611 and 1620, was the author of 'Poesies Chretiennes,' 8vo, Geneva, 1604.

NOVE, Paul de (Hist.) a doge of Genoa, who had been elected by a party in 1506, was taken by Louis XII, and beheaded, after he had quelled the sedition.

NOUROMAGUS (Biog.) vide Geldenhaur.

NOURRY, Nicholas le (Biog.) a Benedictine, of the congregation of St. Maur, was born in 1647, and died in 1724. He published an edition of Cassiodorus, and also of the works of St. Ambrose, which latter were published in 1686—1691. He also published his 'Apparatus ad Bibliothecam max. veterum Patrum,' 2 vols. fol. Paris. 1715, intended as a supplement to Despont's 'Bibl. Patrum;' and 'Lucius Cæcilius de Mortibus Persecutorum,' 8vo. 1710.

NOWELL, Alexander (Ecc.) an English divine and reformer, was born in 1507; educated at Oxford; obliged to leave England on account of his religion, took after the accession of Mary, returned immediately after her death; and, in addition to other preferments, was made dean of St. Paul's in 1560, and died in 1601; after having endowed a free-school at Middleton, in Lancashire, and thirteen scholarships in Brasen-nose College. His memory is now held dear by the church of England, on account of the inimitable Catechism which he has provided for her members. He likewise wrote some pieces against the Romish church.

Nowell, Laurence (Biog.) younger brother to the preceding, was educated at Oxford, and died in 1576, leaving a Saxon Vocabulary or Dictionary, which is still extant in MS. and preserved in the Bodleian Library. Of this MS. Somner made use in compiling his Saxon Dictionary. He also wrote 'Polychronicon,' a miscellaneous collection on topography; and 'Collectanea,' chiefly on ecclesiastical matters.

NOY, William (Hist.) attorney-general in the reign of Charles I, was born in 1577, and died in 1634, after having rendered himself memorable as the promoter of the measure of ship-money, which occasioned the first ebullition of that factious spirit which afterwards burst out to the misery of England. He was the author of, 1. 'A Treatise of the principal Grounds and Maxims of the Laws of England,' 4to. 1641, afterwards in 8vo. and 12mo. 2. 'Perfect Conveyancer,' &c. 4to. 1655. 3. 'Reports of Cases in the Time of Queen Elizabeth, King James, and Charles the First,' &c. 4. 'Complete Lawyer,' &c. 8vo. 1661. 5. 'Arguments of Law,' &c.; besides several choice collections that he had made from the records of the Tower of London, reduced into large paper books of his own hand-writing. [Vide Plate XVII]

Nuceria (Numis.) medals are extant of this town, bearing the inscriptions—ΝΟΥΚΕΡΙΝΩΝ, or ΝΟΥΚΡΙΝΩΝ; also NUCERINUM ALFATERNUM.

NUCK, Anthony (Biog.) a Dutch physician and anatomist, who died about 1692, wrote, 1. 'De Vasis aquosis Oculi,' Lugd. Bat. 1685. 2. 'De Ductu salivali novo,' &c. ibid. 1686; which in subsequent editions was entitled 'Sialographia,' &c. 3. 'Adenographia curiosa, et Uteri fœminei Anatome nova,' &c. ibid. 1692. 4. 'Operationes et Experimenta Chirurgica,' ibid. 1692; and frequently reprinted. The three last-mentioned works were published together in 3 vols. 12mo. Lugd. 1722.

NUGENT, Richard (Hist.) seventh baron of Delvin, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, being signally eminent for his loyalty and valour, was appointed in 1496, by the lord justice of Ireland and council, commander and leader of all the forces destined for the defence of the counties of Dublin, Meath, Kildare, and Louth. In 1504 he accompanied the earl of Kildare to the famous battle of Knocktough, in Connaught; and in 1527 he was made Lord Deputy of the kingdom, in which capacity he conducted the public affairs with great integrity and honour, until he was treacherously taken prisoner by O'Conner, and died in 1537.

Nugent, Sir Christopher, the ninth baron of Delvin, was knighted in 1565, and displaying great zeal and fidelity in the service of the crown, he was engaged by the queen to extirpate the O'Mores and their rebel followers; but, notwithstanding he executed this commission to the satisfaction of the crown, he nevertheless fell under the suspicion of holding correspondence with the rebels, and was in consequence imprisoned until he proved his innocence. On his liberation he continued his services to the queen until his death in 1602.

Nugent, William, sixth son of Richard, the second earl of Westmeath, was a commander in king James's army, in which he signalized himself by his courage and conduct, particularly in forcing the pass over the river at Portlenone in 1689, in order to besiege Londonderry; and again at Cavan in 1690, when he was killed.

Nugent, Robert Crags, Earl, a descendant from the Nugents of Carlanstown, in the county of Westmeath, was appointed Comptroller of the Household of Frederick, prince of Wales, in 1747, a Lord of the Treasury in 1754, one of the Vice-Treasurers of Ireland in 1759, and a Lord of Trade in 1766, and died in 1788. He was distinguished more as a writer than a politician, leaving a number of pieces published anonymously by Dodsley, under the title of 'Odes and Epistles,' second edition, 8vo. London, 1739; besides other pieces in Dodsley's collection.

Nugent (Her.) the name of a family of which the first mentioned in history is sir Gilbert de Nugent, who accompanied sir Hugh de Lacie in his expedition into Ireland, and received from him, in recompence of his brave and signal services, the barony of Delvin. His descendant Richard, the tenth baron, was in 1615 advanced to the dignity of earl of Westmeath. Another branch of this family was ennobled in the person of Robert Cragg Nugent, descended from sir Thomas Nugent, of Carlanstown, co. Westmeath, younger brother of Richard, eighth lord Delvin, who in 1767 was created baron Nugent and viscount Clare, and in 1776 earl Nugent, which title devolved at his death on his son-in-law the marquis of Buckingham.

Nugent, Lord, the title enjoyed by a descendant from the same family in the female line, and from the family of Grenville in the male line, which was conferred on Mary Elizabeth Nugent, who was created in 1800 baroness Nugent.

Nugent, Thomas (Biog.) a miscellaneous writer, and a native of Ireland, who died in 1772, was the author of various translations, as of Burlamaqui's 'Principles of Politic Law,' 8vo. 1752; the Abbe de Condillac's 'Essay on the Origin of Human Knowledge,' 8vo. 1756; Macquer's 'Chronological Abridgement of the History of France,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1762. He also wrote a 'History of Vandalia,' 3 vols. 4to. 1776; 'Travels through Germany,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'History of France,' &c.

Nugent, Christopher, a physician, who died in 1775, was the author of an 'Essay on the Hydrophobia.' His daughter was the wife of the celebrated Edmund Burke.

NUMA, Pompilius (Hist.) a native of Cures, a village of the Sabines, who married Tatia, the daughter of Tatius, king of the Sabines, succeeded Romulus, as the second king of Rome, U. C. 82, A. C. 672, and died after a reign of 43 years, in which he gave the Romans a system of jurisprudence, and a religious code, which they retained amidst all the changes and revolutions of the state until the introduction of Christianity. NUREMBURG (Geog.) in the Latin of the middle ages Noricorum Mons, Noriberga, or Noremberga, a large and ancient town of Germany, 58 m. E. S. E. Wurzburg, and nearly 100 N. by W. Munich. Lon. 11° 4′ E, lat. 49° 24′ N.

History of Nuremburg.

This town is said to have been built by the inhabitants of Noricum, in the fifth century, to serve as an asylum against the inroads of Attila and his followers. After rising gradually to some importance, it was ruined by the emperor Henry V, but re-established by Conrad III, and enlarged by Henry VI, and Charles IV, who also fortified it. It belonged to the dukes of Suabia, but was made a free imperial city by Frederic Barbarossa. Henry the Severe having established there a burgraviate in 1194, this was sold by Frederic I, elector of Brandenburgh in 1527, to the inhabitants of Nuremburg, which gave rise to a war that lasted until 1552, when it was terminated by the payment of two hundred thousand dollars to Albert of Brandenburgh. Nuremburg surrendered to Gustavus Adolphus in 1631, who delivered it from the sieges which were successively laid to it in 1632, by Tilli and Wallenstein. The emperors of Germany used to hold their first diet after their coronation at Nuremberg, where three ecclesiastical assemblies were held, in 1438, 1443, and 1487. But this town was one of the first to embrace the confession of Augsburg, and has since the revolutionary wars been deprived of its independance, and appended to the dominion of the king of Bavaria.

NURSIA (Geog.) now Norza, a town of Picenum, whose inhabitants are called Nursini. Liv. l. 28.

NUVOLONE (Biog.) the name of a family of painters.

Nuvolone, Panfilo, the father, a Cremonese painter in the 16th and 17th centuries, and the favourite scholar of Trotti, successfully imitated his style, and left several specimens of his skill in Placentia and Milan.

Nuvolone, Charles Francis, his eldest son, who was born in 1608, and died in 1651, obtained the name of the Lombard Guido, from his happy imitation of that master.

Nuvolone, Joseph, a younger brother of the preceding, was born in 1619, and died in 1703. The large picture of a Dead Man resuscitated by St. Dominic, at Cremona, is reckoned his master-piece.

NUZZI, Mario (Biog.) a painter, commonly known by the name of Mario da' Fiori, who was born in 1603, at Penna, in the kingdom of Naples, and died in 1673, was most successful in painting of flowers.

NYE, Philip (Biog.) a nonconformist, and the descendant from a genteel family in Sussex, was born about 1596, educated at Oxford, became an active partisan in the time of the rebellion, was ejected at the restoration from the living of St. Bartholomew, near the Exchange, and died in 1672. He was one of the Committee who drew up the 'Directory,' which was substituted in the place of the Common Prayer, and published several things suited to the temper of the times, and his own seditious character.

NYCTEUS (Myth.) Νυκτεὺς, a son of Neptune, by Cylene, daughter of Atlas, king of Lesbos, married a nymph of Crete, called Polyxo, or Amalthæa, by whom he had two daughters Nyctimene and Antiope, the first of whom having had an incestuous connexion with her father, was changed into an owl, at the moment that he was going to kill her. Hygin. Fab. 157, &c.; Ovid. Met. l. 2; Paus. l. 2; Schol. Apollon. l. 4.

ŒCOLAMPADIUS, John (Biog.) a German divine and reformer, was born in 1482, and died in 1531, leaving a Catechism, an Exposition of Daniel, and some other theological pieces. The Exposition was translated into English in the 16th century.

ŒCUMENIUS (Ecc.) an ancient Greek commentator on the Scriptures, who was bishop of Trica, in Thessaly, in the 10th century, wrote 'Commentaries upon the Acts of the Apostles,' &c. which were published in Greek at Verona in 1532; and in 2 vols. fol. Gr. and Lat. Paris, 1631.

ŒDER, George Christian (Biog.) a botanist, was born at Anspach in 1728, and died in 1791, leaving, 1. 'Flora Danica,' of which he completed three volumes. 2. 'Elementa Botanica,' Hafn. 1764, and 1766. 3. 'Nomenclator Botanicus,' 1769. 4. 'Enumeratio Plantarum Floræ Danicæ,' 1770. The Œdera of Linnæus was so called in honour of him.

ŒDIPUS (Myth.) Οἰδίπους, a son of Laius, king of Thebes, and Jocasta, so called ἀπὸ οἰδήματος τῶν ποδῶν; i. e. a tumore pedum, the swelling of his feet, because his father having ordered him to be killed as soon as he was born, he was exposed by his mother's desire on the mountain Cithæron; where he was suspended by his feet to a tree, and in that situation was found by one of the shepherds of Polybius, king of Corinth, whose wife Peribœa having no children, educated him as her own child. He afterwards, according to the oracle, unknowingly killed his father, and married his mother Jocasta, and having rid the country of Thebes of the Sphynx by resolving the enigma which was proposed to him, as a reward he obtained the Theban throne; but as soon as the fatal discovery was made which unveiled to him his crime and his misfortunes, he put out his own eyes; and retiring to Attica, led by his daughter Antigone, he was swallowed up, according to an oracle, by the earth opening, near Colonos, where there was a grove sacred to the Furies. The story of Œdipus has been made the subject of more than one tragedy by Sophocles, Euripides, and Seneca. Hom. Odyss. l. 2; Hesiod. Theog.; Pind. Olymp.; Apollod. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 66, &c.; Schol. in Soph., Eurip., Pindar, &c.

ŒNEUS (Myth.) Οἰνεὺς, a king of Calydon, in Œtolia, son of Parthaon, or Portheus, and Euryte, who, having neglected to offer a sacrifice to Diana, the goddess in revenge sent a wild boar to lay waste the country, which was at length killed by Meleager. Hom. Il. l. 9; Apollon. l. 3, et Schol. Apollod. l. 1; Diodor. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 129; Ovid. Met. l. 8; Serv. ad Virg. l. 4; Georg. l. 1; Tzetz. in Lycoph. v. 493.

ŒNOMAUS (Myth.) Οἰνόμαος, a son of Mars by Sterope, the daughter of Atlas, was king of Pisa, in Elis, and father of Hippodamia, who, being informed by an oracle that he should perish by the hands of his son-in-law, he proposed to marry his daughter to whoever should excel him in a chariot race, on condition that all who entered the lists with him should suffer death if he were conquered. After several had perished, Pelops, the son of Tantalus, offered himself, who bribed Myrtilus, the charioteer of Œnomaus, to give his master a chariot the axletree of which broke in the course, and killed him on the spot. Apollod. l. 2; Diod. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 84; Lucian. in Carid.; Lactant. ad Theb. l. 2; Tzetz. Lycoph. v. 156; Serv. in Æn. 8.

ŒNONE (Myth.) Οἰνώνη, a nymph of mount Ida, who was married to Paris before his voyage into Greece, and stabbed herself when she saw his dead body. Apollod. l. 3; Ovid. de Rem. Amor.; Propert. l. 2.

OG (Bibl.) עוג, a giant, and king of Bashan, who was conquered by Moses, and slain in battle; his country was given to the tribes of Gad, Reuben, and half the tribe of Manasseh.

OGDEN, Samuel (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Manchester in 1716, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1778, leaving two volumes of 'Sermons,' which were at one time much esteemed. They were published by his friend bishop Halifax, with a Vindication of his Writings against some late objections.

OGILBY, John (Biog.) a native of Scotland, was born in 1600, and died in 1677, leaving a translation of Æsop's Fables in verse; as also of the works of Virgil, published in 8vo. 1649-50, and of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey. He likewise drew up 'The Relation of his Majesty's Entertainment, passing through the City of London to his Coronation,' &c.; and published a finer edition of the 'English Bible,' than had been extant before; besides several other literary undertakings in which he was engaged.

OGILVIE (Her.) or Grant-Ogilvie, the present family name of the earl of Seafield, which title was first conferred in 1701 on James Ogilvie, the fourth earl of Findlater. The latter earldom became extinct in 1811, at the death of James, the seventh earl; but the earldom of Seafield, and the other titles created by the patent of 1701, devolved on his lordship's cousin Lewis Alexander Grant.

OGLANDER, John (Hist.) deputy-governor of the Isle of Wight, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, and a distinguished loyalist, fought and suffered much in the royal cause.

OGLANDER (Her.) the name of a family which derives its descent from Richard de Okelandre, who came over with the Conqueror, and settled at Nunwell, in the Isle of Wight, which he and his successors, in an uninterrupted male line, have made their place of residence from that time to the present, some of whom in early deeds are styled lords of Nunwell. Sir William Oglander, knt. son of sir John Oglander above-mentioned, was in consideration of his own loyalty and his father's sufferings, created a baronet in 1665. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Azure, a stork between three cross crosslets fitchy or.

Olaus, Magnus (Biog.) vide Magnus.

OLDCASTLE, Sir John (Ecc.) otherwise styled Lord Cobham, in consequence of his marrying the heiress of lord Cobham, was one of the leaders of the reforming party, called Lollards, or Wickliffites, who for his activity and zeal in opposing the see of Rome was condemned as a heretic, and committed to the Tower, from which he contrived to make his escape; but being retaken after he had been four years in Wales, he was hung up in chains alive, upon a gallows, and fire being put under him he was burnt to death in 1417. [Vide Plate XIX] He wrote 'Twelve Conclusions to the Parliament of England.' Bale published 'A briefe Chronicle concerning the Examynacyon and Death of the blessed Martyr of Christ Syr Johan Oldcastell, the Lord Cobham,' which was reprinted under the care of Mr. Lewis, of Margate, in 1729. His life has since been written by Mr. Gilpin.

OLDENBURG, Henry (Biog.) a German, who was born in 1626, and died in 1678, is principally known as the secretary to the Royal Society, and the publisher of the 'Philosophical Transactions;' besides which he translated into English 'The Prodromus to a Dissertation by Nich. Steno, concerning Solids naturally contained within Solids,' 8vo. 1670; 'A genuine Explication of the Book of Revelations,' &c. 8vo. 1671; 'Life of the Duchess of Mazarine,' 8vo. translated from the French.

Oldenburg (Geog.) a grand duchy of Germany, in the north part of the empire, which is bounded on the north by the German Ocean, on the other sides by Hanover. The chief towns are Oldenburg, the capital, Elsfleth, and Varel. The chief rivers are the Weser, the Hunte, and the Delme, besides the lake Dummersee. The House of Oldenburg is one of the oldest and most illustrious in Europe, from which are descended the kings of Denmark, the emperors of Russia, and the late royal family of Sweden. The county of Oldenburg is the ancient family property, to which were added the duchies of Holstein and Sleswick. These came to Theodoric the Fortunate by his marriage with Hedwiga, widow of Balthasar, duke of Mecklenberg, &c. His son Christian became king of Denmark, whence Holstein and Oldenburg became the appanages of younger sons; but the latter fell to the crown of Denmark in 1667, by the extinction of the family of its counts. After the House of Holstein succeeded to the throne of Russia, Denmark exchanged Oldenburg for that duchy, and the czar, Peter III, ceded Oldenburg to his cousin Frederic Augustus, bishop of Lubec; after which, Oldenburg and Delmenhorst were erected into a duchy in 1777, and in 1803 the reigning duke received a considerable accession of territory; but was expelled from all his possessions in 1810, and restored after the battle of Leipzig in 1813, when he obtained the title of grand duke.

OLDENBURGER, Philip Andrew (Biog.) a professor of law and history at Geneva, who died in 1678, was the author of, 1. 'Thesaurus Rerum Publicarum totius Orbis,' 4 vols. 8vo. Genev. 1675. 2. 'Limnæus Enucleatus,' fol. 3. 'Notitia Imperii,' &c. 4. 'Tractatus de Rebus Publicis Turbidis in Tranquillum Statum reducendis,' &c. 5. 'Tractatus de quatuor Elementis juridicè consideratis, et Notis illustratus.' 6. 'Manuale Principum Christianorum de vera eorum Felicitate,' &c.

OLDFIELD (Her.) the name of a family of Lincolnshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1660 on sir Anthony Oldfield, for his loyalty during the rebellion. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

OLENA (Myth.) the name given to the goat Amalthea, who nursed Jupiter, because she resided at Olenus, a town of Peloponnesus. Apollod. l. 1; Senec. in Med.; Plin. l. 4.

OLERON (Geog.) a town in the south-west of France, in the former province of Bearn, and modern department of the Lower Pyrenees, on the river called the Gave d'Oleron, 14 m. S. W. Pau, 43 S. E. Bayonne.

History of Oleron.

This town, which was named in the Latin of the middle ages Illuro, Illurona, Loronensium, and Ellorensium Civitas, Elarona, and Glore, was almost destroyed by the Normans in the ninth century, and was rebuilt in 1080, by Centullus, viscount of Bearn and Oleron. It is an episcopal city, and suffered much from the Calvinists in the 16th century. De Marc. Hist. de Bearne; St. Marthe Gall. Christ.

Oleron, an island on the S. W. coast of France, opposite to the mouth of the Charente, separated from the continent by a narrow channel, called the Pertuis d'Antioche. This island is called in Latin Ularius, and by Sidonius Olarion, as is generally supposed.

OLESNIKI, Sbignée (Ecc.) a cardinal, and bishop of Cracow, in the 15th century, was one of the greatest men that Poland ever produced. He was secretary to king Ladislaus Jagellon, whom he served faithfully in the most important concerns of state; and at the death of the latter in 1434 he caused an assembly of the states to be convoked, in which he declared the eldest son of his late royal master to be king; and at the death of this prince in 1444 he procured the succession for his brother Casimir. Olesniki died in 1455, after having performed the marriage ceremony of Casimir with Elizabeth of Austria.

Olesniki, Nicholas, of the same family as the preceding, turned Protestant, and shamelessly broke up the religious houses which had been founded by his illustrious predecessor.

OLEY, Barnabas (Hist.) president of Clare Hall, Cambridge, was very active in collecting the university plate at the breaking out of the rebellion, and was entrusted with the conveyance of it to the king at Nottingham in 1642; for which, and other acts of loyalty, he was turned out of his fellowship by the earl of Manchester, and after having suffered many privations during the usurpation, he was in 1660 restored to his fellowship and living, and died in 1686. He published Dr. Jackson's Works, and Mr. Herbert's 'Country Parson,' to each of which he prefixed a preface.

OLIBRIUS (Hist.) governor of the Gauls in the reign of the emperor Decius, rendered himself odious by the cruelty with which he persecuted the Christians.

Olibrius, vide Olybrius.

OLISIPO (Geog.) a town of Lusitania, now Lisbon, called by some Olyssippo, and said to be founded by Ulysses. It was made a municipal town by Augustus, and was named Felicitas Julia, as may be learnt from inscriptions—FELICITAS JULIA OLISIPO. Mela, l. 3; Plin. l. 4; Solin. c. 23, &c.

OLIVA, Alexander (Ecc.) general of the Augustin monks, and a celebrated cardinal, was born at Sassoferrato in 1408, obtained the honour of the purple from Pius II in 1460, and died in 1463, after having displayed his abilities in different commissions that were entrusted to him.

OLIVAREZ, Gaspar de Guzman, Count de (Hist.) a Spanish minister to Philip IV, succeeded the duke of Uzeda in 1620, and died in disgrace in 1643, in consequence of his arrogance and misguided policy.

Olivarez (Geog.) a town of Castille, 18 miles E. Valladolid, and 90 N. Madrid, which gave its name to the minister above-mentioned.

OLIVER, Isaac (Biog.) one of the first English miniature painters, was born in 1556, and died in 1617, leaving several specimens of his skill in the closet of queen Charlotte, at Kensington, and also at Strawberry Hill. A drawing of his, representing the Placing of Christ in the Sepulchre, and a drawing after Raphael's design, of the Murder of the Innocents, have been greatly admired. He wrote a 'Treatise on Limning,' partly printed in Sanderson's 'Graphice.'

OLIVER, Peter, son and disciple of the preceding, was born in 1601, and died about 1654, leaving a number of works, which were in the collection of Charles I and James II.

OLIVET, Joseph Thoulier d' (Biog.) a French writer, and classical editor, was born at Salins in 1682, and died in 1768. His first publications were translations from Cicero and Demosthenes, of all which he published an edition in 6 vols. in 1765 and 1766, besides which, he was employed in continuing the History of the French Academy, from 1652, where Pelisson left off, to 1700, published in 4to. 1720, and in 2 vols. 12mo. 1730, but his edition of Cicero in 9 vols. 4to. 1740, has endeared his name to all classical scholars. This valuable edition was reprinted at Geneva in 9 vols. 4to. 1758, and at Oxford, by Hearne, in 10 vols. 4to. 1783.

OLIVETAN, Robert (Biog.) a relation of Calvin, who died in 1538, was the first who translated the Bible into French, which he printed at Neufchatel, in folio, in 1535. It formed the foundation of what is called the Geneva translation.

OLIVEYRA, Francis Xavier de (Biog.) a gentleman of the king of Portugal's household, was born at Lisbon in 1702, and died in 1783 in England, where he had taken refuge on account of his turning Protestant. He published Memoirs of his Travels, at Amsterdam in 1741; Letters, Familiar, Historical, Political, and Critical, printed at the Hague in 1741 and 1742, in the Portuguese language; 'Memoires concernant le Portugal,' 2 vols. 8vo. Hague, 1741—1743; 'Amusemens Periodiques,' 1751; 'Discours Pathetique,' 1756; 'Le Chevalier d'Oliveyra brulé en Effigie comme Heretique, comment et pourquoi,' Lond. 1762, besides numerous MSS.

OLIVIER, Claude Matthew (Biog.) a French writer and antiquary, of Marseilles, was born in 1701, and died in 1736, leaving a number of Dissertations on the History and Antiquities of Marseilles, which were published in the Memoires of the Academy of Marseilles, and also Histoire de Philippe, Roi de Macedoiné, &c. 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1740.

OLIVIERI, Hannibal (Biog.) an Italian antiquary, was born in 1708 at Ancona, and died in 1789, leaving 'Marmoria Pesauriensia Notis illustrata,' 2 vols. fol. 1729; and other pieces, among which were 'Spiegazione di Alcuni Monumenti degli Antichi Pelasgi,' 4to. Pesaro, 1735; and 'Dissertazione della Fundazione di Pesaro,' 4to. Pesaro. 1757.

OLMUTZ (Geog.) a town of Moravia, in the Austrian States, situated on the river March, by which it is almost surrounded, 130 miles E. by S. Prague, and 100 N. N. E. Vienna. Lon. 17° 9′ E. lat. 49° 33′ N.

History of Olmutz.

This town is generally supposed to be the ancient Eburum, a town of the Quadi. It surrendered to the Swedes in the 16th century, and was so fortified that the Imperialists could not recover it until the peace of Munster. It was besieged by Frederic II in 1758, but the vigorous resistance of the garrison, aided by the manœuvres of an Austrian army, under general Daun, defeated the king's attempts. It was formerly a capital of the province, but it is now only the chief town of a circle. The bishop's residence has been transferred to Brinn.

OLONNOIS, John David (Hist.) a native of Olonne, near Poitou, rendered himself famous in the 17th century by his bold adventures as one of the buccaneers on the coast of St. Domingo, and after spreading devastation and terror among the Spanish settlements, he was at last attacked and killed by the native Indians, who cut his body in pieces and devoured it.

OLYBRIUS, Flavius Anicius (Hist.) a descendant of one of the most illustrious families at Constantinople, was married to Placidia, the daughter of Valentinian III, and succeeded Anthemius in 472, but did not enjoy this dignity more than three months and twelve days.

OLYBRIUS (Numis.) medals are extant of this emperor, bearing the inscriptions, D. N. ANICIUS OLYBRIUS; on the reverse, SALUS MUNDI.

OLYMPIA (Geog.) Ὀλύμπια, a town of Elis, in Peloponnesus, where Jupiter had a temple, with a statue 50 cubits high. The Olympic games were celebrated in the neighbourhood. This town, which is now known by the same name in the Morea, has but few remains left to point out the ancient site near the river. The plain on which the games were celebrated is at present a large and fertile corn-field.

OLYMPIAS (Bibl.) Ὀλυμπίας, or Olympas, a disciple whom St. Paul salutes in his Epistle to the Romans. Rom. xvi. The Greeks honour him Nov. 10, and say he was beheaded at Rome the same day that St. Peter was crucified there.

OLYMPIAS (Hist.) daughter of a king of Epirus, wife of Philip, king of Macedon, and mother of Alexander the Great, was divorced by her husband, but much respected by her son, whom she declared not to be the son of Philip, but of a huge serpent, by whom she supernaturally conceived. At the death of Alexander, she seized the government, and committed many acts of cruelty, but being obliged to surrender to Cassander, she was put to death by a body of soldiers, who were sent for that purpose.

OLYMPIAS (Numis.) the queen above-mentioned is distinguished by her effigy on many medals and gems, &c. particularly as in the annexed figure; where her head is represented, with that of her son Alexander, and a small head of Jupiter Ammon between. Some medals are inscribed, OLYMPIAS REGINA, or in Greek, ΟΛΥΜΠΙΑ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΣΣΑ.

OLYMPIODORUS (Hist.) an Athenian captain, who distinguished himself at the battle of Platæa.

OLYMPIODORUS, an Athenian commander, who defeated the Macedonians under Demetrius, and in two other battles afterwards, on which account his countrymen erected a statue in honour of him.

OLYMPIODORUS (Biog.) a Peripatetic philosopher of Alexandria, in the fifth century, in the reign of Theodosius the Younger, wrote Commentaries on Aristotle, which were published by Aldus, in fol. 1551; and a Life of Plato, if it were not written by another person of the same name. Suidas.

OLYMPIODORUS, an historian, originally of Thebes, in Egypt, in the fifth century, wrote a history which commenced in the seventh consulship of Honorius and Theodosius the Younger, and extended to the first year of the reign of Valentinian III. Phot. Cod. 80.

OLYMPIODORUS, a Greek monk, and a Commentator on Job.

OLYMPIUS (Myth.) a surname of Jupiter, so called from his temple and statue at Olympia.

OLYMPUS, St. (Ecc.) a bishop of Oena, in Thrace, in the fourth century, was one of the great adversaries of the Arians. He assisted at the council of Sardica in 347, but was afterwards condemned to death by the emperor Constantius, at the instigation of his heretical enemies.

OLYMPUS, an Arian bishop, who, while blaspheming against the Holy Trinity, was struck dead with lightning as is said. Sabellic. l. 2; Enead. 8.

OLYMPUS (Biog.) a poet and musician of Mysia, son of Mæon, and disciple to Marsyas, who lived before the Trojan war. Plut. de Leg. l. 3; Aristoph. in Equit.; Aristot. Pol. l. 8; Hygin. Fab.

OLYMPUS, a physician to Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, who wrote some historical treatises.

OLYMPUS (Geog.) Ὄλυμπος, now called Lacha by the Turks, a mountain of Macedonia and Thessaly, the top of which was supposed to reach the heavens, and was therefore fabled to be the residence of Jupiter.

Tibull. l. 4, el. 1, v. 30.

Jupiter ipse levi vectus per inania curru
Adfuit, et cælo vicinum liquit Olympum.

It is taken by Virgil for Jupiter himself.

Virg. Æn. l. 10, v. 1.

Panditur interea domus omnipotentis Olympi.

On the top of the mountain there was supposed to be neither wind, nor rain, nor clouds.

Hom. Odyss. l. 6, v. 42.

Οὐλυμπόνδ' ὅθι φασὶ θεῶν ἕδος ἀσφαλὲς αἰεὶ
Ἔμμεναι, οὔτ' ἀνέμοισι τινάσσεται οὔτε ποτ' ὄμβρῳ
Δεύεται, οὔτε χιὼν ἐπιπίλναται, ἀλλὰ μάλ' αἴθρη
Πέπταται ἀννέφελος, λευκὴ δ' ἐπιδέδρομεν αἴγλη.

Lucan. l. 2, v. 266.

Melius tranquilla sine armis
Otia solus ages, sicut cœlestia semper
Inconcussa suo volvuntur sidera lapsu.
Fulminibus propior terræ succenditur aër,
Imaque telluris ventos, tractusque coruscos
Flammarum accipiunt: nubes excedit Olympus
Lege Deûm, minimas rerum discordia turbat:
Pacem summa tenent.

Claudian. de Mall. Theodos. Cons. v. 206.

—— Nec te tot limina rerum
Aut tantum turbavit onus. Sed ut altus Olympi
Vertex, qui spatio ventos, hyemesque relinquit,
Perpetuum nulla temeratus nube serenum,
Celsior exsurgit pluviis, auditque ruentes
Sub pedibus nimbos, et rauca tonitrua calcat.

Strab. l. 8; Mel. l. 2.

OLYMPUS, the name of other mountains, particularly of one in the island of Cyprus.

OLYMPUS (Geog.) a mountain of Natolia, in Asiatic Turkey, 10 miles to the S. E. Burza, 20 N. Larissa; which, from its celebrity in antiquity, is now better known by its ancient name. Though accounted formerly the highest mountain in the world, yet its actual elevation is found not to exceed 6000 feet.

OLZOFFSKI, Andrew (Hist.) a Polish prelate and statesman, descended from an ancient family in Prussia, was born about 1618, and being made Latin secretary to Ladislaus IV, king of Poland, he was sent by him as ambassador to the court of Vienna, at the election of Leopold to the imperial crown of Germany, and again some time after, to solicit the withdrawing of the Imperial troops from the borders of the Polish territory. On his return he was promoted to the archiepiscopal see of Culm, and on the election of John Sobieski to the throne of Poland, to which he had principally contributed, he was made archbishop of Guiesne, and died in 1678, after having refused the dignity of a cardinal. He wrote, 1. 'Vindiciæ Poloniæ.' 2. 'Censura,' &c. written on the occasion of a vacancy in the Polish throne.

O'MALLEY (Her.) the name of a family of considerable antiquity in Ireland, which at present enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1804 on sir Samuel O'Malley. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a boar passant gules, crined or, between three long bows charged with arrows, and bent pointing in centre, one in centre chief, one in dexter base, and one in sinister base points or, in centre base point, a skiff with oars sable.

Crest. A horse in full speed argent.

Motto. "Terrâ marique potens."

OMAR (Hist.) the name of two caliphs of Bagdad.

OMAR I, successor of Abubeker, began to reign in the year of the Hegira 13, A. D. 623, and was stabbed at Jerusalem by Firous, a Persian slave, after a reign of little more than 10 years, in the 63d year of his age. During his reign the Mahometans conquered 36,000 towns or villages, destroyed 4000 Christian temples, and built 1400 mosques. He also laid the foundation of Grand Cairo, but destroyed Alexandria and its celebrated library.

OMAR II, eighth caliph of the race of the Ommiades, succeeded his cousin Soliman Ebn Abdalmalec, in the 99th year of the Hegira, A. D. 709, and was assassinated at Edessa, after a reign of two years and five months, by his own family, who dreaded lest his partiality for the house of Ali should deprive them of the succession.

OMAR, Ebn Phared (Biog.) a celebrated Mahometan poet, who wrote several poems on the love of God, and other subjects. All his poems are in the Library of Leyden, together with the notes of his scholiasts.

OMER, St. (Ecc.) in Latin Audomarus, bishop of Terouenne, in the seventh century, descended from a noble and rich family, was born at Goldenthur, near Constance, on the Rhine, nominated by king Dagobert in 636, to the bishopric of Terouenne, and died in 668, after having laboured strenuously for the re-establishment of discipline in his diocese, which had been for some time abandoned.

OMER, St. (Geog.) in the Latin Audomaropolis, or S. Audomari Fanum; a town in the N. E. of France, in the modern department of Pas de Calais, seated on the Aa, on the side of a hill, 8 miles N. W. Aire, and 135 N. Paris. Lon. 2° 15′ E. lat. 50° 44′ N. This town owes its name to the St. Omer above-mentioned, who built a monastery here, of which Mommolin was the first abbot, afterwards S. Bertin, who called the monastery after the name of the founder. The church dedicated to this S. Bertin is a magnificent Gothic structure.

OMPHALE (Myth.) Ὀμφάλη, a queen of Lydia, and favourite mistress of Hercules, who exercised such a dominion over him that she compelled him to put on the female habit, and work at the distaff among her women, whilst she put on the lion's skin, and armed herself with his club.

Terent. in Eunuch.

Qui minus quàm Hercules servivit Omphalæ.

Propert. l. 3, el. 9.

Omphale in tantum formæ processit honorem,
Lydia Gygæo tincta puella lacu,
Ut qui pacato statuisset in orbe columnas,
Tam durâ traheret mollia pensa manu.

Apollod. l. 1; Diodor. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 3; Lucian. de Mod. Scrib. Hist. &c.

OMRI (Bibl.) עמרי, a general of the army of Elah, king of Israel, who, on the assassination of his master by Zimri, marched against him, attacked him at Tirzah, and compelled him to burn himself and his whole family. He was afterwards chosen king, and died at Samaria, after a reign of 12 years, A. M. 3075, A. C. 929. 1 Kings xvi. 9; Usser. Annal.

OMRI, a son of Becher, of the tribe of Issachar, 1 Chron. vii. 8; also son of Michael. 1 Chron. xxvii. 18.

ON (Bibl.) און, a city of Egypt, Numb. xvi.; also a valley of Damascus. Amos i. 5.

ONAN (Bibl.) אונן, son of Judah, and grandson of the patriarch Jacob. Gen. xxxviii.

ONASIMUS (Biog.) or Onesimus, an historian, who wrote the life of the emperor Probus and others. Vopisc. in Car.

ONASIMUS, a sophist of Cyprus, or, according to others, of Sparta, in the reign of Constantine the Great, wrote several works, which are all lost. Suidas.

ONATAS (Biog.) a famous statuary of Ægina, son of Micon, of whom Pliny makes mention. Plin. l. 34; Paus. l. 8.

O'NEALE, Hugh (Hist.) vide Tyrone.

O'NEALE, Shan, or the Great O'Neale, as the Irish call him, because he was the head of that potent clan which raised a rebellion in Ulster; was, after some skirmishes, received into favour upon his submission and promise of a more dutiful behaviour for the future; notwithstanding which he undertook a new insurrection in 1567, but being driven into a strait by sir Henry Sidney, Lord Deputy, he put himself into the hands of some Scottish Highlanders, rather than submit to the English, and was put to death by them.

O'NEALE, Sir Phelim, engaged in Roger More's conspiracy in 1641 to expel the English from Ireland; and, after committing many enormities against the defenceless enemy, he was taken and put to death by Ireton in 1651.

O'NEIL, Sir Bryan (Hist.) of the same family as the preceding, distinguished himself by his valour and loyalty at the battle of Edgehill.

O'NEIL (Her.) or, as it was formerly written O'Neale, an Irish family of princes, whose representative was created earl of Tyrone in 1542 by Henry VIII on his disclaiming the title of prince, and submitting to the English crown. His descendant, John O'Neil, was advanced to the dignity of baron O'Neil, of Shanes Castle; and in 1795 viscount O'Neil. Charles Henry St. O'Neil, the second viscount, was further advanced in 1800 to the dignities of earl of O'Neil and viscount Raymond. Another branch of this family also enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1643 on the loyal sir Bryan O'Neil above-mentioned.

ONESECRITUS (Biog.) a Cynic philosopher, who went with Alexander into Asia, and wrote a history of that king's life. Plut. in Alex.; Q. Curt. l. 9.

ONESIMUS (Bibl.) Ὀνήσιμος, a Phrygian by nation, and slave to Philemon, who, having run away from his master, and robbed him, was afterwards brought to a sense of his crime, and sent back to Philemon, with a letter inserted among St. Paul's Epistles. Phil. v. 18. The Apostolical Constitutions report that St. Paul made him bishop of Beræa, in Macedonia; the martyrologies say that he ended his life by martyrdom. Constit. Apostol. l. 7, c. 46; Chrysost. Prolog.; Tillemont. Mem.

ONESIMUS (Hist.) vide Onasimus.

ONESIMUS, a Macedonian nobleman, who was disgraced by king Perseus for dissuading him from going to war with the Romans, to whom he fled, and was by them honourably received. Liv. l. 44.

ONESIPHORUS (Bibl.) Ὀνησίφορος, a disciple of whom St. Paul makes honourable mention. 2 Tim. i. The Greeks observe his festival on April 29 and December 8; the Roman Martyrology on December 16; according to the latter he suffered martyrdom on the Hellespont.

ONIAS (Hist.) Ὀνίας, high-priest of the Jews, son and successor of Jeddoa, or Jaddas, was raised to the priesthood, A. M. 3682, A. C. 320, and governed for 20 years. Joseph. Antiq. l. 11.

ONIAS, son of Simon the Just, succeeded his father in the priesthood, A. M. 3711, A. C. 293, and died after governing 30 years. Joseph.

ONIAS, nephew of the preceding, succeeded Manasseh as high-priest, A. M. 3771, and died in 3785.

ONIAS, son of Simon II, was established in the priesthood, A. M. 3805, A. C. 199, and was put to death A. M. 3834, A. C. 170. 1 Macc. xii. 1.

ONIAS, son of the preceding, being deprived of the high-priesthood by his uncles, and afterwards by Antiochus Eupator, who chose a successor of another family, took refuge in Egypt, where he obtained permission of Ptolemy Philometor to build a temple to the true God in the prefecture of Heliopolis. 2 Macc. xiii.; Joseph. Antiq. l. 12, c. 15.

ONIAS IV, otherwise called Menelaus, uncle to the preceding, was created high-priest, A. M. 3832, and put to death, A. M. 3842, A. C. 162, by being thrown down from a tower into a heap of ashes.

ONION (Hist.) the name of the temple built by Onias above-mentioned, A. M. 3854, A. C. 150, which was demolished by order of Vespasian, A. D. 73.

ONKELOS (Biog.) surnamed the Proselyte, a famous Rabbi of the first century, and author of the Chaldee Targum on the Pentateuch, flourished in the time of Jesus Christ, according to the Jewish writers, who all agree that he was at least, in some part of his life, cotemporary with Jonathan Ben Uzziel, author of the second Targum upon the prophets. The first Latin version of the Targum of Onkelos was made by Zamora, and published in the Complutensian Polygot, whence it was copied into others, and is in Walton's Bible.

ONOMACRITUS (Biog.) Ὀνομάκριτος, a soothsayer of Athens, who is generally supposed to have written the poem on the Argonautic expedition, which bears the name of Orpheus. The poems of Musæus are also ascribed to him. He flourished about 516 years before the Christian æra, and was driven from Athens by Hipparchus, one of the sons of Pisistratus. Herodot. l. 7.

ONOMARCHUS (Hist.) Ὀνόμαρχος, a Phocian, son of Euthicrates, succeeded his brother Philomelus as general in the sacred war; and, after performing exploits of valour, he was defeated and slain in Thessaly by Philip of Macedon, who ordered his body to be hung up for the sacrilege which he had committed in the temple of Delphi, A. C. 353. Arist. Pol. 5, c. 4; Diod. l. 16.

ONOMASTORIDES (Hist.) a Lacedæmonian ambassador sent to Darius, &c. Q. Curt. l. 3.

ONOPHAS (Hist.) one of the seven Persian noblemen, according to Ctesias, who conspired against Smerdis.

ONOSANDER (Biog.) a Platonic philosopher, who lived under the Roman emperors, and, as is conjectured, in the time of Claudius and Nero. His book, entitled 'Strategicus, seu de Imperatoris Institutione,' was first published in the Greek, with a Latin translation by Nicolaus Rigault, 4to. Paris. 1599; but the reprint by Æmilius Portus in 1600 is preferred. An edition by Schwebelius, fol. Norimb. 1762, is also esteemed. This work has been translated into Italian, French, and Spanish.

ONGLEY (Her.) the name of a family of Ireland which enjoys the peerage, conferred in 1776 on Robert Henley Ongley, who was created a baron by the title of lord baron Ongley, of Oldwarden, in Ireland. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, a fess gules; second and third argent, three piles gules, in base a mount vert, on a canton azure, a sun in his glory or.

Supporters. Two griffins rampant azure, collared gules, chained proper.

Motto. "Mihi cura futura."

ONSLOW, Richard (Hist.) a lawyer, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was appointed autumn reader in the Inner Temple in 1562, and, after passing through different offices under queen Elizabeth, was chosen speaker of the House of Commons, and died in 1571.

ONSLOW, Sir Richard, sided for some time with the faction that overturned the state and murdered the king, and, although he did not join in all the violent measures of the rebels, yet he sat in the parliament which was summoned during the usurpation, and afterwards in the convention which voted the return of king Charles II, and died in 1664. His son, sir Arthur, also pursued the same course as himself.

ONSLOW, Richard, first Lord, son of sir Arthur Onslow, and grandson of the preceding, was one of the Lords of the Admiralty in the reign of king William; unanimously chosen Speaker of the House of Commons in 1708; and sworn of the Privy Council to Queen Anne, which last office he held with [illegible] under George I until his death in 1717.

ONSLOW, Arthur, son of Foot Onslow, and nephew to the preceding, was elected Speaker of the House of Commons five several times, and died in 1768, in the 77th year of his age.

ONSLOW (Her.) the name of a family anciently seated in Shropshire, where they had large possessions, and so called from their lordship of Ondeslow, styled Andeslow in Doomsday Book, which was afterwards contracted into Onslow. The first of this family that was ennobled was sir Richard Onslow, bart. who was created in 1717 a peer of Great Britain, by the style and title of lord Onslow, baron of Onslow, co. Salop. George, the fourth lord Onslow, who was the son of speaker Onslow above-mentioned, and cousin of the third lord Onslow, was created in 1776 baron Cranley, of Imber Court, co. Surrey, succeeded to the title of baron Onslow the same year, and was advanced to the dignities of viscount Cranley and earl of Onslow in 1801. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Onslow, earl of Onslow, viscount Cranley, lord Onslow, baron of Onslow and Clandon; also baron Cranley, of Imber Court, and baronet. The title borne by the eldest son is viscount Cranley.

Arms. Argent, a fess gules, between six Cornish choughs proper.

Crest. On a wreath a falcon proper, legged and belled or, feeding on a partridge proper.

Supporters. Two falcons with wings disclosed proper, legged and belled or.

Motto "Semper fidelis."

ONSLOW, another branch of the same family, enjoys likewise the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1797, for his distinguished naval services, on admiral sir Richard Onslow, nephew of the speaker Onslow above-mentioned. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth for Onslow; second and third argent, on a bend azure, three martlets or, with a double crescent for difference.

Crest. The same as for Onslow.

Motto. "Festina lente."

OPITS, Martin (Biog.) in Latin Opitius, who was reckoned the father of German poetry, was born in 1597 at Bunzlau, in Silesia, and died in 1639, leaving among his works 'Vesuvius, Poema Germanicum;' a translation of Barclay's 'Argenis' into German verse; 'De Veritate,' &c.; besides 'Opera Poetica;' also a German translation of Grotius's 'Prosodia Germanica;' the Psalms of David, translated into German verse, &c.

OPORINUS, John (Biog.) a German printer and scholar, was born at Basle in 1507, and died in 1568, leaving among his works as an author, 'Notæ in Plutarchum;' 'Polyhistoris Scholia in priora aliqua Capita Solini;' 'Darii Tiberti Epitome Vitarum Plutarchi ab innumeris Mendis repurgata;' 'Scholia in Ciceronis Tusculanas Quæstiones;' 'Annotationes ex diversis Doctorum Lucubrationibus collectæ in Demosthenis Orationes;' 'Propriorum Nominum Onomasticum;' besides notes or tables of contents to Plato, Aristotle, Pliny, &c.

OPORTO (Geog.) a large city in the north of Portugal, situated on the north bank of the great river Douro, about two miles from its mouth, 172 m. N. by E. Lisbon, and 49 N. Coimbra. Lon. 8° 39′ W. lat. 41° N. This town, which in the Latin of the middle ages was called Portus Calæ, or Portus Calensis, is said to have been destroyed by the Saracens in the tenth century, after which the present town was built, and took from its commodious situation the title of O Porto; i. e. The Port. Though so much inferior in size to Lisbon, the capital, it is the central point for the exchange of British and Portuguese merchandize. It was in the occupation of the French during part of 1808, and the spring of 1809, when lord Wellington dislodged them from their position.

OPPIANUS (Biog.) a Greek poet and grammarian, who flourished in the reign of Caracalla, and died of the plague at the age of 30, was the author of a book on fishing, entitled 'Halieutica,' and other pieces, which are lost. The best editions of Oppian are, that of Rittershusius, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1597, and that of Schneider, 8vo. Argentorat. 1776. An English translation into heroic verse, by Jones and others, of St. John's College, Oxford, was printed there in 8vo. 1722.

OPPIUS, Marcus (Hist.) one of the leaders of the Roman populace when they retired to Mount Aventine. Liv. l. 3.

OPPIUS, Cornicen, one of the decemvirs and colleagues of Appius Claudius, who, being sent to prison, destroyed himself. Liv. l. 3.

OPPIUS, C. (Biog.) a friend of Julius Cæsar, who wrote the life of Scipio Africanus, and of Pompey. To him was ascribed the history of the Alexandrian, African, and Spanish wars, which is now more commonly ascribed to Julius Cæsar, or Hirtius. Cic. ad Attic. l. 5, ep. 1; Tacit. Annal. l. 12.

OPS (Myth.) or Opis, Ὦπις, a daughter of Cœlus and Terra, the same as the Rhea of the Greeks, who married Saturn, and became mother of Jupiter. She was known among the ancients by the names of Cybele, Bona Dea, Magna Mater, Thya, Tellus, &c. Her festivals were called Opalia. Varr. de Ling. Lat. l. 4; Dionys. Hal. l. 2, &c.; Plin. l. 19; Lactant. de Fal. Rel. l. 1, &c.

OPSOPÆUS, John (Biog.) a German critic and physician, who died in 1596, at the age of 40, edited some of the works of Hippocrates, but is best known by his edition of the Sibylline Oracles, published at Paris in 1607.

OPSTRAET, John (Biog.) a divine, and native of Beringhen, in the county of Liege, was born in 1651, and died in 1720, leaving numerous works in favour of Jansenism.

OPTATUS (Ecc.) bishop of Milesia, a town of Numidia, in Africa, in the reign of Valentinian and Valens, who died in 380, was the author of a work against the Donatists; besides several others, which have been all published at different times. The edition of Du Pin, fol. Par. 1679, 1700, and Antv. 1702, is reckoned the best.

ORANGE, William, Prince of (Hist.) of the house of Nassau, was born in 1533, and, being elected governor of the United Provinces, was one of the principal leaders of the party that revolted against the power of Spain, and, after having rendered himself formidable by his military prowess and valour, he was cut off by the hand of an assassin named Balthazar Gerard, who shot him in his own house in 1584.

ORANGE, Maurice, Prince of, younger son of the preceding, was elected stadtholder, and captain-general by sea and land, at the death of his father, and died in 1625, after having been at the head of the Dutch for the space of forty years. He mingled in the party broils of the Protestants, whose cause he had espoused against the Roman Catholics.

ORANGE, Frederick, Prince of, son of the preceding, succeeded his father in the stadtholdership, and also as commander of the army, in which capacity he obtained many victories, and took many places, without much loss of men, whence he acquired the appellation of Father of the Soldiers. He died in 1647, at the age of 63.

ORANGE, William Henry, Prince of, afterwards king of England. [Vide William]

ORANGE (Geog.) a town of Provence, in the S. E. of France, and capital of a principality of the same name, in the modern department of Vaucluse, situated in a fertile plain, at a short distance from the Rhone, 15 m. N. Avignon, 130 S. Lyons. Lon. 4° 48′ E. lat. 44° 8′ N.

History of Orange.

Orange, called by the Latins Arausio Cavarum, or Secundanorum, Arausica Civitas, or Arausionensis Urbs, suffered much from the inroads of the Goths, Saracens, and other barbarians, but was afterwards formed into a principality under the counts of Provence, from whom it passed to the house of Baux, and by marriage into that of Nassau; but, on the failure of the direct line in 1702, by the death of William III of England, several pretenders laid claim to the succession of Orange, of which the principal was the king of Prussia, who, in 1713, ceded his rights to France, when the principality was annexed, first to Dauphiny, afterwards to Burgundy, and now forms part of the department of Vaucluse. The title, however, is still held by the present sovereigns of the Netherlands, the collateral descendants of the house of Nassau. Orange, though now much smaller than formerly, is worth the attention of the traveller from its numerous remains of antiquity, among which the most striking object is a beautiful triumphal arch, situated near the great road, about 200 paces north of the town, which is said to have been raised by Caius Marius and Luctatius Catulus, after the victory which they gained over the Cimbri. Its fortifications, which were repaired by Prince Maurice of Nassau in 1622, so as to make it equal in strength to any fortified place in Europe, were demolished by Louis XIV in 1682. Its university, which was founded in 1365 by Raymond V, is now fallen to decay, but it is still the see of a bishop, suffragan of Arles, and had councils assembled within its walls, namely, in 441, 529, for regulating the discipline of the churches; and in 1228 against the Albigenses. Du Chesne, Hist. des Ant. &c.; *Nostradam. &c. ORDE, Sir John (Hist.) an admiral, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born at Morpeth in 1752, entered the navy in 1766, was made a lieutenant in 1773, and rose to the rank of admiral of the Red just before his death, which happened in 1824. He had served with distinction in America, as also during the late revolutionary war, and had been entrusted with the command of a fleet on more than one occasion.

ORDE (Her.) the name of a family of some antiquity, which has long been possessed of considerable landed estates in the counties of Northumberland and Durham, especially at and in the neighbourhood of Orde, near Berwick-upon-Tweed. Of this family was admiral sir John Orde above-mentioned, who was created a baronet in 1790. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Sable, three salmons hauriant in fesse argent.

Crest. An elk's head or, holding a fleur-de-lis gules.

ORDOGNO (Hist.) the name of several kings of Leo and the Asturias.

ORDOGNO I, succeeded his father, Ramirez I, in 850, and died after a reign of nearly 16 years, in which he was very successful against the Moors. He was succeeded by Alphonso the Great. The effigies of this and the following princes are given in the subjoined cuts.

Ordogno I.

Ordogno II.

Ordogno III.

ORDOGNO II, second son of Alphonso III, succeeded his brother Garcias in 914, and died in 923, when he was succeeded by Alphonso IV.

ORDOGNO III, succeeded his father Ramirez II in 950, and died in 955, when the crown was seized by his brother Froila.

ORDOGNO, surnamed the Bad, son of Alphonso IV, despoiled Sancho the Fat of the throne, but the latter recovering it by the help of the Moors, Ordogno, who was hated for his cruelties, took to flight, and died soon after.

OREADES (Myth.) nymphs who presided over mountains; they were the daughters of Phoroneus and Hecate.

Virg. (speaking of Diana,) Æn. l. 1, v. 500.

—— quam mille secutæ

OREGIUS, Augustine (Ecc.) a cardinal, and a native of Florence, was born in 1577, created cardinal by Urban VIII in 1634, and died in 1635, leaving 'Aristotelis vera de rationalis Animæ Immortalitate Sententia,' 4to. 1631; besides several tracts on theological subjects, which were published in fol. 1637 and 1642.

ORESINE, Nicolas (Ecc.) a doctor of the Sorbonne, and preceptor to Charles V, was made by him bishop of Lisieux in 1377, and died in 1382, leaving, among other things, 'De Communicatione Idiomatum;' 'De Antichristo,' &c.; besides which he translated into French Aristotle's treatises 'De Cœlo,' and 'De Mundo,' &c.; and also Petrarch's 'Dei Rimedi dell' una et l'altera Fortuna.'

ORESTES (Myth.) Ὀρέστης, a son of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, who revenged the death of his father by killing his mother, and her paramour Ægistheus. After which he was tormented by the Furies until he was purified at Delphi or, according to Pausanias, at Troezene, and, as was fabled by Apollo himself. He then retired to the kingdom of Argos, and died in the 90th year of his age, leaving his throne to his son Tisamenes. Hom. Odyss. l. 3; Pind. Pyth. 2; Herodot. l. 1; Euripid. in Orest.; Æschyl. in Eum. Agam. &c.; Sophocl. in Elect.; Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 120; Plin. l. 33; Solin. l. 5; Schol. in Euripid. &c.

ORFORD, Edward, Earl of (Hist.) second son of Edward Russell, fourth earl of Bedford, having been bred to the sea, arrived at the rank of admiral in 1692, when as commander of the fleet he totally defeated the French at La Hogue. In 1697 he was raised to the peerage, which became extinct at his death in 1727. [Vide Plate XV]

ORFORD, Robert, Earl of, the celebrated minister, better known by his family name of Walpole. [Vide Walpole]

ORFORD, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Walpole [vide Walpole]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Walpole, earl of Orford, lord Walpole of Walpole, and lord Walpole of Wolterton. The title borne by the eldest son is lord Walpole.

Arms. Or, on a fess between two chevrons sable, three cross crosslets of the first.

Crest. On a wreath, the bust of a man side-faced, couped proper, ducally crowned or, with a long cap turning forwards gules, and thereon a Catharine wheel or.

Supporters. On the dexter side an antelope argent, attired proper, unguled or, and gorged with a collar, checky or and azure, with a golden chain affixed thereto, passing through his fore-legs, and reflexed over his back; on the sinister, an hart argent, attired proper, unguled and collared with the like collar and chain.

Motto. "Fari quæ sentiat."

ORFORD, Horatio, Earl of (Biog.) an author, better known by his family name of Walpole. [Vide Walpole]

ORGANA, Andrew (Biog.) an Italian painter and sculptor, architect and poet, of Florence, died in 1389 aged 60, leaving several works, which are preserved at Pisa.

ORGETORIX (Hist.) one of the chief men of the Helvetii while Cæsar was in Gaul. He formed a conspiracy against the Romans, and when accused destroyed himself. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 1.

ORIBASIUS (Biog.) physician to the apostate Julian, and native of Pergamus, or Sardes, wrote 70 books of Collections, chiefly compiled from the works of Galen, of which only 15 are now remaining. His 'Collectanea Medicinalia,' were published in Greek, 8vo. Par. 1556; also in the 'Medici Scriptores Antiqui,' fol. Bas. 1528. A good edition of his 'Anatomica' was published by Dundas, 4to. Gr. and Lat. Lugd. Bat. 1745.

ORIEL, Lord (Her.) the title conferred in 1821 on the right hon. John Foster of Ferrard, whose lady, Margaret Amelia Burgh, was created in 1790 baroness Oriel, and in 1797 viscountess Ferrard of Oriel in her own right, remainder to the male issue of her husband.

ORIGEN, (Ecc.) an illustrious father of the church, was born at Alexandria, in Egypt, about the year 185, and died at the age of 69, after having laboured and suffered in the cause of Christianity. Although the works of Origen, which are still extant, amount to several volumes, yet they are said to have formed a small part of what he wrote. They were collected in the Latin by Merlinus, and afterwards by Erasmus, and printed at Paris in 2 vols. fol. 1574, 1604, and 1619. All the Greek fragments of Origen upon the Scriptures were published with a Latin translation by Huetius, and printed in 2 vols. fol. 1668, 1679, and 1685. The eight books 'Contra Celsum' were published in the Greek, with the version of Gelenius, and the notes of Hoeschelius, in 4to. 1605, and afterwards at Cambridge in 1658; to this edition are subjoined the 'Philocalia, sive de obscuris Sacræ Scripturæ Locis' of Origen. An edition of all Origen's works was undertaken by Charles Delarue, a Benedictine monk, who began to publish it at Paris in folio, in 1733, of which he completed four volumes, comprising the most valuable of Origen's works; this was reprinted by Oberthur in 15 vols. 8vo. 1780. Montfaucon published some remains and fragments in 2 vols. fol.; and Bahrdt published at Leipzic the 'Hexapla,' in 2 vols. 8vo. 1769. Notwithstanding the acknowledged learning, zeal, and indefatigable industry of this father, he has advanced doctrines which are generally held to be highly exceptionable; but which his admirers have endeavoured to set in a fairer light than they will admit of. [Vide Plate XXI]

ORION (Myth.) a celebrated giant, sprung from the urine of Jupiter, Neptune, and Mercury, who was produced at the request of Hyriæus, a peasant of the country, who had hospitably entertained these three gods as they were travelling over Bœotia. He first called the child Urion, which was changed into that of Orion. He was a celebrated hunter, and after his death was placed among the constellations. Hom. Odyss. l. 5; Apollod. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 1, &c.; Horat. l. 2; Hygin. Fab. 125; Lucan. l. 1; Schol. Eurip. in Hec. &c.

ORKAN (Hist.) son of Othman, made himself emperor of Turkey in 1326, by the destruction of his elder brother, and after extending his dominions by the conquest of Gallipoli, and other provinces, he died in 1360. He married the daughter of the emperor Cantacuzenus.

ORKNEY, Duke of (Her.) a title which was conferred on Hepburn, earl of Bothwell, three days before his marriage with queen Mary, which was forfeited in 1567.

ORKNEY, Earl of, a title conferred in 1584 on Robert Stewart, natural son of king James V, which was forfeited by his son Patrick, the second earl, who was beheaded for high treason in 1614. This title was revived in the person of lord George Hamilton, fifth son of the duke of Hamilton, who was created in 1696, and by marriage it passed into the family of O'Brien. The arms, &c. of this last family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first azure, a ship at anchor within a double tressure, charged with fleurs-de-lis or, for Orkney; second and third quarterly; first and fourth three cinquefoils pierced ermine for Hamilton; second and third argent, a ship with its sails furled up sable for Arran; fourth argent, a man's heart gules, ensigned with an imperial crown or, on a chief azure, three stars of the first for Douglas.

Crest. In a ducal coronet or, an oak fructed and penetrated transversely in the main stem by a frame saw proper, the frame or.

Supporters. Dexter, an antelope argent, his horns, ducal collar, chains, and hoofs or; sinister, a stag proper, attired, collared, chained, and hoofed, as the dexter.

Motto. "Through."

ORLANDINI, Nicholas (Biog.) an Italian Jesuit, was born at Florence in 1554, and died in 1606, leaving 'Historiæ Societatis Jesu: Pars prima, sive Ignatius,' &c. which has been continued by Fathers Francis Sacchini, Everard, Jouvency, and Cordara, making in all 7 vols. usually bound in six. He also wrote 'Annuæ Litteræ Societatis Jesu,' for the years 1583, 1584, and 1586; and also of 'Vita Petri Fabri Soc. Jes.' &c.

ORLEANS, Duke of (Hist.) a royal title of France, deduced from the kingdom of Orleans, which was held by Clodomir, son of Clovis, who was killed at the battle of Voiron in 524. Sometime after, under the third race of the French kings, Philip of France, fifth son of Philip of Valois, was duke of Orleans, and died in 1375; since which period the dukes of Orleans have formed a distinct branch of the royal family of France.

ORLEANS, Louis, Duke of, second son of Charles V, was born in 1371, and was murdered by his uncle, John, duke of Burgundy, in 1407; which murder gave rise to a long and fatal quarrel between the houses of Orleans and Burgundy.

ORLEANS, Charles, Duke of, son of Louis of France, was taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, and after a captivity of 25 years returned to France, and undertook the conquest of Milan, which he claimed in right of his mother; but he succeeded only in conquering the county of Ast, and died in 1465.

ORLEANS, Louis, Duke of, afterwards king of France. [Vide Louis XII.]

ORLEANS, Philip, Duke of, was born in 1674, made regent of the kingdom during the minority of Louis XIII, and afterwards acted in the capacity of prime minister to the king until his death in 1723, in the 50th year of his age.

ORLEANS, Philip Louis, Duke of, son of the preceding, after having filled the offices of governor and lieutenant-general of the province of Dauphiny, abandoned the world, and retired to the abbey of St. Genevieve, where he died in 1752, at the age of 49, leaving many works, principally translations and commentaries, in MS.

ORLEANS, Philip Louis Joseph, Duke of, grandson of the preceding, who is too well known in the revolutionary annals by the name of Egalité, was born in 1747, and after having joined heartily in the public commotions, which ended in the overthrow of the French monarchy, and given his vote for the death of the royal victim Louis XVI, he paid the penalty of his crimes by being dragged to the same scaffold in 1793.

ORLEANS, Peter Joseph d' (Biog.) a Jesuit, and historian, was born at Bourges in 1644, and died in 1698, leaving, 1. 'Histoire des deux Conquerans Tartares, Chimchi et Camhi,' &c. 8vo. Paris, 1688. 2. 'L'Histoire de M. Constance, Premier Ministre du Roi de Siam, et de la dernière Revolution de cet Etat,' 12mo. Paris, 1692. 3. 'Histoire des Revolutions d'Angleterre depuis le Commencement de la Monarchie,' 3 vols. 4to. Paris, 1692, &c. Francis Turpin published a Continuation in 2 vols. 8vo. 1786. 4. 'Histoire des Revolutions d'Espagne,' 3 vols. 4to. 1734; besides lives published separately of P. Cotton, of Ricci, of Mary of Savoy, &c.

ORLEANS (Geog.) a town of France, capital of a small country of the same name, and also of the modern department of the Loiret, situated at the foot of a declivity, on the right bank of the Loire, 70 m. N. W. Tours, and 80 S. by W. Paris. Lon. 1° 54′ E. lat. 47° 50′ N.

History of Orleans.

Orleans, called by the Latins Aureliana Civitas, Aurelianum, or Genabum [vide Aureliana], is one of the most ancient places in France, the origin of which is unknown. It is supposed to have received the name of Aureliana from the emperor Aurelian, by whom it was possibly enlarged. Attila, king of the Huns, besieged it in 451, and the English also in 1428, when it was delivered by the celebrated Joan of Arc, so well known by the name of the Maid of Orleans, whose statue is to be seen on the bridge. It suffered much in the 16th century, during the religious wars, when it was taken by the Protestants, who pillaged the churches. Francis of Lorraine, duke of Guise, besieged it the year following, and was assassinated there; after which it submitted to the king. The University of Orleans was founded by Philip the Fair. This city was the see of a bishop, and is also celebrated for several councils assembled within its walls. The first, under the auspices of Clovis, was attended by thirty-two prelates, having Cyprian, bishop of Bourdeaux, at their head. This was followed by other councils in 533, 538, 541, 549, 766, 1017, 1411, &c.

ORME, Robert (Biog.) an historian, and son of Dr. Alexander Orme, a physician and surgeon in the service of the East India Company, was born at Anjego, in the Travencore country in 1728, and died in 1801, leaving 'The History of the Military Transactions of the British Nation in Indostan,' &c. in two volumes, the first published in 1763, and the second in 1778; also 'Historical Fragments of the Mogul Empire of the Marattoes,' &c. 1782; and reprinted after his death, with an account of his life and writings.

ORMEROD, Oliver (Biog.) an English divine, of a good family, who was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1626, published 'The Picture of a Puritan,' &c. printed in 1605; and another part the next year, in which he disavows his being the author of 'The Double P. P.; or, the Picture of a traiterous Jesuit;' and some other things fathered upon him by the Roman Catholics. His two works were reprinted together some time after.

ORMOND, James, second Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, is usually called the Noble Earl, on account of his descent from the royal family, and by the Irish James the Chaste. He was early engaged in the service of Edward III, by whom he was appointed Lord Justice of the Kingdom, and in that character he employed his utmost endeavours to keep the rebellious Irish in check, and continued to serve Richard II in the same capacity, and with the same fidelity, until his death in 1383.

Ormond, James, third Earl of, commonly called the Earl of Gowran, from his usual residence at his castle of Gowran, which he built, was, on account of his being a mighty warrior, styled in some annals 'the head of the chivalry of Ireland,' which he governed to the content of the king and his good subjects until his death in 1405.

Ormond, James, the fourth Earl of, was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in 1419, soon after he came of age, when he was in great favour with Henry V, whom he served with distinguished zeal and success against the rebels, and continued in the same favour with his successor Henry VI until his death in 1452.

Ormond, fifth Earl of, was born in 1420, knighted when very young by Henry VI, with whom he was in great esteem, and in consequence of his adherence to the Lancastrian interest, was appointed in 1465 Lord High Treasurer of England, and attended the king at the battle of St. Alban's, from which he made his escape, and afterwards commanded one wing of the army at Wakefield, which enclosed and slew the duke of York, father of king Edward IV; but being taken prisoner at the bloody battle of Towton Field in 1461, he was beheaded and attainted in the Parliament.

Ormond, John, sixth Earl of, who was restored in blood by Edward IV, was so perfect a master of languages that there was scarcely a court in Europe to which that prince did not send him as ambassador. He afterwards, in a fit of devotion, made a journey to Jerusalem, and died in the Holy Land in 1478.

Ormond, Thomas, seventh Earl of, and brother of the preceding, was restored in blood in 1485 by Henry VII's first Parliament; sworn of his Privy Council soon after; accompanied the king in 1491 in aid of Maximilian, the emperor, against the French; was sent in 1492 on an embassy to Charles VIII of France to make a treaty between the two crowns; and, after serving the king in Ireland against the rebels, he died in 1515.

Ormond, Pierce, eighth Earl of, acted in the capacity of Lord Deputy with great vigour and success against the rebel chiefs in Ireland, and governed the kingdom with great wisdom until his death in 1539.

Ormond, James, ninth Earl of, a most honourable and worthy nobleman, who was in great esteem with Henry VIII, was in 1532 made Lord High Treasurer of Ireland for life; in 1535 Admiral of the kingdom, with the custody of all the ports thereof; and bore himself with extraordinary fidelity towards his sovereign until his death in 1546, which happened by poison.

Ormond, Thomas, tenth Earl of, the favourite and early companion of Edward VI, with whom he was brought up, began early to distinguish himself in arms as a volunteer under the duke of Somerset in his Scotch expedition, and in 1554 gave extraordinary proofs of his fidelity and courage, as lieutenant of the horsemen, in suppressing Wyatt's rebellion, after which he entered on the theatre of glory for his ancestors in Ireland, where he trod in their steps, and earned for himself fresh laurels in the wars that raged at that time until his death in 1614.

Ormond, James, twelfth Earl of, first Marquis of, and Duke of, was born in 1607, appointed in 1638 Commander-in-Chief of all the forces in Ireland in the absence of the Lord Lieutenant Strafford, constituted by the king in 1643 Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and continued, with unremitting zeal and unswerving fidelity to the crown, to oppose the torrent of rebellion which was breaking in on every side; and, when his endeavours ceased to be of avail, he withdrew to his sovereign Charles II, whom he served as his Privy Counsellor until the Restoration, when he was advanced in honour and in office, and died in 1688 universally beloved and esteemed. He had lived to see four kings, three of whom he had served with an unshaken zeal and untainted loyalty as all his ancestors had done before him. During his administration of affairs in Ireland, he procured many favours from the crown for the public benefit of that kingdom. In 1660 he prevailed with the king to fill the four archiepiscopal and twelve episcopal sees with the most eminent men to be found among the Irish clergy, whom he protected in a period when they were threatened with the most violent opposition. He had a body of statutes drawn up for the government of the University of Dublin, to whom he was an eminent benefactor in other respects, and also procured the king's letter for incorporating a college of physicians in Dublin, &c. This great nobleman escaped two desperate attempts which were made on his life by the ruffian Blood. [Vide Plate IX]

Ormond, James, second Duke of, entered early into the service of king James, and assisted in the defeat of the unfortunate duke of Monmouth, but he afterwards joined in the revolution of 1688; was constituted High Constable of England in 1689; Commander-in-Chief of the land forces sent against France and Spain in 1702, when he destroyed the French fleet, sunk the Spanish galleons in the harbour of Vigo, and took the fort of Redondella. In 1711 he was made Commander-in-Chief of the land forces in Great Britain, but falling afterwards under the suspicion of favouring the claims of prince Charles, he was impeached for high treason by a vote of the House of Commons; and, with drawing from the kingdom in 1715, he was attainted, his estate forfeited, and his honours extinguished. He died at Avignon in 1745, and his body being brought to England, was interred in the family vault in king Henry VII's chapel, Westminster Abbey.

Ormond, Marquis of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Butler. [Vide Butler]

ORMSBY (Her.) the name of a family of Dublin which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1812 on sir Charles Montague Ormsby; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a bend between six cross crosslets or.

Crest. An armed arm, the hand grasping a leg in armour couped above the knee all proper.

Motto. "Fortis qui prudens."

OROBIO, Balthazar (Biog.) a Spanish Jew, who died in 1687, was the author of 'Tractatus Theologico-Politicus,' against Spinosa and other atheistical writers; and of 'Amica Collatio cum Judæo,' a tract against Christianity.

ORODES (Hist.) a prince of Parthia, who ascended the throne after the murder of his brother Mithridates, and was strangled by his own son Phraates, about 37 years A. C. He followed the interests of Brutus and Cassius at the battle of Philippi. Cic. ad Fam. l. 15, ep. 1; Paterc. l. 2; Liv. in Epit. 106; Dio. l. 40; Flor. l. 3; Serv. in Æn. l. 2.

Orpheus was one of the Argonauts, of which celebrated expedition he is said to have written a poetical account. But it was doubted by Aristotle and others, whether there ever existed an Orpheus, and the poems which go under his name are ascribed to Onomacritus, a poet who lived in the age of Pisistratus, tyrant of Athens. The best edition of Orpheus is that of Gesner, 8vo. Lips. 1764. Pind. Pyth. 4; Aristoph. in Ran.; Euripid. in Alc.; Plat. Polit. l. 10; *Aristot. apud. Cic. de Nat. OSSAT, Arnaud d' (Ecc.) a cardinal, was born at a small village in the county of Armagnac, of indigent parents, in 1626, created cardinal at the recommendation of king Henry IV, and died in 1604, after having distinguished himself as an able negociator. His 'Lettres' have been frequently published, of which the edition of Amsterdam in 5 vols. 12mo. 1708, is reckoned the best.

OSSIAN (Biog.) the son of Fingal, a Scotch bard, who flourished about the beginning of the third century. In 1758 some poems appeared as the translation from the original Gaelic of Ossian, by the hand of Mr. Macpherson, but the authenticity of these poems has been, and probably will ever remain, a subject of dispute among the learned.

OSSULSTON, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Tankerville.

OSTADE, Adrian van (Biog.) a Flemish painter, who was born at Lubeck in 1610, and died in 1685, excelled in the representation of low scenes.

OSTADE, Isaac van, younger brother of the preceding, was also a painter, but died young, before his reputation was established.

OSTEND (Geog.) or Ostende, a town of the Netherlands, in West Flanders, 14 miles W. Bruges, 35 W. by N. Ghent, and 66 W. by N. Brussels. Lon. 2° 55′ E. lat. 51° 13′ N. This town is celebrated in history for having sustained one of the longest and most obstinate sieges ever recorded, having been defended for upwards of three years, from 1601 to 1604, against the utmost efforts of the Spaniards, and at last capitulated on honourable terms. In 1798 a detachment of English troops landed here, and destroyed the works of the Bruges canal, but the wind shifting before they could re-embark, their retreat was cut off, and a part of them were obliged to surrender to the French.

OSTERVALD, John Frederic (Biog.) a divine of Switzerland, was born at Neufchatel in 1663, and died in 1747, leaving among other things 'Traité des Sources de la Corruption,' which was translated into English, and inserted among bishop Watson's tracts; 'Traité contre l'Impurité,' which was translated into English under the title of 'A Discourse against Uncleanness,' and went through many editions in English, French, and German.

OSTIA (Geog.) a town built at the mouth of the Tiber, which still bears the same name, and is situated near the influx of the Tiber into the Mediterranean, 14 miles S. W. Rome. It was built by Ancus Martius, and was the first harbour formed by the Romans.

Ennius.

Ostia munita est idem loca navibus pulchris
Munda facit, nautisque mari præsentibus vitam.

Ovid. Fast. l. 4.

Ostia contigerat, quà se Tiberinus in altum
Dividit, et campo liberiore natat.

Ostia was destroyed by the Saracens, and its harbour, called Ostiensis Portus, became at length separated. Cic. ad Attic. l. 12, &c.; Varr. de Re. Rust. l. 3; Dionys. Hal. l. 3; Liv. l. 1; Strab. l. 5; Mela, l. 2; Senec. Quæst. Nat. l. 1; Plin. l. 13; Flor. l. 1, &c.; Tacit. Hist. l. 1; Sueton. in Claud.; Ptol. l. 5.

OTHMAN, Ebn Offan (Hist.) third caliph of the Musselmen, succeeded Omar in the year of the Hegira 23, A. D. 633, and died after a reign of twelve years, during which he added many countries to his dominions, which were conquered by his generals.

OTHMAN, or Ozman, first khan or sultan of the Turks, assumed the government and title in the year of the Hegira 699, A. D. 1309, which is properly the æra of the Ottoman empire, and died at the age of 69, after a reign of 26 years.

OTHMAN II, eldest son of Achmet I, succeeded on the deposition of his uncle Mostafa as sixteenth emperor of the Turks, in the year of the Hegira 1027, A. D. 1637, and was strangled by the partisans of the deposed emperor, after a reign of five years.

OTHNIEL (Bibl.) עתניאל, son of Kenaz, of Judah. Josh. xv. 17.

OTHO (Hist.) the name of four emperors.

OTHO, M. Salvius, a Roman emperor, descended from the ancient kings of Etruria, was one of Nero's favourites, and at his death set himself up against Galba, whom he caused to be assassinated; but, being successfully opposed by his rival Vitellius, he stabbed himself, after a reign of three months, A. D. 69. Tacit. Hist. l. 2; Plut. in Vit.; Suet. in Oth.

OTHO I, surnamed the Great, succeeded his father, Henry I, of the house of Saxony, in 936, and died in the 37th year of his reign, after having been very successful against his enemies, particularly the Saracens. The effigy of this emperor is given as in the annexed figure.

OTHO II, son and successor of the great Otho, was surnamed the Bloody, or the Pale Death of the Saracens, over whom he obtained a signal victory just before his death, which happened in 983, in the eleventh year of his reign, as is said, from the wound of a poisoned arrow.

OTHO III, succeeded his father, Otho II, when only three years of age, and died at the castle of Paterno, in the Campagna, at the age of 22. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

OTHO, surnamed the Proud, son of Henry the Lion, duke of Saxony, was elected emperor in 1197, but, being successfully opposed by his rival Frederick, king of Sicily, he retired to the castle of Hentzburg, where he died in 1218.

OTHO, St. (Ecc.) bishop of Bamberg, in Franconia, styled the Apostle of Pomerania, was born about 1069, promoted to the see of Bamberg in 1100, and died in 1139, after having governed his church with great wisdom and zeal.

OTHO of Frisingen, so called because he was bishop of that city in Germany, died in 1158, leaving a Chronicle in seven books, and a Life of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa, both of which may be found in the collections of Pistorius, Muratori, &c.

OTHO, Venius (Biog.) vide Venius.

OTRANTO (Geog.) the ancient Hydruntum, a town of Naples, in the S. E. extremity of Italy, which gave its name to the province of Otranto. It is situated on the Adriatic, 33 m. E. by N. Gallipoli, 80 E. by S. Taranto. Lon. 18° 20′ E. lat. 40° 30′ N. The promontory called Capo di Otranto, by the ancients Hydrus, is a few miles S. of the town.

OTT, John Henry (Biog.) a Swiss divine, who died in 1682, was the author of 'Franco-Gallia,' &c., and other things.

OTTO (Biog.) vide Guericke.

OTWAY, Thomas (Biog.) an English dramatic writer, was born in 1652 at Trottin, in Sussex, educated at Winchester School and at Oxford, and died in 1685, leaving ten dramatic pieces, among which his tragedies of the Orphan, and Venice Preserved, are the most distinguished. He likewise wrote some miscellaneous poems and translations. His works appeared in 3 vols. 12mo. 1757, and subsequently in 2 vols. 8vo. [Vide Plate XXXI]

OUDENARDE, Robert van (Biog.) a painter of Ghent, who learnt his art under Carlo Maratti, died in 1743, at the age of 80, leaving many pieces which adorn the churches and public edifices of his native place.

OUDIN, Casimir (Biog.) a French monk, originally of a family of Rheims, was born at Mezieres in 1638, and died in 1717, after having left the Romish church to embrace Protestantism. He wrote, 1. The second volume of the History of Sweden is attributed to him. His son John was plenipotentiary at the peace of Munster; Gabriel, another son, was marshal of Sweden; Benedict, a third son, was grand chancellor and prime minister. A descendant of his, who died in 1707 at an advanced age, was a man of letters, and published Thoughts on different Subjects, which were printed in 2 vols. 12mo.

OXFORD, Robert, Earl of (Hist.) a statesman, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1661; took an active part with his father, sir Edward Harley, in the revolution of 1688; was sworn of the Privy Council of queen Anne in 1704; and appointed one of her principal Secretaries of State, being at that time Speaker of the House of Commons. In 1710 an attempt was made upon his life by the marquis of Guiscard, a French papist, who, while under examination of a committee of the Privy Council at Whitehall, stabbed him with a pen-knife. The next year, having been previously ennobled, he was appointed Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain; and in 1715 his lordship was impeached by the House of Commons of high treason, and high crimes and misdemeanours; but acquitted in 1717, and died in 1724. He was a great encourager of learning, and a collector of all curious books in print and manuscript, which were preserved and augmented by his son. The collection of MSS. well known by the name of the Harleian Miscellanies, was purchased by the British Museum. He also wrote 'An Essay upon Public Credit,' 1710, inserted in Somers' Tracts; 'An Essay on Loans,' &c.

To this University belongs the Bodleian Library, so called from its illustrious restorer sir Thomas Bodley, which owes its foundation to Humphry, duke of Gloucester, but was very materially augmented by the exertions and munificence of the former, as also by subsequent benefactions, and is now become one of the most valuable collections in Europe. King John, compelled by his barons, summoned a Parliament to meet here in 1228, the proceedings of which were so disorderly that it was known afterwards by the name of the Mad Parliament. Charles I assembled a Parliament in 1625, in consequence of the plague then raging; and afterwards, when the pestilence of rebellion broke out, he summoned the loyal members of both houses to this city, which remained faithful to him in the last extremity.

OXFORDSHIRE (Geog.) an English county, rendered illustrious by its chief town Oxford.

Boundaries. It is bounded on the E. by Buckinghamshire,

W. by Gloucestershire, S. by Berkshire, and N. by Northamptonshire.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Thames, the Isis, Cherwell, Evenlodes, Glym, Ray, and Windrush.

History. Oxfordshire, called in Latin Oxoniensis Comitatus, was originally inhabited by the Dobuni, and on its occupation by the Romans, it had several military stations, and was intersected by one of the four principal roads. After the Conquest king William ordered a number of castles to be erected, the principal of which were those of Oxford, Banbury, Bampton, Deddington, Ardley, and Middleton, which still retain marks of their former extent and consequence.

PADERBORN (Geog.) in the Latin Paderborna, Paderburna, and Paterborna, a small but ancient town of Westphalia, 37 m. S. by W. Minden, and 58 S. W. Hanover. It is said to have been for some time the residence of Charlemagne, by whom it was erected into a bishopric. It was also a member of the Hanseatic confederacy, but fell by degrees into subjection to the bishop of Paderborn.

PADUA (Geog.) a town of Italy, in the government of Venice, situated near the junction of the Brenta and the Bacchiglione, 18 m. S. E. Vicenza, 20 W. Venice. Lon. 11° 50' E. lat. 45° 20' N.

History of Padua.

Padua, called by the Latins Patavium, was taken from the Romans by Attila, repaired by Narses, and came under the dominion of the Lombards. On the destruction of their kingdom by Charlemagne, Padua became a flourishing city under the king of Italy, and had afterwards princes of its own, of the family of Carrario, until it was conquered by the Venetians, who caused Francis Carrario and his two sons to be strangled in 1406, and incorporated it with the Venetian territory. The emperor Maximilian took Padua, and lost it again a short time after, when he made a fruitless attempt to recover it. The University of this city was established in 1179, and re-established in 1222, after which it was so considerably augmented as to become celebrated throughout Europe. Among the illustrious persons whom it has produced in modern times may be reckoned Galileo, Petrarch, and Columbus, &c. [Vide Patavium]

PADUS (Geog.) a river of Italy, otherwise called Eridanus, and now known by the name of the Po, which is celebrated by the poets.

Ovid calls it Poplifer, Amor. l. 2, el. 17.

PÆSTUM (Geog.) a town of Lucania, otherwise called Posidonia, which stood on the Sinus Pæstinus, now called the Bay of Salerno. It was famed for producing roses, which blowed twice a-year.

Prop. l. 4, el. 5.

Vidi ego odorati victura rosaria Pæsti
Sub matutino cocta jacere Noto.

Ovid. Met. l. 15, v. 708.

Leucosiamque petit, tepidique rosaria Pæsti.

Virg. Georg. l. 4, v. 119.

Forsitan et pingues hortos quæ cura colendi
Ornaret, canerem; biferique rosaria Pæsti.

Mart. l. 12, ep. 31.

Prataque nec bifero cessura rosaria Pæsto.

This town, the ruins of which are still to be seen, was an episcopal city in the early ages of Christianity, but was destroyed by the Saracens in 930. The site is still distinguished by the name of Pæsti among the natives. Strab. l. 5; Mela, l. 2; Plin. l. 3.

PÆSTUM (Numis.) this town is distinguished on medals by the inscriptions—PAE. PAI. PAIS. PAIST. PAISTANO. i. e. Pæstanorum, bearing for their types a trident, or a dolphin, &c.

PÆTUS, Cæcinna (Hist.) the husband of Arria. [Vide Arria]

PAGAN, Blaise Francis, Count de (Biog.) a French mathe-

matician, was born at Arragon in 1604, and died in 1665, leaving 'Traité des Fortifications,' 1645; 'Theoremes Geometriques,' 1651; 'Relation Historique et Géographique de la grand Rivière des Amazones dans l'Amerique,' &c. 1655.

PAGET, William, first Lord (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in London, educated at St. Paul's School, and at Cambridge, sent on different embassies by Henry VIII and Edward VI; but after having enjoyed the favour and confidence of these two princes, he was committed to the Fleet in 1551, through the intrigues of the duke of Northumberland, but on the accession of Mary he came again into favour, was constituted Lord Privy Seal 2 & 3 Philip and Mary, and died in 1563, at the age of 57.

PAGET, William, fifth Lord, was at first disposed to join the faction that afterwards overturned the state; but becoming sensible of the enormity of his offence, he made all the atonement in his power by a zealous adherence to the king, Charles I, having raised a regiment in his defence, which did good service at the battle of Edgehill.

PAGET, William, sixth Lord, joined in the revolution of 1688; was appointed in 1692 Ambassador Extraordinary to the Grand Seignor; assisted at the conclusion of peace between the Imperialists and Turks in 1698; and died in 1712.

PAGET (Her.) the name of a family which first obtained the peerage in 1550, in the reign of Edward VI, when William Paget above-mentioned was created baron Paget of Beaudesert, co. Stafford. Henry, seventh lord Paget, was advanced in 1714 to the dignity of earl of Uxbridge, and baron Burton of Burton, co. Stafford, which titles became extinct at the death of the second earl; but the barony of Paget devolved upon Henry Bayly Paget, second son of sir Nicholas Bayly, who was created in 1784 earl of Uxbridge; and his son Henry William was in 1815 still farther honoured with the title of marquis of Anglesey, as a reward for his brilliant services during the late war, but particularly at the battle of Waterloo, where he lost a leg.

PAGI, Anthony (Biog.) a French critic, of the Order of the Cordeliers, was born at Rognes, in Provence, in 1624, and died in 1699, leaving 'Critique sur les Annales de Baronius,' 4 vols. fol. Geneva, 1705 and 1727.

Antv. 1566; 'Conciliorum Paralipomena;' 'De non admittendis una in Republica diversarum Religionum Exercitiis,' 8vo. 1589; 'Micrologus de Ecclesiasticis Observationibus,' &c.

PAMMACHUS, St. (Ecc.) a Roman of noble birth, who, becoming a convert to Christianity, embraced a monastic life after the death of his wife Paulina, and died in 410, after founding an hospital at Oporto. He was the friend of St. Jerom, who speaks much in commendation of him.

PAMPELUNA (Geog.) a considerable town of Navarre in the north of Spain, situated on the banks of the Orga, 62 miles E. S. E. Bilboa, 200 N. E. Madrid. Lon. 40' W. lat. 42° 49' N.

History of Pampeluna.

Pampeluna, called in Latin Pompelon [vide Pompelon], was the capital of the Gascons, when Charlemagne passed into Spain, and taking it caused its walls to be levelled. When Navarre came into the possession of the Spaniards, Philip II erected a fortress there, which has since been considered one of its strong holds. Several obstinate conflicts were fought in the neighbourhood of this place, when the French were compelled to evacuate Spain. Pampeluna is a bishop's see, and is said to have been one of the first places that embraced Christianity. Its bishopric is certainly one of the oldest, having been abolished on the invasion of the Moors, and restored on their expulsion. John XXII made this see suffragan of Saragossa, but Gregory XIII attached it to the archiepiscopal see of Burgos. A council was assembled at Pampeluna in 1032 in order to re-establish the prelate in this see, who had been driven away by the barbarians; and two diocesan synods were held in 1315 and 1459. De Marc. Hist. de Bearn.; Oihenart. Not. utriusque Vascon.

PAMPHILUS, St. (Ecc.) a priest of Cæsarea, in Palestine, and a martyr, suffered during the persecution of Maximus, A. D. 348. Whilst he was in confinement he composed an apology for Origen, which was finished by Eusebius, who had so great a veneration for Pamphilus that he wished to bear his name. Euseb. Hist. l. 6, 7, &c.; Phot. Cod. 118; Baron. Annal.

PANOPE (Myth.) or Panopæa, one of the Nereides, whom sailors generally invoked in storms. Virg. Æn. l. 5; Flacc. l. 1.

PANORMITA (Biog.) vide Beccadelli.

PANORMUS (Geog.) a town of Sicily, now Palermo, the capital built by the Phœnicians on the north-west part of the island. It derives its name from πᾶν ὅρμος, totus portus, from the excellence of its harbour. [Vide Palermo] It was the strongest hold of the Carthaginians in that island, and was not taken by the Romans without great difficulty. Diodor. l. 22; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Sil. Ital. l. 14.

PANORMUS (Numis.) this town is distinguished on some medals by the inscriptions ΠΑΝ.—ΠΑΝΟΡΜΟΣ—ΠΑΝΟΡΜΙΤΑΝ. The inhabitants honoured Hercules, Bacchus, and Jupiter on their medals.

PANSA, C. Vibius (Hist.) a Roman consul, who, with A. Hirtius, pursued the murderers of Cæsar, and was killed in battle near Mutina. Cic. Phil. 5; Paterc. l. 2; Ovid. Trist. l. 3; Dio. l. 46; Plut. et Appian.

PANTÆNUS (Ecc.) a Christian philosopher of the Stoic sect, and a native of Sicily, who was sent about the year 180 to Ethiopia to preach the Gospel there. St. Clem. Strom. l. 1; Euseb. Hist. l. 5; S. Hieron. in Catalog.

PANTALEON, Henry (Biog.) a physician and historian, was born at Basle in 1522, and died in 1595, leaving, among other works, 'Posographia Heroum et illustrium Virorum Germaniæ,' fol. Basil. 1565; 'Historia Militaris Ordinis Johannitarum,' &c.; 'Chronographia Ecclesiæ Christi,' 1568; 'Diarium Historicum,' &c.

PANTHEA (Hist.) the wife of Abradates, who killed herself on the body of her husband when slain in battle. [Vide Abradates]

PANVINIUS, Onuphrius (Biog.) a scholar and antiquary of Verona, was born in 1529, and died in 1568, leaving 'Fasti Consulares,' published by Sigonius, Venet. 1557; 'De Antiquis Romanorum Nominibus;' 'De Principibus Romanis;' 'De Republica,' &c. many of which are to be found in Grævius' Thesaurus. He was preparing a general History of the Popes and Cardinals when he died.

PANYASIS (Biog.) a Greek poet said to have been the uncle or cousin of Herodotus the historian. Apollod. l. 3; Quintil. l. 10; Athen. l. 2.

PANZER, George Wolfgang Francis (Biog.) a bibliographer, was born in 1729 at Sulzbach, in the Upper Palatinate, and died in 1805, leaving 'Annales Typographicæ,' &c. 11 vols. 4to. 1793—1803; besides Annals of German Literature, and some other works in German.

PAOLI, Hyacinth (Hist.) a native of Corsica, and one of its chief magistrates in 1735, had considerable influence among his countrymen; but, owing to the distraction which prevailed there, he retired to Naples, where he died.

PAOLI, Pascal, son of the preceding, rendered himself famous by the resistance which he made to the government of the Genoese, who, by the aid of the French, reduced the Corsicans, and rendered all his services unavailing. When the island was conquered, he retired to England in 1769, and died in privacy in 1807.

PAOLUCCIO, Paul Anafeste (Hist.) a noble Venetian, elected, for his services to the state, the first doge of Venice in 697. He died in 717.

PAPHIA (Myth.) a surname of Venus, from Paphos, where she was worshipped.

PAPHLAGONIA (Geog.) Παφλαγονία, a country of Asia Minor, now Penderachia, situated at the W. of the river Halys, by which it was separated from Cappadocia. Herod. l. 1; Cic. pro Rull. 2; Strab. l. 4, &c.

PAPHOS (Geog.) a famous city of the island of Cyprus, now Baffa, founded, as some suppose, about 1184 years before the Christian æra by Agapenor at the head of a colony from Arcadia. It is celebrated as the favourite abode of Venus, who was honoured here by many unhallowed rites.

Virg. Æn. l. 1, v. 419.

Est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphos.

Horat. l. 1, od. 30.

O Venus regina Cnidi Paphique
Sperne dilectam Cypron.

Hom. Odyss. l. 8; Strab. l. 8; Mela, l. 2; Plin. l. 2; Tacit. Annal. l. 3; Clem. Alexand. Strom. &c.

PAPHOS (Numis.) this island struck many medals, bearing, for the most part, a figure of Venus or Cupid, or both, and frequently the figure of a temple, intended to represent the famous temple sacred there to the goddess; inscriptions ΒΑ. ΝΙΚΟΚΛΕΟΥΣ ΠΑΦΙΩΝ, i. e. Regis Nicoclis Paphiorum; sometimes also with the name of Ptolemy for the kings of Egypt, in honour of whom they struck medals, and the years of their reign, as ΠΤΟΛΕΜΑΙΟΥ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ Α. Λ. ΠΑ., i. e. Ptolemæi Regis anno primo Paphiorum, &c.

PAPIA (Geog.) vide Ticinum.

PAPIAS (Ecc.) bishop of Hierapolis, and a disciple of St. John the Evangelist, wrote five books of Expositions of the Discourses of our Lord, of which fragments only are to be found in the writings of Irenæus and Eusebius.

PAPIAS (Biog.) a grammarian in the eleventh century, was the author of 'Elementarium Doctrinæ Rudimentum,' a glossary, which appeared at Venice in 1496.

PAPILLON, Philibert (Biog.) an ecclesiastic of Dijon, and a critic, was born in 1666, and died in 1738, leaving 'La Bibliotheque des Auteurs de Bourgogne,' 2 vols. fol. Dijon, 1742.

PAPILLON. the name of a family of engravers on wood, of whom John Baptist Michael Papillon, the grandson, was the most skilful. He died in 1776, leaving 'Traité Historique et Pratique de la Gravure en Bois.'

PAPIN, Denys (Biog.) a physician and chemist of Blois in the 17th century, is known by the chemical machine called Papin's Digester, of which he published an account in 4to. London, 1681; and in French, Paris, 1682, &c.

PAPIN, Isaac, of the same family, who left the Protestant religion to return to the Romish church, and died in 1709, was the author of several polemical works, which made a noise in his day.

PAPINIANUS, Æmilius (Hist.) a lawyer, and a prætorian prefect under Severus, was beheaded by order of Caracalla, because he refused to write an apology for the murder of Geta. He was the author of many works, which procured him the titles of the Honour of Jurisprudence, and the Treasure of the Laws. They have been published under the title of 'Papinianus seu optimi ICTI et veri Forma in Æmilio Papiniano Spectata a Bavia Voorda,' 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1770.

PAPIRIA, gens (Hist.) the name of a patrician family, anciently called Papirii, which rose to great distinction in the state under the surnames of Crassus, Cursor, Pretus, Prætextatus, Maso, Carbo, &c. [Vide Papirius]

PAPIRIA, gens (Numis.) this family is distinguished on medals by the surnames of Maso and Carbo, C. PAPIRIUS MASO.—C. PAPIRIUS CARBO.—CN. CARBO. C. F. M. SILAN. L. F.

PAPIRIUS (Hist.) a patrician, chosen Rex Sacrorum, after the expulsion of the Tarquins from Rome.

PAPIRIUS MUGILLANUS, L. a consul and colleague of L. Sempronius, U. C. 310, A. C. 444, was afterwards twice censor. Liv. l. 4.

PAPIRIUS CRASSUS, M. was created dictator U. C. 422, A. C. 332, on the threatened invasion of Italy by the Gauls.

PAPIRIUS CURSOR, L. a Roman dictator, and one of the greatest captains of his age, triumphed over the Samnites U. C. 429, A. C. 325. After being a consul three times he was chosen a second time dictator, when he gained another signal advantage over that people. It was this Papirius who ordered his Master of the Horse, Q. Fabius, to be put to death for fighting contrary to orders, although he had been successful. The latter saved his life by an appeal to the people. Liv. l. 8, 9, &c.

PAPIRIUS CURSOR, L. son of the preceding, was once censor and twice consul, during whose consulship the war with the Samnites was terminated, in consequence of the numerous successes obtained by himself and his father.

PAPIRIUS, a Roman, surnamed Prætextatus, from the wit which he displayed in his youth, was taken to the senate by his father to hear the debates, and when pressed by his mother to inform her what had been passing, he replied that it had been deliberated whether one man should have two wives, or one woman two husbands; upon which the mother assembled the matrons the next day, who in a body went to the senate to petition that it might become a law for one woman to have two husbands. On the cause of this singular petition being known, a law was made to prohibit all young people from being present for the future at the deliberations of the senate except this Papirius.

PAPIRIUS (Biog.) author of the collection of 'Leges Regiæ a Romulo, aliisque Romanorum Regibus latæ,' 4to. Rom. 1583, is supposed to have flourished upwards of 500 years before the Christian æra.

PAPIRIUS, Masson, vide Masson.

PAPPUS (Biog.) a mathematician of Alexandria, who flourished in the fourth century, was the author of 'Collectio Mathematica, Libri VIII,' published with the Latin version and notes of Commandine, fol. 1588 and 1660.

PARABOSCO, Jerome (Biog.) an Italian comic writer, of Placentia in the sixteenth century, was the author of six comedies, the best edition of which is said to be that of Venice, 2 vols. 12mo. 1560; besides which he published 'Lettere Amorose,' &c. Venice. 1545; and 'Rime,' &c. 8vo. 1547; and novels after the manner of Boccace, inserted in the 'Novelliero Italiano,' 26 vols. 8vo. 1791.

PARACELSUS, Philippus Aureolus Theophrastus (Biog.) a physician of an eccentric character, and a native of Switzerland, was born in 1493, and died in 1541, leaving a number of works, which appeared in 3 vols. fol. Genev. 1658.

PARADIN, William (Biog.) a French historian of the sixteenth century, was the author of 'Historia Galliæ,' &c. 1550; 'Historia sui Temporis,' 1558; 'Annales de Bourgogne,' fol. 1566; 'L'Histoire d'Aristee touchant la Traduction de la Loi de Moyse;' 'Les Memoires de l'Histoire de Lyon,' &c.

PARCÆ (Myth.) three powerful goddesses, namely, Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos, daughters of Nox and Erebus, who presided over the destinies of men. The youngest of the sisters, Clotho, presided over the moment in which we are born; Lachesis spun out all the events of life; and Atropos cut the thread of human life with a pair of scissors; whose different functions are expressed in this ancient verse, Clotho colum retinet, Lachesis net, et Atropos occat.

The name of Parcæ, according to Varro, is derived a partu, or parturiendo, because they presided over the birth of men; but Servius derives it with more probability, by antiphrasis, from parcere, to spare; quod nemini parcant, because they spare no one. By the Greeks they are called Μοῖραι ἀπὸ τȣ͂ μείρειν, i. e. a dividendo vel partiendo, from disposing events.

Hesiod. Theog. v. 219.

Καὶ Μοίρας καὶ κῆρας ἐγείνατο νηλεοποίνας.

Orph. Hymn. in Parc.

PARE, Ambrose (Biog.) a French surgeon, was born at Lavil in 1509, and died in 1590, leaving several works, which were published in one folio volume.

PAREJA, Juan de (Biog.) a painter and slave, who was born in the West Indies, and died in 1670, excelled in portrait painting, which procured him his liberty from his master Diego Velasquez, with whom however he remained until his death.

PARENT, Anthony (Biog.) a French mathematician, was born at Paris in 1666, and died in 1716, leaving 'Elemens de Mechanique et de Physique;' 'Recherches de Mathematique et de Physique;' 'Arithmetique Théoro-pratique,' &c.

PAREUS, John Philip (Biog.) a critic of Germany, was born at Hembach in 1576, and died about 1648, leaving 'Lexicon Plautinum;' 'Analecta Plautina,' &c.

PAREUS, Daniel, son of the preceding, who was killed by some robbers in 1635, wrote 'Mellificium Atticum;' 'Medulla Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ;' 'Historia Bavarico-Palatina,' 1633; 'Spicilegium Subsecivum, or Notes on Quintilian;' besides an edition of Lucretius.

PARGA (Geog.) a sea-port on the coast of Albania, 30 m. S. W. Joannina.

History of Parga.

This town, which excited the sympathies of a certain description of politicians in Parliament in the year 1819, was built in the decline of the Roman empire; but is hardly mentioned in history before the year 1401, when it entered into an alliance with Venice, which continued until the subversion of the latter state in 1797. Parga being then independent of the Pacha of Albania, afforded an asylum to malcontents of all descriptions, so as to render it a troublesome neighbour to the Albanian government; in consequence of which Ali Pacha marched against it in 1814 with a military force; but through the interference of Great Britain a negotiation was entered into, which terminated in the surrender of the place, on condition that Ali should pay a compensation to such as chose to evacuate the place. This evacuation took place in 1819, when the greater part of the Pargiots removed to the Ionian Islands.

PARIS (Myth.) Πάρις, also called Alexander, the son of Priam, king of Troy, was made the judge between the three goddesses Juno, Minerva, and Venus, to determine which was the most beautiful; and having given the palm to Venus, she procured for him, according to her promise, the most beautiful woman, namely, Helen, the wife of Menelaus, whom he carried from Sparta to Troy, which was the cause of the Trojan war, and the consequent destruction of the city. Hom. Il. passim.; Euripid. in Iphig.; Apollod. l. 1; Cic. de Div. &c.; Virg. Æn. l. 1, &c.; Hygin. Fab.; Horat.; Ovid. &c.

PARIS, Matthew (Biog.) an English historian, and Benedictine monk, of the congregation of Clugny, in the monastery of St. Alban's, who died in 1259, is well known by his 'Historia Major,' which was first printed at London in 1571, and several times since. To the editions of 1640 and 1684 have been added from his MSS. 'Vitæ duorum Offarum, Merciæ Regum,' &c. [Vide Plate XXV]

PARIS (Geog.) the capital of France, situated on the Seine, in the Isle of France, 260 m. S. by E. London, 270 S. by W. Amsterdam, 700 W. Vienna, 750 N. W. Rome, and 1400 S. W. St. Petersburg. Lon. 2° 20′ E. lat. 48° 50′ N.

History of Paris.

Paris, called in Latin Lutetia Parisii, and Lutetia Parisiorum, was taken in the fifth century by the Franks, when it was constituted the capital of their kingdom. It was improved by Charlemagne, and surrounded with walls at the end of the 12th century; these were enlarged and strengthened by Francis I and Henry IV. In the reign of Louis XIV the Boulevards were thrown down, and since that period Paris has received considerable embellishment. Paris is a bishop's see, and was the seat of some councils, as in 360, 551, 557, 573, 577, 614, 825, 829, 847, 1059, 1145, 1185, 1188, 1196, 1212, 1284, 1290, 1302, 1344, 1379, 1398, 1429, 1528, &c.

PARISII (Geog.) a people and city of Celtic Gaul, now Paris [Vide Paris]

PARISOT (Biog.) or Norbert, Peter, a writer against the Jesuits, was born in 1697 at Bar-le-Duc, and died in 1770, leaving his work against the Jesuits, which was printed in 6 vols. 4to.

PARIUM (Geog.) Πάριον, now Kamaris, a town of Mysia, near the Propontis, which was built by the inhabitants of the island Paros. It became a Roman colony in the reign of Adrian, and received the names of Julia Augusta and Hadriana. Strab. l. 1; Plin. l. 7.

PARIUM (Numis.) this town is known by its medals, bearing the inscriptions—PARIO CONDITORI.—COL. JUL. AUG. PARIA.—ΠΑΡΙ. ΠΑΡΙΩΝ, or C. G. I. H. P. i. e. Colonia Gemella Juliana Hadriana Paria. Vaillant. Col. Golz. Græc. Insul.

PARKER, Sir Hyde, Bart. (Hist.) an English admiral, of the first baronet's family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself on many occasions in the service of his king and country; but particularly as vice-admiral, at the memorable action with the Dutch in 1781 on the Dogger Bank. In the following year he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of his Majesty's Fleet in the West Indies, and leaving England in the Cato, he wooded and watered at Rio Janeiro, and after sailing from that place was never heard of more, whence it is concluded that he perished by fire.

PARKER, Sir Peter, Bart. another English admiral, of the second baronet's family, rose from the rank of lieutenant, which he held in 1743, to that of the admiral of the fleet in 1794, and died in 1811.

PARKER, Sir Peter, Bart. grandson of the preceding, distinguished himself as a captain in the royal navy, and was mortally wounded in 1814, while storming the American camp at Bellaise, near Baltimore.

PARKER, Matthew (Ecc.) the second Protestant archbishop of Canterbury, was born in 1504 at Norwich, educated at Cambridge, and after experiencing the favour of Henry VIII and Edward VI, and the vicissitudes which attended the Protestants in the reign of queen Mary, he was on the accession of Elizabeth raised to the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury in 1559, and died in 1575. He had a principal hand in framing the Church of England service and establishment as it now exists. [Vide Plate XIX] To the University of Cambridge he was a most munificent benefactor, founding many fellowships and scholarships. He was also the first founder of the Society of Antiquaries.

PARKER, Samuel, an English prelate, of no honourable character, became from a puritan and a rebel, a violent partisan in the good cause of order and government, by which he obtained preferment in the church in the reign of Charles II, and by his servile compliances to the court of James II, procured his nomination to the see of Oxford. He died unlamented in 1687, leaving among his works, as an author, 'Tentamina Physico-Theologica de Deo,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1665; 'A free and impartial Censure of the Platonic Philosophy,' 1666; 'A Discourse of Ecclesiastical Polity;' 'Disputationes de Deo et Providentia Divina;' 'Demonstration of the Divine Authority of the Law of Nature and of the Christian Religion,' 4to. 1681. 'The Case of the Church of England briefly stated in the three first and fundamental Principles of a Christian Church,' &c.

PARKER (Her.) the name of two families which enjoy the peerage, and three which enjoy the baronetage. The first family entitled to notice is that of the earl of Macclesfield, which is said to have been anciently written Le Parker, and to have resided in Staffordshire. This family was raised to distinction by Thomas Parker, Lord High Chancellor, who was created a baron in 1715, by the title of baron of Macclesfield, co. Chester, and in 1721 was advanced to the dignities of viscount Parker of Ewelme, co. Oxford, and earl of Macclesfield, co. Chester. [Vide Macclesfield]

PARKER, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Macclesfield.

PARKER, an ancient family of North Molton, in Devonshire, was elevated to the peerage in the person of John Parker, who was created in 1784 a peer, by the title of baron Boringdon of Boringdon, co. Devon; and his son, the second lord, was advanced in 1815 to the dignities of viscount Boringdon and earl of Morley. [Vide Morley]

PARKER, a family of London, descended from a junior branch of the preceding family, attained to the honour of the baronetage in 1681, in the person of sir Hugh Parker, alderman of London, and ancestor of sir Hyde Parker, the admiral above-mentioned. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a buck's head, caboshed between two flanches argent.

Crest. A dexter hand and arm in a slashed sleeve gules, with a little cuff argent, the shirt seen through the slashes proper, holding a buck's horn erect (or piece of coral) gules.

PARKER, another family of Essex, of naval distinction, received the honour of the baronetage in 1782, in the person of admiral sir Peter Parker, father of the admiral above-mentioned. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, on a chevron between three keys in pale argent, as many fleurs-de-lis of the field.

Crest. An elephant's head and neck, charged on the neck with a fesse argent, charged with three fleurs-de-lis gules.

PARKER, the third family of Harburn, co. Warwick, received the honour of the baronetage in 1797, in the person of admiral sir William Parker; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Ermine, an anchor azure, between three escallops gules, on a chief wavy of the second, a naval coronet or.

Crest. On a naval coronet azure, a stag statant argent; behind him issuing from the coronet in pale, a branch of laurel.

PARKER, Samuel (Biog.) son of the Samuel Parker, bishop of Oxford above-mentioned, who died in 1730, was the author of an English translation of Cicero, 'De Finibus,' 5vo. 1702; an Abridgement of the Ecclesiastical Histories of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomenes, and Theodoret, 'Bibliotheca Biblica,' 6 vols. 4to. Oxon. 1720; besides which he published a Latin MS. of his father's, containing the history of his own time, under the title of 'Reverendi admodum in Christo Patris Samuelis Parkeri Episcopi de Rebus sui Temporis Commentariorum Libri quatuor,' 8vo. 1726.

PARKHURST, John (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1511 at Guildford, in Surrey, educated at Oxford, left England in the reign of queen Mary, was nominated to the see of Norwich in 1560, and died in 1574. He was one of the Translators of the Bishop's Bible; but is better known to the literary world as a Latin poet, particularly as the author of 'Ludicra, sive Epigrammata Juvenilia.'

PARKHURST, John (Biog.) an English divine and lexicographer, was born in 1728, educated at Rugby School and Cambridge, and died in 1797, leaving 'An Hebrew and English Lexicon, without Points,' &c. 1762; 'A Greek and English Lexicon,' 4to. 1769; which have been frequently reprinted since.

PARKINS, John (Biog.) a law-writer, who died about 1544, wrote 'Perutilis Tractatus, sive Explanatio quorundam Capitulorum valde necessaria,' Lond. 1530, 1532, 1541, 1545, 1567, 1597, 1601, and 1639; besides two English translations in 1642 and 1657.

PARKINSON, John (Biog.) an English herbalist in the 15th and 16th centuries, published 'Paradisi in Sole,' 'Paradisus Terrestris,' &c. fol. London, 1629 and 1656; and 'Theatrum Botanicum,' &c. fol. 1640.

PARKYNS (Her.) the name of a family originally seated at Upton, co. Berks, which received the honour of the baronetcy for its distinguished services during the rebellion. Sir Thomas Boothby Parkyns, the third baronet, was created in 1795 baron Rancliffe.

PARMA (Geog.) a city in the north of Italy, capital of the duchy of the same name, situated on the banks of the river Parma, 30 m. W. by N. Modena, 70 S. E. Milan. Lon. 10° 20′ E. lat. 44° 40′ N.

History of Parma.

Parma, which bears its ancient name, is said to have been founded by the Etrurians, from whom it passed to the Romans, and is noted for its wool.

Mart. l. 14, v. 155.

Velleribus primis Apulia, Parma secundis
Nobilis.

It was a considerable place of Gallia Cispadana, and became a Roman colony under the auspices of Julius Cæsar, and Augustus, as we learn from an inscription PATR. COL. JUL. AUG. PARM. &c. On the decline of the Roman power it assumed a republican form, which soon yielded to the dominion of different families, who successively bore the sway, until it finally came into the hands of the pope. Paul III gave it to his son Lewis Farnese, whose descendants continued to reign as dukes of Parma till the extinction of the male branch. In 1714 Elizabeth Farnese married Philip V of Spain, and brought him this duchy as her dowry. Her son, Don Carlos, took possession of it in 1731; but he being made king of the two Sicilies, the duchies of Parma and Piacenza were ceded to the emperor, and governed by the House of Austria till 1748, when they were ceded to Don Philip, the second son of Philip V and Elizabeth Farnese. After the peace of Luneville in 1801, the duke of Parma took the title of king of Etruria; but in 1805 Parma was united to France, and on the fall of Bonaparte it was given by the treaty of Paris in 1814 to the archduchess Louisa, wife of the latter, and at her death it will devolve on Austria and Sardinia. This town is distinguished as the birth-place of the poet Cassius, and the critic Macrobius.

PARMENAS (Bibl.) Παρμενᾶς, one of the seven deacons chosen by the Apostles, A. D. 33, Acts vi. He is said to have suffered martyrdom in the reign of Trajan; but nothing certain is known of his death. Baron. Annal.

It has borne the different names of Paetra, Minea, Hiria, Demetrias, Zacynthus, Cabarnis, and Hybassa, and is said to have received the name of Paros, from Paros, a son of Jason. This island was very flourishing while its quarries continued to be worked, but on the decline of the Eastern empire they were entirely neglected, and have never since been opened. Antiquities are scattered over the island from which the marbles were brought to England by the earl of Arundel, since called the Parian or Arundelian marbles. The well-known statuaries Phidias, and Praxiteles, were natives of Paros, as well as Archilochus, the Iambic poet. Besides Parecchia, the island contains several petty villages. Thucyd. l. 1; Diodor. l. 5; C. Nep. in Mil.; Strab. l. 9; Mela, l. 2; Plin. l. 34; Ptol. l. 3.

PARR, Catherine (Hist.) vide Catherine.

PARR, Thomas (Biog.) a husbandman of Shropshire, who laboured after he was 130 years old, and died in 1635, at the age of 152 years and 9 months, not from decay, of which his body, when opened by Dr. Harvey, gave no marks, but from change of air and living, having been carried, in the year that he died, by the earl of Arundel to the court of Charles I. A grandson of this Parr died at the age of 120.

PARR, Richard, an English divine, was born at Fermoy, in the county of Cork in 1617, and died in 1691, leaving a collection of archbishop Usher's Letters, to which he prefixed a Life of that prelate.

PARRHASIUS (Biog.) a painter, son of Evenor, of Ephesus, in the age of Zeuxis, flourished about 415 years before the Christian æra. He acquired great reputation by his pieces, particularly by that in which he allegorically represented the people of Athens, with all their fickleness, arrogance, and inconsistency. Cic. Tusc. l. 1, c. 2; Plin. l. 35; Plut. in Thes.; Athen. l. 12, &c.

PARRHASIUS, Aulus Janus, a grammarian of Italy, was born at Cosenza in 1470, and died in 1533, leaving 'Liber de Rebus per Epistolam quæsitis,' and other things, which were published together by Stephens in 1567.

PARRY, Richard (Ecc.) an English divine, was born in London in 1722, and died in 1780, leaving a 'Harmony of the four Gospels;' 'The Genealogy of Jesus Christ Explained;' 'A Dissertation on Daniel's Prophecy of the seventy Weeks,' &c.

PARSONS (Hist.) or Persons, Robert, an English Jesuit, who made himself very distinguished in the reign of queen Elizabeth, by his endeavours to re-establish the Romish religion in England. He was born in 1546 of obscure parents, at Nether Stowey, near Bridgewater, in Somersetshire, educated at Baliol College, Oxford, and died in 1610. He was the principal adviser of the Spanish invasion, and employed every art to carry his purpose against the Protestants. He also exercised his pen to the same purpose, and wrote, 1. 'A Brief Discourse concerning the Reasons why Catholics refuse to go to Church,' 1580. 2. 'Reasons for his coming into the Mission of England,' &c. 3. 'A Discovery of John Nichols. misreported a Jesuit,' &c. 4. 'De Persecutione Anglicana Epistola.' 5. 'A Christian Directory,' 1583, &c.

PARSONS (Her.) the name of a family in Ireland, descended from sir William Parsons, who was constituted Lord Justice in 1641, having been previously created a baronet in 1620. His great grandson, sir Richard Parsons, was created in 1681 baron Oxmantown, and viscount Rosse; and Richard, the second viscount, was raised to the dignity of earl of Rosse.

PARSONS, the name of a family of Langley, in Buckinghamshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1661 on sir William Parsons; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

History of Parthia.

The Parthians, who are supposed to have been Scythians by origin, remained [illegible] centuries unknown, and were successively tributary to the Assyrians, Medes, and Persians. When Alexander subdued this last country, Parthia submitted in common with the other dependant states, and remained for some time under the power of Eumenes, Antigonus, Seleucus Nicanor, and Antiochus, when Arsaces, a Parthian general of obscure origin, but possessed of great military talent, put himself at the head of his countrymen, and successfully opposing the power of the Macedonians, laid the foundation of the Parthian empire, about 250 years before the Christian æra. The following is a list of the kings of Parthia from that period, as far as they can be collected from historians:

Kings.	A. M.	A. C.	Kings.	A. M.	A. C.
Arsaces I.	3785	250	Arsaces IV.
Arsaces II	3825	210	Sintricus	3960	75
Arsaces III			Phraates III	3969	66
Phraates I.			Orodes I	3979	56
Mithridates I.	3894	141	Phraates IV.	3999	36
Phraates II.	3904	131	Tiridates	4004	31
Artabanus I.	3906	129	Phraates	4012	23
Mithridates II.	3906	129

Kings.	A. M.	A. D.	Kings.	A. M.	A. D.
Orodes II	4036	2	Vologeses I.	4084	50
Vonones I	4040	6	Artabanus III.
Artabanus II.	4050	16	Pachorus.
Tiridates	4069	35	Chosroes	4140	106
Cinnamus.			Partamaspartes.	4150	116
Gotarzes.			Chosroes restored.
Gotarzes	4082	48	Vologeses II.
Meherdates	4083	49	— — —
Vonones II	4084	50	Artabanus IV.

Artabanus, the last king of Parthia, being killed by Artaxerxes, king of Persia, the kingdom of the Parthians was destroyed A. D. 226. In this period the Parthians had made a successful resistance to the Romans, although Trajan and his successors, the two Antonines and Severus, had obtained partial successes over them. Polyb. l. 5; Strab. l. 2, &c.; Mela, l. 1; Plin. l. 6; Ptol. l. 6; Herodian. l. 3; Justin. l. 41; Dio. l. 40, &c.

PARTHIA (Numis.) many medals of this country are extant bearing the effigies of their kings, and also for the most part the figure of a Parthian, with his bow and arrow, and his tiara on his head. There are likewise medals of the emperors Trajan, and his successors, which by the inscriptions commemorate their successes over the Parthians, as PARTHIA CAPTA.—PARTHICIS DIVI TRAJAN. AUG. &c.—VICTORIA PARTHICA.—SIGNIS PARTHICIS RECEPTIS.—PARTHICO MAXIMO P. M. TR. P. VIII.—TRIUMPHUS PARTHICUS, &c.

PARTULA (Myth.) or Partunda, a deity among the Romans, who presided over childbirth, the same as Ilythia. Gyrald. de Syntag. Deor. 1.

PARUTA, Paul (Hist.) a noble Venetian, was born in 1540, made historiographer of the republic in 1579, and died in 1598, after having been employed on several embassies. He wrote, among other things, 'Della Perfezione della Vita Politica;' 'Discorsi Politici,' 1599; besides 'Storia Veneta,' from 1513 to 1551, with an addition of three other books, 'Della Guerra di Cipri dal 1570 al 1572.'

PARUTA, Philip (Biog.) a noble of Palermo, who died in 1629, is well known by his 'Sicilia descritta con Medaglie,' fol. Palermo, 1612; Rome, 1649, enlarged by Agostini; Lyons, 1697; and a Latin version by Haverkamp, in 3 vols. fol. 1723; also inserted in Grævius' and Burmann's 'Antiquitates Italiæ.'

PARYSATIS (Hist.) Παρύσατις, a Persian princess, wife of Darius Ochus, and mother of Artaxerxes, Memnon, and Cyrus. She was extravagantly partial to her youngest son, and encouraged him in his rebellion; nevertheless, she retained her influence over her eldest son until her death. Plut. in Artax.

PAS (Hist.) vide Feuquieres.

PASCAL, Blaise (Biog.) a French divine and mathematician, was born in 1623 at Clermont, in Auvergne, and died in 1662, leaving 'Pensées' on religion and other subjects; 'Equilibre des Liqueurs;' 'Lettres au Provincial;' and other works, which were published together in 5 vols. 8vo. Paris, 1779.

PASCHAHK, Hatoun (Hist.) daughter of Cothbedin III, sultan of the dynasty of the Karakotaïens, put her brother to death that she might seize his throne, and shared the same fate from the hands of her nephew in the year of the Hegira 694, A. D. 1304.

PASCHAL, Charles (Hist.) a French nobleman and statesman, was born in 1547 at Coni, in Piedmont, employed on various embassies by Henry III and IV, and died in 1625, leaving 'Legatus,' Rothom. 1598, and Paris. 1612; 'Censura Animi ingrati;' 'Coronæ, seu Res omnis Coronaria ex Priscorum Monumentis illustrata,' 4to. Paris. 1610.

PASCHAL (Ecc.) the name of some popes and anti-popes.

PASCHAL I, a Roman by birth, succeeded Stephen V in 817, and died in 824, after having crowned the emperor Lothaire. He was succeeded by Eugene II.

PASCHAL II, a Tuscan, named Reignier, was elected after Urban II in 1099, and died in 1118, when he was succeeded by Gelasius II. He pertinaciously insisted on the right of investitures against the emperor Henry IV and the king Henry I of England. The emperor took him prisoner, and refused to give him his liberty until he resigned his pretensions; but this extorted confession was cancelled by two councils, in 1112 and 1116. Some of this pope's letters are preserved in the Councils of P. Labbe.

PASCHAL, the name of two antipopes, one of whom was elected in opposition to Sergius I, and another, named Gui de Creme, in opposition to Alexander III.

PASCHAL, Peter, a Spanish priest and martyr, was made bishop of Jaen in 1295, taken prisoner by the Moors in 1297, and was put to death after four years' captivity, on account of the zeal and success with which he converted the infidels.

PASCHASIUS, Ratbert (Biog.) a Benedictine of the ninth century, who died in 865, was the author of several theological works, published by P. Sirmond, fol. 1618. In his treatise, 'De Corpore Christi,' he is said to have broached the doctrine of transubstantiation.

PASIPHAE (Myth.) Πασιφάη, a daughter of Sol and Perseis, who married Minos, king of Crete, but, having been inspired by Neptune, according to the accounts of some mythologists, with an unnatural passion for a bull, she became the mother of the monster called Minotaurus. Plat. de Min.; Palæph. de Incred.; Apollod. l. 2; Diodor. l. 2; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 40; Virg. Æn. l. 6; Propert. l. 2; Ovid. Heroid. l. 4; Plut. in Thes.

PASLEY (Her.) the name of a family of Craig, co. Dumfries, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1794, for his distinguished services, on admiral sir Thomas Sabine Pasley; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Paul, S. patriarch of Constantinople, was elected in 336 by the orthodox part of the church; but Macedonius being elected by the Arian party, and supported by the emperor Constantius, Paul was first banished, and afterwards, as is said, was strangled by order of the latter. Athanas. Epist. ad Sol.; Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 7; Sozomenes, Theodoret, &c.

Paul, a priest of Constantinople, was raised to the see of Antioch in 519, in the place of the heretic Severus; but was deposed for his immoralities in 521. Evag. l. 4; Baronius, &c.

Paul, patriarch of Alexandria, was raised to that see in 536, and was sent into exile the next year.

Paul, a bishop of Emesus, assisted at the Council of Ephesus in 431, and drew up the formula of faith which was to be admitted by the bishops of the East, as also by the Egyptians.

Paul, first bishop of Leon, in Brittany, was set over this see by king Childebert, and after governing it for some years, he resigned his episcopal charge in 566, and died in 579.

Paul, an heretic and Monothelite, was elected patriarch of Constantinople in 641, by favour of the emperor Constans, grandson of Heraclius, and died in his heresy in 654. His memory was condemned in the sixth Council of Constantinople, and his name struck out of the ecclesiastical dyptics. Baron. Annal.

Paul, the name of two other patriarchs in 686 and 780.

Paul of Burgos, a Spanish bishop, native of Burgos, and a Jew by birth, embraced Christianity in 1353, and is said to have died in 1435, at the age of 82, patriarch of Aquileia, after having been successively bishop of Carthagena and of Burgos. He left additions to Nicholas de Lyra's 'Postills,' and a treatise entitled 'Scrutinium Scripturarum,' fol. Mant. 1474. His three sons, whom he had by his wife previous to his entering the ecclesiastical state, were all distinguished. Alphonso was bishop of Burgos, and wrote an Abridgement of Spanish History, which is in the 'Hispania Illustrata,' 4 vols. fol.: Gonsalvo, the second son, was bishop of Placentia: and Alvarez, the third, published a History of John II, king of Castile.

Paul, Vincent de, St. institutor and first superior general of the Congregation of Missions, was born in 1576, in the village of Poui, near Acqs, died in 1660 and was canonized by Clement XII, on account of the extraordinary zeal with which he had laboured in the propagation of the faith.

Paul, Father, called in the Italian Fra Paolo, a writer, whose family name was Sarpi, is now known by his History of the Council of Trent, which has been much admired by Protestants; but its authenticity and correctness have been called in question by the Roman Catholics. He also wrote other things, which together were published under the title of 'Tutte le sue Opere, con un Supplemento,' 8 vols. 4to. 1761-68; and another at Naples, in 24 vols. 8vo. 1790.

PAULA, St. (Ecc.) a Roman lady of noble birth, who having embraced Christianity retired to Bethlehem, where she built a monastery, of which she became the abbess, and died in 407, at the age of 60, leaving a high reputation for learning as well as piety. She had St. Jerome for her instructor, from whom she learnt the Hebrew.

PAULET, Sir John (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the commanders of the army that subdued the Cornishmen at Blackheath in 1497, for which he was knighted.

Paulet, Sir William, marquis of Winchester. [Vide Winchester]

Paulet, Sir Hugh, was knighted for his services in the French wars, particularly at the taking of Brey, and the siege of Boulogne, and after distinguishing himself both as a soldier and a statesman on several other occasions in the service of Henry VIII, Edward VI, and queen Elizabeth, he died Governor of the Island of Jersey, which post he held 24 years.

Paulet, Sir Amias, son of the preceding, succeeded his father as Governor of Jersey, and died in 1588, after having been entrusted by his sovereign with the custody of queen Mary of Scotland.

Paulet, John, Lord, distinguished himself by his zeal and loyalty during the rebellion, and died in 1649, after having suffered materially in his property. His eldest son John, the second lord, followed his father's worthy steps, and suffered with him in his estate.

Paulet (Her.) Paulett, Powlet, or Powlett, the name of a family derived from the lordship of Pawlet, in Somersetshire, where they held property very soon after the Conquest; the first of whom on record who assumed this name was sir William de Paulet, who died in 1242. His descendant John Paulet, or Poulett, esq. was created in 1627 lord Poulet, of Hinton St. George; and John, the fourth lord, was advanced in 1706 to the dignities of viscount Hinton, St. George, and earl Poulett. [Vide Poulet] A junior branch of the same family attained to the peerage previously to this in the person of sir William above-mentioned, who was raised in 1538 to the dignity of a baron, by the title of lord St. John of Basing, in 1549 created earl of Wiltshire, and in 1551 marquis of Winchester. [Vide Winchester]

Peleus having been obliged to leave his father's dominions on account of the murder of his brother Phocus, retired first to the court of Eurytus, king of Parthia, and afterwards to Acastus, king of Iolchos, by whose orders he was tied to a tree, on the false charges of Astydamia, the wife of Acastus, but being liberated by Vulcan, he forcibly took Iolchus, and put to death Astydamia. Hom. Il. l. 9; Eurip. in Androm.; Apollon. l. 4; Apollod. l. 3; Catull. de Nupt. Pel. et Thet.; Hygin. Fab. 54; Schol. Hom.; Pind. &c.

PELHAM, John de (Hist.) a valiant soldier, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the competitors at the taking of John, king of France, where he signalized himself under his victorious king Edward III. In memory of his noble deeds, his figure in armour, with the arms of his family on his breast, was painted in glass in the Chapter-House at Canterbury.

PELHAM, John de, son of the preceding, was no less famous than his father for his many great achievements under Henry, of Bolingbroke, afterwards Henry IV, of England, to whom he steadily adhered when Henry was invited from his banishment, previous to the deposition of king Richard. He continued faithfully to serve him until his death, when he was made one of his executors, and was taken into the especial favour of his successor Henry V, by whom he was chosen one of his Privy Counsellors. He served this king both as an ambassador and a warrior in France, was made one of his executors at his death, and after acting as an ambassador in Scotland, and in other capacities under Humphrey duke of Gloucester, during the minority of Henry VI, he died in the seventh year of that prince's reign.

PELHAM, Sir William, third son of sir William Pelham, knt. was one of the most famous men of his time, being high in the confidence of queen Elizabeth, by whom he was employed against the French in Scotland, whom he compelled to leave the kingdom; afterwards at the siege of Caen, where he was wounded, but more particularly in Ireland, where, in the capacity of Lord Justice, he dispossessed the earl of Desmond of his castles, compelled his followers to lurk in places of secrecy, and brought the kingdom into great order. On his return from Ireland he was constituted in 1586 Field Marshal, and after signalizing himself in the Low Countries, where he took several places, and performed many gallant acts, he died in 1587.

PELHAM, Henry, second son of the first lord Pelham, and brother to Thomas, first duke of Newcastle, was constituted Secretary of War in 1724, first Lord Commissioner of the Treasury in 1743, and in the same year Chancellor and Treasurer of the Exchequer, and after acting as one of the Lords Justices during his Majesty's absence in 1740, 1743, 1745, 1750, and 1752, he died at the age of 60, in 1754, being highly respected by the whigs, whose party he kept united by his influence.

PELHAM (Her.) the name of a family derived from the lordship of Pelham in Hertfordshire, of which honourable mention is made under History. This family enjoys the peerage in two of its branches, sir Thomas Pelham, of the elder branch, brother to sir John Pelham, knt. who was lineally descended from the John de Pelham above-mentioned, was created a baronet in 1611; sir Thomas Pelham, the third baronet, was created a peer in 1706, by the title of lord Pelham, baron Pelham, of Laughton, co. Essex; and Thomas, second lord Pelham, was created in 1715, marquis of Clare, and duke of Newcastle, which titles devolved to Henry earl of Lincoln, who assumed the name of Pelham, [vide Newcastle] but the barony of Pelham, of Stanmer, in Sussex, devolved to Thomas Pelham, of Stanmer, Esq., which Thomas lord Pelham was elevated in 1801 to an earldom, by the title of earl of Chichester. From sir William Pelham above-mentioned, who was third son of sir William Pelham, ancestor to the earl of Chichester, descended in the female line Charles Anderson, who in compliance with the will of his great uncle Charles Pelham, esq. assumed the name and arms of Pelham, and was created in 1794 a baron, by the title of baron Yarborough, of Yarborough, co. Lincoln. [Vide Yarborough]

PELIAS (Myth.) Πελίας, the twin brother of Neleus, and son of Neptune, who was exposed in the woods, but, his life being spared, he usurped the throne of Iolchus, which belonged to Æson, but was obliged afterwards to restore it to Jason, son of Æson. When old and infirm his daughters, the Peliades, were induced to kill their father and cut his body in pieces, in the hope that he would be restored to the vigour of youth, but they found their expectations disappointed by the sorceress, who refused to lend her aid. Pind. Pyth. 4; Apollon. l. 1; Apollod. l. 1; Cic. Orat. l. 3; Diod. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 12, &c.

PELIDES (Myth.) a patronymic of Achilles.

PELION (Geog.) Πήλιον, now called Petras, a mountain of Thessaly, whose top is covered with pine trees. The giants are said to have placed Pelion on Ossa, in order to scale the heavens with more facility in their wars with the gods. [Vide Ossa and Olympus]

PELL, John (Biog.) an English mathematician, descended from an ancient family in Lincolnshire, was born in 1610 at Southwyke, in Sussex, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1685, leaving 'Modus supputandi Ephemerides Astronomicas,' &c. 1630; ' 'Commentationes in Cosmographiam Alstedii;' 'Astronomical History of Observations,' &c. 1633; 'The Everlasting Tables of Heavenly Motions,' &c. 1603; 'The Manner of deducing his Astronomical Tables out of the Tables and Axioms of Philip Lansberg,' &c. &c. He also invented some of the algebraical characters now in use.

PELLA (Geog.) now Janissa, a celebrated town of Macedonia, on the shore of the Ægean Sea, near the confluence of the rivers Erigon and Axius, was once the capital of the country where Philip was educated and Alexander was born. It was made a colony by Julius Cæsar, whence it obtained the name of Julia Augusta. Liv. l. 42; Mel. l. 2; Strab. l. 7; Lucan. l. 5, &c.

PELLA (Numis.) this town is known by medals which it struck as an independant state, bearing the inscription ΠΕΛΛ. ΠΕΛΛΑΙΩΣ; and as a colony by its medals of Adrian, Caracalla, Macrinus, Heliogabalus, Alexander Severus, Julia Mamæa, Maximinus, Maximus, Gordianus, Tranquillina, Philip, sen. and jun., bearing the inscription COL. JUL. AUG. PELLA.

PELLEGRINI, Camillo (Biog.) an Italian historian and antiquary, was born at Capua in 1598, and died in 1660, leaving, 1. 'L'Apparato alle Antichità di Capoua,' 1651. 2. 'Historia Principum Longobardorum,' published in the collections of Muratori and Burmann.

PELLERIN, Joseph (Biog.) an antiquary, who died in 1782, at the age of 99, was the author of 'Recueil de Medailles, de Peuples, et de Villes,' &c. 8 vols. 4to. 1762–66.

PELLETIER, James (Biog.) a physician and mathematician, was born at Mans in 1517, and died in 1582, leaving 'De Dimensione Circuli,' Basil. 1563; 'Disquisitiones Geometricæ,' 8vo. Lugd. 1567; 'Dialogue de l'Ortografe è Prononciacion Françoase,' 8vo. Lyon. 1555, &c.

PELLETIER, Claude de, a counsellor of the Chatelet, who was born at Paris in 1630, and died in 1711, published 'Comes Rusticus;' 'Comes Senectutis,' &c.; besides an edition of the 'Body of Canon Law,' in 2 vols. fol. &c.

PELLEW (Her.) the name of a family in Devonshire, which has been elevated to the peerage in the person of admiral sir Edward Pellew, who, for his distinguished services in the navy, particularly at the bombardment of Algiers, was successively raised, in 1814 and 1816, to the dignity of baron Exmouth, of Cannonteign, co. Devon, and to that of viscount Exmouth. [vide Exmouth]

PELLICAN, Conrad (Biog.) a German divine, who, from a monk of the order of the Cordelier, turned reformer, was born in Alsace in 1478, and died in 1556, leaving a number of works, principally commentaries on the Scriptures, which amount to seven folio volumes.

PELLISON-FONTANIER, Paul (Biog.) a French writer, was born at Beziers in 1624, and died in 1693, leaving 'Relation contenant l'Histoire de l'Academie Françoise,' Paris, 1653, and frequently reprinted since; 'Reflexions sur les Differends de la Religion,' 12mo. Paris, 1686, the first part of a work, of which a second appeared the next year under the title 'Reponse aux Objections d'Angleterre et d'Hollande;' a third in 1690, entitled 'Les Chimères de M. Jurieu,' &c.; and a fourth part, entitled 'De la Tolerance des Religions;' besides some other pieces on the same subject.

PELLONTIER, Simon (Biog.) an historical writer, was born at Leipzig in 1694, and died in 1757, leaving 'Histoire des Celtes,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1740, 1750; and 2 vols. 4to. 1770.

PELOPEA (Myth.) a daughter of Thyestes, the brother of Atreus, who, after having had a child by her own father, married her uncle Atreus. Hygin. Fab. 87; Ælian. Var. Hist.

PELOPIDAS (Hist.) Πελοπίδας, a general of Thebes, son of Hippoclus, descended from an illustrious and opulent family, conspired with Epaminondas and some other citizens to rid his country of the tyrants who bore the sway at that time; and, having succeeded in the attempt, he was placed at the head of the government. He was afterwards killed in battle, while fighting bravely against Alexander, tyrant of Pheræ, A. C. 364 years.

PELOPONNESIACUM BELLUM (Hist.) a celebrated war which lasted 27 years, between the Athenians and the inhabitants of Peloponnesus, with their respective allies, which terminated in the capture of Athens, and the overthrow of the state. The immediate cause of this war was a quarrel between the Corinthians and their colony, the Corcyreans, on which occasion the Lacedæmonians sided with the Corinthians, and the Athenians with the Corcyreans.

PELOPONNESUS (Geog.) Πελοπόννησος, a peninsula of Greece, so called from Pelops; i. e. Πέλοπος νῆσος, the island of Pelops, now known under the name of the Morea. It was anciently divided into six parts, namely, Achaia Proper, Arcadia, Argos, Corinth, Elis, and Messenia. [Vide Achaia, Lacedæmon, &c.]

PELOPS (Myth.) Πέλοψ, a son of Tantalus, king of Phrygia, who is said to have been killed and set before the deities when they visited Phrygia, but was tasted by none except Ceres, who, being melancholy and inattentive, ate a part of his shoulder. Jupiter afterwards restored him to life, and supplied the shoulder that had been eaten by an ivory one. Ovid. Met. l. 6, v. 404.

—— Tamen hunc quoque dicitur unus
Flesse Pelops, humeroque suas ad pectora postquam
Deduxit vestes, ebur ostendisse sinistro.
Concolor hic humerus; nascendi tempore, dextro
Corporeusque fuit; manibus mox cæsa paternis
Membra ferunt junxisse Deos ——

Virg. Georg. l. 3, v. 7.

—— Humeroque Pelops insignis eburno
Acer equis.

Tibull. l. 1, el. 14.

—— Carmina ni sint
Ex humero Pelopis non nituisset ebur.

Stat. Theb. l. 4.

Truncatusque Pelops, at lævo pulvere sedens.

Pindar treats the story of the ivory shoulder as a fable. Pind. Olymp.

—— ἐλέφαντι φαίδιμον
ὦμον κεκαδμένον
Ἦ θαυματὰ πολλά,
καίπετι καὶ βροτῶν φρένας
ὑπὲρ τὸν ἀληθῆ λόγον δεδαιδαλμένοι ψεύδεσι ποικίλοις ἐξαπατῶντι μῦθοι.

Pelops having by stratagem conquered Œnomaus, the king of Elis, in the chariot race, obtained the hand of his daughter Hippodamia, together with the kingdom, and is said to have instituted the Olympic games in commemoration of his victory. He received divine honours after his death, and his descendants by Hippodamia, namely, Pitheus, Troezen, Atreus, Thyestes, &c. were called Pelopidæ. Hom. Il. l. 2; Eurip. in Iphig.; Apollod. l. 2; Diod. l. 3; Strab. l. 8; Mela, l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 9, &c.

PELORUS (Geog.) Πέλωρος, or Peloris, Πελωρὶς, now Capo di Faro, one of the great promontories of Sicily, which is said to have received its name from Pelorus, the pilot of the ship which carried away Annibal from Italy. Annibal having put him to death on a false suspicion of treachery, is reported to have given him an honourable funeral near this cape, which, from that circumstance, received the name of Pelorus; but this account is denied by others, who maintain that it was so called before the age of Annibal. The poets make frequent mention of this cape. Polyb. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 3; Val. Max. l. 9; Strab. l. 5; Mela, l. 2; Dionys. Perieg.; Ovid. Met. l. 15; Stat. Sylv. l. 1; Cluv. Antiq. Sicil. l. 1.

PELUSIUM (Geog.) now Tineh, a town of Egypt, situated at the entrance of the eastern mouth of the Nile, called thence Pelusian. It was the key of Egypt on the side of Phœnicia. Liv. l. 44; Virg. Georg. l. 1; Strab. l. 17; Mel. l. 2; Lucan. l. 8; Mart. l. 13, ep. 9; Plin. l. 15.

PEMBERTON, Henry (Biog.) a physician and mathematician, was born at London in 1694, and died in 1771, leaving 'Epistola ad Amicum de Cotesii inventis;' 'Observations on Poetry;' 'On the Loci Plani,' &c. &c.

PEMBLE, William (Biog.) a divine, and native of Sussex, was educated at Oxford, and died in 1623, leaving a number of works, which were collected in one volume folio, in 1635.

PEMBROKE, Laurence, Earl of (Hist.) son of John, lord Hastings, of the family of Hastings [vide Hastings], distinguished himself in the famous sea-fight off Sluys, in Flanders, and on other occasions in the reign of Edward III.

PEMBROKE, John, Earl of, son of the preceding, was so much in favour with Edward III, that he gave him his daughter Margaret in marriage. He was afterwards sent by the king with a fleet to relieve Rochelle, which was besieged, but he was totally defeated by a Spanish squadron which lay in wait for him, with the loss of all his fleet and himself taken prisoner. He died in captivity at Paris in 1375.

PEMBROKE, William, first Earl of, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was a stout adherent to the house of York, and, after adventuring his life in many battles in behalf of Edward IV, he was taken prisoner in 1469, in a battle fought against the Lancastrians at Danes More, a place near Edgecote, in Northamptonshire, and beheaded by order of George, duke of Clarence, and Richard Nevil, earl of Warwick, who both of them, not long before, had revolted from king Edward to the other side.

PEMBROKE, William, first Earl of, by a new creation, spent his life in the service of Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elisabeth, and enjoyed their confidence in the different high posts which he filled until his death in 1569. [Vide Plate VII]

PEMBROKE, William, third Earl of, grandson of the preceding, was particularly in the confidence of James I and Charles I, to which latter he was a faithful counsellor. He died in 1630. This nobleman, of whom lord Clarendon gives a high character, was a patron of learning and addicted to poetry, specimens of which were published in one volume 8vo. 1660.

PEMBROKE, Philip, fourth Earl of, and first Earl of Montgomery, brother of the preceding. [Vide Montgomery]

PEMBROKE and MONTGOMERY, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Herbert [vide Herbert], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Herbert, earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, baron Herbert, of Caerdiff, Ross, Kendal, Parr, Fitz-Hugh, Marmion, St. Quintin, and baron Herbert of Shurland.

Arms. Party per pale azure and gules, three lions rampant argent.

Crest. On a wreath a wyvern, with wings elevated vert, holding in its mouth a sinister hand, couped at the wrist gules.

Supporters. On the dexter side a panther gardant argent, spotted of various colours, with fire issuing out of his mouth and ears, his ducal collar azure; on the sinister a lion argent, gorged with a ducal coronet gules.

Motto. "Ung je servirai."

PENA, John (Biog.) a mathematician, descended from an illustrious family at Aix, was born at Moustiers, in Provence, in 1530, and died in 1560, leaving a Latin translation of Euclid's 'Catoptrica,' and an edition of the 'Spherica' of Theodosius, Gr. and Lat. 4to. Paris. 1558, &c.

PENATES (Myth.) certain inferior deities among the Romans, so called because they were generally placed penitus; i. e. in the innermost parts of the houses, over which, as also over the resident families, they were supposed to preside. The place where they stood was called the Penetralia. When offerings were made to them their statues were crowned with garlands, &c. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 2; Dionys. l. 1; Serv. in Æn. l. 2, &c.

PENDERGAST, Sir John (Hist.) a naval officer in the reign of Henry IV, who obtained great advantages over the pirates, and commanded in the Channel in 1412.

PENELOPE (Myth.) Πηνελόπη, a celebrated princess of Greece, was the daughter of Icarius, wife of Ulysses, king of Ithaca, and mother of Telemachus. During the absence of her husband at the siege of Troy, she was beset by a number of importunate suitors, whom she amused with the promise that as soon as she had finished a piece of tapestry in which she was engaged she would make choice of one of them. In order to baffle their expectations she undid in the night what she had wrought in the day, whence arose the proverb of 'Penelope's web,' to denote an endless labour. By this artifice she protracted the time until the return of Ulysses, who, after a twenty years' absence, came to relieve her from her fears, and to rid her of her troublesome guests. Hom. Il. et Od. passim.; Aristoph. in Av.; Aristot. Hist. Anim. l. 8; Apollod. l. 3; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 127; Plin. l. 37; Paus. l. 3; Lucian. in Dial.; Schol. Pind. et Theocrit. &c.

PENEUS (Geog.) Πηνειὸς, a river of Thessaly, now Salampria, rising from mount Pindus, and falling into the Gulf of Therma, after a winding course between Ossa and Olympus through the plains of Tempe.

Ovid. Met. l. 1, v. 450.

Est nemus Hæmoniæ, prærupta quod undique claudit
Silva; vocant Tempe, per quæ Peneus ab imo
Effusus Pindo spumosis volvitur undis.

Catull. Carm. 63.

Quale ferunt Graii Peneum propter amœnum.

Hom. Il. l. 2, v. 753.

Οὐδ' ὅγε Πηνειῷ συμμίσγεται ἀργυροδίνῃ.

PENINÆ ALPES (Geog.) or Pœninæ Alpes, now Great St. Bernard, a certain part of the Alps between the sources of the Rhone on the north and the Lacus Verbanus. It is celebrated by the passage of Annibal with his army, when he went into Italy, whence it is supposed to derive its name; i. e. from Pœnus, a Carthaginian. Polyb. l. 3; Liv. l. 21; Ammian. Marcell. l. 15; Cluver. Antiq. Ital. l. 1, &c.

PENINGTON, Isaac (Biog.) a writer among the sect of the Quakers, was born in 1642, and died in 1679, after having been frequently imprisoned for holding unlawful meetings. His numerous writings were collected and published in one volume folio, 1681; afterwards reprinted in 2 vols. 4to. and 4 vols. 8vo.

PENN, William (Hist.) a native of Bristol, who distinguished himself as an able admiral, was commander of the fleet in the reduction of Jamaica in 1655, and afterwards contributed materially to the defeat of the Dutch in 1665. He was knighted by Charles II for his services, and died in 1670, at the age of 49.

PENN, William, son of the preceding, was bred to the law, but, taking up with Quakerism, contrary to the express wishes of his father, he turned preacher among that sect in 1668. Receiving, however, in consideration of his father's services, a grant of land in the province of North America, he founded a colony there, which has since been called Pennsylvania, a province of the United States. He died in 1718, leaving various works in support of his opinions, which were published together in 2 vols. fol. in 1728, with his life prefixed.

PENNANT, Thomas (Biog.) a traveller, naturalist, and antiquary, was born in 1726 at Downing, in Flintshire, the seat of his family for several generations, educated at Oxford, and died in 1798, leaving 'British Zoology,' 1761, 2 vols. 8vo. 1768, &c. fol.; 'Tour in Scotland,' 8vo. 1770; 'Second Tour in Scotland,' 1772, which was followed by other tours in different parts; 'Arctic Zoology,' 1782; 'Account of London,' 1790; 'The Literary Life of the late Thomas Pennant, Esq. by himself,' 1793, which he intended to be his last publication, but he afterwards published 'The History of the Parishes of Whiteford and Holywell;' and 'View of Hindostan,' 2 vols. 4to. [Vide Plate XL]

PENNI, John Francis (Biog.) a painter of Florence, called Il Fattore, or, the Steward, was born in 1488, and died in 1528, after having been one of the principal assistants to Raphael in the execution of the Cartoons of the Arazzi.

PENNI, Lucas, a brother of the preceding, came over to England, and was employed by Henry VIII in painting many designs.

PENNINGTON, Sir John (Hist.) a valiant knight of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was steadily attached to the unfortunate Henry VI, and gave him an asylum at Muncaster when he fled from his enemies. He afterwards commanded the left wing of the English army in the expedition into Scotland. His grandson, sir John de Pennington, had a command at the battle of Flodden-Field in 4 Henry VIII.

PENNINGTON, Sir John, an admiral, probably of the same family, was sent with a squadron to the assistance of the French, but, finding that they were to be employed against the Protestants at Rochelle, he left the vessels and returned with his crew to England. He afterwards successfully opposed the encroachments of the Dutch, and, on the breaking out of the rebellion, he employed his arms and his counsel in behalf of the royal cause.

PENNINGTON (Her.) the name of a family of some consideration before, and at, the conquest, which enjoys the peerage, conferred in 1783 on sir John Pennington, fifth baronet, who was created a baron by the title of lord Muncaster.

PENNYMAN, Sir William, Bart. (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was a distinguished loyalist during the grand rebellion, as was also his brother and nephew, who were all engaged in active service in behalf of king Charles I. Sir William maintained two troops of horse and one company of foot at his own expence, and after his death, which happened in 1643, his family both acted and suffered in the royal cause.

PENNYMAN (Her.) the name of a family of Saxon origin, the pedigree of which was lost during the rebellion. Sir William Pennyman above-mentioned was the first baronet of the family, having been created by Charles I, but at his death the title became extinct, and was revived in 1663 in the person of his nephew, who had been previously knighted for his valour. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a chevron ermine, between three half spears broken, the staff or head argent.

Crest. In a mural crown gules, a lion's head erased or, pierced through with the neck of a broken spear, as in the arms.

Motto. "Fortiter et fideliter."

PENROSE, Thomas (Biog.) an English poet, was born in 1743, educated at Oxford, and died in 1779, leaving a number of poems, of which a collection was published after his death in 1781.

PENRUDDICK, John (Hist.) son of sir John Penruddick, of Wiltshire, was zealous in the cause of his sovereign during the rebellion, but, being defeated by colonel Croke, he was beheaded in 1655, in violation of an express promise of safety which had been given him.

PENRY, John (Ecc.) a coarse libeller against the hierarchy, who gave himself the name of Martin Mar-Prelate, was born in Wales in 1559, and, being condemned for felony, was executed in 1593, leaving a number of scurrilous pieces, which found many readers in that day.

PENTHESILEA (Myth.) Πενθεσίλεια, a queen of the Amazons, daughter of Mars by Otrera or Orithyra, came to assist Priam in the last years of the Trojan war, and was killed by Achilles. Dictys. Cret.; Dares. Phryg.; Hygin. Fab. 112; Senec. in Troad. 243; Justin. l. 2; Tzetz. in Lycoph.; Eustath. ad Hom. Odyss.

PENTHEUS (Myth.) Πενθεύς, son of Echion and Agave, and king of Thebes, in Bœotia, having offered an insult to the orgies of Bacchus, was fallen upon by the Bacchanalians and torn to pieces. Euripid. in Bacch.; Theocrit. Id. 26; Apollod. l. 3; Senec. in Phœnis.; Ovid. Met. l. 3.

PENTHILUS (Myth.) a son of Orestes by Erigone, the daughter of Ægystheus, reigned conjointly with his brother Tisamenus at Argos, but was driven from his throne some time after by the Heraclidæ. Strab. l. 13; Paus. l. 5; Paterc. l. 1.

PEPAGOMENUS (Biog.) vide Demetrius.

PEPIN (Hist.) surnamed the Short, or Little, first of the second race of French kings, son of Charles Martel, and brother of Carloman, was elected at Soissons in 752, and died in 768, at the age of 54, after having been very successful as a warrior. He divided his possessions between his two sons, Charlemagne and Carloman.

PEPIN, surnamed the Fat, mayor of the palace, governed Austrasia, Neustria, and Burgundy, and died in 714, after having acted more as a king than a minister for 27 years.

PEPIN, the son of Charlemagne, was crowned king of Italy in 781, and died in 810, after having been very successful against the Huns.

PEPIN, the name of two kings of Aquitania.

PEPIN I, son of Louis le Debonnaire, was made king in 817, headed the conspiracy against his father in 830, and died in 838.

PEPIN II, succeeded his brother, and assisted Lothaire, his uncle, but, being taken prisoner by Sancho, count of Gascony, he was finally delivered to the French, by whom he was shut up in prison in 864.

PEPUSCH, John Christopher (Biog.) a musician, and native of Berlin, was born about 1667, and died in 1752, after having acquired a high reputation as a theorist in music, and also as a performer on the harpsichord and organ.

PEPYS, Samuel (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was secretary to the admiralty in the reigns of Charles II and James II, to whose systematic arrangements the navy of Great Britain is greatly indebted for the superiority which it has since acquired. He died in 1703, leaving 'Memoirs,' &c. relating to the state of the navy.

PEPYS (Her.) the name of two families which enjoy the dignity and title of a baronet.

PEPYS of Box-Hill, co. Surrey, attained to this honour in the person of sir Lucas Pepys, physician to his majesty in 1783. This family bears the same arms as that of sir William Weller Pepys, created in 1801, who is descended from Richard Pepys, Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench in Ireland, of which family was Samuel Pepys abovementioned. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Sable, on a bend or, between two nags' heads erased argent, three fleurs-de-lis of the field.

Crest. A camel's head erased or, bridled, lined, ringed, and gorged with a ducal coronet sable.

Motto. "Mens cujusque is est quisque."

PERAU, Gabriel Louis Calabre (Biog.) a French author, who died in 1767, at the age of 67, is most known as the continuator of the 'Vies des Hommes illustres de la France,' begun by D'Auvigné, and carried on by him from the 13th vol. to the 23d.

PERCEVAL, Ascelin de (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, otherwise styled in history Ascelin Gouel, Gouel de Beheval, Gouel de Percheval, and Gouel de Ivery, also surnamed Lupus, or the Wolf, from the violence of his temper, was engaged in a desperate feud with the earl of Breteuil, from whom he took many castles, and also the earl himself a prisoner. He even withstood the power of Philip, king of France, and Robert, duke of Normandy, and made such stout resistance that they were contented to make peace with him.

PERCEVAL, Robert de, eldest son of the preceding, took up arms against king Henry I, in conjunction with other malcontents in Normandy; but being drawn from this association by a treaty with the king, he not only successfully supported the interests of his master against the rebels, but remained faithful to him ever after.

PERCEVAL, William Gouel de, surnamed Lupellus, second son of Ascelin, and brother to the preceding, was also at first engaged in arms against king Henry I, in Normandy; but afterwards making his peace with him, he settled mostly in England, where he acted a prominent part against Stephen, and in favour of Matilda. He is supposed to have founded or completed the castle of Kary, in the county of Somerset, the head of his barony in England.

PERCEVAL, Sir Walter, Lord of Eastbury, &c. signalized himself, though very young, at the battle of Crecy, and was knighted by the king in the field, but died at the age of 24.

PERCEVAL, Ralph, of another branch of the same family, intrigued with Henry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, to advance Richard, the duke of Gloucester, to the throne at the death of Edward IV, and afterwards perished at the battle of Bosworth Field.

PERCEVAL, Richard, a statesman of extraordinary talent, was early employed by lord Burleigh to discover the designs of the Spaniards in regard to their invasion of England, in which he succeeded so well as to rise in the favour and confidence of queen Elizabeth, whom he served until her death, and also her successor James I, and died in 1618.

PERCEVAL, Sir Philip, second son of the preceding, succeeded his father and brother in their several offices, and was admitted to the honour of being one of the Privy Council to Charles I. On the breaking out of the rebellion he was very active in Ireland in the royal cause, and contributed very materially to the defence of the country against the rebels, from whom he suffered much; notwithstanding which he was guilty of a defection from the cause of his sovereign, and died in 1647, in the service of the rebels, with whom he was in greater favour than with the royalists.

PERCEVAL, Sir John, Bart. son of the preceding, recommended himself by a politic conduct to the usurping powers, and having been mainly instrumental in recommending Richard Cromwell to resign his power, he was taken into favour at the restoration, sworn of the Privy Council to Charles II, and died in 1665.

PERCEVAL, Sir John, fifth baronet, and earl of Egmont. [Vide Egmont]

PERCEVAL, Spencer, second son of the second earl of Egmont by his second marriage, was born in 1762, and being bred to the law was successively Solicitor and Attorney General, from which latter post he was advanced to that of Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1807, constituted First Lord of the Treasury in 1809, and was assassinated in 1812, as he was entering the lobby of the House of Commons, when he was shot by a person of the name of Bellingham. [Vide Plate IX]

PERCEVAL (Her.) the name of a noble and illustrious family, distinguished no less by its antiquity than by its honours and possessions enjoyed in its different and numerous branches for many ages. They are supposed by the first earl of Egmont, in his genealogical account of his own family, to have sprung from Robert, a younger son of Eudes, sovereign duke of Britany in France. Out of which province they were transplanted into Normandy, probably before the Conquest, as at that period they were in possession of the Castle of Yvery, and invested with the hereditary office of Chief Butler in that duchy. Two of this family, namely, Roger and Robert de Yvery, came over with the conqueror, the latter of whom was the progenitor of the present earl of Egmont, whose family name of Perceval was derived from Ascelin de Percheval above-mentioned, although the name of Perceval has belonged ever since to two noble families in Britany, namely, the lords of Mezernou and Kerenmear. This Ascelin, being also called Lupus, on account of the fierceness of his temper, his son William Gouel de Perceval was called Lupellus, which being assumed also by his descendants, became softened down into Lovel, whence John Lovel, lord of Dockinge, in Norfolk, had summons by the title of lord Lovel, in the 41st of Henry III; and John, the seventh lord Lovel, obtained the title of lord Holland in right of his wife Maud, daughter of Robert, lord Holland, which titles were forfeited by the attainder of Francis, fifth lord Lovel and Holland; but from Richard, the fifth or youngest son of William Gouel de Perceval, (the first who was called Lovel,) descended sir John Perceval above-mentioned, lord of Tickenham, Rolleston, and Burton, co. Somerset, and of Dulhallow, &c. in Ireland, who was created a baronet in 1661; and sir John Perceval, the fifth baronet, was advanced in 1714 to the title of baron Perceval of Burton, in 1722 viscount Perceval, and in 1733 earl of Egmont. In the person of his son John, the second earl, was revived in 1762 the old title of Lovel and Holland. [Vide Egmont] Charles George Perceval, the eldest son of this second earl, by his second lady Catherine Compton, succeeded to the title of his mother, who in 1770 was created lady Arden, baroness Arden of Lohart Castle, co. Cork, in Ireland. [Vide Arden]

Perceval, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Egmont.

PERCIVAL, Thomas (Biog.) a physician, was born at Warrington, in 1740, and died in 1804, leaving a number of works on medical subjects, which were collected and published in 4 vols. 8vo. 1807.

PERCY, William, Lord de (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was in great favour with the Conqueror, whom he attended into England; and going afterwards, with other Norman chieftains under their duke Robert, in the first crusade in 1096, he died at a place near Jerusalem called Mount Joy.

Percy, Alan, Lord de, son of the preceding, obtained the name of the Great Alan for his great exploits. He had a natural son, named Alan de Percy the Bastard, who particularly distinguished himself in the famous battle of the Standard in 1138, when he fought beneath the Scottish banners under king David, to support the title of the empress Maude against Stephen.

Percy, Henry, Earl of Northumberland, vide Northumberland.

Percy, Sir Thomas, Knt. Earl of Worcester, vide Worcester.

Percy, Sir Henry, son of the first earl of Northumberland, who obtained the appellation of Hotspur, from the furious heat of his incursions upon the Scotch borders, was born in 1364, and after having early displayed his martial prowess against the enemies of his country as one of the greatest captains of his age, joined his uncle, the earl of Worcester, in his rebellious project against Henry IV, and fell in the battle of Shrewsbury in 3 Hen. IV.

Percy, Sir Ralph, seventh son of Henry, second earl of Northumberland, was like the rest of his family a stout asserter of the Lancastrian cause, and was slain fighting valiantly at the battle of Hedgeley Moor, in Northumberland, against lord Montacute, king Edward's general, in 1464, for which he was attainted by Parliament 4 Edw. IV.

Percy, Sir Richard, younger brother of the preceding, was born in 1426, and was slain at the battle of Towton Field in 1461, with his eldest brother the third earl of Northumberland.

Percy, Sir William, Knt. second son of Henry, fourth earl of Northumberland, was one of the commanders at Flodden Field, and contributed to the decisive victory gained there over the Scots in 1513, but was afterwards engaged in the insurrection under sir Robert Aske in 1536, called the Pilgrimage of Grace, for which his nephew, sir Thomas Percy, was executed; but what became of sir William Percy is not known.

Percy, Sir Charles, Knt. fourth son of Henry, eighth earl of Northumberland, distinguished himself in the Low Countries, and although concerned in the insurrection of the earl of Essex, yet he obtained the queen's pardon, and was sent by the Council in 1602 to notify to James I the death of Elizabeth.

Percy, Thomas (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, and a descendant from the earls of Northumberland, was born at Bridgenorth, in Shropshire, in 1728, educated at Oxford, and after various preferments was nominated in 1782 to the see of Dromore, where he died in 1811, leaving among other works, as an author, 'Reliques of Ancient Poetry;' 'Five Pieces of Runic Poetry,' &c.; 'A Key to the New Testament,' &c.

Percy (Her.) the name of a family which is descended from one of the Norman chieftains that came over with the Conqueror, the name being in all probability derived from one of the places, of which there are three, called Percy, in Normandy, which it may be supposed was their chief place of residence. Some have derived the name from the circumstance of one of them piercing a king of Scotland's eye at the siege of Alnwick; but this accident, which is said to have happened to Malcolm III, in the reign of William Rufus, was occasioned by a person of the name of Hammond, who had no connexion whatever with the Percy family; whereas the name of De Percy stands among the most distinguished in the list of Norman chieftains, who assisted in obtaining the English crown for the Conqueror, and continually occurs in Doomsday-book, which was drawn up in that king's reign. William de Percy, the companion of king William above-mentioned, is said in the genealogical account of this family to have been descended from Mainfred, a Danish chieftain, who made irruptions into France before the year 886; and the first race of the lord Percys descended from him terminated in a female, namely, Agnes de Percy, second daughter of the third lord William de Percy, who was married to Josceline de Louvain, brother to queen Adelicia, second wife of king Henry I. From this Josceline, who assumed the name and arms of Percy, descended Henry de Percy, who was first lord Percy of Alnwick, by purchasing the barony of Alnwick, co. Northumberland. Henry Percy, fourth lord, was advanced in 1377 to the dignity of earl of Northumberland, which title, after having been forfeited and restored more than once, became extinct in 1670, at the death of Josceline, the eleventh earl of Northumberland, whose only surviving daughter, and sole heiress, lady Elizabeth Percy, succeeded to the baronial honours of her ancestors, and was in her own right baroness Percy, Lucy, Poynings, Fitz-Payne, Bryan, and Latimer. The title of earl of Northumberland was revived in 1749, in the person of Algernon, seventh duke of Somerset, son of the abovementioned lady Elizabeth Percy, by Charles, duke of Somerset, and devolved at his death to sir Hugh Smithson, bart. who assumed the name and arms of Percy in consequence of his marriage with lady Elizabeth Seymour, daughter of the fore-mentioned Algernon, duke of Somerset. His lordship was further advanced to the dignities of an earl and a duke, by the style and title of earl Percy and duke of Northumberland. His second son, lord Algernon Percy, succeeded to his father's title of lord Louvain, and was created in 1790 earl of Beverley; and lord Algernon Percy, second son of the second duke of Northumberland, was in 1816 created baron Prudhoe, of Prudhoe Castle. Sir Thomas Percy, knt. brother of the first earl of Northumberland, was created in 1397 earl of Worcester, which title became extinct at his death; and sir Thomas Percy, knt. fifth son of Henry, second earl of Northumberland, was in 1449 created baron Egremont; but the title was not continued in his family.

Percy, Earl, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the duke of Northumberland.

PERDICCAS (Hist.) the name of three kings of Macedonia.

Perdiccas I, succeeded Thurimas in the fourth year of the sixteenth Olympiad, A. C. 713, and died after a reign of 48 years. Justin. l. 7.

Perdiccas II, succeeded Alexander I in the 86th Olympiad, A. C. 436, and died after a reign of 23 years, in which he took part with the Athenians against the Lacedæmonians. Thucyd. l. 3, &c.; Diodor. l. 12.

Perdiccas III, third son of Amyntas, reigned six years after his brothers Alexander and Ptolemy, and was killed in battle against the Illyrians in the 103d Olympiad, A. C. 358.

Perdiccas, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, who at his death aimed at being his successor; but was assassinated in Egypt by some of his own officers, while engaged in an expedition against Ptolemy Lagus. Diod. l. 17, &c.; C. Nep. in Eum.; Q. Curt. l. 10; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 12; Justin. l. 13.

PEREFIXE, Hardouin de Beaumont de (Ecc.) archbishop of Paris, who died in 1670, wrote 'L'Histoire de

Henri IV,' which was published in 12mo. Amsterdam, 1661, reprinted in 1664, and at different times since; but the edition of 1749 is the most common; also 'Institutio Principis,' 16mo. 1647.

PERGA (Bibl.) Πέργη, the city described under Geography, which St. Paul visited in his journeyings. Acts xiii. 14.

Perga (Geog.) or Perge, now Pergi, a town of Pamphylia, between the rivers Caractes and Caystrus, where Diana had a magnificent temple. It was the birth-place of the mathematician Apollonius. Cic. in Verr. 1; Strab. l. 14; Mel. l. 1; Plin. l. 5; Dionys. Perieg. v. 854.

Perga (Numis.) this town is distinguished on medals by the inscription—ΠΕΡΓΑ. ΠΕΡΓΑΙΩΝ; frequently with the addition of Artemis, the surname of Diana, and the titles of Asylum and Sacer, as ΠΕΡΓΑΙΑΣ ΑΡΤΕΜΙΔΟΣ ΑΣΥΛΟΥ ΙΕΡΟC. It also received the dignity of the Neocoria, as ΠΕΡΓΑΙΩΝ ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ. Perga struck medals as an independent state, and also in honour of Augustus, Claudius, Nerva, Trajan, Plotina and Matidia, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, L. Verus, Sept. Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Geta, Diadumenianus, Alexander Severus, Julia Mamæa, Maximinus, Gordianus Pius, Tranquillina, Philip, sen., Philip, jun., Trebonianus Gallus, Volusianus, Gallienus and Salonina, Saloninus, Valerian, and Aurelian. Its common type is a temple, intended to represent the temple of Diana, for which it was renowned. Vaillant. Græc.; Patin. Imp.

PERGAMO (Geog.) a town of Asiatic Turkey, the ancient Pergamus, situated about 15 miles up the Gremakli, the ancient Caicus. Lon. 27° E. lat. 39° 11′ N. [Vide Pergamus]

PERGAMUS (Bibl.) the city described under Geography, whose angel, or bishop, is addressed by our Saviour in the Revelations, ii. 13.

Pergamus (Geog.) Πέργαμος, or Pergamum, Πέργαμον, the famous citadel of Troy, from which Xerxes reviewed his troops as they were passing into Greece. Herodot. l. 7, c. 43; Virg. Æn. l. 1; Horat. l. 1, od. 16, v. 36; Propert. l. 2, el. 1; Ovid. Met. l. 12, v. 445, &c.; Flacc. l. 2, &c.

Pergamus, now Pergamo, a town of Troas, in Asia, situated on the Caycus, and capital of a kingdom of the same name, which was founded A. M. 3752, A. C. 283, by Philæterus, a eunuch, whom Lysimachus had entrusted with the treasures which he had obtained in war. Philæterus was succeeded by his nephew Eumenes, A. C. 263; Attalus, 241; Eumenes II, 197; Attalus Philadelphus, 159; Attalus Philometor, 138, who in 133 left the Roman people heir to his kingdom. This city was famous for a library of not less than 200,000 volumes, which afterwards went to enlarge the collection of the Alexandrine library. Parchment was first invented at Pergamus, and was on that account called Charta Pergamena. Galen, the physician, and Apollodorus, the mythologist, were natives of this city. Liv. l. 29; Strab. l. 13; Plin. l. 5.

Pergamus (Numis.) this city is distinguished on medals by the inscriptions—ΠΕΡ. — ΠΕΡΓΑΜ. — ΠΕΡΓΑΜΟC. — ΠΕΡΓΑΜΗΝΩΝ, with the addition of its dignities of the Neocoria, and the primacy of Asia; also of the name of its magistrates, as ΕΠΙ CΤΡ. ΚΑ. ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ. ΘΕΟΛΟΓ. ΠΕΡΓΑΜΕΝΩΝ ΠΡΩΤΩΝ Γ. ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ, i. e. Sub Prætore Claudio Alexandro Theologo Pergamenorum Primorum Ter Neocorum; to which was added, ΟΛΥΜΠΙΑ. ΠΥΘΙΑ, or both. Sometimes they likewise distinguished their alliances on their medals, as ΕΠΙ CΤΡΑ. ΔΙΟΔΩΡΟΥ ΠΕΡΓΑΜΗΝΩΝ ΕΦΕσίων, i. e. Sub Prætore Diodoro Pergamenorum et Ephesiorum scilicet concordia.—ΕΦΕCΙΩΝ CΜΥΡ. ΠΕΡΓΑΜ. i. e. Ephesiorum, Smyrnæorum, et Pergamenor. concordia. This town struck medals in honour of Mithridates Eupator, bearing his effigy, and the inscription—ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΜΙΘΡΙΔΑΤΟΥ ΕΥΠΑΤΟΡΟΣ; also as an independent state, and in honour of the emperors or empresses Julius Cæsar, Augustus, Livia, Tiberius, Germanicus, Caligula, Nero, and Agrippina, Domitian, Domitia, Julia, Nerva, Trajan, Plotina, Adrian, Sabina, L. He likewise wrote 'Le Cabinet des Beaux Arts,' &c.; 'Courses de Têtes et de Bagues Faites par le Roi,' &c.; 'Parallèle des Anciens et des Modernes,' &c. 4 vols. 12mo. &c. Peter, an elder brother of the two preceding, published 'De l'Origine des Fontaines; and Nicholas, a younger brother, and doctor of the Sorbonne, who died in 1661, left behind him a work entitled 'La Morale des Jesuits, extraite fidelement de leurs Livres.'

PERRENOT, Anthony (Ecc.) the family name of cardinal de Granville. [Vide Granville]

PERRERS, Alice (Hist.) a lady who was so much in favour with Edward III, as to have been taken for his concubine. At his death she was charged with having abused his confidence for her own private gain, and was sentenced to be banished, but on her marriage with sir William de Windsor, this sentence was reversed. She died in 1400.

PERRIER, Francis (Biog.) a French artist, who was born at Maçon in 1590, and died in 1655, excelled in etching antiquities. He also executed some of Raphael's works with great spirit.

PERRIER, Charles, a French poet, and native of Aix, who died in 1692, excited the spleen of Boileau, although his Latin poems have been well spoken of.

PERRING (Her.) the name of a family of Devonshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1808 on sir John Perring, bart.; the arms, &c. of which are as follow: Arms. Or, on a chevron azure, three pines slipped reversed vert, as many leopards' faces.

Crest. A pine leaved proper.

PERRON, James Davy Du (Ecc.) a cardinal, descended from Protestant parents, who, having recommended himself to king Henry III and IV, was, in consequence of his zeal in favour of the Romish church, raised to the archbishopric of Sens, by the latter monarch, who procured him a cardinal's cap from Clement VIII. He had afterwards a share in the election of the popes Leo X and Paul V, and died in 1618, at the age of 63, leaving a number of works, which were collected after his death, and published at Paris, in 3 vols. fol. in 1620 and 1622.

PERRONET, John Rodolphus (Biog.) a French architect, was born in 1708, and died at Paris in 1794, leaving many specimens of his skill in fine bridges and roads, &c.; but particularly in the canal of Burgundy. He wrote a Description of the Bridges he had built, and a Memoir on the Method of constructing Arches, &c.

PERROT, Sir John (Hist.) a statesman, descended from a respectable family in Pembrokeshire, was born about 1527, rose into considerable favour with Edward VI, but fell into disgrace with Mary, at whose death he was recalled to court, and appointed in 1583 Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, but recalled for mal-administration in 1588, when he was tried and condemned for high treason. His sentence was, however, respited, and he died the same year in the Tower.

PERROT, Nicholas (Biog.) Sieur d'Ablancourt, a French author, was born in 1606, and died in 1664, after having returned to the Protestant religion, which he had once left. He translated several of the Greek and Latin historians into French, and wrote a Discourse on the Immortality of the Soul.

PERRY, John (Biog.) a captain and engineer, who died in 1738, wrote, among other things, 'The State of Russia under the present Czar,' &c.; and 'An Account of the stopping of Dagenham Breach,' &c.

PERSEPHONE (Myth.) another name for Proserpine.

PERSEPOLIS (Geog.) a celebrated city, the capital of the Persian empire, situated on the river Araxes, was laid in ruins by Alexander; some vestiges of its former grandeur are still existing on its site, which is now called Estakar, or Chehel-minar. Diodor. l. 17; Q. Curt. l. 5; Justin. l. 11.

PERSEUS (Myth.) Περσεὺς, a son of Jupiter and Danae, the daughter of Acrisius, who, as soon as he was born, was thrown into the sea in order to frustrate the oracle, which had declared that Acrisius should perish by the hands of his daughter's son. Danae and her child were rescued from the waves, and after passing through various adventures, he was at length led to the coasts of Peloponnesus, where, while engaged in throwing the quoit at the public games, he had the misfortune to kill a man, who proved to be his grandfather Acrisius. Perseus is renowned for having procured the Gorgon's head, and also the release of Andromeda from the sea-monster to which she was exposed. Hom. Il. l. 14; Hesiod. Theog. v. 270; Herod. l. 2; Pind. Pyth. od. 7; Apollon. Arg. l. 4; Ovid. Met. l. 4, &c.

PERSEUS (Hist.) a son of Philip, king of Macedonia, distinguished himself like his father by his enmity to the Romans, but being routed by the Roman general Paulus Æmilius, near the walls of Pydna, A.C. 168, he was taken in his flight and lead in triumph through the streets of Rome. His youngest son Alexander, was hired to a carpenter, and afterwards rose to be secretary to the senate. Cic. Tusc. l. 5; Liv. l. 40; Justin. l. 33; Plut. in Paral.; Flor. l. 2.

PERSEUS (Numis.) medals are extant representing this prince and his two sons, with their hands bound behind them, commemorative of their capture, and being led in triumph by Paulus Æmilius. Others represent his effigy as in the annexed figure; inscription, ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΠΕΡΣΕΑΣ.

PERSIA (Geog.) a celebrated kingdom of Asia, which in its ancient state extended from the Hellespont to the Indus, above 2800 miles, and from Pontus to the shores of Arabia above 2000 miles.

Boundaries and Division. Modern Persia, called by the inhabitants Farsi, or Farsistan, is bounded on the N. by Georgia, the Caspian Sea, and Usbec Tartary, W. by Turkey and Arabia, S. by the Gulfs of Persia, Ormus, and the Arabian Sea, and E. by Hindostan. It is divided into the provinces of Servan, Kilan, Dilemont, &c. which comprehend the ancient Media; Khoeme comprehending the ancient Margiana, and a part of Parthia; Chorasan, Irak, Chusistan, the former Susiana; Persia or Farsi, Kerman, and Sisislan, the ancient Caramania; Macheran, Candahar, and Sablestan, the ancient Gedrosia, Arachosia and Drangiana; Tabarestan and Gordian, where was the ancient Hyrcania.

Chief Towns. Ispahan the capital, Casbin, Tauris, Ormus, Cassian, Cherman, Comshiras, &c.

Rivers. The rivers, such as the Euphrates, Tigris, Cyrus, Araxes, Oxus, and Hindmend, belong properly to the frontiers of Persia, the interior of the country consisting of a dry salt plain.

Mountains. The mountains, of which the Caucasus is the principal, also border upon Persia, rather than traverse the country.

History. The empire of Persia, or the Persian monarchy, first rose to distinction under Cyrus the Great about 536 years A. C. although history makes mention of Achemenes, his grandfather, and Cambyses his father, as kings of Persia. The successors of Cyrus are as follow:

Chronological succession of the Kings of Ancient Persia.

Kings.	A. C.	Kings.	A. C.
Cyrus	536	Xerxes II	425
Cambyses	529	Sogdianus	424
Smerdis the impostor	529	Darius II	423
Darius	521	Artaxerxes II	404
Xerxes	485	Artaxerxes III	358
Artabanus	463	Arses	337
Artaxerxes Longimanus	464	Darius III	335

This last Darius, surnamed Codomanus, being conquered by Alexander the Great, the destruction of the Persian monarchy was the consequence; after which Persia became tributary successively to the Greeks and the Parthians, and remained under the yoke of this latter people for nearly 500 years, until about the 230th year of the Christian æra, when Artaxares or Artaxerxes, a private soldier of obscure birth, restored the monarchy; the following is a list of the Persian kings of this race:

Chronological succession of the Kings of Persia of the Middle Age.

Kings.	Began to Reign. A. D.	Reigned.
Artaxerxes	229	13 years.
Sapor I	242	31

Yesdegirdes or Isdegerdes III, the last king of the race of the ancient Persians, having lost his life in a battle gained by the Arabians, the latter became masters of this country in the year of the Hegira 31, A. D. 641, when it was governed by the caliphs of Bagdad until the reign of the caliph Al Mamûn, in the year of the Hegira 205, A. D. 815, when Thaher founded the dynasty of the Thaherides, which lasted 56 years, comprehending the reign of five or six kings or princes. They were succeeded by the Soffarides, including three princes, then the Sammanians, including nine princes, in the space of 110 years; the Gaznevides, including 14 princes, within 155 years; the Gaurides, including five princes, in 64 years; the Khovaresmians, including four princes in 18 years; the Moguls under 13 princes, of whom Jenghis Khan was the first, within 108 years; the Timurides, or descendants of Timur or Tamerlane, of whom there were three beside himself; who were succeeded by the dynasties of the Black and White Sheep, of whom Morad Beg was the last, who was killed by Ismael Sophi in the year of the Hegira 920, A. D. 1530, since which period the following princes have reigned in Persia:

Amst. 1703; 'Uranologion sive Systema variorum Authorum qui de Sphæra, &c. commentati sunt,' fol. ibid. 1630; 'Tabulæ Chronologicæ Regum Dynastarum,' &c.; 'Rationarium Temporum,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1633, 1724, 1745, &c.; besides many theological works, and an edition of Themistius, Synesius, Nicephorus, &c. [Vide Plate XXVI]

PETER (Bibl.) Πέτρος, the apostle, the son of John, Jona, or Joanna, and brother of Andrew, was born at Bethsaida, dwelt with his mother-in-law at Capernaum, on the lake of Gennesereth, was one of the first who was called by our Saviour to be his follower, and afterwards his apostle, and taking a distinguished part in the establishment of the Christian church in different parts, he suffered martyrdom by crucifixion, at Rome, on the same day and in the same place where St. Paul was beheaded, in the reign of Nero. Peter is said to have founded the churches of Antioch and Rome, and to have presided over the first as its bishop for seven years, and over the second for twenty-five; but from the silence of Paul in his Epistle to the Romans, relative to the presence of Peter there, and from the silence of Peter himself in his Epistle, as also from other circumstances mentioned in Scripture and Ecclesiastical History, this supposition is more than doubtful; yet on this slender foundation rests the monstrous pretension of the see of Rome to supremacy over all princes, temporal as well as spiritual, whereby the peace of the church has been grievously disturbed, and the cause of religion materially injured. Matt. viii. &c.; Mark i.; Luke iv.; John i.; Acts i. &c.; Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 7; Euseb. Hist. Eccles. et Chron.; Chrysost. in Genes.; Hieron. De Vir. illust.; Niceph. l. 2.

PETER (Hist.) the name of some emperors and kings.

Emperors of Constantinople.

PETER, eldest son of Peter of France, was elected emperor in 1214, after the death of Henry de Hainault, and being seized by Theodore Comnenus, prince of Epirus, while on gaged at the siege of Durazzo, he was put to death by his order in 1218, after having given signal proofs of his valour as a soldier. Georgius, Acropolita, Nicephorus, Gregoras, &c.

Czars of Russia.

Peter, Alexiowitz, surnamed the Great, son of Alexis Michaelowitz, was born in 1672, succeeded his brother Theodore when he was only 10 years of age, to the exclusion of his elder brother Iwan, and died in 1725 in his 53d year, after a reign rendered glorious by the improvements and civilization which he introduced into his country. He is also celebrated as the successful rival of Charles XII, king of Sweden, whose army, after having himself experienced repeated defeats, he totally routed at the battle of Pultowa in 1700, and compelled the king to seek his safety in flight. [Vide Plate II] The czar wrote several things on naval affairs.

Peter, Alexiowitz II, son of Alexis Petrowitz, and grandson of the preceding, was declared grand duke of Russia in 1726, succeeded the empress Catherine the next year at the age of 13, and died at the age of 15, after having banished the celebrated minister Menzikoff into Siberia.

Peter III, son of Anne Petrowna, the eldest daughter of Peter the Great, and Charles Frederick, duke of Holstein Gottorp, was born in 1728, declared grand duke of Russia in 1742, and succeeded his aunt the empress Elizabeth in 1761, but was dethroned the next year by his empress Catherine, who governed Russia under the name of Catherine II. Peter died seven days after his degradation.

Kings of Arragon.

Peter I, succeeded his father Sancho I in 1094, and died in 1104, after a reign of 10 years, in which he was successful against the Moors.

Peter II, succeeded his father Alphonsus II in 1196, and was killed in 1213, after a reign of 17 years.

Peter III, succeeded his father James I in 1276, and died of a wound received in battle in 1285, against Charles of Valois. He is said to have been instrumental in the massacre of the French in Sicily, called the Sicilian Vespers.

Peter IV, succeeded his father Alphonsus IV in 1335, and died in 1387.

King of Castille.

Peter the Cruel, succeeded his father Alphonsus XI in 1350, but, owing to his cruelties, he found a formidable rival in Henry, count de Trastamaire, his natural brother, who, in 1369, drove him from the throne, which, however, by the assistance of the English, he succeeded in recovering; but Henry, supported by the French, gained a victory over him, and put him to death soon after. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

Other Kings and Princes of this Name.

Peter, surnamed the German, succeeded his uncle St. Stephen in 1038, but was deposed and had his eyes put out by his rebellious subjects in 1044, after having been previously driven from his throne, and re-established by the emperor Henry III.

Peter, king of Cyprus, of the house of Lusignan, succeeded his father Hugh in 1360, but was assassinated by his own brother in 1369. He left a son, Peter, who died in 1682, being then a minor.

Peter, the name of two kings of Portugal.

Peter I, succeeded his father Alphonsus IV in 1357, and died in 1367.

Peter II, succeeded his father, John IV, in 1667, after having, with the assistance of his sister-in-law, Elizabeth Frances, the queen, procured the deposition of his brother Alphonsus Henry, on the ground of his incapacity to govern. He died in 1706, in the 59th year of his age.

Peter of Arragon, succeeded his father Frederic, son of Peter III, king of Arragon, in 1337, and died in 1342.

Peter of France, seventh and last son of Louis the Fat, distinguished himself in the Holy Land, where he died in 1182, at the age of 63.

Peter de Dreux, duke of Britany, surnamed Mauclerc, defended the city of Nantes with great valour, which was besieged in 1213 by John king of England; but, after the death of Louis VIII, he joined in the league against Blanche, the queen regent, and entered into an alliance with the English. He, however, made his peace with St. Louis, and served him faithfully and bravely against all his enemies in 1250.

Peter, a prince of Portugal, third son of John I, was made regent of the kingdom at the death of his brother Edward, and attempted to deprive his nephew, Alphonsus V, of the throne, but was killed in battle in 1449.

Peter, surnamed the Little Charlemagne, seventh son of Thomas I, succeeded Boniface as count of Savoy, to the prejudice of his nephews, in 1263, and died in 1268, at the age of 64.

Peter, St. (Ecc.) succeeded Theonas as bishop of Alexandria in 300, and was beheaded in 310. He formed the penitential canons, and left some letters, which are preserved in Theodoret.

Peter, another bishop of Alexandria, and successor to S. Athanasius in 373, was elected by the Catholics, whose cause he had maintained in conjunction with his predecessor, and was sometime after driven from his see by the Arians, but returned to it in 377, and died in 381. He wrote an Epistle, preserved in Theodoret, on the persecution of the Catholics by their enemies.

Peter, bishop of Jerusalem, succeeded John in 525, and died in 546, after having held a council in Palestine about 536.

Peter, a martyr of Lampsacus, suffered by beheading in the persecution of Decius with S. Andrew, S. Paul, and S. Dionysius.

Peter, Chrysologus, archbishop of Ravenna in 433, died in 458, leaving several works, which were edited in fol. Venet. 1750, and August. 1758.

Peter, surnamed Damianus, a cardinal, and bishop of Ostia, was raised to these dignities by Stephen X in 1057, and died in 1073, after having been employed on many important concerns. His works have been published in four volumes at Lyons in 1623, and at Paris in 1663.

Peter de Clugni (Biog.) surnamed the Venerable, descended from the family of counts Maurice, who died in 1156 left several Letters and other works, which were published with the notes of Duchesne in 1614. It was he who received the celebrated Abelard in his troubles.

Peter, Comestor, or, the Eater, a French ecclesiastic, who died in 1198, was the author of 'Scholastica Historia super Nov. Test,' and other works. A universal history, entitled 'Catena Temporum,' published in 2 vols. fol. Lubec. 1475, is attributed to him.

Peter Blesensis, or Peter de Biois, a writer, who died archdeacon of London in 1200, left several Letters, Sermons, and other works, of which an edition in folio was published by Peter de Gussanville in 1667, which is said to be the best.

PETERBOROUGH, Henry, second Earl of (Hist.) of the family of Mordaunt [vide Mordaunt], distinguished himself during the rebellion in behalf of king Charles I, and, raising a regiment at his own expence, was wounded at the battle of Newbury; and, after suffering in his person and his property for his loyalty, he lived to see the restoration of the lawful government, when he was appointed governor of Tangier, in Africa, where he remained till 1663. He afterwards carried the sceptre with the cross at the coronation of king James II, but did not accede to the principles of the revolution, and died in the communion of the Church of Rome in 1697.

PETERBOROUGH, Charles, third Earl of, and first Earl of Monmouth, the illustrious son of John Mordaunt, viscount Mordaunt, of whom honourable mention has been made under the name of Mordaunt, served in his youth under the earl of Torrington and admiral Narborough in the Mediterranean, during the war with the state of Algiers; engaged warmly in the cause of the prince of Orange, of whose Privy Council he was sworn immediately on the accession of king William. He continued to hold this post under queen Anne, by whom he was declared, in 1705, General and Commander-in-Chief of the forces sent to Spain, and, after having rendered his name memorable by his exploits in that country, he died in 1735, at the age of 77. [Vide Plate XIV]

PETERBOROUGH and MONMOUTH, Earl (Her.) vide Mordaunt.

PETERS, Hugh (Hist.) a puritanical rebel, whose atrocities have been palliated by the name of fanaticism, was educated at Cambridge, from which he is said to have been expelled for irregular behaviour, betook himself first to the stage, and afterwards procured ordination, but, being prosecuted for a criminal conversation with another man's wife, he fled to Rotterdam, where he became a preacher for some time, and afterwards went to America, whence he returned to England to act his part in the outrages which were then committing against the authority and person of the king, to whom he became a gaoler, and for whose death he was one of the most violent declaimers. At the restoration he expiated his crimes on the gallows with the rest of the regicides.

PETERS, Charles (Biog.) an English divine, and native of Cornwall, was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree in 1713, and died at an advanced age in 1774, leaving 'A Critical Dissertation on the Book of Job,' 4to.; besides some Sermons.

PETERSBURGH, St. (Geog.) the capital of the Russian empire, situated at the eastern extremity of the Gulf of Finland, at the mouth of the river Neva, 435 m. E. by N. Stockholm, 1400 E. N. E. London. Lon. 30° 18′ E. lat. 59° 50′ N. This city was founded by Peter the Great to be the imperial residence, and is rendered in modern Latin Petropolis.

'A Catalogue of Mr. Ray's English Herbal,' &c. His lists and catalogues becoming scarce were collected and published in 2 vols. fol. 1767.

PETRARCH, Francis (Biog.) an Italian writer and poet of the first rank, who was born in Tuscany in 1304, and died in 1374, is now principally remembered by his rapturous passion for his mistress Laura, which he expressed in poetry of peculiar sweetness, although by some this Laura has been considered as the object of his own imagination, while others on the other hand have not hesitated to maintain that she was a married woman. His works, consisting of his Latin and Italian poems, and also treatises, 'De Remediis utriusque Fortunæ;' 'De Otio Religiosorum;' 'De Verâ Sapientiâ,' &c. have been printed in 4 vols. fol. Of his poems the best edition is that of Venice, 2 vols. 4to. 1756. His life has been written by 26 different authors, of which the most esteemed are those by Muratori, Abbé De Sade, and Mrs. Dobson. [Vide Plate XXVII]

PETRE, Sir William (Hist.) a statesman, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born at Exeter about the beginning of Henry VIII's reign, educated at Oxford, and growing soon into the favour of Henry, he was employed by him on various important transactions, particularly in what regarded the dissolution of religious houses; and afterwards was equally in the favour and confidence of Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth, to which two latter he acted in the capacity of principal Secretary of State; besides which he was Privy Councillor to Elizabeth, and was seven times ambassador in foreign lands. He died in 1572, after having augmented Exeter College with lands to the value of 100*l.* per annum.

PETRE (Her.) the name of a family, of which the most distinguished member was sir William Petre above-mentioned. His son John was advanced to the dignity of a baron of this realm in 1603, by the title of baron Petre of Wittle, co. Essex. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

PETTY (Her.) the name of a family which became distinguished in the person of sir William Petty above-mentioned, whose eldest son Charles was advanced in 1689 to the dignity of baron Shelburne; but this title became extinct at his death in 1696. It was revived, however, in the person of his brother Henry, who was created in 1699 baron of Shelburne, co. Wexford, viscount Dunkerron, co. Kerry, and in 1719 earl of Shelburne. These titles became again extinct at the death of this nobleman in 1751; but John Fitz-Maurice, his nephew, and fifth son of Thomas, earl of Kerry, was created in the same year baron of Dunkerron, and viscount Fitz-Maurice, and in 1753 earl of Shelburne. He was also in 1761 promoted to the dignity of a peer of Great Britain, by the style and title of lord Wycombe, baron of Chipping-Wycombe; and his son William, the second earl of Shelburne, was in 1784 advanced to the dignity of marquis of Lansdown.

PETTYT (Biog.) or Petyt, William, a lawyer and antiquarian, was born in 1636, and died in 1707, at the age of 71, leaving 'Ancient Rights of the Commons of England, in a Discourse, proving by Records, &c. that they were ever an essential Part of Parliament,' which gave rise to different replies and rejoinders, as 'Jani Anglorum facies nova,' &c. 8vo. 1680, said to be written by Mr. Atwood; 'A full Answer to a Book written by William Petit, Esq. &c. 'Jus Anglorum ab antiquo," &c. 8vo. 1681, &c. Besides this work Mr. Pettyt published his 'Miscellanea Parliamentaria,' 12mo. 1680, 1681; and 'Jus Parliamentarium,' &c.

PEUCER, Gaspard (Biog.) a physician and mathematician, was born at Bautzen, in Lusatia, in 1525, and died in 1602, leaving 'De præcipuis Divinationum generibus,' 4to. 1584; 'Vitæ Illustrium Medicorum;' 'Hypotheses Astronomicæ,' &c.

PEVENSEY, Viscount (Her.) the title borne by the eldest son of the earl of Sheffield.

PEUTINGER, Conrad (Biog.) a scholar, and native of Augsburg, was born in 1465, and died in 1547, leaving a curious Chart of the Roman Roads, called after him the 'Tabula Peuteringia;' also 'De Inclinatione Romani Imperii,' &c.; 'Romanæ Vetustatis Fragmenta,' &c. fol. Mogunt. 1528; 'De Rebus Gothorum,' fol. Basil. 1531.

PEYER, John Conrad (Biog.) an anatomist of Schaffhausen in the 17th century, wrote 'Exercitatio Anatomico-Medica de Glandulis Intestinorum,' &c.

PEYRERA, Isaac la (Biog.) a French writer, who was born of Protestant parents, at Bourdeaux, in 1592, and died in 1676, in the profession of the Romish faith, was the author of 'Une Relation de la Groenland;' 'Une Relation d'Islande;' 'Rappel des Juifs,' &c.

PFEFFERCORN, John (Biog.) a converted Jew in the 16th century, who wrote 'De Abolendis Judæorum Scriptis,' &c.

PFEIFER, Augustus (Biog.) an Oriental scholar, was born at Lawenburg in 1640, and died in 1698, leaving 'Pausophia Mosaica;' 'Critica Sacra;' 'De Masora,' &c.

PHÆACIA (Geog.) the ancient name for Corcyra.

PHÆDON (Biog.) Φαίδων, a philosopher of Elis, originally a slave, and one of the disciples of Socrates, retired to his native place after the death of his master, and founded a school of philosophy. Plato gave the name of Phædon, in honour of him, to one of his dialogues.

PHÆDRA (Myth.) Φαίδρα, a daughter of Minos and Pasiphae, and wife of Theseus, by whom she became mother of Acamas and Demophoon. Having conceived a passion for Hippolytus, the son of Theseus by the Amazon Hippolyte, which he refused to return, she charged him with attempts on her virtue; for which he was banished by his father, and destroyed at his request by Neptune, and in consequence of his tragical end she hung herself in despair. This fable is the subject of one of the tragedies of Euripides and Seneca. Eurip. et Senec. in Hippol.; Diodor. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 47; Ovid. Heroid. 4; Plut. in Thes.; Paus. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 6.

PHÆDRUS (Biog.) Φαίδρος, one of the disciples of Socrates, whose name Plato has given to one of his dialogues. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1.

PHÆDRUS, a Thracian, and one of the freedmen of the emperor Augustus, translated into Iambic verses the Fables of Æsop, which were first discovered and published by Peter Pithou, at Troyes, in 1596, and several times since; the edition of Burmann, 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1727, is reckoned among the best.

PHAETON (Myth.) or Phaethon, Φαέθων, a son of Phœbus and Clymene, or, according to some, of Cephalus and Aurora, or Tithonus and Aurora, besought his father Sol to allow him to drive his chariot for one day, to which the latter reluctantly consented, by virtue of the oath he had taken to grant him whatever he should ask; but the young man had no sooner got the reins than the unruly horses darted out of their course, and threatened to set the heavens on fire, if Jupiter had not hurled the rash charioteer with his thunderbolt down into the Po. His body was found by the nymphs, who gave it a decent burial; and his sisters, called after him Phaetontiades, mourned his unhappy end until they were changed into poplars. Hesiod. Theog. v. 985; Palæph. de Incred. 22; Apollon. Argon. l. 4; Apollod. l. 3; Cic. de Off. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 156; Horat. l. 4; Paus. l. 3; Lucret. l. 5.

PHALANTHUS (Hist.) the leader of the Partheniæ, who formed a settlement in Italy, and founded Tarentum. He received divine honours after his death. Horat. l. 2, od. 6; Justin. l. 3; Paus. l. 10, &c.

PHALARIS (Hist.) a tyrant of Agrigentum, memorable for his cruelties, which provoked the people to a revolt, in consequence of which he was put to death by means of the brazen bull, which he had made for torturing his subjects. [Vide Perillus] Some epistles are extant, written by a person of the name of Abaris, to this Phalaris, the genuineness of which was a matter of great dispute between Boyle and Bentley. These letters were printed at the Sorbonne, in 4to. 1470, and frequently since.

PHANOCLES (Biog.) an elegiac poet of Greece, of whose writings some fragments are extant.

PHAON (Myth.) a boatman of Mitylene, who received from Venus, in the form of an old woman, a box of ointment, with which, as soon as he rubbed himself, he became one of the most beautiful men of his age, and captivated the heart of Sappho, who was desperately enamoured of him, and when he slighted her love, she threw herself into the sea. Palæph. de Incred. l. 49; Ovid. Heroid. 21; Athen. l. 2; Lucian. in Sim.; Mart. l. 10, ep. 35.

PHARAMOND (Hist.) the son of Marcomir, and the founder of the French monarchy, was raised to the throne about A. D. 420, and died about eight years after, when he was succeeded by his younger son Clodion. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

PHARAOH (Bibl.) פרעה, a name common to the kings of Egypt, the first of whom, mentioned in Scripture, lived in the time of Abraham, Gen. xii.; the second in the time of Joseph, Gen. xlv.; the third was he who persecuted the Israelites; the fourth is supposed to have been the Pharaoh who was drowned in the Red Sea, Exod. i. &c.; the fifth Pharaoh gave protection to Hadad, son of the king of Edom, 1 Kings xi. 15, &c.; the sixth gave his daughter in marriage to Solomon, 1 Kings iii.; the seventh protected Jeroboam, 1 Kings xiv.; the eighth made a league with Hezekiah against Sennacherib; the ninth was Pharaoh-Necho, who defeated Josiah; and the tenth was Pharaoh-Hophrah, Ezek. &c.

PHARNACES (Hist.) the name of two kings of Pontus.

Pharnaces I, made war upon Eumenes A. C. 181.

Pharnaces II, son of Mithridates, who took the part of Pompey in the civil wars, was conquered by Cæsar with such celerity that the latter reported his victory in the words veni, vidi, vici. Hist. de Alex. Bell.; Paterc. l. 2; Flor. l. 3; Suet. in Cæs.; Dio, l. 42.

PHAROS (Geog.) Φάρος, a small island in the bay of Alexandria, about seven furlongs distant from the continent, on which was built a celebrated tower, in the reign of Ptolemy Soter and Philadelphus. This tower, which was constructed of white stone, might be seen at the distance of 100 miles. Hom. Odyss. l. 4; Cæs. de Bell. Civ. l. 3; Mela, l. 2; Strab. l. 17; Plin. l. 4; Val. Flacc. l. 2.

Pharos, Pharus, or Pharia, φάρος vel Πάρος, an island of Illyricum, now Lesina. Scyl. Perip.; Diodor. l. 15; Agathemerus, &c.

PHARSALUS (Geog.) now Farsa, a town of Thessaly, near the Enipeus, at the south of Larissa, in whose neighbourhood is the celebrated plain of Pharsalia, where the battle was fought between Cæsar and Pompey, about 48 years before the Christian æra, whence the poem of Lucan descriptive of the civil war, and of this battle in particular, is called Pharsalia. Catul. Carm. 64; Liv. l. 36; Strab. l. 8; Lucan. l. 1, &c.; Plin. l. 4; Plut. in Pomp. &c.

PHASAEL (Hist.) Φασάηλος, eldest son of Antipater the Idumæan, and brother of Herod the Great, being enticed, during the war of Antigonus against Herod, by Pacorus, son to the king of the Parthians, to go into Galilee, was there seized and imprisoned by Barzaphernes, the general of Antigonus; which piece of treachery so provoked Phasael, that he dashed out his own brains against the walls of his prison, A. M. 3957, A. C. 47. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 1, c. 8.

PHAVORINUS, Varinus (Biog.) a lexicographer of Favera, in Umbria, who died in 1537, is now known by his Greek Lexicon, compiled from Suidas, the Etymologicum Magnum, Hesychius, Harpocration, and other ancient Lexicons, which was published in 1523; but the best edition is that of Bartoli, fol. Venet. 1712.

PHEBE (Bibl.) Φοίβη, a deaconess of the church at Cenchrea, the eastern part of Corinth, of whom St. Paul speaks in high terms. Rom. xvi.; Theodoret. ad Rom.

PHENICIA (Geog.) vide Phœnicia.

PHERECRATES (Biog.) Φερεκράτης, a Greek comic poet, the cotemporary of Plato and Aristophanes, who is said to have written 21 plays, of which only a few verses have been preserved by Hertelius and Grotius. He invented a kind of metre called after him Pherecratian, consisting of the three last feet of an hexameter, the first of these three feet being always a spondee. Athen. l. 1; Plut. de Mus. &c.

PHERECYDES (Biog.) Φερεκύδης, a philosopher, and native of the island of Scyrus, one of the Cyclades, near Delos, flourished about the 45th Olympiad, A. C. 600, had Pythagoras for one of his disciples, and is said to have first taught the transmigration of souls. Cic. de Div. l. 1; Paus. l. 1, &c.; Diogenes, &c.

PHERETIMA (Hist.) Φερετίμη, the wife of Battus, king of Cyrene, and mother of Arcesilaus, who caused all the assassins of her son to be crucified round the walls of Cyrene, and their wives, with their breasts cut off, to be hung by their sides; after which she was devoured alive by worms, and, in the opinion of some of the ancients, as a judgment upon her for her enormous cruelty. Herod. l. 4; Polyæn.

PHERON (Hist.) Φερῶν, a king of Egypt, and successor of Sesostris, who, being blind, recovered his sight by washing his eyes according to an oracle, with the urine of a woman who had never had an unlawful connexion. He tried his wife first, who, being found faithless, was burnt, with all those who could not stand this test; after which he married the woman who thus succeeded in restoring his sight. Herod. l. 2, c. 111.

PHERORAS (Hist.) Φερώρας, fourth son of Antipater, and brother of Herod the Great, was the principal cause of the death of Mariamne, and her two sons Alexander and Aristobulus. He afterwards entered into a conspiracy against Herod, but died before it was put into execution. Joseph. Antiq. l. 16, c. 11.

PHIALA (Geog.) Φιάλη, a famous lake at the foot of mount Hermon, whence the Jordan derives its stream. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 3.

PHIDIAS (Biog.) a statuary of Athens, son of Charmidas, and pupil of Eladas of Argos, who died A. C. 432, made a statue of Minerva at the desire of Pericles, which was placed in the Parthenon. Cic. Orat. l. 2, c. 17; Strab. l. 8; Plin. l. 36; Quintil. l. 12.

PHILADELPHIA (Bibl.) Φιλαδελφία, a town of Lydia, mentioned under Geography, the angel or bishop of which is spoken of in the Revelations. Rev. iii. 7. It is unknown who this bishop was; but Aureolus and de Lyra think it was St. Quadratus, a disciple of the apostles. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 3, c. 37.

Philadelphia (Geog.) the name of several towns, as one of Lydia, or Mysia, a second of Cœlesyria, and a third of Cilicia, &c. The first of these, which is the most important, is now known generally by the name of Philadelfia, but among the Turks by that of Allah Scheyr, being a town of the modern province of Carasia, in Natolia. This place received its name from Attalus, its founder, and was situated at the foot of Mount Tmolus, by the river Cogamus, 28 m. E. Sardis. It was subject to frequent captures and recaptures from the Greeks and Turks, by whom it was finally taken in 1391. Philadelphia is an episcopal city, suffragan of Sardis. The second town of this name, which in Scripture is called Rabbath, or Rabbuth, was one of the ten cities of Decapolis beyond Jordan, which is said to have received its name from Ptolemy Philadelphus. Polyb. l. 5; Strab. l. 13; Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 3; Ptol. l. 5.

PHILADELPHIA (Numis.) the town of Lydia is distinguished on some medals by the inscriptions—ΚΟΙΝΑ ΑCΙΑC ΕΝ ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΙΑ. — ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΕΩΝ ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ; also with the name of their magistrates, who were archons or prætors. The town of Cœlesyria is distinguished by the inscription—ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦЄΩΝ ΚΟΙΛΕC CΥΡ. The first particularly honoured Diana on its medals, which it struck either as an independent state or in honour of Augustus, Nero, Domitian, Trajan, Plotina, Marciana, Adrian, Antinous, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, Commodus, Sept. Severus, &c. The second town honoured Bacchus, Fortuna, &c. on its medals, struck in honour of Titus, Domitian, &c.

PHILELPHUS, Francis (Biog.) an Italian, and Latin poet, who was born in 1398 at Tolentino, in the march of Ancona, and died in 1481, wrote a number of odes, orations, &c. which were published together at Basle in 1739.

PHILEMON (Bibl.) Φιλήμων, a citizen of Colossæ, in Phrygia, converted to the Christian faith, with his wife Apphia, by Epaphras, a disciple of St. Paul, whose slave Onesimus was sent back to him by the apostle. Col. ii. According to the Apostolical Constitutions he was made bishop of Colossæ, and is said to have suffered martyrdom in that city under the emperor Nero.

PHILEMON (Biog.) a Greek comic poet, cotemporary with, and rival of, Menander, of whose writings some fragments are extant, which were collected with those of Menander, and published by Grotius. [Vide Plate XXVII]

PHILETÆRUS (Hist.) an eunuch, who was made governor of Pergamus by Lysimachus, and laid the foundation of the kingdom of Pergamus, A. C. 283. He reigned 20 years, and at his death appointed Eumenes his successor. Strab. l. 13; Justin. l. 17; Pausan. &c.

PHILIDOR, Andrew (Biog.) a musician, and a well-known chess-player, was born at Dreux in 1726, and died in 1795, leaving an 'Analysis of the Game of Chess,' which was published in 1749.

PHILIP (Bibl.) Φίλιππος, the name of some persons in Scripture.

PHILIP, the name commonly given to Herod Philip.

PHILIP, St. Φίλιππος, the apostle, and a native of Bethsaida, in Galilee, was among the first whom our Saviour invited to follow him. Matth. x.; Mark, iii.; Luke vi.; John i. &c. A book of Acts has been falsely attributed to this apostle, as also a gospel used by the Gnostics. Tertull. de Baptis. c. 12; Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 2; Euseb. Hist. Eccles.; Epiphan. Hær. 26.

PHILIP, St. the second of the seven deacons, who baptized the Ethiopian eunuch, Acts viii. &c. Both of these saints were married men, and had daughters, who have been sometimes confounded in the accounts of the ancients. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 3, &c.; Hieron. cont. Jovin.; Baron. Annal.; Baillet. Vies des Saints.

PHILIP (Hist.) the name of some emperors and kings.

Emperors of this Name.

PHILIP, Sen. or Marcus Julius Philippus, surnamed Senior, or the Arabian, a Roman emperor, of an obscure family in Arabia, who rose to distinction by his merits as a soldier, was at the head of the prætorian guards when Gordian was assassinated by his order, and himself proclaimed emperor. His usurpation however was short, for he being defeated by his rival Decius, he was assassinated by his own soldiers in the 45th year of his age, and the fifth of his reign, A. D. 249. His son, who, though not more than twelve years old, had been made the partner of his throne, shared the same fate. [Vide Philippus under Numismatics] Jul. Capitol. in Vit. Gordian.; Aurel. Vict. in Philip.; Euseb. Hist. l. 6; Cassiodor. in Chron.

PHILIP, duke of Suabia, son of Frederic Barbarossa, was elected emperor after the death of his brother, Henry VI, by some of the electors, in opposition to Otho, by whom he was killed in 1208, after a reign of nine years.

Kings of Macedonia, &c.

PHILIP I, succeeded Argeus, his father, and reigned 38 years, A. C. 649.

PHILIP II, fourth son of Amyntas, and father of Alexander the Great, who is commonly styled Philip of Macedon, succeeded his brother, Perdiccas III, A. C. 359, and was stabbed by Pausanias in the 47th year of his age, and 24th of his reign, A. C. 336, after having distinguished himself by his conquest of Greece. [Vide Plate V] Demosth. in Phil. et Olynth.; Isocrat. ad Phil.; Diod. l. 16; Paus. Bœot. &c.

PHILIP III, surnamed Aridæus, the natural brother of Alexander the Great, obtained the title of king after the death of the latter; but was put to death by Olympias after a reign of three years, A. C. 317. Diodor. Sic. l. 18; Justin. l. 14; Eusebius, &c.

PHILIP IV, son of Cassander, reigned only one year, A. C. 298.

PHILIP V, the son of Demetrius, succeeded his cousin Antigonus, surnamed Doson, in whose guardianship he had been left, at the age of 15, A. C. 220, and died after a reign of 42 years. He was a determined but not a successful enemy to the Romans, by whom, under the consul T. Q. Flaminius, he was totally defeated. The kingdom of Macedonia terminated with the reign of his son and successor Perseus. Polyb. l. 16; Liv. l. 31; Val. Max. l. 4; Justin. l. 29; Paus. l. 7.

Kings of Syria.

PHILIP, son of Antiochus Gryphus, obtained a part of Syria, which he afterwards divided among his children. Joseph. l. 13.

PHILIP, son of Herod and Cleopatra, obtained from Augustus the tetrarchy of Trachonites and Gaulanites, and died after an excellent reign of 33 years.

Kings of France, &c.

PHILIP I, was born in 1053, succeeded his father, Henry I, in 1060, and died in 1108. The effigies of this and the following princes are given as in the subjoined figures.

Philip I.

Philip II.

Philip III.

PHILIP II, surnamed Augustus, succeeded his father, Lewis VII, in 1180, and died in 1223, after having distinguished himself as a warrior and a politician.

PHILIP III, surnamed the Hardy, succeeded his father, Louis IX, in 1270, while he was engaged in the crusades against the infidels, and died in 1285, whilst he was warring against Peter the Cruel, of Spain, on account of the massacre of the French at the Sicilian Vespers.

PHILIP IV, surnamed the Fair, succeeded his father, Philip III, at the age of 17, and died in 1314, at the age of 46.

PHILIP V, surnamed the Long, younger son of the preceding, succeeded his brother Louis Hutin in 1316, and died in 1321, at the age of 28.

Philip IV.

Philip V.

Philip VI.

PHILIP VI, surnamed le Valois, succeeded his cousin, Charles the Fair, in 1328, and died in 1350, at the age of 57, leaving an impoverished kingdom and a disputed succession. His reign is rendered memorable by the successes of the English under Edward III, when the loss of the battle of Creci was followed by that of Calais, and other important places. Paul. Æmil., Froisard, Anselme, Sainte Marthe, Mezerai, &c.

Kings of Spain and Navarre.

PHILIP I, surnamed the Fair, son of the emperor Maximilian I, obtained the Spanish throne in 1490, by his marriage with Joan, queen of Spain, and died in 1506, at the age of 28.

PHILIP II, son of Charles V and Isabella of Portugal, was made king of Naples and Sicily in 1554, on his father's abdication, became king of England by his marriage with queen Mary, and ascended the Spanish throne two years after, by the extraordinary resignation of his father, and died in 1598; after having rendered his reign memorable by his vain attempt to invade England with the Spanish Armada. [Vide Plate III]

PHILIP III, son of Philip and Anne of Austria, succeeded his father at the age of 20, and died in 1621, at the age of 43, after having terminated the war with the Netherlands, by a peace much to the advantage of the enemy.

Philip III.

Philip IV.

Philip V.

PHILIP IV, succeeded his father, Philip III, and died in 1665, at the age of 60, after having carried on an unsuccessful war with Portugal and the Netherlands.

PHILIP V, duke of Anjou, second son of Louis, the dauphin of France, ascended the Spanish throne in 1700, and died in 1746, at the age of 63, after a reign of 45 years.

Other Princes and distinguished Persons of this Name.

PHILIP de Dreux, son of Robert of France, count of Dreux, was made bishop of Beauvais; but being of a martial turn he joined the crusaders, and signalized himself by his valour at the siege of Acre in 1191. He was afterwards engaged in the war against the English, by whom he was taken prisoner; but, on obtaining his liberation, he distinguished himself at the battle of Bouvines in 1214, and also against the Albigenses, and died in 1217.

PHILIP the Bold, fourth son of John, king of France, is celebrated for the valour with which he fought at the battle of Poictiers against the English, at a time when the other princes of his family shrunk from the contest. He died in 1404, at the age of 63.

PHILIP the Good, duke of Burgundy, Brabant, and Luxemburg, was engaged for some time on the part of the English; but was afterwards reconciled to Charles VII of France, and died in 1467, at the age of 71.

Philo, surnamed Judæus, an ancient Greek writer, descended from a noble family among the Jews of Alexandria, in the reign of Caligula, was the author of several works which are extant, and were first published in Greek by Turnebus at Paris in 1552, and with a Latin version by Gelenius in 1561, but an edition in 2 vols. fol. by Dr. Mangey, in 1742, is esteemed the best.

Philo, surnamed Biblios, a grammarian in the reign of Adrian, translated the Phœnician history of Sanchoniatho into Greek, of which only a few fragments remain.

PHILOCLES (Hist.) Φιλοκλῆς, an Athenian commander in the Peloponnesian war, recommended that they should cut off the right hand of their enemies taken in battle, in consequence of which, when defeated at Ægospotamos, he, with 3000 of his countrymen, were put to death, and denied the honours of sepulture. Paus. l. 9; Plut. in Lysand.

PHILOCTETES (Myth.) Φιλοκτήτης, a son of Pæan and Dæmonassa, and one of the Argonauts, accompanied the Greeks to the Trojan war, but, owing to an offensive smell occasioned by a wound in his foot, he was removed from the army, to the island of Lemnos. He being, however, in possession of the arrows of Hercules, by which only, according to the oracle, Troy was to be taken, he was persuaded by the manes of the hero to return to the Grecian camp, when his wound was healed. After the capture of the city he went to Calabria, where he built the town of Petilia. Hom. Il. l. 2; Pindar. Pyth. od. 1; Sophoc. in Phil.; Cic. Tusc. l. 2; Diod. l. 2; Senec. in Her.; Ovid. Trist. l. 5; Lactant. de Fals. Relig. c. 9, &c. &c.

PHILOLAUS (Biog.) a philosopher in the time of Plato, who is said to have taught the doctrine of Pythagoras respecting the motion of the earth, which has since been revived by Copernicus.

PHILOMELA (Myth.) Φιλομήλα, a daughter of Pandion, king of Athens, who was violated by Tereus, her brother-in-law, and her tongue afterwards cut out that she might not reveal his brutality; in revenge, Procne, his wife, killed her son Itylus, and served him up for the table of his father, and, just as Tereus was going to stab Philomela and Procne, he was changed into a hoopoe, Philomela into a nightingale, Procne into a swallow, and Itylus into a pheasant. Apollod. l. 3; Catull. Carm. 66; Virg. Georg. l. 4; Strab. l. 9; Hygin. Fab. 45; Ovid. Met. l. 6; Paus. l. 1; Schol. Sophocl. in Elect.; Serv. in Virg. &c.

PHILOPŒMON (Hist.) Φιλοποίμην, a general of the Achæan league, and a native of Megalopolis, who distinguished himself against the Lacedæmonians by the capture of Sparta, where he abolished the laws of Lycurgus; but afterwards falling into the hands of the Messenians, he was compelled by Dinocrates, the Messenian general, to drink poison, and thus perished in the 70th year of his age, A. C. 183. Polyb. l. 3, &c.; Liv. l. 35; Justin. l. 32; Plut. in Vit.

PHILOSTRATUS (Biog.) a sophist, and native of Lemnos, or, according to some, of Athens, who died A. D. 244. He wrote a Life of Apollonius, and some other things, the best edition of which is that of Olearius, fol. Lips. 1709. The 'Lives of the Sophists,' and the 'Icones,' which form a part of his works, are ascribed by some to his nephew.

PHILOTAS (Hist.) son of Parmenio, and a distinguished general in the army of Alexander, was stoned to death on a charge of conspiring against his master. Q. Curt. l. 2; Arrian. &c.

PHYLOXENUS (Biog.) a dithyrambic poet of Cythera, who enjoyed the favour of Dionysius the tyrant, notwithstanding the freedom with which he spoke his mind. Cic. ad Attic. l. 4, ep. 6.

PHILPOT, John (Hist.) a merchant and citizen of London in the reign of Richard II, is mentioned in history for the spirited resistance which he made to the Scots in 1378 with a fleet which he fitted out and manned at his own expence. He attacked one Mercer, a Scotch marauder, who had committed great devastation among the English shipping, and, having defeated and taken him prisoner, he recaptured all the English vessels, besides several French and Spanish ships.

Philpot, John (Ecc.) an English divine, was born at Compton, in Hampshire, educated at Winchester and Oxford, and was condemned to be burnt in the reign of queen Mary for the declaration of his opinions against the church of Rome. This sentence was executed upon him in 1555. He wrote 'Defence of the Old and Ancient Authority of Christ's Church,' &c.

PHILPOT (Biog.) or Philipott, John, Somerset Herald in the reign of James I and Charles I, who died in 1645, leaving a high reputation for loyalty, published a catalogue of the Chancellors of England, and an edition of Camden's 'Remains.' His son, John Philpot, wrote 'Villare Cantianum,' fol. Lond. 1659, &c.

It is now a considerable town, bearing the same name, in the grand duchy of Tuscany, situated on the Arno, about eight miles from the river, 13 m. N. by E. Leghorn, and 30 W. Florence. Lon. 10° 24′ E., lat. 43° 40′ N.

History of Pisa.

Pisa, although a Roman colony, was a place of no note until the tenth century, when it took the lead as a commercial republic, maintaining a fleet of galleys, with which it commanded the coasts of Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, and Barbary, and assisted the French in the crusades. But the ascendancy which the Genoese gradually acquired cast Pisa into the shade, and after an obstinate struggle for its independence it fell under the dominion of Florence. It is celebrated as the birth-place of Galileo, and other philosophers, and also for its University, which was founded by Lawrence de Medicis in 1472, and still maintains its distinction as a seat of learning, although fallen into decay. A treaty was concluded here between Alexander VII and Louis XIV.

Ecclesiastical History of Pisa.

Pisa is an archbishop's see, where three councils were held, namely, in 1134, when the antipope Anicletus was excommunicated; in 1409, which for its importance was reckoned a general council, consisting of 22 cardinals, 4 patriarchs, 12 archbishops, 80 bishops, besides 200 other dignitaries, &c. who met for the purpose of putting an end to the schism occasioned by the rival popes Gregory XII and Benedict XIII, when Alexander V was elected pope in their stead, they being both deposed as schismatics. A third council was held at Pisa in 1511, against the pope Julius II, but it was attended with no consequence. Polyb. l. 1, 2; Cic. ad Quint. l. 2, ep. 6; Dionys. Hal. l. 2; Liv. l. 33; Strab. l. 8; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Justin. l. 20.

PITHOU, Peter (Biog.) in Latin Pithœus, a French writer, descended from an ancient and noble family in Normandy, was born at Troyes in 1539, and died in 1596, leaving 'Traité sur les Libertés de l'Eglise Gallicane,' &c. 4 vols. fol. and 'Opuscula,' &c.

PITHOU, Francis, brother of the preceding, who was born in 1544, and died in 1621, was the discoverer of the MS. of the fables of Phædrus, which he sent to his brother, by whom they were printed in 12mo. 1596. He likewise published 'Codex Canonum,' fol. 1687; 'Antiqui Rhetores Latini,' &c. 4to. 1599, and reprinted by M. Caperonier Argent. &c.

PITISCUS, Samuel (Biog.) a scholar, was born at Zutphen in 1637, and died in 1727, leaving 'Fundamenta Religionis Christianæ,' &c. 8vo.; an edition of Quintus Curtius, Ultraj. 1685; of Suetonius, 2 vols. 4to. 1715; of Aurelius Victor, 8vo. Ultraj. 1696; 'Lexicon Antiquitatum Romanarum,' 2 vols. fol. Ultraj. &c. [Vide Plate XXIV]

PITOT, Henry (Biog.) a mathematician and engineer, was born in Languedoc in 1695, and died in 1771, leaving a work entitled 'The Theory of working Ships,' which has been translated into English.

PITS, John (Biog.) in Latin Piseus, an English biographer, was born at Alton, in Hampshire, in 1560, and died in 1616, leaving 'De illustribus Angliæ Scriptoribus,' &c. published at Paris, 4to. 1619 and 1623.

PITT, Thomas (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was appointed Governor of Fort St. George, in the East Indies, where he resided many years, and purchased the celebrated diamond, called after him the Pitt Diamond, for the sum of 48,000 pagodas, or 20,000*l.* sterling, which he sold to the king of France for 135,000*l.* In 1715 he was appointed a commissioner for building fifty new churches, and died in 1726, after having repaired and beautified the church of Blandford St. Mary, Dorsetshire.

PITT, William, the second son of William, earl of Chatham, who was the youngest son of Robert Pitt, of the same family as the preceding. He was born May 28, 1759, educated at Cambridge, commenced his parliamentary career in 1781, was raised to the post of Chancellor of the Exchequer at the age of 23, and died June 23, 1806, at the age of 47, after having maintained his post with but a short interval of retirement from office, against a domineering overbearing faction, both in and out of the House of Parliament, who, but for the firmness of the monarch and the gigantic powers of the minister, would have involved the country in one common ruin. [Vide Plate IX]

PITT (Her.) the name of a family rendered memorable by the illustrious subject above-mentioned, which has been long seated at Blandford, and of which mention is made as early as Henry VI. It has also been ennobled in several of its branches. From William Pitt, eldest son of John Pitt, Clerk of the Exchequer in the reign of queen Elizabeth, descended George Pitt, who in 1776 was advanced to the dignity of a peer of Great Britain, by the title of baron Rivers of Stratfield-Say, co. Southampton, and in 1802 was farther created baron Rivers of Sudley Castle, co. Gloucester. [Vide Rivers] From Thomas Pitt, third son of the above-mentioned John Pitt, descended Robert and Thomas Pitt. Thomas Pitt, the younger, was created in 1719 baron of Londonderry, in Ireland, and in 1726 was further advanced to the titles of viscount of Galen-Ridgeway and earl of Londonderry, which titles became extinct at the death of the third earl. Thomas Pitt, nephew of this Thomas, and eldest son of his elder brother Robert, had a son Thomas, who was created a peer in 1784, by the title of lord Camelford, which title became extinct at the death of the second lord in 1804; and William Pitt, the younger son of the aforesaid Robert, and the statesman before-mentioned [vide Chatham] was raised in 1766 to the dignities of a viscount, and earl of Great Britain, by the style and title of viscount Pitt of Burton Pynsent, co. Somerset, and earl of Chatham, co. Kent. [Vide Chatham]

PITT, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Chatham.

PITT, Christopher (Biog.) an English poet of the family above-mentioned, was born at Blandford in 1699, educated at Westminster, and New College, Oxford, and died in 1748, leaving a translation of Vida's 'Art of Poetry,' and a complete version of Virgil's Æneid, which will bear a comparison with that of Dryden, to the advantage of the author.

PITTACUS (Hist.) one of the seven sages of Greece, was born at Mitylene, in the island of Lesbos, about 649 A. C., obtained by his valour and abilities the sovereignty of his native city, and died at the age of 70, in the enjoyment of a high reputation among his fellow-citizens. [Vide Plate XXI]

PITTHEUS (Hist.) a king of Troezene, in Argolis, son of Pelops and Hippodamia, who gave his daughter Æthra in marriage to Ægeus, king of Athens, and took particular charge of the education of his grandson Theseus. Eurip. in Hipp. et Med.; Strab. l. 8; Ovid. Heroid. ep. 10; Paus. l. 1; Plut. in Thes.

PIUS (Ecc.) the name of several popes.

PIUS I, succeeded Hyginus in 142, or, according to some, Anicetus, and governed the church until 158. He is said to have ordered the celebration of Easter to take place the Sunday after the 14th of the March moon. Anicetus is supposed to have succeeded him.

PIUS II, a native of Corsignano, named Æneas Sylvius Bartholomew Piccolomini, was born in 1405, elected after Callixtus III in 1458, and died in 1464, just at the moment that he was about to lead an army against the Turks. His pontificate was marked with wisdom and vigour in all his measures, particularly in support of the church and papal dignity. His works, consisting of Letters, Memoirs of the Council of Basle, a History of the Bohemians, &c. were printed at Basle in folio 1551, and at Helmstadt in 1700. His life was written by Gobelin, his secretary, and published at Rome in 1584, 1589, and Frankfort 1614. Paul II succeeded him.

PIUS III, named Francis Todeschini, nephew of the preceding, after being made a cardinal by his uncle, succeeded Alexander VI, but was snatched away by a premature death 21 days after his election, when Julius II succeeded to the pontificate.

PIUS IV, named John Angelo, cardinal de Medicis, brother to the famous marquis de Marignan, was born at Milan in 1499, succeeded Paul IV in 1559, and died in 1565, after having re-established the council of Trent, and evinced his zeal against the Turks, heretics, and all enemies of the church. He was succeeded by PIUS V, named Michael Ghisleri, who was born at Tortona in 1504, succeeded Pius IV in 1566, and died in 1572, after having rendered himself very formidable to the Turks. Under his auspices was fought the famous battle of Lepanto.

PIUS VI, named John Angelo Braschi, was born at Cesena in 1717, succeeded Ganganelli in 1775, and terminated his long and unhappy pontificate in 1798 at Valence, whither he had been dragged a prisoner by Buonaparte and his revolutionary myrmidons. His prudent government would have insured happiness to his subjects if it had not been interrupted by the troubles of the French revolution. He was succeeded by Pius VII, whose original name was Barnabas Chiaramonti. He was born at Cesena in 1740, created a cardinal in 1785, elected to the papal chair in 1800, after an interval of two years between his election and the death of his predecessor, and died in 1823, after an eventful pontificate, in which he suffered great indignities from Buonaparte, to whom he was guilty of some unworthy compliances. Although steadfast in his religious profession, yet he is said to have been greatly attached to the English. He has been succeeded by Leo XII.

Pius (Numis.) medals are extant of four popes of this name as given by Bonanni, which bear their effigies as in Plate X and in the annexed figures; inscriptions for Pius II—PIUS II. PONT. MAX.; struck on his election.—GLORIA SENENSIS; in allusion to his family, which was honoured through him.—OPTIMO PRINCIPI.—ALES UT HÆC CORDIS PAVI DE SANGUINE NATOS; in which his paternal tenderness is likened to that of the pelican for her young. Among the inscriptions for Pius III are PIUS III, PONT. MAX.—GLORIA SENENSIS D. C. PICCOLOMINI; similar to that of the preceding, being of the same family. The medals of Pius IV are inscribed PIUS IIII, PONTIFEX MAXIMUS.—INDULGENTIA PONTIFICIS; on the occasion of showing clemency towards some offenders.—PAX.—SECURITAS POPULI ROMANI; on the occasion of his election.—TU AUTEM IDEM IPSE ES; on the occasion of his reassembling the council of Trent, which had been first held by his predecessor.—PORTA PIA ROMA; on his rebuilding and enlarging the gate called Nomentana.—VIA PIA, and AQUA PIA; on his restoring the road leading to the Porta Pia, and the bath anciently called the Aqua Virginis, &c. &c. The medals of Pius V are inscribed PIUS V. GHISLERIUS BOSCHENSIS PONT. MAX.—IN FLUCTIBUS EMERGENS; on the occasion of the victory at Lepanto.—DOMUS MEA DOMUS ORATIONIS; to testify his concern to preserve the discipline of the church.—FŒDERIS IN TURCAS SANCTIO; on the occasion of forming a league against the Turks.

PIZARRO, Francis (Hist.) the conqueror of Peru, was the illegitimate son of a gentleman by a low woman, and, having enlisted for a soldier, embarked for America, and united with Diego de Almagro, another military adventurer, and Hernando Lucque, a priest, to prosecute discoveries to the eastward of the settlements of Panama. This enterprize, which was begun with a single vessel, was, after encountering incredible hardships, and surmounting every difficulty, at length terminated by the discovery of the fertile coast of Peru in 1526. The conquest of the country was not, however, effected before 1536, when, after having reduced the natives to submission by the perpetration of many enormities, he laid the foundation of Lima, which by him was called Ciudad de los Reyes. This event, which seemed to open new prospects of wealth and honour to him, was followed by his assassination in 1541, which was effected by the sons and friends of his former companion Almagro, who, having set himself up in opposition to him, had been defeated, taken prisoner, and executed. [Vide Plate XIV]

PLACCIUS, Vincent (Biog.) a lawyer of Hamburgh, was born in 1642, and died in 1699, leaving 'De Scriptis et Scriptoribus anonymis atque pseudonymis Syntagma,' &c.; 'Liber de Jurisconsulto perfecto,' &c.

PLACE, Peter de la (Biog.) in Latin Plateanus, a French counsellor, who was born in Angouleme in 1526, and perished at the massacre of St. Bartholomew, was the author of 'Traité du Droit Usage de la Philosophie Morale avec la Doctrine Chrétienne;' 'Traité de l'Excellence de l'Homme Chretien,' &c.

Place, Francis, an engraver and painter, who died in 1728, left several admired pictures of birds and flowers, &c., as also etchings of landscapes, &c. from Griffier.

PLACENTIA (Geog.) now Piacenza, or Placenza, a town and colony of Italy, at the confluence of the Trebia and the Padus, which was taken and burnt by Amilcar, and was afterwards seized by Cinna and Marius, in the civil wars between them and Sylla. Polyb. l. 3; Cic. in L. Pis.; Liv. l. 21; Vell. Paterc. l. 2, &c.

PLACENZA (Geog.) or Piacenza, the ancient Placentia, a town in the duchy of Parma, situated near the right bank of the Po, where it is joined by the Trebia, 32 m. W. N. W. Parma, and 34 S. E. Milan. Lon. 9° 42′ E. lat. 45° 2′ N. This town, which was the birth-place of pope Gregory X and cardinal Alberoni, prime minister of Spain, became a very strong place under the dukes of Parma, who were at an early period masters of it. Two councils were held here in 1095 and 1132, at which last the antipope Anacletus was excommunicated.

PLACENTINUS, Peter (Biog.) a German monk, otherwise called John Leo Placentius, who died in 1548, wrote, under the assumed name of Publius Porcius Porcellus, a Latin poem, entitled 'Pugna Porcorum.'

PLACETTE, John de la (Biog.) a Swiss divine of the Protestant church, was born at Pontac, in Berne, in 1639, and died in 1718, leaving 'Essais de Moral;' 'Traité de la Conscience,' &c. &c.

PLATINA, Bartholomew Sacchi (Biog.) an historian of obscure parentage, was born in 1421 at Piadena, in Latin Platina, whence he took his name, and died in 1481, leaving 'De Vitis et Gestis Summorum Pontificum,' and other works, which were printed collectively at Cologne in 1529 and 1534, and at Louvain in 1572. His Lives of the Popes was first printed at Venice in folio 1479, and several times since; an English translation and continuation was published by sir Paul Ricaut. [Vide Plate XXV]

PLATO (Biog.) one of the most distinguished philosophers of antiquity, an Athenian by descent, but a native of Ægina, is said to have been a descendant from Codrus on the side of his father Aristo, and from Solon on the side of his mother Parictiona. He was born about 428 years before the Christian æra, and died at the age of 81. He was at first the constant disciple of Socrates, and afterwards for 40 years at the head of a school which has derived its name from him. [Vide Plate XXI] The works of Plato, which were originally collected by Hermodorus, one of his pupils, consist of thirty-five dialogues and thirteen epistles. They were first published by Aldus Manutius in 2 vols. fol. Venet. 1513; but the edition of Frankfort, in folio, 1602, and that of Bipont the Greek from the copy of Serranus, and the Latin version of Serranus, in 12 vols. 8vo. are reckoned the best. Cic. de Offic. l. 1; Senec. Epist. 58; Quintil. l. 10; Apul. de Phil. Nat.; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 2; Paus. l. 1, &c.

PLAUTIANUS, Fulvius (Hist.) the favourite and minister of Severus, whose daughter Plautilla was married to Caracalla, but the father having entered into a conspiracy against his master, he was put to death, and Plautilla was banished to the island of Lipari, where, with her brother Plautius, she was put to death seven years after by order of Caracalla. Dio.

History of Poitiers.

Poitiers derives its name from the Pictavi, or Pictones, who inhabited the district afterwards called in Latin Pictavensis regio, and now Poitou. It is celebrated in history for the victory which was obtained over the French by the English under the Black Prince in 1354. The church of Poitiers is said to have been founded by S. Martial, and has been rendered illustrious by S. Hilary, S. Justin, S. Gelasius, and other saints who have held its see. Several councils have been held here in different ages.

POLAND (Geog.) a large country of continental Europe, called by the natives Polska, and in the Latin of the middle ages Polonia.

Boundaries. It is bounded on the N. by Prussia, Courland, and Livonia, W. by the Baltic and Silesia, S. by Hungary and Moldavia, and E. by Russia.

Division. It is divided into four parts; Great Poland, Little Poland, Red Russia, and Lithuania. On the partitioning of this kingdom between Austria, Russia, and Prussia, Austria had Little Poland and the greatest part of Red Russia, and Podolia, which is now called the kingdom of Galicia; Russia had Samogitia, part of Lithuania, Volhinia, and Podolia; and Prussia had Great Poland, Polish Prussia, and the remainder of Lithuania, Volhinia, and Podolia.

Towns. Its principal towns are Warsaw, Dantzig, Lemberg, Cracow, Wilna, Brody, Kiev, Posen, Charkov, &c.

Rivers. The Dnieper, Vistula, Dwina, Niemen, Dniester, Bog, and Bug.

Mountains. The Carpathian mountains, which form the boundary between Poland and Hungary.

History. The first sovereigns of Poland were called dukes, of whom Lechus, or Lech, is the first mentioned by authentic historians, who make him to have been the founder of the kingdom about 550. He dying without posterity, the government fell into the hands of an aristocracy until the election of Cracus in the year 700, who had for his successors as follow:

Poland was from this period torn with civil dissensions, of which the three powers, Russia, Austria, and Prussia, availed themselves, and entered into a treaty in 1772 for partitioning the Polish territory, which was then commenced, and finally completed in 1795, notwithstanding the efforts which were made by king Stanislaus, and also by a party under Kosciusko. During the revolutionary war Buonaparte introduced some changes which gave rise to others that took place at the Congress of Vienna, which decreed to Prussia and Austria a partial restitution of their late possessions, but conferred on Russia, in addition to all the Polish and Lithuanian provinces acquired before 1795, also the central provinces, which constitute what is still called by the ancient name of the kingdom of Poland, and what, in 1807, formed the duchy of Warsaw. This country, though subject to the same sovereign as Russia, is governed in every respect as a separate monarchy.

POLE (Hist.) or Pool, Reginald, a cardinal and archbishop of Canterbury, was descended from the blood-royal of England, being younger son of sir Richard Pole, K. G., and cousin-german to Henry VII by Margaret, daughter of George, duke of Clarence, younger brother to king Edward IV. He was born at Stoverton, or Stourton Castle, in Staffordshire, in 1500, educated at Oxford, and, after being deprived of his honours and preferments, on account of his opposition to the divorce of Henry VIII from queen Catherine, he retired to Rome, where he was created a cardinal, sent as legate to France, Flanders, and the Council of Trent, and was twice elected to the papal chair, but declined this honour, and retired to a monastery at Verona until the death of Edward VI, when he returned to his native country invested with the dignity of legate, and that of archbishop of Canterbury on the expulsion of Cranmer, and died in 1558, sixteen hours after the death of his royal mistress, leaving a tract, 'De Unitate Ecclesiasticâ,' and some other pieces. In 1744-52 a collection of letters between Pole and his learned friends was published under the title of 'Cardinalis Poli et aliorum ad ipsum Epistolæ.'

Pole (Her.) the name of three families which enjoy the dignity and title of a baronet.

Pole of Shute, a younger branch of the Poles, or Pooles, of Poole-Hall, in Worrall, co. Chester, was advanced to this dignity in the person of sir John Pole, ancestor of the Poles of Ballyfin, in Ireland, now represented by the right hon. William Wellesley Pole. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms, &c. Azure, semee of fleurs-de-lis or; a lion rampant argent.

Crest. A lion's gamb gules, armed or.

Supporters. On the dexter side a stag gules, attired and unguled or; on the sinister a griffin azure, gorged with a ducal crown proper, armed and beaked as the stag.

Motto. "Pollet virtus."

Pole, the name assumed by sir Charles Van Notten, of Wolverton, co. Hants, who was raised to this dignity in 1791. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a chevron between three crescents gules, in chief a mullet azure.

Crest. An eagle rising proper, charged on the breast with a mullet azure.

Pole, a younger branch of the Poles of Shute above-mentioned, was elevated to this dignity in 1801 in the person of sir Charles Morris Pole. The arms, &c. are the same as above, with the difference.

POLEMBERG, Cornelius (Biog.) a Dutch painter, was born at Utrecht in 1586, and died in 1660, after having acquired a high reputation, which has made his pieces of considerable value.

POLEMON (Hist.) the name of two kings of Pontus.

POLEMON I, a son of Zeno the rhetorician, was raised to the throne of Pontus by Antony, and, although he fought on the side of his patron, he found favour with Augustus, but was killed soon after near the Palus Mæotis in a battle with the barbarians. Strab. l. 12; Dio. l. 49.

POLEMON II, son of the preceding, was confirmed by the emperor Claudius in his possessions, to which was added the kingdom of Cilicia.

POLEMON (Numis.) medals are extant of both the kings of this name; but the effigy which is given on some of them, as in the annexed figure is ascribed to Polemon II; inscriptions on those of the first Polemon—ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΠΟΛΕΜΩΝΟΣ; and on the reverse, Μ. ΑΝΤΩΝΙΟΣ ΑΥΤοκράτωρ ΤΡΙΩΝ ΑΝΔΡΩΝ; those of the second Polemon have the head of Claudius on the reverse.

Polemon I.

Polemon II.

POLEMON (Biog.) a sophist of Laodicea, who was often sent by his countrymen on embassies to the emperor Adrian, with whom he was in great favour. He wrote declamations in Greek. Gyrald. de Poet. Hist. l. 5.

POLENI, John, Marquis (Biog.) an Italian and mathematician, was born at Padua in 1683, and died in 1761, leaving 'Exercitationes Vitruvianæ,' &c. 4to. Venet. 1739; 'Dissertazione sopra il Tempis di Diana di Efeso,' Rome, 1742; besides a number of other essays.

POLIDORO (Biog.) vide Caravaggio.

POLIGNAC, Melchior de (Ecc.) a French cardinal, was born in 1661 at Puy, in Velay, and, after being employed by Louis XIV in various negotiations, he was rewarded with a cardinal's cap at the king's request in 1713, and with the archbishopric of Auch in 1726, and died in 1741, leaving among his works his 'Anti-Lucretius,' for which he is now principally remembered.

POLITI, Alexander (Biog.) an Italian commentator, was born at Florence in 1679, and died in 1752, leaving an edition of Homer, with Eustathius's Commentary, 3 vols. fol. 1730-35; 'Martyrologium Romanum Castigatum,' &c.

POLITIAN, Angelus (Biog.) an Italian scholar, was born in 1454, and died in 1494, leaving 'Miscellanea,' which were first published in 1489; besides Greek epigrams and Latin and Italian poems. His letters were published at Paris in 1512 under the title of 'Angeli Politiani Epistolæ;' and again in 1519. [Vide Plate XXIII.]

POLLEN (Her.) the name of a family of Redenham, co. Hants, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1795 on sir John Walter Pollen. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Azure, on a bend cottised or, between six lozenges argent, each charged with an escallop sable, six escallops vert.

Crest. A pelican, with wings expanded, in her nest per pale or and azure, vulning herself proper, charged on the wing with a lozenge argent, thereon an escallop sable.

POLLEXFEN, Sir Henry (Hist.) an English lawyer and judge, descended from a good family in Devonshire, was one of the counsel retained for the bishops in 1688, appointed Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in 1689, and died in 1692, leaving his 'Arguments and Reports,' &c. which were published in 1702.

POLLINGTON, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Mexborough.

POLLIO, C. Asinus (Hist.) a Roman consul in the reign of Augustus, who, although he had favoured the cause of Antony, was in great favour with the emperor. He was the first who raised a public library in Rome, being a great patron of learning and learned men. Pollio, to whom Virgil has inscribed his fourth eclogue, died in the 80th year of his age, A. D. 4, leaving some Tragedies, Orations, and a History of the Civil Wars between Cæsar and Pompey; but nothing remains of his writings except a few letters to Cicero. Horat. l. 2, od. 1; Vell. Paterc. l. 2; Appian. de Bell. Civ. c. 5; Val. Max. l. 8.

POLLUX (Myth.) a son of Jupiter by Leda, wife of Tyndarus, and brother to Castor and Helen. [Vide Castor, &c.]

POLLUX, Julius (Biog.) a Greek grammarian, was born at Naucrates, a town in Egypt, in the year 180, and died in 238, leaving several works, of which none are extant except his 'Onomasticon,' published at Venice in 1502; to which a Latin version was added by Seberus in 1602; but the edition of Amsterdam, by Lederlin and Hemsterhuis, in folio, 1706, is both correct and handsome.

POLLUX, Julius, a writer in the fourth century, was the author of 'Historia Physica,' &c. of which Bianconi published the first edition, fol. Bonon. 1779; and Ignatius Herdt, the second, in 8vo. 1792.

POLO, Marco (Biog.) vide Paulo.

POLYÆNUS (Biog.) an orator in the age of Julius Cæsar, who wrote an account of Antony's expedition into Parthia.

POLYÆNUS, a native of Macedonia, who wrote a book on the stratagems of illustrious commanders in war. The 'Stratagemata' were published in Greek by Casaubon, 12mo. 1589; but the editions of Maasvicius, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1690, and of Mursinua, 12mo. Berol. 1756, are reckoned the best; an English translation, by Mr. R. Shepherd, appeared in 4to. 1793. He also wrote 'De Republica Macedonum,' and other things, which are lost.

POLYBIUS (Myth.) or Polybos, Πόλυβος, a king of Corinth, who married Peribœa, but, having no children by her, he permitted her to adopt Œdipus as her own son, who had been found by his shepherds in the wood. He left his kingdom to Adrastus, who had been banished from his own, and had fled to Corinth for protection. Sophoc. in Œd. Tyr. et Schol.; Euripid. in Phœniss.; Apollod. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 66; Senec. in Œd.; Mart. l. 7, ep. 71; Paus. l. 2.

POLYBIUS (Hist.) Πολύβιος, a statesman and historian, was born at Megalopolis, in Peloponnesus, and died in the 82d year of his age, A. C. 124. He acted with his father in support of the Achæan League, and distinguished himself by his valour in Macedonia; but when Perseus was taken prisoner he was carried captive with him to Rome, where he gained the friendship of Fabius and Scipio, and attended the latter in his expedition into Africa, and was present at the taking of Carthage. He wrote a Universal History in Greek, divided into forty books, of which only the first five books are extant, and fragments of the twelve following. His history was first published at Hagenau, by Obsopæus, Gr. and Lat. fol. 1530, and reprinted by Casaubon, in 1609, at Paris; but the edition of Gronovius, in 3 vols. 8vo. Amst. 1670, and of Schweighaeuser, 7 vols. 8vo. Lips. 1785, are the most esteemed. Cic. ad Attic. l. 13, ep. 30, &c.; Dionys. Hal. Jud.; Liv. l. 30, &c.; Plut. in Phil.; Paus. l. 8; Lucian. Macr.; Voss. de Hist. Græc.

POLYCARPUS (Ecc.) or Polycarp, an apostolic father of the Christian church, was born in the reign of Nero, probably at Smyrna, a city of Ionia, in Asia Minor, was consecrated by St. John, whose disciple he was, bishop of his native city; and after governing his church with apostolical purity, he suffered martyrdom in the seventh year of Marcus Aurelius, A. D. 167. His Epistle to the Philippians, which is the only work of his extant, was annexed to the Oxford edition of the works of S. Ignatius, 8vo. 1708, which is reckoned to be the best.

POLYCLETUS (Biog.) a famous sculptor of Sicyon, who flourished about 430 years before the Christian æra, executed a piece representing the body guard of a king of Persia, which was looked upon as a model; whence his skill is celebrated by the poets.

Juv. Sat. 3, v. 21[illegible].

Hic aliquid præclarum Euphranoris et Polycleti.

Mart. l. 8, ep. 51.

Quis labor in phialâ? Docti Myos, anne Myronis?

POLYCRATES (Hist.) Πολυκράτης, a tyrant of Samos, who had a fleet of a hundred ships of war, was one of the most powerful princes of his time; but going on a visit to Magnesia, on the Mæander, at the invitation of Orestes the governor, he was shamefully put to death by the latter, out of envy for his good fortune, A. C. 522. Herod. l. 3; Thucyd. l. 1; Cic. Fin. l. 5; Strab. l. 14; Plin. l. 33; Plut. de Phil.; Paus. l. 8.

POLYDECTES (Myth.) Πολυδέκτης, a son of Magnes and Nais, king of the island of Seriphus, who offered violence to Danae, the mother of Perseus, but was turned into a stone by means of the Medusa's head, which Perseus carried about with him. Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 63; Paus. l. 1; Serv. ad Æn. l. 6; Schol. Hom. Il. l. 14; Tzetz. ad Lycoph.

POLYDECTES (Hist.) a king of Sparta, of the family of the Proclidæ. Paus. l. 3.

POLYDORUS (Myth.) Πολύδωρος, a son of Priam, by Hecuba, who, according to Homer, was killed by Achilles in the Trojan war; but, according to other accounts, he was sent by his father to the court of Polymnestor, king of Thrace, with a great sum of money, which was entrusted to the charge of the latter, who however, in violation of his trust, murdered Polydorus, and seized the money. Hom. Il. l. 20; Euripid. in Hec.; Apollod. l. 3; Virg. Æn. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 90; Ovid. Met. l. 13; Dictys. Cret. l. 2, &c.

POLYGNOTUS (Biog.) a painter of Thasos, who flourished about 422 years before the Christian æra. Plin. l. 33; Quintil. l. 12; Plut. in Cim.; Paus. l. 10.

POLYHYMNIA (Myth.) or Polymnia, one of the Muses, daughter of Jupiter and Mnemosyne, who presided over singing and rhetoric. Hesiod. Theog. v. 75; Horat. l. 1, od. 1; Ovid. Fast. l. 5; Plut. in Symp.

POLYHYMNIA (Numis.) vide Musæ.

POLYMNESTOR (Myth.) a king of the Thracian Chersonesus, who is said to have perfidiously murdered Polydorus, the son of Priam, for the sake of the treasure which he had received in charge with him. Eurip. in Hecub.; Virg. Æn. l. 3; Hygin. Fab. 109; Propert. l. 3, el. 2; Ovid. Met. l. 13, &c.

POLYNICES (Myth.) Πολυνείκης, a son of Œdipus, king of Thebes, by his mother Jocasta, who inherited his father's throne with his brother Eteocles, between whom it was mutually agreed that they should reign each a year alternately; but Eteocles the elder, not choosing to resign the throne to his brother at the expiration of the year, Polynices besought the assistance of his father-in-law Adrastus, king of Argos, who levied an army, commanded by seven celebrated chiefs, who were to attack the seven gates of Thebes; but the contest was decided by a single combat between the brothers, who both fell in battle. Æschyl. Sept. ante Theb.; Eurip. in Phœniss.; Apollod. l. 3; Diodor. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 68, &c.; Senec. in Theb.; Paus. l. 2.

POLYPERCHON (Hist.) or Polysperchon, one of the officers of Alexander, who was appointed governor of Macedonia by Antipater; but was killed in battle, A. C. 309.

POLYPHEMUS (Myth.) Πολύφημος, king of the Cyclops in Sicily, and a son of Neptune, who is represented as a cannibal of gigantic strength and stature, with one eye in the middle of his forehead, which Ulysses, after having intoxicated him with liquor, contrived to bore out with a burning brand, and in that manner made his escape from his cave in which he had been confined. Hom. Odyss. l. 1; Eurip. in Cyclop.; Theocrit. Idyl. 1; Hygin. Fab. 125.

POMBAL, Sebastian Joseph Carvalho, Marquis de (Hist.) a Portuguese minister of state, was born in 1699, in the territory of Coimbra, appointed to the post of secretary of state in 1750, which he held during the reign of Joseph; but at his death in 1777 fell into disgrace, and was banished to one of his estates, where he died in 1782, in his 85th year. A book, entitled, Memoirs of the Marquis of Pombal, was published at Paris in 4 vols. 12mo. 1783.

POMEROY (Her.) the name of a family of Norman origin, whose ancestor, Ralph de Pomeroy, held a grant from the Conqueror of 58 lordships in Devonshire, and others in Somersetshire. His descendants were summoned to Parliament as barons, and were possessed for centuries of Berry Pomeroy, co. Devon. From a branch of this family, which settled in Ireland, descended Arthur Pomeroy, who was created in 1783 lord Harberton of Carbery, and in 1791 viscount Harberton.

POMET, Peter (Biog.) a druggist of Paris, was born in 1658, and died in 1699, leaving 'Histoire Generale des Drogues simples et composés,' &c. 1694; reprinted in 4to. with additions in 1735.

POMEY, Francis (Biog.) a French Jesuit, who died at an advanced age in 1673, wrote 'Pantheon Mythicum,' &c. which was translated into English by Tooke, without acknowledgment; besides which he published a Latin and French Dictionary, and some other elementary works.

POMFRET, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles borne by the family of Fermor [vide Fermor]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Fermor, earl of Pomfret, and lord Sempster.

Arms. Argent, a fess sable, between three lions' heads erased gules.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet or, a cock's head issuing gules, crested and wattled or.

Supporters. Two lions proper.

Motto. "Hora e sempre."

POMFRET, John (Biog.) an English poet, was born about 1667, and died in 1703, leaving, among other poems the 'Choice,' which have procured him a place among the British Poets.

POMMERAYE, John Francis (Biog.) a Benedictine of St. Maur, was born at Rouen in 1617, and died in 1687, leaving 'L'Histoire de l'Abbaye de S. Ouen de Rouen,' fol. Rouen, 1662; 'L'Histoire des Archevêques de Rouen,' fol. Rouen, 1667; 'L'Histoire de la Cathédrale de Rouen,' 4to. 1686, &c.

POMONA (Myth.) a nymph at Rome, who was supposed to preside over gardens, and to be goddess of all sorts of fruit trees. She had a temple at Rome, and a priest called Flamen Pomonalis. She is represented on gems, &c. with a pruning hook in her right hand, and a branch in her left. Ovid. Met. l. 14; Fest. de Signif. Verb.; Servius in Æn. l. 7.

POMPADOUR, Jane Antoinette Poisson, Marchioness of (Biog.) the daughter of a financier, and the wife of M. d'Etioles, became the mistress of Louis XV, and died in 1764, at the age of 44. The Memoirs and Letters published under her name are spurious.

POMPEI, Jerome (Biog.) an Italian poet, of a noble family of Verona, was born in 1731, and died in 1790, leaving a number of works, of which an edition was published after his death, in 6 vols. 8vo.

POMPEIA, gens (Hist.) a Roman family, so called from the town of Pompeii, which, though plebeian, rose to the dignity of the consulship, and was rendered illustrious by several of its members, particularly Pompey the Great. [Vide Pompeius]

POMPEIA, daughter of Sextus Pompey, by Scribonia, was promised to Marcellus, as a means of procuring a reconciliation between her father and the triumvirs; but she married Scribonius Libo.

POMPEIA, a daughter of Pompey the Great, was married to Julius Cæsar, but divorced on a charge of incontinence. Plut. et Suet. in Jul.

POMPEIA, gens (Numis.) many coins are extant, bearing the name of this family, and principally with the surname of Rufus, or of Magnus, in reference to the great general hereafter mentioned, as CN. POMPEIUS QUINTI FILIUS Q. NEPOS RUFUS. — Q. POMPEI RUF. SULLA COS. — CNEUS MAGNUS IMP.—MAGNUS PIUS IMP. ITER.—CN. POMPEIUS M. His effigy is given as in Plate XIII, and that of his son Sextus as in the annexed figure, inscription—MAGNUS PIUS IMPERATOR.

POMPEIA (Topog.) a portico at Rome, much frequented by all orders of people. Mart. l. 2, ep. 48.

POMPEII (Geog.) or Pompeium, a town of Campania, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, which was buried by an eruption of that mountain in the year 79, and lay unheeded, and almost forgotten, until it was discovered towards the middle of the 18th century, about the time that Herculaneum was discovered. Strab. l. 5; Mela, l. 2; Senec. Nat. Quæst. l. 6; Plin. l. 3; Flor. l. 1.

POMPEIOPOLIS (Geog.) now Pampeluna, the capital of the Vascones or of Navarre. [Vide Pompelon]

POMPEIOPOLIS, the name of two cities, one in Cilicia, formerly called Solis and another in Paphlagonia, otherwise called Eupatoria, both of which received their names from Pompey, when he conquered Mithridates. Strab. l. 12; Mela, l. 1; Solin. c. 51.

POMPEIOPOLIS (Numis.) medals are extant bearing the inscription—ΠΟΜΠΗΙΟΠΟΛΕΙΤΩΝ, which are ascribed to the town in Cilicia so called, which struck coins as an independent state, and also in honour of M. Aurelius, L. Verus, Commodus, &c. The town of Paphlagonia is also distinguished on medals by the inscription—ΜΗΤΡΟ. ΠΑΦΛ. ΠΟΜΠΗΙΟΠΟΛΙC.

POMPEIUS, Q. (Hist.) a consul who carried on the war against the Numantines, and made a shameful treaty. He is the first of that noble family of whom mention is made. Flor. l. 2.

POMPEIUS, Strabo Cneius, a Roman general, who triumphed over the Piceni, and afterwards supported the cause of the republic against Marius and Cinna; but, being killed by a flash of lightning, his body was ignominiously dragged through the streets of Rome, and thrown into the Tiber.

POMPEIUS, Rufus, a Roman consul with Sylla, was sent to finish the war against the Marsi; but was assassinated by his own army, who mutinied against him. Appian. de Bell. Civ.

POMPEIUS, Cneius, surnamed Magnus, the son of Pompeius Strabo, followed the interests of Sylla, and after conquering Sicily, which was in the power of Marius, and other places, he was the first who obtained a triumph without enjoying any office under the appointment of the senate. After the death [illegible] he crushed the remains of the Marian faction [illegible] Lepidus, and put an end to the [illegible] Sertorius in Spain had occasioned [illegible] triumph, though still a private citizen [illegible] years before the Christian era. As consul, [illegible] his career of victory in Armenia, and other parts [illegible], and pushed his conquests as far as the Red Sea, receiving homage from no less than twelve crowned heads at once. But on his triumphant return to Rome, he found a formidable rival to his growing power in Cæsar, who, after conquering all Italy, followed Pompey into Greece, where the two armies meeting on the plains of Pharsalia, a desperate conflict ensued, which terminated so decidedly in favour of Cæsar, that Pompey was compelled to seek his safety by flight. He proceeded in disguise to Egypt, where he hoped to find an asylum until he could recruit his army; but was basely assassinated by Achillas, the minister of the Egyptian king, who was sent for this purpose, in the 59th year of his age, A. C. 48. [Vide Plate XII] Cic. ad Attic. l. 7, ep. 25, &c.; Cæs. de Bell. Civ.; Paterc. l. 2; Plut. in. Vit.; Dio. Cass.; Florus, Appian, Eutropius, &c.

POMPEIUS, Cneius and Sextus, the two sons of the preceding, were masters of a powerful army soon after the death of their father, with which they engaged the forces of the conqueror; but Cneius was left among the slain, and Sextus fled to Sicily. After the murder of Cæsar he attempted to oppose the triumvirs with a fleet of 350 ships; but was defeated, and fled with only 17 sail to Asia, where Antony caused him to be seized and put to death at Miletus. [Vide Pompeia, gens, under Numismatics]

POMPONIUS, Lucius (Biog.) a comic writer, and native of Bologna, who wrote upwards of 30 plays, mentioned by ancient writers.

POMPONIUS, Mela, vide Mela.

POMPONIUS LÆTUS, Julius, an Italian antiquary, and the illegitimate offspring of the illustrious House of Sanseverino, in the kingdom of Naples, who died in 1498, was the author of various treatises on the priesthood, &c. which were collected in one volume, under the title of 'Opera Pomponii Læti varia, Mogunt. 1521.

PONS Æmylius (Topog.) otherwise called Sublicius, because built with sublicæ, or piles of wood, was originally constructed by Ancus Marcius, and rebuilt with stone by Æmylius Lepidus, whose name it received. It was afterwards repaired by the emperor Antoninus with white marble, and was the last of all the bridges of Rome in following the course of the Tiber; some vestiges of it are still to be seen.

Pons Ælius, now Ponte di S. Angelo, the second bridge in Rome, which is also the largest and most beautiful, was built by the emperor Adrian.

Pons Janicularis, now Ponte Sisto, a bridge in Rome, so called from its proximity to the Janiculum.

Pons Milvius, now Ponte Molle, a bridge about one mile out of Rome, built by the censor Ælius Scaurus.

Pons Palatinus, otherwise called Senatorius, was begun by M. Fulvius, and finished in the censorship of L. Mummius. Some remains of it are still visible.

Pons Trajani, was built by Trajan over the Danube; some of the pillars of which are still standing near Schwerin.

PONSONBY, the Right Hon. George (Hist.) a politician, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, and second son of the Speaker of the Irish House of Commons, was called to the bar in 1780, obtained a lucrative office in 1782, under the Rockingham administration, from which he was removed in 1788, when he took a leading part in opposition until his appointment to the dignity of Chancellor of Ireland in 1806. This post he shortly after lost, on the removal of his friends from the administration, when he acted as leader of the opposition party in the House of Commons until his death in 1817, at the age of 63.

Ponsonby (Her.) the name of a family derived from the lordship of Ponsonby, of which they became owners soon after the Conquest. This family traces its origin from noble ancestors in Picardy, and has since been ennobled in two of its branches. William Ponsonby, of the elder branch, was created a peer in 1721, by the title of lord Besborough, baron of Besborough, co. Kilkenny; and in 1722 by the title of viscount Duncannon. His son, Brabazon, was advanced to the dignity of earl of Besborough in 1739, and created a peer of Great Britain in 1749, by the title of lord Ponsonby, baron Ponsonby of Sysonby, co. Leicester; and William Brabazon, grandson of John Ponsonby of Imokilly, third son of the first earl, was created in 1806 a peer of Great Britain, by the title of baron Ponsonby of Imokilly. [Vide Besborough]

PONTANUS, John Jovian (Biog.) an Italian scholar, was born in 1426 at Cerreto, in Umbria, and died about 1503, leaving several works in prose, which were collected and published in 3 vols. 8vo. 1518; and also poetical works, which were published by Aldus, in 8vo. 1505, and again in 1513 and 1518.

Pontanus, John Isaac, historiographer to his Danish majesty, was born in 1571, and died in 1640, leaving 'Discussiones Historicæ;' 'Historica Geldrica;' 'Origines Francicæ,' &c.

PONTAS, John (Biog.) a French ecclesiastic, and a casuist, was born in 1638 at St. Hilaire de Harcourt, and died in 1728, leaving 'Sacra Scriptura ubique sibi constans,' 4to. Paris. 1698; 'Dictionnaire de Cas de Conscience,' 3 vols. fol. 1714-18.

PONTAULT, Sebastian Beaulieu de (Hist.) a French engineer, who died in 1674, after having distinguished himself at several sieges and battles, was the author of a work entitled 'Les Glorieuses Conquêtes de Louis le Grand,' 2 vols. fol.

PONTE, Francis da (Biog.) the head of a family of artists, of Bassano, who died about 1530, acquired a reputation which has placed him in the rank of a master.

Ponte, Jacob da, called also Il Bassano, son and pupil of the preceding, died in 1592, at the age of 82, after having enjoyed the esteem of the most celebrated of his cotemporaries and rivals, as Titian, Annibal Caracci, and Paul Veronese. His four sons, Francis, Leander, John Baptist, and Jerome, preserved the reputation of the family for many years.

PONTIDERA, Julius (Biog.) a botanist, was born at Vicenza in 1688, and died in 1737, leaving among his works 'Compendium Tabularum Botannicarum,' 4to.

PONTIUS, Herennius (Hist.) a general of the Samnites, who surrounded the Roman army under the consuls T. Veturius and P. Posthumus, and compelled them to pass under the yoke; but being afterwards defeated by Fabius Maximus, and taken prisoner, he was put to death, after having adorned the triumph of the victor. Cic. de Offic.; Liv. l. 9.

Pontius, Constantine (Ecc.) a Spanish ecclesiastic, called also de Fuente, who turned Protestant in the reign of Philip II, and being suspected was thrown into prison, where he died of a dysentery, by which he escaped the punishment of burning, to which he was condemned. He was the author of some theological works.

PONTOPPIDAN, Eric (Ecc.) bishop of Bergen, who was born in 1698 at Aarhuus, and died in 1764, was the author of some historical works, one of which, namely, A History of Norway, has been translated into English. He is to be distinguished from another Eric Pontoppidan, who was author of a Danish Grammar, and a Collection of Epigrams, &c. The latter was born in 1616, and died in 1678.

PONTORMO (Biog.) vide Caracci.

PONTUS (Geog.) a kingdom of Asia Minor, which was divided, according to Ptolemy, into Pontus Galaticus, of which Amasia was the capital; Pontus Polemoniacus, from its chief town Polemonium; and Pontus Cappadocius, of which Trapezus was the capital. Pontus was governed by kings in the time of Darius Hystaspes, who set Artabazes over this kingdom. His successors were Rhodobates, Mithridates I, Ariobarzanes I, Mithridates II, Mithridates III, Ariobarzanes II, Mithridates IV, Mithridates V, Pharnaces I, Mithridates VI, Mithridates VII, Pharnaces II, Darius, Polemon I and II. At the death of this latter prince Pontus was dismembered, and at the division of the Roman empire it was subject to the emperors of the East, until David and Alexis Comnenus, being driven from Constantinople, settled, the one at Heraclea, and the other at Trebisond, whence a new empire arose, called the empire of Trebisond, which remained in the hands of the Comneni for upwards of two centuries and a half.

POOLE (Her.) the name of a family of great antiquity, otherwise written de la Poole, or Pole, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1677 on sir James Poole; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Azure, semé of fleur-de-lis or, a lion rampant argent.

Crest. In a ducal coronet or, a griffin's head argent.

Poole (Biog.) or Pool, Matthew, a nonconformist, was born in 1624, educated at Cambridge, sided with the usurping powers, by whom he was intruded into the living of St. Michael le Querne, in London; was ejected at the restoration; and died in 1679; leaving, among other things, a work of biblical criticism, entitled, 'Synopsis,' the credit of which was preserved on the continent much longer than in this country.

POORE (Her.) the name of a family which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1795 on sir John Methuen Poore; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a fesse azure, between three mullets gules.

cuffed ermine, charged with two mullets in fesse or, grasping in the hand an arrow proper.

POPE, Sir Thomas (Hist.) a statesman, and the munificent founder of Trinity College, Oxford, was born at Dedington, in Oxfordshire, in 1508, and after studying the law at Gray's Inn, and filling various offices under Henry VIII, and his successors Edward VI and queen Mary, he died in 1559. During the reign of Mary he was entrusted with the care of the princess Elizabeth, who was afterwards queen, and showed her every possible mark of respect that was consistent with the nature of his charge. In 1554 he obtained a royal licence and charter from Philip and Mary to create and erect a college within the University of Oxford, under the title of "Collegium sanctæ et individuæ Trinitatis in Universitate Oxoniæ ex Fundatione Thomæ Pope, Militis." The society was to consist of a president, a priest, twelve fellows, four of whom should be priests, and eight scholars, (afterwards increased to twelve,) and the whole to be liberally and amply endowed with certain manors, lands, and revenues. [Vide Plate XII]

POPE, Alexander (Biog.) an English poet of the first rank, was born in Lombard-street, London, in 1688, and died in 1744. His 'Ode to Solitude,' written at the age of 12, is supposed not to have been his first poetical production. His 'Pastorals,' were written at the age of 16; these were followed by 'Essay on Criticism,' written in 1709, and published in 1711; 'Messiah,' first published in the Spectator in 1712; 'Ode to St. Cecilia's Day;' 'The Dying Christian to his Soul;' 'Elegy to the Memory of an unfortunate Lady;' 'Rape of the Lock;' 'The Temple of Fame;' 'The Epistle from Eloisa to Abelarde,' and some other pieces, which followed each other in quick succession; but his principal work, his translation of Homer's Iliad, was not completed until 1720. Of the Odyssey, which appeared soon after, he translated only the third, fifth, seventh, ninth, tenth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, seventeenth, twenty-first, twenty-second, and twenty-fourth books; the rest were translated by Fenton and Browne. [Vide Plate XXVIII]

POPE, Walter, a writer in the 17th century, who wrote, among other things, 'The Wish,' or 'The Old Man's Wish,' a poem inserted in Nicholl's Collection; 'The Catholic Ballad;' 'Select Novels,' 1694, from the Spanish of Cervantes, and the Italian of Petrarch, &c.

POPHAM, Sir John (Hist.) an English judge, and native of Somersetshire, was born in 1531, studied at the Middle Temple, and after rising through the various gradations of the law to the rank of Chief Justice of the King's Bench in 1592, he died in 1607, leaving, 1. 'Reports and Cases,' &c. fol. London, 1656. 2. 'Resolutions and Judgments upon Cases and Matters agitated in all the Courts at Westminster in the latter end of Queen Elizabeth,' 4to.

POPHAM, Sir Home Riggs, a naval commander, was born at Gibraltar in 1762, and entering early into the navy, he rose by his merits to the rank of an admiral, and after having been honourably employed on different expeditions during the late war, he died in 1820.

POPILIUS, M. (Hist.) a consul, who, while offering a sacrifice, was informed that a sedition was raised in the city, when he went in his sacerdotal robes and appeased the multitude. Cic. in Brut. c. 14; Val. Max. l. 7; Liv. l. 9.

POPILIUS, Lænas, a Roman ambassador to Antiochus, king of Syria.

POPPÆA, Sabina (Hist.) the daughter of Titus Ollius, was first married to Otho, and afterwards to Nero, who repudiated his first wife Octavia in order to make way for Poppæa, and then treated her with such barbarity, that she died of a kick which he gave her when in a state of pregnancy, A. D. 65. Plin. l. 28; Tacit. Annal. l. 13, &c.; Sueton. et Dio. in Vit. Ner.

POPPÆA (N[illegible]) medals are extant of this empress, inscribed, POPPAEA AUGUSTA. — DIVA POPPAEA AUG. —ΠΟΠΠΑΙΑ ΝΕΡΩΝΟC ΣΕΒΑΣΤ[illegible]—ΣΑΒ*ίνης* ΠΟΠΠΑΙΑΣ ΣΕΒΑΣΤΗΣ ΗΡΑΣ.—ΠΟΠΠ[illegible]. ΣΑΒΕΙΝΑ CΕΒΑΣΤΗ.

PORCIA (Hist.) a sister of Cato, of Utica, who was greatly commended by Cicero. She married Domitius Ahenobarbus.

PORCIA, a daughter of Cato of Utica, was first married to Bibulus, and after his death to Brutus, who repudiated his wife Claudia, to make way for Porcia. When Brutus was dead, she refused to survive him, and for want of other means, which were removed out of her way by her friends, she swallowed live coals, and died about 42 years before the Christian æra. Cic. ad Attic. l. 13, ep. 37; Val. Max. l. 3; Mart. l. 1, ep. 42; Appian. de Bel. Civ.; Plut. in Brut.

PORCIUS, Licinius, M. (Biog.) a Latin poet in the time of the third Punic war, of whose writings only six verses are preserved. Catull. Carm. 48; Horat. l. 2, sat. 8; Aul. Gell. l. 17.

PORDENONE, John Antony Licinius (Biog.) a painter, so called from Pordenone, a village not far from Udino, where he was born in 1484. He died in 1540, after having maintained a competition with Titian. His most considerable picture at Rome is that with the portraits of his family, in the palace of the Borghese; but his oil painting of a St. Lorenzo Giustiani, surrounded by other saints, an altarpiece in S. Maria del l'Orto, at Venice, is reckoned one of his master-pieces.

PORPHYRIUS (Biog.) a philosopher in the reign of Alexander Severus, who died about the year 304, after having distinguished himself by his opposition to Christianity. He wrote several books against the Christians, and on other subjects, of which there are extant only four treatises, namely, 'De Abstinentia,' &c.; 'De Vitâ Pythagoræ;' 'Sententiæ ad Intelligibilia ducentes;' 'De Antro Nympharum,' with a fragment 'De Styge.' These were printed at Cambridge, in 8vo. 1655, with a Latin version, and the Life of Porphyry subjoined, by Lucas Holstenius.

PORSENNA (Hist.) or Porsena, a king of Etruria, who declared in favour of the Tarquins, and besieged Rome, in order to procure their restoration, but was compelled to raise the siege in consequence of the extraordinary acts of heroism displayed by Horatius Cocles, and Mutius Scævola. Horat. Epod. 16.

History of Prague.

Prague, in the Latin of the middle ages Praga, is an ancient city, and has been frequently exposed to the calamities of war, particularly in the 15th century, in consequence of the disturbances occasioned by the Hussites. The White Mountain without the gate of the city, is celebrated for the victory gained in 1620 by the Austrians, over Frederic V of the Palatinate, whom the Bohemians had chosen for their king. In 1631 it was taken by the Saxons; by the Swedes in 1648; by the French by storm in 1742, and by the king of Prussia in 1744. It was besieged by the king of Prussia in 1757, after a great victory obtained over the Imperialists, but being defeated some time after, he was obliged to raise the siege. A council was held in this city by Stankon, its archbishop, in 1405, at which the doctrines of the Hussites were condemned.

His name is derived ἀπὸ τῆς Προμηθείας; i. e. a providentia; whence he is designated by Hesiod αἰολόμητις, ἀγκυλόμητις ποικιλόβουλος, and πολυΐδρις; by Æschylus αἰπυμήτης, and σοφιστής; by Appian πολυμήτης, &c. He was the father of Deucalion, who was therefore called Japetionides. Æschyl. in Prom. et Schol.; Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 144; Tertull. Apol.

PROPERTIUS, Sextus Aurelius (Biog.) a Latin poet, and native of Menavia, in Umbria, was cotemporary with Virgil and Horace, and shared with them in the favours of Mecænas. He died about 19 years before the Christian æra, in the 40th year of his age, leaving a number of Elegies, which have procured for him the title of Prince of Elegiac Poets among the Latins. The edition of Santenius, 4to. Traj. ad Rhen. 1780, and, together with Catullus and Tibullus, that of Grævius, 8vo. Ultraj. 1680, are reckoned very good, but that of Vulpius, 4 vols. 4to. is the most esteemed.

PROPONTIS (Geog.) a sea between Europe and Asia, now called the Sea of Marmora. Apollod. l. 1; Strab. l. 2; Mel. l. 1; Ovid. Trist. l. 1; Lucan. l. 9.

PROSERPINA (Myth.) a daughter of Ceres by Jupiter, called by the Greeks Περσεφόνη, with whom Pluto falling in love carried her away as she was gathering flowers in Sicily, and made her queen of the infernal regions. Ceres being disconsolate at the loss besought Jupiter to punish the ravisher and procure her restoration; but Jupiter, though unwilling to comply with her wishes, consented that she should remain six months in the infernal regions, and the remainder of the year with her mother.

Orph. in Argon.

"Ως ποτε Περσεφόνην τέρεν' ἄνθεα χερσὶ δρέπουσαν
'Εξάπαφον συνόμαιμοι αν' ἐυρύτε καὶ μέγα ἄλσος,
'Αυτὰρ ἐπεὶ μιν Πλῦτος κυανότριχας αἴσυ
Ζευξάμενος, κήρην ἐπεβησάτο δαίμονος αἴσῃ,
"Αρπαξας δ' ἔφερεν διὰ κύματος ἀτρυγέτοιο.

Euripid. in Orest.

Καὶ τύπον τε κρατὸς ὃ ἔλαχ' ἁ κατὰ χθονὸς
Νερτέρων Περσέφασσα καλλίπαις θεά.

She was fabled to cut off the hair of the deceased.

Horat. l. 1, od. 28.

Mista senum ac juvenum densantur funera; nullum
Sæva caput Proserpina fugit.

Virg. Æn. l. 4, v. 698.

Nondum illi flavum Proserpina vertice crinem
Abstulerat, Stygioque caput damnaverat orco.

Martial. l. 9, ep. 43.

Non ... fallis. Scit te Proserpina canum,
Personam capiti detrahet illa tuo.

PROSPER, S. (Ecc.) a Christian writer, cotemporary with Augustine, whose doctrine respecting grace he warmly defended against the Pelagians and heretics of the time. The best edition of his works is that of Paris, fol. 1711; reprinted at Rome in 8vo. 1732. He is to be distinguished from another Prosper, who lived about the same time, and wrote a treatise on the Call of the Gentiles, and the 'Epistle to the Virgin Demetriade,' which is in the 'Appendix Augustiniana,' fol. Antv. 1703.

PROTAGORAS (Biog.) Προταγόρας, a Greek philosopher of Abdera, and disciple of Democritus, who died about 400 years before the Christian æra. Plat. in Protag.; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1; Aul. Gell. l. 5; Diog. in Vit.

PROTESILAUS (Myth.) Πρωτεσίλαος, a king of part of Thessaly, son of Iphiclus, who sailed with the Greeks to the Trojan war, but being, as is said, doomed by the oracle to perish, he fell by the hand of Æneas or Hector as soon as he had leaped from his ship. Hom. Il. l. 2; Ovid. Heroid. ep. 13; Propert. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 103.

PROTEUS (Myth.) Πρωτεὺς, a sea deity, son of Oceanus and Tethys, who usually resided in the Carpathian Sea, and, having a knowledge of futurity, was frequently consulted by his votaries when he rested on the sea shore. He was, however, difficult of access; and, in order to elude the search of those who resorted to him, he assumed a diversity of shapes at pleasure.

Hom. Odyss. l. 4.

'Αλλ' ἤτοι πρώτιστα λέων γένετ' ἠϋγένειος,
'Αυτὰρ ἔπειτα δρακων, καὶ πάρδαλις, ἠδὲ μέγας σῦς,
Γίνετο δ' ὑγρὸν ὕδωρ, καὶ δένδρεον ὑψιπέτηλον.

Horat. l. 2, sat. 3.

Effugiet tamen hæc sceleratus vincula Proteus,
Cum rapies in jus malis ridentem alienis,
Fiet aper, modo avis, modò saxum et, cum volet, arbor.

Sil. Ital.

Per varias lusit formas.

Orpheus supposes Proteus to be the most ancient of the gods, and the origin of all things.

Orph. in Hymn.

Πρωτέα κικλήσκω, πόντου κληῖδας ἔχοντα

PROTOGENES (Biog.) Πρωτογένης, a painter of Rhodes, who flourished about 328 years before the Christian æra, and was neglected by his countrymen until he was patronised by Apelles, who admired his pieces. Juv. l. 3; Plin. l. 35; Plut. in Demosth.; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 12; Paus. l. 1.

PROVENCE (Geog.) a late province of France, having Dauphiny on the N., the Alps on the E., the Mediterranean on the S., and Languedoc on the W. It comprehends the modern departments of Var, Lower Alps, and Mouths of the Rhone.

PRUDENTIA (Myth.) a moral deity among the Romans, which is depicted on the medals of their emperors, as in the annexed figure, having a rule or measure in her hand, and a globe at her feet, to denote that the emperor in whose honour the medal was struck governed the empire by his prudence. This virtue is mostly called PROVIDENTIA, with the addition of AUG. AUGUSTI, &c.

PRUDENTIUS, Clemens Aurelius (Biog.) an ancient Christian poet, born in Spain in 348, whose poems on pious subjects were first published by Aldus at Venice, in 4to. 1501, and several times; namely, a Variorum edition at Hanau in 1613, and one 'In usum Delphini,' 4to. Paris. 1687.

PRUDHOE, Baron (Her.) of Prudhoe Castle, co. Northumberland, the title enjoyed by a younger branch of the family of Percy. [Vide Percy]

PRUSIAS (Hist.) Προυσίας, a king of Bithynia, who made an alliance with the Romans, and to whom he would have delivered up Annibal, after having afforded him an asylum, if the Carthaginian general had not prevented it by a voluntary death. Polyb. l. 3; Liv. l. 39, &c.; C. Nep. in Annib.; Justin. l. 31, &c.; Plut. in Fam.

PRUSSIA (Geog.) an extensive kingdom in Europe, occupying a great part of the north of Germany and the north of Poland. It is divided into ten provinces; namely, East Prussia, West Prussia, Brandenburg, Pomerania, Westphalia, Cleves and Berg, Silesia, Posen, Saxony, and Lower Rhine. Its chief towns are Berlin, Breslau, Dantzig, Cologne, Magdeburg, Aix-la-Chapelle, Frankfort on the Oder, Dresden, Brandenburg, &c. Its rivers are principally those which it has in common with Germany. Its four universities are those of Berlin, Halle, Breslau, and Konigsberg.

History. Prussia has risen to its present consequence by slow degrees. The present reigning family of Zollern, or Hohen Zollern, originally possessed a petty principality in Suabia, which they first increased by adding, in 1248, the principality of Bayreuth and Anspach, and afterwards by purchasing in 1417 the then marquisate of Brandenburg, with the rank of elector. By the expulsion of the Teutonic Order from Prussia Proper, this country was ceded to the margrave of Brandenburg, who, in 1620, obtained by inheritance a further accession of territory; namely, the duchy of Cleves, &c. In 1701 these several countries were erected into a kingdom in favour of Frederick, elector of Brandenburg, since which period it has been considerably enlarged, either by conquest or negotiation, particularly in the reign of Frederic II.

PRYNNE, William (Hist.) a lawyer, who cuts a figure in the annals of rebellion, was born in 1600 at Swanswick, in Somersetshire, educated at Oxford, and studied law at Lincoln's Inn. He then applied himself to writing sedition, for which, according to a sentence of the Star-Chamber in 1633, he lost his ears, was pilloried, imprisoned, heavily fined, and degraded; but in 1640 his party procured his release from prison, when he entered London in triumph, and contributed materially to the downfall of both church and state. He, however, afterwards fell out with Cromwell, and, lending his aid to the restoration of Charles II, he died in 1669 chief keeper of the records in the Tower, leaving, besides his scurrilous works, also some of a less exceptionable character, as his 'Records,' 3 vols. fol.; 'Parliamentary Writs,' in four parts, &c. [Vide Plate XVIII]

PSALMANAZAR, George (Biog.) the assumed name of a Frenchman, who passed himself off for a Formosan, and a convert to Christianity, and, in order to keep up the cheat, he invented an alphabet and a language, which he gave out for the language of that country. This succeeded in procuring him credit and support in England for a length of time, until he ventured to publish a 'History of Formosa,' the absurdities of which served to open the eyes of the public. He continued, however, to exercise his pen for a subsistence, being concerned in the compilation of 'The Universal History,' and other things; and at his death, which happened in 1763, at the age of 84, he confessed both his guilt and his shame, with many expressions of repentance.

PSAMMENITUS (Hist.) Ψαμμήνιτος, a successor of Amasis on the throne of Egypt, was defeated and taken prisoner by Cambyses, who treated him with great humanity, but, having detected him in his attempts to raise sedition, he ordered him to be put to death by drinking bullock's blood. Herod. l. 3.

PSAMMETICHUS (Hist.) or Psammitichus, Ψαμμίτιχος, a king of Egypt, who died about 617 years before the Christian æra. Herod. l. 2, c. 28.

PSAMMIS (Hist.) Ψάμμις, a son of Nechus and grandson of Psammiticus, succeeded his father on the throne of Egypt A. M. 3435, A. C. 600, and died after a reign of six years. Herodot. l. 2.

PSAMMITICHUS (Hist.) vide Psammetichus.

PSAMMUTIS (Hist.) a king of Egypt, who was cotemporary with Artaxerxes Mnemon, and reigned only one year. Diodor.

PSELLUS, Michael Constantinus (Biog.) a mathematician of the 12th century, wrote 'De quatuor Mathematicis Scientiis,' 8vo. Bas. 1556; 'De Lapidum Virtutibus,' 8vo. 1615; 'De Victûs Ratione,' 8vo. Basil. 1529; 'Synopsis Legum, versibus Græcis edita,' Paris. 1632. This Psellus is to be distinguished from another of the same name, who is supposed to have flourished in the ninth century, and wrote 'De Operatione Dæmonum,' Gr. and Lat. Paris. 1623.

PSYCHE (Myth.) Ψύχη, which signifies literally the soul, is fabled by the ancients to have been a nymph with whom Cupid fell in love. Venus having put her to death Jupiter is said, at the request of Cupid, to have given her immortality. Apul. Met. l. 4.

PSYCHE (Numis.) this nymph is frequently represented under the form of a butterfly, which was its symbol, and sometimes, as in the annexed figure, in the form of a female with a butterfly. Beg. Thes. Brand.

PTOLEMÆUS (Hist.) Πτολεμᾶιος, Ptolemy, the name of several kings of Egypt.

PTOLEMÆUS, surnamed Soter, a son of Arsinoe and Lagus, a man of mean extraction, became the friend and associate of Alexander the Great, and, at the death of the latter, obtained Egypt for his share, which he erected into a kingdom. All his successors were called Ptolemies and Lagidæ after him. His effigy, and that of the following princes, are given as in the annexed figures. Polyb. l. 2; Strab. l. 15; Joseph. Antiq. l. 12; Q. Curtius; Arrian; Plutarch, &c.

PTOLEMÆUS II, surnamed Philadelphus, in irony, because he killed his two brothers, succeeded his father A. C. 284, and died A. C. 246, in the 64th year of his age. It is said that the Greek version of the Old Testament, since known by the name of the Septuagint, because executed by 70 different persons, was completed in this reign. Theocrit. Idyll. 37; Polyb. l. 2; Vitruv. in Præf.; Josephus; Justin, &c.

PTOLEMÆUS III, son and successor of the preceding, surnamed Evergetes, died after a reign of 25 years, during which, according to Josephus, he offered sacrifices to the Lord as a thanksgiving for his many victories. Joseph. cont. Apion.; Euseb. in Chron.; S. Hieron. in Dan.

PTOLEMÆUS IV, surnamed Philopator, in derision, as is said, because he was suspected of having killed his father, began to reign A. M. 3783, A. C. 221, and died after a reign of 27 years. He attempted to force himself into the temple at Jerusalem, but was prevented by a sudden terror with which he was seized. Macc. i. 11; Polyb. l. 5; Justin. l. 30; Euseb. in Chron.

PTOLEMÆUS V, surnamed Epiphanes, succeeded his father Philopator at the age of three or four, and died after a reign of thirty-two years of a poison which was administered to him by his courtiers, whom he wished to deprive of their possessions. Liv. l. 35; Justin. &c.

PTOLEMÆUS VI, surnamed Philometor, from his hatred to his mother Cleopatra, ascended the throne at the age of six, and died A. C. 145. Polyb. Leg. 113; Val. Max. l. 5; Justin. &c.

PTOLEMÆUS VII, surnamed Physcon, succeeded his brother Philometor, and died in the 67th year of his age, and 29th of his reign, during which he was once expelled the throne by his divorced queen Cleopatra, but succeeded in regaining it by force of arms. To this king is ascribed a 'History of Egypt.' Strab. l. 17; Joseph. Antiq. l. 13; Athen. l. 2, &c.; Euseb. in Chron.

PTOLEMÆUS VIII, surnamed Lathyrus, succeeded A. M. 3918, A. C. 117, and died after a reign of 35 years, A. C. 81, during which he had been once expelled the throne by his mother Cleopatra in favour of her son Ptolemy Alexander, and recovered it again at his death. Josephus, Justin, &c.

PTOLEMÆUS IX, surnamed Alexander I, got possession of the kingdom of his brother, Ptolemy VIII, but was killed in a sedition, after a reign of ten years, during which he caused his mother Cleopatra to be put to death, by whose intrigues he had ascended the throne. Josephus, &c.

PTOLEMÆUS, Alexander II, succeeded his father, Alexander I, at the death of his uncle Lathyrus, and died after a reign of 15 years. Suetonius, Appian, &c.

PTOLEMÆUS, Alexander III, succeeded his brother, Alexander II, but, being banished by his subjects after a peaceful reign, he died A. C. 65.

PTOLEMÆUS XII, surnamed Auletes, the natural son of Lathyrus, succeeded Alexander III, and died A. C. 51, after having been restored by the assistance of Pompey to the throne of which his daughter Cleopatra had deprived him. Cic. ad Fam. l. 7, &c.; Strab. l. 17; Lucan. l. 8; Appian. de Bell. Civ.; Plut. in Ant.; Dio. l. 39.

PTOLEMÆUS XIII, surnamed Dionysius, or Bacchus, son and successor of Auletes, reigned conjointly with his sister Cleopatra, and was drowned after a reign of four years, during which he perfidiously caused Pompey to be put to death when the latter fled to Egypt. Cæs. in Alexand.; Strab. l. 17; Josephus, Dio. Appian, &c.

Kings of Cyprus.

PTOLEMÆUS, surnamed Macron, governed the island of Cyprus under Ptolemy Philometor, and afterwards under the kings of Syria, to whom he submitted, but poisoned himself soon after the death of Antiochus Epiphanes I. Macc. iii. &c.

PTOLEMÆUS I, was stript of his kingdom by Cato when he acted in the capacity of quæstor.

PTOLEMÆUS II, son of Ptolemy Auletus, was raised to the throne by Julius Cæsar, and was soon assassinated by means of the latter. Justin, Plutarch, &c.

King of Macedonia.

PTOLEMÆUS, surnamed Ceraunus, a son of Ptolemy Soter, being unable to succeed to the throne of Egypt, fled to Seleucus, king of Macedonia, whom he perfidiously murdered, and took possession of his throne. He did not, however, retain it more than a year and five months, when he was killed in battle against the Gauls, A. C. 280. Polyb., Justin., Pausanias.

King of Cyrene.

PTOLEMÆUS, surnamed Apion, the natural son of Ptolemy Physcon, was placed by his father on the throne of Cyrene, and died after a reign of 20 years, A. C. 96. Liv. Epit. l. 70; Euseb. in Chron.

Kings of Epirus

PTOLEMÆUS, a son of Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, who was killed in the expedition undertaken by his father against Sparta. Justin. l. 25.

PTOLEMÆUS, a king of Epirus, who died very young. Justin. l. 28.

King of Mauritania.

PTOLEMÆUS, son of Juba the Younger and Cleopatra, obtained the throne of Mauritania from Tiberius, and was put to death by order of Caligula. Sueton. in Cal.; Dio. l. 59.

Kings of Chalcidica.

PTOLEMÆUS, a Jew, son of Abodus, who married the daughter of Simon Maccabæus, and after murdering his father-in-law aimed at the sovereign power; but was compelled by Hyrcanus, the third son of Simon, to seek his safety by flight. 1 Macc., Josephus, &c.

PTOLEMÆUS, son of Mennæus, obtained the government of Chalcidica, which he defended against the arms of Pompey; but, being defeated, he obtained his life and liberty by paying 1000 talents. Strab. l. 16; Joseph. Ant. l. 14.

PTOLEMÆUS (Numis.) the medals of the Egyptian kings of this name, whose effigies are given as above, are mostly inscribed—ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΠΤΟΛΕΜΑΙΟΥ.

PTOLEMÆUS (Biog.) vide Ptolemy.

PTOLEMAIS (Geog.) a town of Phœnicia, otherwise called Aco, now Acre, which was a Roman colony. [Vide Acre and Ptolemais under Numismatics]

PTOLEMAIS, a town of Thebais, in Egypt, now called Tolemeta, which was formerly a bishop's see. A council was held here in 411. It was so called after the Ptolemies, by whom it was beautified. There was also another town of the same name in the territory of Cyrene. Strab. l. 14, &c.; Mel. l. 1; Plin. l. 2.

PTOLEMAIS (Numis.) medals are extant of the town in Phœnicia, some of which bear for their type the figure of a female, as in the annexed cut, sitting on a mountain, and having a river at her feet, to denote its mountainous situation, and its vicinity to the river Beleus. It was made a colony by Claudius, and is therefore inscribed COL. PTOL.

PTOLEMY (Hist.) vide Ptolemæus.

PTOLEMY (Biog.) or Ptolemæus Claudius, a mathematician, geographer, and astronomer, in the reign of Adrian, styled The Prince of Astronomers, was born at Pelusium, in Egypt, about the year 70, and is supposed to have made his astronomical observations between A. D. 125 and 140. His principal work on astronomy, entitled, Μεγάλη Σύνταξις, i. e. Magna Constructio, or, according to the Arabic version, 'Almagestum,' was first published in the original by Simon Grynæus, at Basil, in folio, 1538, with the Commentaries of Theon; reprinted, with the Latin version of Georgius Trapezuntius, in 1454 and 1551. His Geography, entitled 'Cosmographia,' was first published in the original, in 4to. Basil, 1533; with a Latin version by Mercator, fol. Amst. 1605; and with the notes of Bertius in 1618. Other works of Ptolemy are also extant, as 'Libri quatuor de Judiciis,' Gr. and Lat. 4to. Nuremb. 1535; and by Phil. Melancthon, 8vo. Basil. 1553, which is the best edition; 'Harmonica,' Gr. and Lat. by Dr. Wallis, 4to. Oxon. 1683; 'Apparentiæ Stellarum Inerrantium,' published in Greek, with a Latin version by Petavius, fol. 1630; and again, from a better copy, by Fabricius, in his 'Bibliotheca Græca;' 'De Hypothesibus Planetarum,' published by John Bainbridge, Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, 4to. Oxon. 1620; 'Recensio Chronologica Regum,' published with the last work.

PTOLEMY of Lucca, an ecclesiastical historian in the 14th century, was the author of 'Annales,' Lugd. 1619; 'Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ,' published by Muratori in his collection, entitled 'Rerum Italicarum Scriptores,' Mediol. 1727.

PUBLIUS (Bibl.) chief or governor of Malta when St. Paul was shipwrecked on this island, who is said to have been converted to Christianity, with his father, family, and the whole island. Acts xxviii.; Chrysost. Homil. 54, in Act. Apost.; Gregor. Magn. in Job xxvii.

PUBLIUS, Syrus (Biog.) a Latin author, and a Syrian slave, who flourished about 44 years A. C., and gained great reputation by his comic pieces, called 'Mimes.' He not only obtained his freedom by his talent, but also the patronage of J. Cæsar, and the first men at Rome. Cic. ad Fam. l. 12, ep. 18, &c.; Senec. Controv. l. 3; Plin. l. 8; Aul. Gell. l. 17; Macrob. l. 2.

PUDICITIA (Myth.) the goddess of chastity, who had two temples at Rome, one erected by Æmilius for the patricians, and the other for the plebeians by Virginia, the wife of Volumnius. Liv. l. 10; Val. Max. l. 2; Fest. de Verb. Signif.

PUDICITIA (Numis.) this deity is represented on the medals of the empresses, as in the annexed figure, under the form of a Roman matron, in the act of drawing a veil over her face. The name of this goddess is also frequently inscribed—PUDICITIA AUG. Vaill. Præst.; Spanh. Dissert.; Spence. Polym.

PUFFENDORF, Samuel (Biog.) a German civilian and historian, was born near Chemnitz, in Upper Saxony, in 1631, and died in 1694, leaving 'De Statu Germanici Imperii Liber unus,' 12mo. 1667; 'De Jure Naturæ et Gentium,' 4to. 1672; 'Commentariorum de Rebus Suecicis Libri XXVI,' &c. fol. 1680; 'De Habitu Religionis Christianæ ad Vitam Civilem,' 4to. 1687; 'Jus Feciale Divinum,' &c. 8vo. 1695; 'De Rebus gestis Frederici Wilelmi Magni,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1695; 'De Rebus a Carolo Gustavo

Sueciæ Rege gestis,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1696. [Vide Plate XXVIII]

PULCHERIA, Ælia (Hist.) daughter of the emperor Arcadius, sister of Theodosius, junior, and wife of Marcianus, shared the empire with her brother for many years, and at his death married Marcianus, and gave him the government on condition that she should be allowed to live in a state of continence. She died at the age of 56, A. D. 454, leaving a distinguished reputation for piety. Leo. Epist., Theodoret, Nicephorus, Baronius, &c.

PULCHERIA (Numis.) the effigy of this empress is given on medals, as in the annexed figure, bearing the inscription—PULCHERIA AUG. or AEL. PULCHERIA AUG.; on the reverse, SALUS REIPUBLICAE—VICTORIA AUGG. &c. Strad. Imp. Rom; Med. Imp. Rom.; Band. Numis.; Pembroch. Mus. &c.

PULCI, Luigi (Biog.) an Italian poet, was born at Florence in 1431, and is supposed to have died about 1487, leaving, besides his translation of the Eclogues of Virgil, also 'Giostra di Lorenzo de Medici;' 'Il Ciriffo Calvaneo;' 'Driadeo d'Amore;' but his principal work is his 'Morgante Maggiore.'

PULLEN (Ecc.) or Pullus, Robert, an English cardinal of the twelfth century, was raised to this dignity by Celestine II in 1144, and died in 1150, after having contributed to the restoration of the University of Oxford, which had suffered from the ravages of the Danes. He was the author of several works, of which only his 'Sententiarum Liber' is extant, which was published at Paris in 1655.

PULESTON (Her.) the name of a family of great antiquity in Flintshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1813 on sir Richard Puleston, a descendant from sir Roger de Puleston, knt. a distinguished favourite with Edward I. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, three mullets, two and one argent.

Paris, 1654; 'Traité de la Majorité de nos Rois,' &c. 4to. Paris, 1655; 'Histoire des plus illustres Favoris Anciens et Moderns,' 4to. Leyden, 1659.

PUZZUOLO (Geog.) or Pozzuoli, a once celebrated town of Italy, 7 m. W. Naples, the ancient Puteoli, which contains but few vestiges of its former splendour. The remains of an amphitheatre are to be seen on a hill behind the town, and the temple of Jupiter Serapis is still conspicuous; but the most striking object is the remains of the mole that formed the ancient fort. Several of its piers are still standing, and also some of the arches which rested upon them are to be seen above the water.

PYE, Henry James (Biog.) late poet-laureate, descended from an ancient family, was born in London in 1745, educated at Oxford, and died in 1813, leaving a number of poems and dramatic pieces, which were well received in his day.

PYLE, Thomas (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1674 at Stodey, in Norfolk, is said to have been educated at Cambridge, and died in 1756, leaving 'Paraphrase on the Acts,' &c. 2 vols.; 'Paraphrase on the Historical Books of the Old Testament,' 4 vols.; and 'Paraphrase on the Revelations of St. John,' &c.

PYM, John (Hist.) a noted partisan in the grand rebellion, descended of a good family in Somersetshire, was born in 1584, studied at Oxford, and at one of the Inns of Court, and soon commenced his career of virulent opposition to the measures of government, which terminated in the overthrow of the king's authority, and the death of the king. He died in 1643, before the disastrous termination of the contest, to which he had largely contributed by his vehement conduct as manager of the impeachment against the duke of Buckingham and the earl of Strafford, and on other occasions. His outrageous violence lead the king to the unhappy measure of going to the Parliament in person, and seizing him with four other members. [Vide Plate XVIII]

PYNAKER, Adam (Biog.) a landscape painter, was born in 1621, and died in 1673, leaving a distinguishd reputation for skill in his art.

PYNSON, Richard (Biog.) one of our three earliest printers, was born in Normandy, and died, as is supposed, about the year 1529, when he resigned the office of king's printer.

PYRAMUS (Myth.) a youth of Babylon, who became enamoured of Thisbe, a beautiful virgin in the neighbourhood; but, notwithstanding their mutual affection, their friends forbade them to marry, and debarred their intercourse, wherefore the lovers agreed to meet at the tomb of Ninus, under a mulberry-tree; but Thisbe having arrived first at the appointed place, and being frightened away by the appearance of a lioness, dropped her veil in her flight, which the animal besmeared with blood. This was found by Pyramus on his arrival at the spot soon after, and concluding that she had been devoured, he fell on his sword, and was found by his mistress weltering in his blood, whereupon she stabbed herself with the same sword which she drew from the wound. This tragical scene happened under the mulberry-tree, the fruit of which, according to the poets, changed to the colour of blood. Hygin. Fab. 243; Ovid. Met. l. 4.

PYRENÆI (Geog.) the Pyrenees, a chain of mountains separating Gaul from Spain, and extending from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean. Diodor. l. 5; Liv. l. 21; Strab. l. 3; Mel. l. 2; Ital. l. 3; Plin. l. 4.

PYRRHA (Myth.) Πύῤῥα, a daughter of Epimetheus and Pandora, who married Deucalion, with whom she was fabled to have been saved during the deluge. When the waters had retired from the earth they threw stones behind them, according to the directions of the oracle, whence sprung up men and women to supply the place of those who had been drowned. [Vide Deucalion]

PYRRHO (Biog.) a sceptical philosopher of Elis, who died at the advanced age of 90, A. C. 304, after having acquired such reputation among his countrymen, that at his death they raised statues to his memory. Cic. de Orat.; Diogen. Laert. l. 9; Aul. Gell. l. 11; Paus. l. 6.

PYRRHUS (Myth.) another name for Neoptolemus, the son of Achilles and Deidania.

PYRRHUS (Hist.) a celebrated king of Epirus, descended from Achilles by the mother's side, and from Hercules by the father's, who emulating the glory of his ancestors, carried on war with the Romans, and for a time successfully; but was at length compelled to leave Italy in consequence of a severe defeat, which he experienced from Curius, the Roman consul, A. C. 274. He afterwards turned his arms against the Macedonians and the Greeks, and was killed while attempting to take the city of Argos, by a tile which was thrown by an Argive woman from a house on his head, A. C. 272. [Vide Plate III]

PYRRHUS, grandson of the preceding, succeeded his father, Alexander, under the guardianship of his mother Olympias, and died before he was of age. Justin. l. 28.

PYRRHUS, C. a Turkish officer at Antioch, who admitted Boemond and the French into the city during the crusades, in the 12th century.

PYRRHUS (Ecc.) a Monothelite monk, who was made patriarch of Constantinople in 639; but being convicted of having taken part in the death of the emperor Constantine, son of Heraclius, he fled to Africa. He afterwards abjured his errors, and was restored to the see of Constantinople in 655, but died in the same year.

PYTHAGORAS (Biog.) a celebrated philosopher of Samos, whose father's name was Mnesarchus, or Mnemarchus, was born about the year 586 A. C. and is said to have been killed at Metapontum, in a popular tumult, about 497 years A. C. He distinguished himself particularly by his skill in mathematics, having, as is generally supposed, invented the 47th proposition of the first book of Euclid's Elements, about the square of the Hypothenuse, and discovered, or maintained the present system respecting the motion of the earth. He was also a great moralist, and taught, among other things, the transmigration of souls. Some verses are still extant which are ascribed to him, and are called 'The golden Verses of Pythagoras:' although many suppose that the real name of the writer was Lysis. Pythagoras having taken up his abode, for the greater part of his life, at Crotona, in Magna Græcia, he founded a sect, which received the name of the Italian sect; and his memory was held in such veneration, that he received the same honours as were paid to the immortal gods. His life has been written by Diogenes, Porphyry, and Iamblichus. [Vide Plate XXXIV] Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 112, Diog. &c. in Vit.

PYTHEAS (Biog.) a philosopher of Massilia, or Marseilles, who lived, according to some, in the age of Aristotle. He wrote different treatises on astronomical and geographical subjects, which are now lost, though some were extant in the fourth century. Strab. l. 2; Plin. l. 37; Plut. de Opin.

PYTHON (Myth.) a celebrated serpent, sprung from the mud and stagnant waters, which remained on the earth after the deluge of Deucalion, who was killed by Apollo, in commemoration of which the Pythian Games are said to have been instituted.

Q.

QUADI (Geog.) an ancient people of Germany, on the borders of the Danube, in modern Moravia. They were often defeated by the Romans, but never totally subdued. Tacit. in Germ. c. 42, &c.

QUADRATUS, Numidius (Hist.) or Caius Umidius Durmius Quadratus, a governor of Judæa, A. D. 51, who suppressed the commotions of the Jews by putting to death all who were taken with arms in their hands. Joseph. Antiq. l. 20, c. 5.

QUADRATUS (Ecc.) a disciple of the Apostles, who composed the first apology for the Christians, which was presented to Adrian, and served to abate the persecution which raged at that time. St. Jerome, and the Latin Martyrology, suppose Quadratus to have been bishop of Athens, and to have suffered martyrdom; but others think Quadratus, bishop of Athens, to have been a distinct person from the Apologist of this name. Euseb. in Chron. et Hist. l. 3, c. 37; S. Hieron. ep. 84; et de Script. Eccles.

QUADRIO, Francis Xavier (Biog.) an ecclesiastic, was born in 1695, in the Valteline, and died in 1756, leaving 'Storia della Volgare Poesia,' 7 vols.; besides Historical Observations on the Valteline.

QUARLES, Francis (Biog.) an English poet, was born in 1592, near Romford, in Essex, and died in 1644, leaving several works, which were reprinted several times, and have been an object of curiosity among Bibliographers. His son John was also a poet, of whose works Wood has given a list.

QUARTUS (Bibl.) a disciple of the Apostles, mentioned by St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 23. The Greeks keep his festival November 10, and say he was one of the Seventy.

QUATROMANNI, Sertorius (Biog.) an Italian writer, was born at Cosenza in 1551, and died in 1606, leaving a number of poems in Latin and Italian, which were printed at Naples in 8vo. 1714.

QUEBEC (Geog.) the capital of Canada, in North America, situated in lon. 71° 10′ W., lat. 46° 50′ N. This town was first erected by the French settlers in 1608, and was taken by the English in 1629, but afterwards restored. In 1690 it was fortified, and was gradually erected into a strong fortress. In 1711 an unsuccessful attempt was made by the English on this place, which was however afterwards taken in 1759 by the army under general Wolfe, who fell in the engagement. By the peace of 1763 it was finally ceded to Great Britain.

QUEENSBURY, William, first Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was much in favour with James I and Charles I, and remained in the confidence of the latter until his death in 1640.

QUEENSBURY, second Earl of, distinguished himself for his uniform loyalty during the rebellion and usurpation, for which he suffered much in his person and estate; but lived to see the restoration, and died in 1671.

QUEENSBURY, William, third Earl and first Marquis, and Duke of, was sworn of the Privy Council to Charles II in 1667; preferred to be Lord High Treasurer of Scotland in 1682; and continuing in favour with James II, he was made Lord High Commissioner in the first session of Parliament in 1685; but not falling in with the measures of the court he was dismissed from all his employments, and died in 1695.

QUEENSBURY, James, second Duke of, and first Duke of Dover, was made one of the Privy Council by Charles II, and continued to hold this and other posts until a short time before the revolution, in which he so heartily concurred, that he was made one of the Lords of the Treasury by king William in 1690, Lord Privy Seal, and one of the extraordinary Lords of Session in 1695; Lord High Commissioner to represent his majesty's royal person in the Parliament of 1700; and after having enjoyed the confidence of king William until his death, and that of his successor, queen Anne, until 1704, he was then for a short time removed from his posts; but was made in 1705 Lord Privy Seal, and one of the Commissioners of the Treasury; nominated in 1706 one of the Commissioners to treat with England respecting the Union; and in 1709 was appointed third Secretary of State, which last office he held until his death in 1711.

QUEENSBURY, Charles, third Duke of, was sworn of the Privy Council in 1726, and subsequently Lord Keeper of the Great Seal for Scotland, and Lord Justice General of Scotland, and died in 1778.

QUEENSBURY, Duke of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Douglas, which, at the death of William, the fourth duke, in 1810, devolved on the duke of Buccleugh.

QUEENSBURY, Marquis of, one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Douglas [vide Douglas]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, a heart gules, imperially crowned proper, on a chief azure, three mullets of the field for Douglas; second and third azure, a bend between six cross crosslets fitchy or, for the earldom of Marr.

Crest. On a wreath, a heart gules, imperially crowned proper, between two wings expanded or.

Supporters. Two Pegasuses on flying horses argent, their manes, wings, tails, and hoofs or.

QUELLINUS, Erasmus (Biog.) a painter of Antwerp, was born in 1607, and died in 1678, after having obtained considerable reputation for skill in his art.

QUENSTEDT, John Andrew (Biog.) a Lutheran, was born at Quedlingburg in 1617, and died in 1688, leaving 'Dialogus de Patriis illustrium Virorum, Doctrina et Scriptis,' 4to. Wittemberg, 1654, 1691; 'Sepultura Veterum,' 8vo. 1660; besides other works on theological subjects.

QUERENGHI, Antony (Biog.) a poet of Italy, was born at Padua in 1546, and died in 1633, leaving a volume of Latin poems, printed at Rome in 1629, and of Italian poetry in 1616.

QUERLON, Anne Gabriel Meusnier de (Biog.) a French journalist, was born in 1702 at Nantes, and died in 1780, leaving among his works 'Les Impostures Innocentes;' 'Le Testament de l'Abbé des Fontaines,' 12mo. 1746; 'Collection Historique,' &c.

QUERNO, Camillo (Biog.) an Italian poet, who died in 1528, after having been employed by Leo X to write verses for his amusement.

QUESNAY, Francis (Biog.) a French physician, was born at Mercy, in the Isle of France, in 1694, and died in 1774, leaving, among other things, 'Observations sur les Effets de la Saignée;' 'Essai Physique sur l'Economie Animale,' &c.

QUESNE, Abraham du (Hist.) a brave French officer, of a noble family of Normandy, was born in 1610, and died in 1688, after having performed many great exploits, particularly against the Dutch, whom he defeated in three naval engagements, and killed their admiral De Ruyter; and also against the Algerines, whom he reduced to submission.

QUESNEL, Pasquier (Biog.) a celebrated French ecclesiastic, was born in 1634 at Paris, and died in 1719, leaving among his works 'Reflexions Morales,' &c. 1687; 'La Discipline de l'Eglise tirée du Nouveau Testament,' &c. which brought him into the disrepute of being a Jansenist, and obliged him to leave his native country.

QUEVEDO, Francis de (Biog.) a Spanish satirist, was born at Madrid in 1570, and died in 1645 or 1647, leaving a number of comic works in prose and poetry, which were printed in 3 vols. 4to.

QUICK, John (Biog.) a nonconformist, was born at Plymouth, in Devonshire, in 1636, educated at Oxford, and died in 1706, leaving 'Synodicon in Gallia Reformata,' &c. fol. London, 1692.

QUIEN, de la Neufville James le (Biog.) an historian, was born in 1647 at Paris, and died in 1728, leaving 'Histoire Generale de Portugal,' 2 vols. 4to. 1700; 'L'Usage des Postes Chez les Anciens et les Modernes.'

QUIEN, Michael le (Biog.) a Dominican, was born at Boulogne in 1661, and died in 1733, leaving, 1. 'Antiquité des Tems detruite,' in answer to Father Pezron's 'Antiquité des Tems retablie,' in which the latter attempted to establish the chronology of the Septuagint against that of the Hebrew text. 2. An edition of the works of John Damascenus, 2 vols. fol. 1712. 3. 'Panoplia contra Schisma Græcorum.' 4. 'Oriens Christianus in Africa,' an account of all the prelates in Africa, of which only the first volume was published when he died.

QUIETUS (Numis.) a son of Macrianus, sen. and one of the thirty tyrants, is principally known by medals bearing his effigy as in the annexed figure, and the inscriptions — IMP. C. FULVIUS QUIETUS AUG. &c. Vaill. Præst.; Harduin. Oper.; Mediob. Imp. Rom. &c.

QUILLET, Claude (Biog.) a French writer, was born at Chinon, in Touraine, about 1602, and died in 1661, leaving, among other Latin poems, 'Callipædia,' the first edition of which was printed at Leyden in 1655, and a third edition at London in 1708.

QUIN (Her.) the name of an ancient Irish family, who trace their descent from Con Cead Caha, monarch of Ireland in the second century. Of this family was sir Valentine Richard Quin, who in 1781 was created baron Adare, in 1800 viscount Mountbear, and in 1816 earl of Dunraven.

QUIN, James (Biog.) a celebrated actor, descended from an ancient family in Ireland, was born in 1693, but being the offspring of the marriage of his father with a reputed widow, whose husband, supposed to be dead, afterwards returned from the Indies and claimed her, he was deprived of his father's inheritance by the illegitimacy of his birth, and obliged therefore to have recourse to the stage for a subsistence, where he rose to eminence and independence, and died in 1765.

QUINAULT, Philip (Biog.) a French poet, was born in 1636, and died in 1688, leaving a number of dramatic pieces, epigrams, and smaller pieces of poetry, which were printed in 5 vols. 12mo. 1739.

QUINCY, John (Biog.) an English physician, who died in 1723, is still remembered by several of his works, as 'Pharmacopœia Officinalis et Extemporanea, 8vo.;' 'Medicina Statica,' &c.: 'Prælectiones Pharmaceuticæ,' &c.

QUINQUARBOREUS (Biog.) or Cinq-Arbres, John, a French scholar, was born at Aurillac, in Auvergne, and died in 1587, leaving 'Linguæ Hebraicæ Institutiones absolutissimæ,' and a Latin version of the 'Targum in Oseam Joselem,' &c.; besides which he published the Gospel of St. Matthew, in Hebrew, with the version and notes of Sebastian Munster; and translated into Latin several of the works of Avicenna.

QUINTILIANUS, Marcus Fabius (Biog.) a rhetorician and critic, was born in the reign of Claudius Cæsar at Calahorra, in Spain, as is supposed, and died at the age of fourscore, or upwards, leaving his 'Institutiones Oratoriæ,' the MS. of which, much mutilated and imperfect, was first discovered in the fifteenth century by Poggius, in the monastery of St. Gall. The most esteemed editions of Quintilian are those of Burmann, 2 vols. 4to. 1720; of Capperonerius, fol. Paris. 1725; of Gesner, 4to. Gotting. 1738; and 8vo. Oxon. 1805. The anonymous dialogue 'De Oratoribus, sive de Causis Corruptæ Eloquentiæ,' has been sometimes printed with Quintilian's works; but is more frequently ascribed to Tacitus, and printed with his works.

QUINTILLUS, M. Aurelius Claudius (Hist.) brother of Claudius Gothicus, was proclaimed emperor by the senate at the death of his brother, A. D. 270; but seeing that the army favoured the cause of Aurelianus, he destroyed himself by opening his veins, after a few months' reign, or, according to Cassiodorus, he was killed by the Prætorian guards.

QUINTILLUS (Numis.) the medals of this emperor bear his effigy, as in the annexed figure, inscriptions, DIVO QUINTILLO. —M. AUR. CL. QUINTILLUS.—IMP. QUINTILLUS, &c.; on the reverse, AEQUITAS AUG. &c.

RABELAIS, Francis (Biog.) a celebrated French wit, was born about 1483 at Chinon, in the province of Touraine, and died in 1553, leaving several works, which contain, with occasional flashes of wit, or strokes of humour, much senseless ribaldry. They have however passed through numerous editions, the best of which is that with cuts, and the notes of Le-Duchat, 5 vols. 12mo.; and that of De Monnoye, in 3 vols. 4to. 1741. They have been translated into English twice, namely, by Mr. Motteux, and Mr. Ozell. [Vide Plate XXXVII]

RABENER, Theophilus William (Biog.) a German satirist, was born in 1714 at Wachau, near Leipzig, and died in 1771. His 'Satirical Letters' have been translated into English.

RABIRIUS, C. Posthumus (Hist.) a Roman knight, who lent money to Ptolemy Auletes, and on demanding it was imprisoned. He however made his escape to Rome, and was there accused of having lent money to an African prince for unlawful purposes, but was acquitted by the help of Cicero's eloquence. Cic. pro Rab.

RABIRIUS (Biog.) a Latin poet in the age of Augustus, whom Seneca compared to Virgil. Senec. de Ben. l. 6; Quintil. l. 10, &c.

RABSHAKAH (Bibl.) רב־שקה, signifying chief cup-bearer, a term of office, and supposed not to be a proper name, is employed in Scripture for the person filling that office to Sennacherib, king of Assyria, by whom he was sent to summon Hezekiah, which he did in a very haughty manner. 2 Kings xviii.

RABUTIN, Roger, Count de Bussy (Hist.) a French officer, descended from a noble family at Epiry, in Nivernois, was born in 1618, and after distinguishing himself from the age of twelve as a valiant soldier, at several battles and sieges, he was banished to his estate on account of his satirical humour, and died in 1693. His 'Histoire Amoureuse des Gaules,' a piece of court scandal, is the only one of his works now read in France.

RACAN, Honorat de Bueil, Marquis of (Biog.) a French poet, was born at Roche-Racan, in Touraine, in 1589, and died in 1670, leaving a number of pieces, which have been reprinted several times; the edition of Paris, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1724, is the most esteemed.

RACHEL (Bibl.) רחל, younger daughter of Laban, sister of Leah, and Jacob's second wife, who was the object of his choice. She died after the birth of her son Benjamin, A. M. 2265, A. C. 1739. Gen.

RACINE, John (Biog.) a French dramatic poet of the first rank, was born in 1639 at La Ferte-Milon, and died in 1699, leaving, besides his dramatic works, also a History of the House of the Port Royal, the place of his education. This was published in 2 vols. 12mo. 1767. Of his other works there have been an edition at Amsterdam, in 2 vols. 12mo; and in London, in 2 vols. 4to.; besides numerous and splendid editions at Paris. [Vide Plate XXXI]

RADCLIFFE, John (Hist.) a physician, and public benefactor, was born in 1659 at Wakefield, in Yorkshire, and died in 1714, leaving funds for the erection of a Library to the University of Oxford, and an infirmary, both of which still bear his name; also 600*l.* per annum for two travelling fellowships; besides several benefactions to University College. [Vide Plate XII]

RADCLIFFE (Her.) the name of a family of great antiquity, derived from the village of Radcliffe, anciently written Radclive, Radclyf, Radcliffe, &c. in the county of Lancaster, where they had large possessions, as also in the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland, at a very early period. Henry de Radclive, or, according to some, Nicholas de Radclive, is supposed to have first assumed this surname from the manor of Radcliffe, which he held by military service of his brother William de Lancaster, baron of Kendale, in the reign of Henry II. His descendant, Joseph Pickford, in the female line, who inherited the estates of his maternal uncle, colonel William Radcliffe, and assumed the name and arms of Radcliffe only, was created a baronet in 1813, for his zeal and activity as a magistrate during the disturbances in the West Riding of York. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a bend engrailed sable, charged with a crescent of the field for difference.

Crest. On a wreath of its colours a bull's head sable, the horns argent, tipped or, gorged with a ducal coronet argent, and charged with a crescent for difference of the second.

RAGOTZKI, Francis Leopold (Hist.) prince of Transylvania, was imprisoned in 1701 on suspicion of wishing to cause a revolt in Hungary against the emperor; but making his escape, he placed himself at the head of the insurgents, and at the conclusion of peace in 1713 he retired to Constantinople, and died in 1735, at the age of 56, leaving Memoirs of the Revolutions in Hungary, in 2 vols. 4to. or 6 vols. 12mo.; but the work entitled, 'Testament Politique et Moral du Prince Rakoczi,' is supposed to be falsely ascribed to him.

RAGUEL (Hist.) father of Sara, and father-in-law to young Tobias. Tob. vi.

RAGUENET, Francis (Biog.) an ecclesiastic of Rouen, who died in 1722, wrote 'Les Monumens de Rome,' 12mo.; 'Histoire du Vicomte de Turenne;' besides a parallel between the music of the Italians and French, in which he gives a preference to that of the former.

RAGUSA (Geog.) a district and town of Austrian Dalmatia. The district contains the territory of the republic, with the adjacent islands Curzola, Lagosta, &c. and is bounded by the Turkish frontier on the E. and the Adriatic on the W. The rivers are the Narenta, Drina, &c.; but it contains no town of consequence except Ragusa, situated on a peninsula of the Adriatic, 278 m. E. by N. Rome, 94 S. E. Spalatro.

History of Ragusa.

This town, which is situated either on or near the site of the ancient Epidaurus, was subject to the Greek empire on the decline of the Roman power, and eventually became independent, paying a small tribute to Venice. It did not lose its independence until the time of Bonaparte. It is an archbishop's see, having Merca, Narenta, &c. for its suffragans.

RAHAB (Bibl.) רחב, a woman of Jericho, who received and concealed the spies sent by Joshua, and afterwards let them down the walls at night by a rope; for which service she and her family were preserved on the taking of the city. Josh. ii. &c.

RAIMOND, Berenger (Hist.) the name of several counts of Provence and Toulouse, &c. the most distinguished of whom were Raimond V and VI, who were great warriors, and subdued the Albigenses, and others of their subjects who rebelled against them.

RAINBOW, Edward (Biog.) an English prelate, was born in 1608 at Bliton, in Lincolnshire, educated at Oxford, and elected president of Magdalen College in 1642, of which he was deprived during the rebellion, but restored to it again at the restoration. He was consecrated bishop of Carlisle in 1664, and died in 1684.

RAINE, Matthew (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1760 at Hackforth, in Yorkshire, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1810, having long held the situation of master of the Charter House School, in which he obtained a high reputation as a scholar.

RALEIGH, Sir Walter (Hist.) otherwise written Ralegh, or Rawlegh, a distinguished navigator, was born in 1552 at Hayes, in Devonshire, studied at Oxford for some time, and also at the Middle Temple, but, preferring an active life, he embarked for the Netherlands in 1578 with the troops sent against the Spaniards; went the next year with sir Humphrey Gilbert on an expedition to colonize some part of North America; and, in 1584, he went out on a voyage of discovery on his own account, when he discovered the country in N. America, to which, in honour of queen Elizabeth, he gave the name of Virginia. In 1588 he took an active part in the destruction of the Spanish Armada, and continued with few interruptions in favour with the queen until her death, when he was stripped of all his preferments, imprisoned, and condemned on a charge of high treason. He obtained, however, a respite in 1617, that he might go on a voyage of discovery to Guiana, where it was expected he would find some gold mines, but, being defeated in this project, he was again imprisoned, and finally executed according to his first sentence in 1618. [Vide Plate XV] His works were poetical, historical, epistolary, and political, among which were his 'History of the World;' 'The Seat of Government;' 'The Prince, or Maxims of State,' &c.

RALEIGH, Walter, nephew of the preceding, was born at Downton, in Wiltshire, in 1586, educated at Winchester School and Magdalen College, Oxford, and, after being dragged from prison to prison on account of his loyalty, he was stabbed in 1646 by one David Barrett, a shoemaker, who was his keeper.

History of Rhodes.

Rhodes, which makes a considerable figure in ancient history, fell into obscurity from the downfal of the Roman empire until it became one of the last retreats of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, who rendered it famous for the stand which they made against the whole force of the Ottoman empire under Mahomet II, the conqueror of Constantinople, who, after a desperate assault in 1479, was obliged to raise the siege. Solyman the Great was more successful, but he did not make himself master of the island until after one of the most memorable sieges recorded in history, and then rather by treachery than the force of arms.

RHODIGINUS, Ludovicus Cœlius (Biog.) an Italian scholar, named by Scaliger the Varro of his age, whose proper name was Ludovico Cœlio Richeri, was born at Rovigo about 1450, and died in 1525. His principal work is his 'Antiquæ Lectiones,' of which he published sixteen books in folio, Venet. 1516; and four more were added after his death in the editions of Basil 1566, and Franckfort in 1666.

RHODOCUS (Hist.) a traitor in the army of Judas Maccabæus, who went to the camp of Antiochus Eupator to betray the counsels of his countrymen. 2 Macc. xiii. 21.

RHODOPE (Geog.) a high mountain of Thrace, extending as far as the Euxine Sea, now Monte Argentano. It is said to derive its name from Rhodope, a queen of the Thracians, who was changed into this mountain because she preferred herself to Juno in beauty. Virg. Eclog. 8, &c.; Strab. l. 7; Mel. l. 2; Senec. in Herc.; Ovid. Met. &c.

RHODUS (Geog.) Ῥόδος, an island in the Carpathian Sea, of which mention has been made under its modern name of Rhodes. It was 120 miles in circumference, and 20 S. Caria. Its principal cities were Rhodus, now Rhodes, founded about 408 years before the Christian æra, Lindus, Camisus, &c. This island is celebrated in high terms of commendation by the poets.

Hor. l. 1, od. 7.

Laudabunt alii claram Rhodon, aut Mitylenen.

Catul. Carm. 4.

Rhodumve nobilem, horridamve Thraciam.

It was sacred to Apollo, in honour of whom the celebrated Colossus was erected, and by whom it was so illumined, according to Solinus, that there was not a single cloudy day.

Lucan. l. 8, v. 247.

—— Gnidon inde fugit, claramque relinquit
Sole Rhodon.

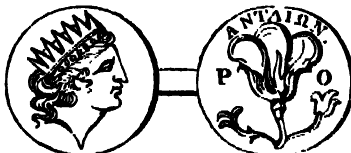
Ovid. Met. l. 7.

Phœbeamque Rhodon et Ialysias Telchinas.

Stat. Sylv. l. 1.

Lumina contempto mallet Rhodos aspera Phœbo.

Manil. l. 4.



Virgine sub casta felix terrâque marique
Est Rhodus, hospitium recturi principis orbem.
Tuque domus verè Solis, cui tota sacrata es,
Cum caperes lumen magni sub Cæsare mundi.

Its name is derived by some from Rhode, the favourite of Apollo; by others ἀπὸ τῶν ῥόδων, i. e. a rosis; on account of the abundance of roses which grew there. It was otherwise called Ophiusa, Telchinis, Æthrea, Asteria, Corymbia, Trinacria, &c.

History of Rhodus.

The Rhodians were originally governed by kings, whom they exchanged for a democracy and aristocracy. Being naturally addicted to commerce, they became a very powerful state by sea, and were enabled to maintain a memorable siege against Demetrius. When Alexander made himself master of Asia, they, for a time, lost their independence, but, by means of their naval power, they were enabled to regain their importance, and to withstand all the attacks of their enemies longer than any other state, not having been subdued by the Romans before the reign of Vespasian, when the island was reduced to a Roman province. The commercial laws of the Rhodians had acquired such authority that their conquerors, the Romans, adopted them into their code, which forms the basis of maritime regulations throughout Europe to the present day. Hom. Il. l. 2; Cic. pro Manil. Leg.; Diodor. l. 5; Vitruv. l. 7; Liv. l. 27; Strab. l. 14; Mel. l. 2; Marcell. l. 17; Isidor. Orig. l. 14; Aul. Gell. l. 7; Lactant. de Fal. Relig. c. 21.

RHODUS (Numis.) the rose, as in the annexed figure, is a frequent type on the medals of this island, in allusion to its name, and also the head of Sol or Apollo, their tutelary deity, as on the reverse. They also honoured Ceres, Jupiter, and Juno on their medals; inscription—ΡΟΔΙΟΝ.—ΡΟΔΙΩΝ. This island struck medals as an independent state, and also in honour of M. Antony, Tiberius, Nero, Vespasian, Domitian, Nerva, Trajan, Antoninus, M. Aurelius, Commodus, and Caracalla.

Crest. A wyvern with wings expanded argent.

RICHARD (Hist.) the name of three kings of England.

RICHARD I, surnamed Cœur de Lion, succeeded his father, Henry II, in 1189, and died in 1199, from the shot of an arrow, as he was besieging Chalus, a place in Limousin. After having distinguished himself in the Holy Land as one of the most formidable antagonists to Saladin, he was taken prisoner on his return by Leopold, duke of Austria, and delivered to the emperor Henry, his enemy, who doomed him to a rigorous captivity; but his place of confinement being discovered by the fidelity of his friend Blondell, he was for a large ransom restored to his subjects, when he was crowned a-fresh. [Vide Plate II]

RICHARD II, son of Edward the Black Prince, was born in 1366, succeeded his grandfather, Edward III, in 1377, and was murdered in 1400, in Pontefract Castle, after a turbulent reign, in which he was deposed by his rebellious subjects, at the head of whom was Henry, duke of Lancaster, his cousin, who succeeded him under the title of Henry IV. This unhappy prince killed four of his assassins, but was at length overpowered by numbers. [Vide Plate II]

RICHARD III, duke of Gloucester, and brother of Edward IV, caused his two infant nephews, Edward V, and Richard, duke of York, to be murdered in the Tower, and then procured his nomination to the crown in 1483, which he lost with his life at the battle of Bosworth Field in 1485, while fighting with desperate courage against his rival Henry, earl of Richmond, who afterwards succeeded under the title of Henry VII. [Vide Plate II]

RICHARD, the name of two dukes of Normandy.

RICHARD I, surnamed the Fearless, succeeded his father William in 942, and died in 996.

RICHARD II, succeeded his father Richard I, and died in 1027.

RICHARD (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, sometimes called Fitz-Ralph, or Armachanus, is supposed to have been born in Devonshire, was educated at Oxford, and after various preferments was advanced to the archiepiscopal see of Armagh, and died in 1360, not without suspicion of poison, from the opposition which he through life made to the Order of Mendicant Friars. He left some sermons, and also a treatise entitled 'Defensio Curatorum adversus Fratres Mendicantes,' Paris. 1496.' He is also said to have translated the Bible into the Irish.

RICHARD of Cirencester (Biog.) an English historian, so named from his birth-place, who died in 1401, was the author of 'Historia ab Hengista ad Ann. 1348,' the first part of which is preserved in the Library at Cambridge, and the second part is probably in MS. in the Library of the Royal Society. The Library of Benet College, Cambridge, has 'Epitome Chronic. Ri. Cor. West. Lib. I;' besides some theological writings, which are also preserved; but his principal work is his treatise 'De Situ Britanniæ,' which was first published by Dr. Stukeley, and afterwards by professor Bertram, at Copenhagen, with Gildas and Nennius, under the title of 'Britannicarum Gentium Historiæ Scriptores tres, Ricardus Corinensis, Gildas Badonicus, Nennius Banchorensis,' &c. 8vo 1757; and a new edition, with an English translation, was published at London in 1809.

RICHARDSON, John (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, and a native of Chester, was promoted to the see of Ardagh in 1633, and died in 1654, leaving several theological works.

RICHARDSON, Jonathan (Biog.) a painter, and a writer on the art of painting, was born about 1665, and died in 1745, after having been, for many years previous to his retiring from business, at the head of portrait painters in England. He wrote an 'Essay on the whole Art of Criticism, as it relates to Painting;' 'An Argument in behalf of the Science of a Connoisseur;' 'An Account of some Statues, Bas-reliefs,' &c.; 'Explanatory Notes and Remarks on Milton's Paradise Lost, with the Life of the Author;' most of which things he published in conjunction with his son; after whose death was published, in 1776, 'Richardsoniana, or, occasional Reflections on the Moral Nature of Man,' &c.

RICHARDSON, Samuel, the novelist, was born in 1689 in Devonshire, and died in 1761, leaving, besides his well-known novels of Pamela, Clarissa Harlow, and Sir Charles Grandison, 'The Negotiations of Thomas Roe, in his Embassy to the Ottoman Porte,' &c. fol. 1740, &c.; 'The Correspondence of Samuel Richardson,' &c. in 6 vols. 8vo. published in 1804, with a Life by Mrs. Barbauld. [Vide Plate XXXIX]

RICHARDSON, William, an English divine, was born in 1698 at Wilhamstead, and died in 1775, leaving a new edition of 'Godwin's Lives of the Bishops,' with a continuation to the time of publication.

RICHARDSON, Joseph, a poet, and native of Hexham, in Northumberland, who was educated at Cambridge, and studied law at the Middle Temple, died in 1803, leaving the Rolliad, and some other pieces of poetry.

RICHARDSON, William, a Scotch writer, who studied at Glasgow, and died in 1814, was the author of 'Essays on the Dramatic Characters of Shakspeare.'

Lyons, 1680; and reprinted several times since, particularly in 2 vols. fol. Lyons, &c.; 'Histoire de la Florida,' &c. 2 vols. 12mo. 1707, 1709, &c. translated from the Spanish of Garcilasso de la Vega.

RICHELIEU, Armand du Plessis (Hist.) a cardinal, and minister of France, the third son of Francis du Plessis, Seigneur de Richelieu, was born in 1585 at Paris; admitted into the Sorbonne at the age of 22; was consecrated bishop of Lucon in 1607; and on his return was appointed by Mary de Medicis, then regent, her grand almoner. He obtained a cardinal's hat in 1620, from pope Gregory XV, in consequence of his bringing about a reconciliation between the king and queen. This elevation was quickly succeeded by his appointment as Prime Minister, which post he filled with great eclat until his death in 1642. [Vide Plate VIII] He left among his works, as an author, 'Les principaux Points de la Foi Catholique défendus contre l'Ecrit adressé au Roi par les quatres Ministres de Charenton,' 8vo. Poitiers, 1617, &c. and several times reprinted; 'Instruction du Chrétien,' 8vo. Poitiers, 1621; 'Memoire du Cardinal de Richelieu,' 12mo. 1650; 'Traité qui contient la Methode la plus facile, &c. et la plus assurée pour converter ceux qui se sont separés de l'Eglise,' fol. 1651, 1657, and 1663; 'Testament Politique,' &c. 12mo. 1687, &c.

Robert, surnamed the Little, was elected emperor of the West in the place of Wenceslaus, who was deposed, and died in 1410. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

Kings of France.

Robert, son of Robert the Brave, a duke of France, and brother of Eudes, caused himself to be proclaimed king in 922 in opposition to Charles the Simple, by whom he was killed in battle the next year.

Robert, surnamed the Devout and the Wise, the son of Hugh Capet, was crowned at Orleans in 988 in the lifetime of his father, succeeded him in 997, and died in 1031. The effigy of this prince is given as in the annexed figure.

Kings of Scotland.

Robert Bruce, or Robert I, vide Bruce.

Robert II, succeeded David II, and died after a reign of 19 or 20 years in 1390.

Robert III, succeeded his father Robert II, and died after a reign of 16 years of grief, it is said, on account of the capture of his son, James I, by the English.

Other Princes.

Robert, surnamed the Bold, a duke and marquis of France, and ancestor to the third race of French kings, descended from Childebrand, the son of Pepin. He was one of the greatest captains of his age, gaining many signal advantages over the Normans and Bretons, and died fighting against the former in 866 or 867.

Robert, the name of several dukes of Normandy.

Robert I, who before his baptism was called Rollo or Raoul, was a chief of the Danes and Normans, to whom, in consequence of their frequent incursions, Charles the Simple ceded a part of ancient Neustria, afterwards called Normandy. This Robert, the first duke, died in 917 or 920.

Robert II, son of Richard II, succeeded his eldest brother, Richard III, and died in 1035 at Nice on his return from the Holy Land, whither he had made a pilgrimage. He was the father of William the Conqueror.

Robert III, surnamed Curthose, from the shortness of his legs, eldest son of William the Conqueror, obtained the dukedom of Normandy for his inheritance; his second brother, William Rufus, succeeded to the throne of England; but at the death of the latter, he attempted, by force of arms, to recover his rightful possession, which had been seized by his brother Henry during his absence in the Holy Land, but was taken prisoner, and suffered to linger in captivity until his death in 1134.

Robert, the name of two dukes of Burgundy.

Robert I, son of king Robert, was killed by an accident in 1075, after having killed his father-in-law.

Robert II, served Philip the Fair in his wars with the Flemish, and died in 1305.

Robert, the name of several counts of Dreux.

Robert I of France, surnamed the Great, fifth son of Louis VI, engaged in the crusade in 1147; and, after assisting his brother against the English in 1188, he died the same year. He built the Church of St. Thomas at Paris.

Robert II, was at the siege of Acre in 1191, assisted his cousin, Philip Augustus, against the English at the siege of Rouen in 1204, and at the battle of Bouvines in 1214, and died in 1219.

Robert III, who was early engaged against the English, was taken in 1214 after the battle of Bouvines, and died in 1233.

Robert, the name of some counts of Artois.

Robert I, third son of Louis VIII, accompanied his brother S. Louis to the Holy Land, where, after performing prodigies of valour, he was killed in 1250.

Robert II, surnamed the Good, was killed in battle fighting against the Flemish in 1302, after having been engaged in all the wars of that time.

Robert, Duke of Gloucester, natural son of Henry I, king of England, was no less distinguished by his erudition than his valour, and died in 1140.

History of La Rochelle.

La Rochelle, called by the Latins Rupella Santonum, or simply Rupella, was once a considerable place, which was fortified to oppose the incursions of the Normans. It was for some time in the possession of the English prior to 1224, when it was retaken by the French, and became in the 16th century a rendezvous for the Protestants, on whose account it was besieged several times by the Catholics, and finally taken in 1637 by Louis XIII after a memorable siege of 13 months, during which cardinal Richelieu, in order to exclude supplies, caused the construction of an immense mole across the roadstead above a mile and a half in length. The remains of this mole are still visible, although the fortifications were razed on that occasion, and were re-erected under Louis XIV such as they are at present. This town was the birthplace of the naturalist Reaumur.

ROCHESTER, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred in 1644 on Henry Wilmot, viscount Wilmot, of Ireland, whose son John, the second earl, was the poet mentioned under Biography. The title became extinct at the death of his son Charles, the third earl.

History of Rochester.

Rochester, called in Latin Roffa, is said to have been originally founded by the ancient Britons, and in the time of the Romans became one of their military stations; but it did not acquire any celebrity until more than a century after the arrival of the Saxons, and its subsequent prosperity was much retarded by the ravages of the Danes. It is called by Bede the Castle of the Kentishmen, but the present castle was one of those founded by William the Conqueror, which was entrusted to the charge of Odo, bishop of Baieux; but he rebelling against William Rufus, was besieged in this castle, and afterwards banished the kingdom, when bishop Gundulph was enjoined to repair the castle, who not only rebuilt the walls, but laid the foundation of the great square tower or keep, which yet perpetuates his name. It afterwards underwent further repairs in the reign of Edward IV. Henry III rebuilt the city walls, and invested it with a deep fosse; and in 1251 he held here a grand tournament, which was attended by a vast concourse of foreign nobility. Rochester suffered much during the wars of York and Lancaster, but was twice visited by Henry VIII; namely, once in his interview with the emperor Charles V, and again on his meeting with Anne of Cleves. Queen Elizabeth lodged a week in this city, which was the first that publicly received Charles II at the restoration. It has been frequently visited by the plague, particularly in 1665.

Ecclesiastical History of Rochester.

The see of Rochester was established, and a church built, as early as the year 600 by Ethelbert, king of Kent, who at the same time attached to the church a priory for secular canons, and dedicated it to St. Andrew. The first prelate was Justus, who had been sent from Rome to assist in the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity, and was installed by St. Augustine, the Apostle of Britain. Since that period the see of Rochester has been held by 94 prelates in succession, many of whom were eminent for their talents, their piety, and their learning.

ROCKINGHAM, Charles, second Marquis of (Hist.) a statesman of the family mentioned under Heraldry, for a short time took a lead in the administration formed in 1782, on the resignation of lord North, when he was appointed First Lord of the Treasury, having for his colleagues the earl of Shelburne and Mr. Fox, Secretaries of State, lord Camden, President of the Council, and duke of Grafton, Privy Seal, but, on his death in July of the same year, Mr. Fox and several of his friends resigned, leaving lord Shelburne as successor to the deceased marquis.

ROCKINGHAM, Marquis of (Her.) a title conferred in 1746 on Thomas Wentworth, earl of Malton, viscount Higham, and lord Rockingham, which became extinct in 1782, at the death of Charles Watson Wentworth, the second marquis above-mentioned.

Mart. l. 12, ep. 8.

Terrarum dea, gentiumque Roma
Cui par est nihil, et nihil secundum.

Virg. Eclog. 1.

Verùm hæc tantùm alias inter caput extulit urbes
Quantùm lenta solent inter viburna cupressi.

Ovid. Fast. l. 1.

At postquam fortuna loci caput extulit hujus
Et tetegit summo vertice Roma Deos.

Ibid. l. 4.

Post ubi Roma potens opibus jam secula quinque
Vixit, et edomito sustulit orbe caput.

Petron. Arbit.

Orbem jam totum victor Romanus habebat
Qua mares, qua terræ, qua sidus currit utrumque.

Horat. l. 4, od. 15.

Porrecta majestas ad ortum
Solis ab Hesperio cubili.

Ibid. l. 3, od. 3.

Horrenda late nomen in ultimas
Extendat oras, quà medius liquor
Secernit Europen ab Afro,
Quà tumidus rigat arva Nilus.

Tibull. l. 2, el. 5.

Roma tuum nomen terris fatale regendis,
Quà sua de cœlo prospicit arva Ceres.
Quàque patent ortus, et quà fluitantibus undis
Solis anhelantes abluit amnis equos.

Virg. Georg. l. 2.

Scilicet et rerum facta est pulcherrima Roma.

Propert. l. 3, el. 22.

Omnia Romanæ cedent miracula terræ;
Natura hic posuit, quicquid ubique fuit.

History of Rome.

Neither the name of its founder, nor the manner of its foundation, is precisely known, but Romulus is generally supposed to have laid the foundations of Rome, on the 20th April, according to Varro, in the year 3961 of the Julian period, A. M. 3251, A. C. 753, in the fourth olympiad, 431 years after the Trojan war; but Fabius Pictor dates the foundation five years earlier It was commenced by a small castle on the Mons Palatine, and afterwards extended over six other hills, namely, Mons Capitolinus, Mons Aventinus, Mons Esquilinus, Mons Cœlius, Mons Quirinalis, and Mons Viminalis. It had originally but three gates, namely, Porta Trigonia, Porta Mugonia, and Porta Carmentalis; but as the city increased, the gates were multiplied, and in Pliny's time there were no fewer than thirty-four, the principal of which were Porta Flumentana, Porta Flaminia, Porta Nævia, Porta Capena, Porta Appia, Porta Triumphalis, &c. These gates led out to as many different roads, as the Via Appia, Via Campana, Via Æmilia, Via Valeria, Via Cassia, Via Tiburtina, Via Latina, Via Prænestina, Via Laurentina, &c. which derived their names mostly from the places to which they lead. Among the number of its bridges were the Pons Sublicius, Pons Triumphalis seu Vaticanus, Pons Ælius, Pons Milvius, Pons Palatinus, Pons Fabricius, or Tarpeius, and Pons Aurelius, or Janiculensis. It is reckoned to have had upwards of five hundred temples or sacred edifices large and small, three amphitheatres, fourteen aqueducts, upwards of nine hundred baths, eight circuses, &c.; and to have been divided into fourteen regions or quarters. [Vide Roma under Numismatics, and under Rome] Three years after the foundation of the city, the Sabine women were seized for wives, by the stratagem of Romulus, their first king. At his death, which happened after a reign of 37 years, he was succeeded by Numa Pompilius, Tullus Hostilius, Ancus Martius, Tarquinius Priscus, Servius Tullius, and Tarquinius Superbus. The family of the Tarquins being expelled, the regal government was abolished, and consuls elected in their stead, U.C. 246, A.C. 508. The two first consuls chosen were L. Junius Brutus, and L. Tarq. Collatinus, which latter being suspected of favouring his relatives, the Tarquins, was obliged to resign, when P. Valerius Publicola was chosen in his stead; of whose successors, until the time of Cæsar, the following is a list:

From this period Cæsar became perpetual dictator, and in the following year was murdered by a band of conspirators, of which Brutus was at the head. A triumvirate was now formed by Antony, Lepidus, and Octavius Cæsar, which was dissolved at the death of Antony, U. C. 725, A. C. 29, when the supreme power fell into the hands of Octavius, who was thenceforth styled Augustus. He held the empire 57 years, and died in the 14th year of the Christian era, having for his successors the emperors, as given in the following list, to which are added such as were considered usurpers.

On the capture of this last prince by Odoacer, king of the Heruli, the Roman empire terminated in the West, the conqueror having declared himself king of Italy. [Vide Italy] An account of the emperors of the eastern empire from the reign of Arcadius, will be found under the head of Constantinople; and that of the modern history of Rome, under the head of Rome.

ROMA (Numis.) this city was honoured as a goddess on the medals of the ancients, under the figure of a female in full armour, as in the annexed cut, or for the most part only with the helmeted head of a female, and the inscription among the Greeks—ΘΕΑ ΡΩΜΗ. Its origin, from the Trojan hero Æneas, is also alluded to by the representation of Æneas, bearing his father Anchises on his shoulders, or that of a sow suckling her young at the foot of a tree; but still more frequently by the figures of two children sucking a wolf, as in the annexed cut, in allusion to the fable of Romulus and Remus, the more immediate founders of Rome. Vaillant. Morell, Spanheim, Beger, Patin, Tristan, Mediobarbus, &c.

ROMAINE, William (Biog.) an English divine, descended from a French family, was born in 1714 at Hartlepool, in the county of Durham, and died in 1795, leaving a number of works of a Calvinistic stamp, which were published collectively in 8 vols. 8vo.

ROMANA, Don Pedro Caro y Sureda, Marquis de la (Hist.) a grandee of Spain, and commander of the armies of his Catholic Majesty, died in 1811, at the age of 49, after having distinguished himself against the enemies of his country, particularly under the duke of Wellington during the peninsular war.

ROMANIA (Geog.) Rumelia, or Rum-Ili, an extensive province of European Turkey, comprehending ancient Thrace, Macedonia, Thessaly, Epirus, Albania, Servia, Bulgaria, and the island of Eubœa, &c.

ROMANUS (Hist.) the name of four Greek emperors.

ROMANUS I, surnamed Lecapenes, son of Theophylactes Abastactes, obtained a share in the empire in 919, with his son-in-law Constantine Porphyrogenetes, and died in 944, two years after having been banished to an island by his own son Stephen.

ROMANUS II, surnamed the Younger, succeeded his father Constantine Porphyrogenetes in 959, after having poisoned him, and died in 963, either of poison, or the effects of his debaucheries.

ROMANUS III, surnamed Argyropulus, son of Leo, a general of the imperial armies, arrived at the empire by his marriage with Zoe, daughter of Constantine the Younger, in 1028, and was poisoned by her in 1034, at the age of 46.

ROMANUS IV, surnamed Diogenes, succeeded Constantine Ducas in 1068, and died in 1071, in prison, into which he had been put by Michael, the son of Constantine Ducas.

ROMANUS (Ecc.) a deacon in the church of Cæsarea, suffered martyrdom in the reign of Diocletian, when, reproving such Christians as sought to escape persecution by the show of worshipping the false gods, he was dragged before the tribunal and condemned to be burnt; which sentence was afterwards exchanged for strangulation.

ROMANUS, St. archbishop of Rouen, was nominated to this see in 626, and died in 639, leaving a distinguished reputation for piety.

ROMANUS, succeeded to the papal chair in 897, after Stephen VI, and died in 898. It has been doubted by some authors whether his election was regular.

ROMANZOFF, Nicolaus (Hist.) a marshal, and one of the most distinguished generals of Russia, defeated the Turks in 1770, and contributed by his extraordinary successes to the enlargement of the Russian dominions; as also to the free navigation of the Black Sea and the Dardanelles, for which services he was loaded with honours. He died at an advanced age in 1787, shortly after having resigned the command of the army.

ROME (Bibl.) Ῥώμη, the city described under Geography [vide Roma and Rome], is not mentioned by name in the Old Testament, but it is distinguished in the New Testament, as well as in the Maccabees. St. Paul came twice to Rome: first A. D. 61, when he appealed to Cæsar; secondly A. D. 65, a year before his martyrdom, which happened in that city. St. Peter also visited Rome more than once, but in what character has been a matter of considerable dispute. The Romanists make him to have been the first bishop of Rome. It is however certain that he suffered martyrdom there, and probably at the same time as St. Paul. St. John the Evangelist went to Rome after his banishment from Ephesus, and during the persecution of Domitian, A. D. 95. He is said to have been plunged into boiling oil without receiving hurt. Acts xxviii.; Euseb. Hist. Eccles.; Tertull. Lib. de Præscript. c. 36; Hieron. in Jovin. l. 1, c. 14.

Rome (Geog.) this illustrious city, the capital of the Ecclesiastical States, of which an ample description has been given under its ancient name Roma [vide Roma], is situated on the banks of the Tiber, 110 m. N. W. Naples, 410 S. S. W. Vienna, and 600 E. Paris. Lon. 12° 29′ E. lat. 41° 54′ N.

Present State of Rome.

The space of this city, enclosed by walls, is about 13 miles in circumference, which is supposed to be equal to that of Rome in its greatest splendour; but, of the seven hills on which the ancient city stood, several, namely, Mons Aventinus, Palatinus, and Cœlius, are covered with vineyards, &c., and the Mons Esquilinus, Viminalis, and Quirinalis, are also partially so, the population being confined within a third of the whole space. Among the remains of antiquity worthy of notice are the Pantheon, the Coliseo or Amphitheatre of Vespasian, the Baths of Dioclesian, the Mausoleum of the emperor Adrian, now a fortress called Fort St. Angelo, the Arc of Constantine, which remains entire, as also the ruins of the Arc of Septimius Severus, and that of Titus, and the Colonna Trajana, or Trajan's Pillar. Several of the ancient roads also still serve as approaches to the city, as the Via Latina, Via Vitellia, and Via Aurelia. Of the ancient aqueducts only three are remaining; the Fontana Felice, on the Mons Viminalis, which was supplied by the Aqua Claudia, discharges itself through a rock under an ionic arcade. The sewers of ancient Rome are now obstructed by stones and earth; but the Cloaca Maxima is still entitled to notice. Of the public baths little remains except the walls of those of Caracalla; but those of Titus are in better preservation. Among the modern structures the church of St. Peter's claims the pre-eminence over every building, not only in Rome, but in the whole world, in the opinion of many. It was originally built by Constantine; but having fallen into decay, it was taken down and begun to be rebuilt by Nicholas V.; it was not, however, completed before 1621. The cathedral of St. John Lateran, the Romans say, is the parent of all other churches. Of the three palaces of the pope the Lateran is now principally employed as an hospital for orphans; the Quirinal serves as a summer residence for the popes; but the principal is the Vatican situated on an eminence to the north-west of the city, near to St. Peter's. The appearance of the Tiber does not answer the expectations of the classic reader, being far from wide, and its waters of a dingy yellow. Of its ancient bridges, the site or ruins of some are still to be seen; the bridge of St. Angelo, a modern structure, is erected on the site of the Pons Ælius; the Ponte Sisto, or Pons Aurelius of the ancients, which is almost in the centre of the modern city, takes its name from Sixtus IV, by whom it was repaired in 1474; the foundation of the Pons Triumphalis, or Vatican, is to be seen behind the hospital S. Esprit; the Pons Senatorius, or Palatinus, is now known by the name of S. Maria of Egypt; the Pons Milvius, by that of Ponte Molo; and the Pons Fabricius, or Tarpeius, by that of Ponte Quatre Capi.

History of Rome.

After the downfall of the Western Empire, as mentioned in the ancient history of this city [vide Roma], Rome shared the fate of other Italian states, becoming successively subject to different masters. It was recovered from the Gothic princes for Justinian, by Bellisarius, in 537; retaken by the Goths in 547; reconquered for Justinian, by Narses, one of his generals, in 553; revolted from the Greek emperors and became a republic in 726; but soon after submitted to Charlemagne, who surrendered the city and duchy to the pope, reserving to himself the temporal authority, A. D. 800. The popes afterwards made themselves independent, and hold this city as the capital of the Ecclesiastical States. Since that period Rome has been subject to different captures, namely, by the emperor Arnulphus in 896; by Henry IV in 1084; by Ladislaus, king of Apulia, in 1408; by Charles VIII, of France, in 1494; by Colonna in 1526; and by the Constable of Bourbon, general of the emperor Charles V, in 1527, &c.

Ecclesiastical History of Rome.

It is most probable that St. Peter founded the church of Rome; but that he governed it as a bishop is a conjecture unsupported by any historical evidence. The first bishop of Rome, of whom mention is made, is S. Linus, of whose successors the following list exhibits a view:

Rome has been the seat of numerous councils and ecclesiastical assemblies, the principal of which were the five general councils held in the Lateran in 1122-3, 1139, 1179, 1215, 1512.

ROMILY, Sir Samuel (Biog.) a lawyer and politician, was born in 1757 in Frith-street, Westminster, called to the bar in 1783, made Solicitor General during the last administration of Mr. Fox, went out of office with his party when they resigned, and after having taken a prominent part on the side of opposition in the House of Commons, he killed himself in 1818, in a fit of distraction, on account of the death of his lady.

ROMNEY, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Marsham [vide Marsham]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Marsham, earl of Romney, viscount Marsham, baron Romney, and a baronet.

Arms. Argent, a lion passant in bend gules, between two bendlets azure.

Crest. On a wreath, a lion's head erased gules.

Supporters. Two lions azure, semée of cross crosslets, and ducally gorged or.

Motto. "Non sibi sed patriæ."

ROMNEY, George (Biog.) a modern English artist, was born in 1734 at Dalton, in Lincolnshire, and died in 1802, after having obtained a high reputation both as a portrait and an historical painter. Among his best performances are 'The Tempest;' 'Ophelia seated upon a Branch of a Tree;' 'Titania and her Indian Votaress,' &c.

ROMULUS (Hist.) a son of Mars and Ilia, grandson of Numitor, king of Alba, was born at the same birth with Remus, and with him was thrown by his uncle Amulius into the Tiber; but, being preserved, they were brought up by Faustulus, one of the king's shepherds, who educated them as his own. When they grew to man's estate they slew Amulius, and reinstated their grandfather Numitor on his throne: after which they set about laying the foundations of the new city, which was afterwards called Rome; but the two brothers not agreeing in the manner of conducting this work, Romulus is said to have slain his brother Remus. He afterwards governed his newly-founded city as its first king, and died after a reign of 39 years, A. C. 714. Having suddenly disappeared at the time of his death, it was rumoured that he had been taken up to heaven, and accordingly divine honours were paid to him, under the name of Quirinus. Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 8; Liv. l. 1; Val. Max. l. 3; Justin. l. 43; Ovid. Met. l. 14; Plin. l. 15; Eutrop. l. 1; Aug. de Civ. D. l. 2, &c.

ROMULUS, vide Augustulus.

ROMULUS (Numis.) the son of Maxentius, is supposed to have been made consul with his father, but died before the latter, and was enrolled among the gods. He is principally known by medals, bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscription, DIVO ROMULO NUBIS CONS.

RONDELET, William (Biog.) a physician of Montpellier, was born in 1507, and died in 1566, leaving a treatise on Fishes, 2 vols. fol. 1554, in Latin; and in 1558, in French. His medical works were printed collectively, in 8vo. Genev. 1628.

RONSARD, Peter de (Biog.) a French poet, of a noble family in Vendomois, was born in 1524, and died in 1585. His Poems, consisting of Odes, Hymns, Elegies, &c. have been reprinted very often; but the editions of Binet, in 5 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1587 or 1604, and of Richelet, 2 vols. fol. are reckoned the best.

ROOKE, Sir George (Hist.) a naval commander, was born of a respectable family in Kent in 1650, and following the bent of his inclination he early entered the navy, where he first signalized his valour by saving the Smyrna fleet from falling into the hands of the French. He afterwards assisted at the taking the almost impregnable fortress of Gibraltar in 1703; and destroyed the French ships at the battle of La Hogue; in the affair of Malaga; and at the glorious action before Vigo. For which splendid services he received no other recompense than that of rising to the highest rank in his profession, and died in 1708, neglected on account of his opposition to the Whig ministry, who domineered over the nation at that time. [Vide Plate XVI]

ROOKER, Michael (Biog.) an engraver, and the son of Edward Rooker, who was also an engraver, was born in 1743, and died in 1801, after having been employed for some time to engrave the head-pieces to the Oxford Almanacs, which were among the happiest specimens of his skill.

ROPER (Her.) the name of an ancient family which enjoys a peerage, conferred in 1603 on John Roper, who was created a baron, by the title of lord Teynham.

Roper, Margaret (Biog.) the favourite daughter of sir Thomas More, and wife of William Roper, esq. died in 1544, leaving several specimens of her learning and abilities. She wrote 'Declamations,' in English, which she and her father afterwards turned into Latin; and also a 'Treatise of the Four last Things.' Her daughter Mary translated into English part of her grandfather's 'Exposition of the Passion of our Saviour,' and also 'Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History,' from the Greek into Latin.

ROSA, Salvator (Biog.) a painter, who was born in 1615 at Naples, and died in 1673, attained to the rank of a master in the art of painting, and was little less esteemed in that of poetry. The Conspiracy of Catiline is among the best of his historical pieces; but he was most happy in landscape painting, particularly in depicting the scenery of Abruzzo. [Vide Plate XXXVI]

ROSAMOND de Clifford (Hist.) commonly called Fair Rosamond, daughter of Walter de Clifford, lord Hereford, is known in history as the mistress of Henry II, who, in order to conceal his amour from his queen Eleanor, removed his favourite to a labyrinth in Woodstock Park. The former however discovered, as is said, her retreat, and compelled her to take poison.

ROSCIUS, Q. (Hist.) a Roman actor, and native of Lanuvium, who acquired such reputation on the stage, that every performer of great eminence has been denominated a Roscius after him. He was raised to the rank of a senator; but being falsely accused of some dishonourable practices, and put on his trial, he obtained an acquittal by means of Cicero's oratory, in a speech which is still extant. Cic. pro Rosc. &c.; Horat. l. 2, ep. 1; Quintil. l. 2; Athen. l. 14; Plut. in Cic.

ROSCOMMON, Robert, the second Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was a nobleman of great courage and firmness, who served his king and country with singular integrity and affection; for which he shared, with his kinsman Strafford, in the odium which attended loyalty in those days of rebellion and faction. He died in 1642, while engaged under the earl of Ormond against the rebels.

Roscommon, James, third Earl of, and son of the preceding, was no less strenuous in his opposition to the rebels, from whom he found no favour when they got possession of the state.

Roscommon, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Dillon [vide Dillon]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Dillon, earl of Roscommon, viscount Dillon, and baron of Kilkenny West.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, a lion passant between three crescents gules, for Dillon; second and third argent, a fess between three crescents sable, for Lee.

Crest. A demi-lion gules, holding between his paws an etoile argent.

Supporters. Two angels proper, vested argent, with wings elevated; the dexter having a sash over her shoulder azure, each holding in her dexter hand a palm branch proper.

Motto. "Dum spiro spero."

Roscommon, Wentworth, fourth Earl of (Biog.) son of James, the third earl above-mentioned, and an English poet, was born in Ireland in 1633, and died in 1684. His poems, though few, have procured him a place among the British Poets. [Vide Plate XXVIII]

ROSE, George (Hist.) a statesman, and son of a clergyman of Brechin, in Angusshire, was born in 1744, and after having entered the navy, he was taken from that profession by the earl of Marchmont, and appointed Keeper of the Records of the Exchequer; after which, he rose by his talents to the post of President of the Board of Trade, and Treasurer of the Navy, which he held with but little interruption until his death in 1818. Among his works, as an author, are 'A Report on the Records;' 'A brief Examination into the Increase of the Revenues,' &c.; 'Observations on the Poor Laws;' 'Considerations on the Debt due by the Civil List,' &c.

Rose, Samuel (Biog.) a lawyer, was born in 1767 at Chiswick, and died in 1804, leaving a Life of Goldsmith, and an edition of Comyns' Digest.

ROSEBERRY, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Primrose [vide Primrose]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Primrose, earl of Roseberry, viscount Roseberry, Inverkeithing, and Primrose, lord Dalmeny, Primrose, and Castlefield, and a baronet.

Arms. Four grand quarters. First, quarterly, first and fourth or, a lion rampant vert, armed and langued gules, a coat of augmentation given by Charles II to sir Archibald Primrose; second and third vert, three primroses within a double tressure, flowered and counter-flowered or, for the name of Primrose. Second, argent, a lion rampant double queued sable for Cressy. Third, gules, a lion rampant vair, for Everingham. Fourth as the first.

Crest. On a wreath, a demi-lion gules, holding in his dexter paw a primrose or.

Supporters. Two lions vert.

Motto. "Fide et Fiducia."

ROSEHILL, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Northesk.

RUMFORD, Benjamin, Count (Hist.) a soldier, statesman, and philosopher, was born of an English family of the name of Thompson in North America in 1753, had a command of a regiment in the royal army during the American war; and, after entering into the service of the elector of Bavaria, both in a civil and military capacity, he turned his thoughts to the study of philosophy as applicable to the improvement of hospitals, schools of industry, and similar public establishments for the benefit of the poor, and died in 1814, leaving a number of treatises, published in the 'Philosophical Transactions;' besides 'Essays, Experimental, Political, Economical, and Philosophical,' which were published at different times, forming four octavo volumes.

RUMPH, George Everard (Biog.) in Latin Rumphius, a botanist of Hanau in the 17th century, was the author of 'Herbarium Amboinense,' 1755, and 'Hortus Malabaricus.'

RUNDLE, Thomas (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, was born in 1686 at Milton-Abbot, near Tavistock, in Devonshire, educated at Oxford, promoted to the see of Derry in 1734, and died in 1743, leaving a collection of Letters, and also Memoirs of himself.

RUNNINGTON, Charles (Biog.) a serjeant at law, who died in 1821, held the office of commissioner for the relief of insolvent debtors, and published an edition of sir Matthew Hale's 'History of the Common Law;' Gilbert's 'Law of Ejectments;' Ruffhead's Statutes, &c.; also 'The History, Principles, and Practice of the Legal Remedy by Ejectments,' &c.

RUPERT, Prince (Hist.) third son of the king of Bohemia by the princess Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James I. of England, was born in 1619, and, on the breaking out of the rebellion in England, he offered his services to king Charles I. in whose cause he displayed great valour and fidelity as a commander until all resistance was fruitless, when he retired to the continent. At the restoration he was invested with several offices under Charles II, and died in 1682, leaving several inventions as specimens of his mechanical skill, as, an engine for raising water, and a particular kind of screw, &c. To him is also ascribed the discovery of mezzotinto, the credit of which, however, has been denied him by others. [Vide Plate XIV]

RUPERTUS (Hist.) vide Robert.

RUSH, Benjamin (Biog.) an American physician, who also interested himself in the revolution which separated the American colonies from the mother country, was born in 1745, and died in 1813, leaving a number of pieces on medical subjects.

RUSHOUT (Her.) the family name of lord Northwick, sir John Rushout, bart. having been raised to the peerage in 1797 by the title of lord Northwick, co. Worcester.

RUSHTON, Edward (Ecc.) a Roman Catholic writer, and native of Lancashire, was educated at Oxford about 1568, and died in 1586, after having, as a missionary into England, undergone the sentence of death, which was commuted for banishment. He published Sander's book, 'De Schismate Anglicano,' 8vo. 1585, to which he added two other parts; and also 'Synopsis Rerum Ecclesiasticarum ad Annum Christi, 1577.'

RUSHWORTH, John (Biog.) an English gentleman, descended from an ancient family of Northumberland, was born about 1607, and died in 1690, leaving 'Historical Collections of Private Passages in State, Weighty Matters in Law,' &c., published at different times, vols. folio, from 1659 to 1680; being written by a partisan and a favourer of the rebellion, it has been considered as a work devoid of all credit, except with the factious, whose cause it upholds. In opposition to this Dr. John Nalson, of Cambridge, published, by the special command of Charles II, 'An Impartial Collection of the Great Affairs of State,' &c. of which he lived to complete only 2 vols. fol. published in 1682 and 1683.

RUSSIA (Geog.) an empire which lies partly in Europe and partly in Asia.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. by the Frozen Ocean, E. by the Pacific Ocean, S. by Great Tartary, and W. by Turkey, and is, in point of superficial extent, the largest in the world, stretching from the 18th to the 192d degree of east longitude, and from the 39th to the 76th north latitude.

Division. It formerly consisted of three countries, namely, Red Russia, which formed the south part of Poland; White Russia, which comprehended the east part of Lithuania; and Black Russia, which included the governments of Moscow, Kalagu, Rezau, Volodimir, Tula, and Jaroslaul; whence his imperial majesty takes the title of emperor of all the Russias. It is now divided into upwards of 40 governments.

Towns. The chief towns are St. Petersburgh, the capital, Moscow, Riga, Odessa, Wilna, Archangel, Revel, &c.

Rivers, Gulfs, Lakes, &c. The principal rivers are the Wolga, Don, Dnieper, Dwina, Duna, Neva, which serve to communicate with the Euxine, Baltic, Black Sea, Caspian Sea, and Frozen Ocean. The principal seas, or gulfs, are the Euxine, the sea of Azof, the gulfs of Finland and of Bothnia. There are two great lakes, namely, the lake of Ladoga and Onega.

History of Russia.

Of this country little is known previous to the three last centuries, when it was first distinguished by the name of Muscovy, and was governed by princes under the title of dukes, or Czars; the first of whom particularly mentioned in history is Vladimir, surnamed the Great, who was converted to the Christian faith, and took the name of Basilius in the 10th century; among his successors was John Basilides, surnamed the Great, who shook off the Tartar yoke in the 15th century. At the death of Foedor, or Theodore, in 1598, Moscovy was torn by civil dissensions, and fell under the power of Uladislaus, king of Poland, but he being expelled in 1613, Michael Foederowitz, a descendant of the ancient dynasty, was elected grand duke, and was succeeded in 1645 by his son Alexis, whose youngest son was the celebrated Peter I. The latter was succeeded by his wife, Catherine I, who reigned only two years; and her son, Peter II, who reigned only three. Anne, the niece of Peter, came to the throne in 1730, and reigned until 1740, when Iwan III, a child, bore the name of czar for scarcely two years, and was succeeded by Elizabeth, the daughter of Peter I, who, after a reign of twenty years, had Peter III for a successor. He lost his throne and his life after a year's reign, when the celebrated Catherine II succeeded, and at her death in 1793 her son, Paul I. Since the accession of his successor, Alexander, Russia has shared, in no small degree, in the glory of crushing the monstrous revolutionary power which threatened to overwhelm Europe in one common ruin.

RUST, George (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born and educated at Cambridge, promoted in 1667 to the see of Dromore, and died in 1670, leaving 'A Letter of Resolution concerning Origen and the chief of his Opinions;' 'A Discourse of Faith,' &c.

SABBATINI, Andrea (Biog.) an artist, known likewise by the name of Andrea de Salerno, who died in 1545, is said to be one of the first of the Neapolitan school who deserves notice. The altar-pieces at S. Marie delle Grazie are reckoned the best specimens of his skill.

SABBATINI, Lorenzo, called Lorenzin di Bologna, who died in 1577, is reckoned one of the most delicate painters of his age.

SABELLICUS (Biog.) an Italian historian and critic, whose proper name was Marc Antonio Coccio, was born in 1436, in the Campagna di Roma, and died in 1506, leaving 'Rhapsodiæ Historiarum Enneades,' first published at Venice, in fol. 1498, and again in 1504. He also published other miscellaneous works, which were printed in 4 vols. fol. Basil. 1560; and Commentaries on Pliny the Younger, Valerius Maximus, Livy, Horace, Justin, Florus, &c. which are to be found in Gruter's 'Thesaurus.'

SABELLIUS (Ecc.) a Lybian, and an heresiarch in the third century, reduced the three persons in the Holy Trinity to one, namely, the Father, making the Son and the Holy Ghost to be only emanations or functions thereof, which was but another form of Unitarianism.

SABINA, Julia (Hist.) the wife of the emperor Adrian, who died of poison, which he obliged her to take after she had been married to him 38 years. Divine honours were paid to her memory. Aurel. Vict. Epitom.

SABINA (Numis.) numerous medals were struck of this empress, bearing her effigy, as in the annexed figure, and the inscriptions SABIN. AUG. — SABINA AUGUSTA—SABINA AUG. HADRIANI AUG. P. P.—DIVA. AUG. SABINA; on the reverse, CONCORDIA AUG.— CONSECRATIO HADRIANUS AUG.—JUNONI REGINAE.—PUDICITIAE, &c. Vaill. Gr. &c.; Patin. Imp.; Tristan. Comm. Hist.; Beger. Thes. Brand. &c.

SABINI (Geog.) an ancient people of Italy, reckoned among the Aborigines, who were among the first to take up arms against the Romans, in consequence of the rape of their women, which had been contrived by Romulus at the building of the city; but after some engagements they migrated to Rome, where they settled with their new allies.

SABINUS, Julius (Hist.) an officer in Gaul, who set himself up against Vespasian; but, being defeated, hid himself in a cave, where he lived for nine years with his wife Eponina, but her frequent visits to this retreat was at length the cause of his detection, when he was dragged before Vespasian and immediately put to death by his order. Tacit. Hist. l. 4; Plut in Erot.

SABINUS, Aulus (Biog.) a Latin poet, intimate with Ovid, who wrote some epistles, &c. mentioned by the latter.

SABINUS, George, a Latin poet, whose family name was Schalter, was born in 1508, in the electorate of Brandenburg, and died in 1560, after having enjoyed the favour and confidence of Charles V. His Latin poems were published at Leipzic in 1558.

SACCHETTI, Franco (Biog.) an Italian poet and novelist, was born about 1335 at Florence, and is supposed to have died at the beginning of the 15th century. An edition of his novels was published at Florence, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1724.

SACCHI, Andrea (Biog.) an Italian painter, and native of Rome, was born in 1601, or, according to some, in 1594, and died in 1668. His Death of St. Anne, and the Angel appearing to Joseph, are reckoned among his master-pieces.

SACCHINI, Francis (Biog.) a Jesuit, was born in 1570, and died in 1625, leaving a Continuation of the History of his Order, begun by Orlandino, of which he executed the second, third, fourth, and fifth parts, or volumes, fol. 1620—1661. An addition was made to the fifth part by Jovency, and the whole completed by Julius Cordara. He likewise wrote 'De Ratione Libros cum Profectu legendi,' &c.

SACCHINI, Anthony-Maria-Gaspar, a musician of Naples, was born in 1735, or, according to some, in 1727, and died in 1786, after having obtained the highest distinction in his profession. His operas of the 'Cid,' and 'Tamerlane,' were among the number of his most admired pieces.

SACHEVERELL, Henry (Biog.) an English divine of Marlborough, who made a considerable noise in his day, was educated at Oxford, and died in 1724, after having been prosecuted, tried, and sentenced by the House of Commons to be suspended from his ministerial office for three years, in consequence of two sermons preached, one at Derby, and the other at St. Paul's, in 1709, in which he upheld nonjuring principles, and attacked lord Godolphin under the name of Volpone. This prosecution ultimately procured him preferment and credit far above his deserts.

SACKVILLE, Sir Robert de (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the attendants upon the children of Henry I on their coming to England, but, happening to have occasion to leave the ship and go ashore, together with two knights, they were, by that accident, saved from the melancholy catastrophe which awaited the rest at sea, who were all drowned except a butcher.

SACKVILLE, Richard de and Jordan de, were among the rebellious barons who rose against king John, for which they suffered in their estate.

SACKVILLE, Sir Jordan de, grandson of the preceding Jordan de Sackville, was taken prisoner at the battle of Evesham on the side of the rebellious barons who opposed Henry III.

SACKVILLE, Sir Andrew, father and son of that name, were both knighted for their valour during the wars of king Edward III in France.

SACKVILLE, Richard, after having been bred to the law, served Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth, in many high posts, particularly as Privy Councillor to the latter.

SACKVILLE, Thomas, the Lord High Treasurer. [Vide Dorset].

SACKVILLE (Her.) the name of a family not less distinguished for its talents than its antiquity. It was of noble extraction from Normandy, and so denominated from the town or seignory of that name, which was in their possession. Thomas Sackville, the Lord High Treasurer of England, mentioned under History [vide Dorset], was the first who was raised to the dignity of the peerage, he being created a baron in 1567, by the title of lord Buckhurst, baron of Buckhurst, and further advanced in 1603 to the dignity of earl of Dorset. Charles, the sixth earl of Dorset, was created in 1674 earl of Middlesex, and in 1675 baron of Cranfield, co. Bedford; and his son Lionel, the seventh earl, was made duke of Dorset in 1720.

SACRA VIA (Topog.) a street of Rome, where a treaty of peace and alliance was made between Romulus and Tatius, through which the triumphal processions passed to the capitol. Cic. ad Attic. l. 4, ep. 3; Liv. l. 2; Horat. l. 4, od. 2.

SACROBOSCO, John de (Biog.) a mathematician and astronomer, otherwise named Holiwood, because he was a native of a village of that name in Yorkshire, died about 1256, leaving a well-known treatise entitled 'De Sphæra Mundi,' which has been published at different times, with the notes of Clavius and others.

SADELER, John (Biog.) the first of a family of distinguished engravers, was born at Brussels in 1550, and died in 1600. His brother Raphael, and his nephew Giles, also excelled in the art, but the latter above the two others. He died in 1629, aged 59, leaving 'Vestigi dell' Antichità di Roma,' fol. Rome, 1660.

SADI (Biog.) a Persian poet, was born at Scheeraz in 1175, and educated at Damascus; but being afterwards taken prisoner by the Turks, he was redeemed by a merchant of Aleppo, who gave him his daughter in marriage. He died at the age of 120, and his works were printed at Calcutta, in 2 vols. fol. 1795.

SADLER, Sir Ralph (Hist.) an English statesman, was born in 1507 at Hackney, in Middlesex, and commenced a long course of diplomatic services in 1537, when he was sent on an embassy into Scotland, and died in 1587. The transactions of his most memorable embassies are recorded in 'Letters and Negociations of Sir Ralph Sadler,' &c. 8vo. Edinburgh, 1720; and in 'State Papers and Letters,' 2 vols. 4to. 1809, with a Life by Sir Walter Scott.

SADLER, John, a political writer, was born in 1615, and educated at Cambridge, after which he studied law at Lincoln's Inn, and, siding with the party that overturned the state, he accepted the mastership of Magdalen College from Cromwell, and other offices, which he was obliged to give up at the Restoration. He died in 1674, leaving 'Rights of the Kingdom,' &c. 4to. 1649; 'Olbia,' &c. a political fiction; and some other works.

SADOC (Bibl.) Σαδὼκ, vide Zadok.

SADOC, son of Azor, and father of Achim, in the genealogy of our Saviour. Matt. i.

SADOC (Hist.) founder of the sect of Sadducees, is said to have succeeded Antigonus Socchæus in the high priesthood, who was the immediate successor of Simon; but of this, and other particulars respecting him, nothing authentic is known. To him is however attributed the doctrine of the Sadducees, that no recompense was to be hoped for, or punishment to be feared, after this life. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 2; Hieron. in Matt. xxii.; Epiphan. in Hæres. xv.

SADOLETI, James (Ecc.) a cardinal and poet, was born at Modena in 1477, raised to the purple by Clement VII in 1536, and died in 1547, after having been employed on several negotiations by that pope. His works, consisting of epistles, dissertations, orations, poems, &c. have been frequently printed separately, and also collectively. The edition in 4 vols. 4to. published at Verona in 1737, is reckoned the best.

SAEMUND, Sigfusson, (Biog.) an Iceland writer, who died about 1133 or 1135, at the age of 80, is supposed to have collected the poetical Edda, which was printed with a Latin translation at Copenhagen, in 4to. 1787.

SAGE, John (Ecc.) a bishop of the old episcopal church of Scotland, was born in 1652, consecrated a bishop in 1705, and died in 1711, leaving 'An Account of the late Establishment of Presbyterian Government,' &c. London, 1693; 'The fundamental Charter of Presbytery,' 1695; 'The Principles of the Cyprianic Age, with regard to Episcopal Power and Jurisdiction;' besides some other works in favour of episcopacy.

SAGE, Alain René le (Biog.) the novelist, was born at Ruys, in Britanny, in 1677, or, according to some accounts, at Vannes, in 1668, and died in 1747, leaving, among other novels, that of 'Gil Blas,' and 'Le Diable Boiteux,' which have established his reputation.

SAGITTARIUS, Gaspar (Biog.) a Lutheran divine and historical writer, was born at Lunenburg in 1643, and died in 1694, leaving 'Tractatus varii de Historia legenda;' 'Historia antiqua Noribergæ,' &c.; besides a number of other works enumerated by Niceron.

SAINCTES, Claudius de (Ecc.) in Latin Sanctesius, was born in 1525 at Perche, and after having been employed by Charles IX to hold disputations with the Protestants, he was promoted to the see of Evreux in 1575; but becoming a violent partisan on the side of the Leaguers, and writing a paper to justify the murder of Henry III, he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment in the Castle de Crevecœur, where he died in 1591, leaving among his works a treatise on the Eucharist, and an edition of ancient Liturgies.

ST. ALBANS, Duke of (Her.) vide Albans.

ST. AMAND, James (Hist.) a classical scholar, and a critic, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1754, left his valuable collection of books and MSS. which he had made abroad, to the Bodleian Library, and the duplicates of his books to Lincoln College, where he had studied. Mr. Warton availed himself of his MSS. in his edition of Theocritus.

ST. AMANT, Mark Anthony Gerard, Sieur de (Biog.) a French poet of Normandy, was born in 1594 at Roan, and died in 1661, leaving several poetical pieces, which were printed several times separately, and also collectively in 3 vols. Paris, 1627—49.

ST. AMOUR, William de (Biog.) a doctor of the Sorbonne, who died in 1272, was the author of several works against the Order of Mendicant Friars, as also against the Franciscans, &c. They were published collectively in 4to. 1632.

ST. ASAPH, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Ashburnham.

ST. AUBYN (Her.) originally written St. Albyn, or St. Albin, the name of a family of great antiquity, originally from Britanny, which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1671 on sir John St. Aubyn; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Gules, on a chevron argent, between three garbs or, bound vert, three escallops sable.

ST. MARTHE (Biog.) in Latin Sammarthanus, the name of a family in France, which distinguished itself by its eminence in the republic of letters.

ST. MARTHE, Charles de, physician to Francis II, who died in 1555, left some Latin and French poetry, which is still extant.

ST. MARTHE, Scævola de, nephew of the preceding, who died in 1623, was the author of 'La Louange de la Ville de Poitiers,' 1573; 'Opera Poetica,' 1575; 'Gallorum Doctrinâ Illustrium Elogia,' 1598; 'Pædotrophia, seu de Puerorum Educatione,' a poem which went through ten editions in the author's life-time. His eldest son Abel was also a poet, whose works were printed with those of his father's, 4to. Paris, 1633; but his second and third sons, Scævola and Lewis, twin-brothers, who were born in 1571, are the most known by their historical work, entitled 'Gallia Christiana, seu Series omnium Episcopum, &c. Franciæ,' of which there is an edition in 13 vols. fol. 1715—1786; but three more volumes are still wanting for its completion.

SAINTES (Geog.) or Zaintes, the capital of Saintong, a province of France, in the department of the Lower Charente, situated on a rising ground near the Charente, 42 m. S. E. La Rochelle, 84 N. Bourdeaux. Lon. 0° 37′ W., lat. 45° 44′ N.

History of Saintes.

Saintes, which was called by the ancients Mediolanum Sanctonum, Santones, and Urbs Santonica, became one of the principal places of Aquitania in the time of the Romans; but was almost ruined in the 16th century, during the religious wars which raged in France. There are, however, still many monuments of antiquity to be seen, as an amphitheatre, a triumphal arc, and some aqueducts, &c. Saintes is a bishop's see, where a council was held in 557, and another in 562, or, according to Baronius, in 566, and others in 579, 1075, 1080, 1088, 1096, 1280, and 1282.

Motto. "Intaminatis honoribus."

ST. JOHN, Oliver, Lord (Hist.) eldest son of the first earl of Bolingbroke, notwithstanding he was advanced to the peerage in the lifetime of his father, turned against his sovereign, who had conferred this honour on him, and was killed at the battle of Edge-Hill, fighting on the side of the rebels.

ST. JOHN, Henry (Hist.) viscount Bolingbroke. [Vide Bolingbroke]

ST. JOHN (Her.) the name of a family which is paternally descended from the Ports, lords of Basing, in the county of Southampton, at the time of the Conquest, and maternally from William de St. John, denominated from the territory of St. John, near Rouen, in Normandy, who came over with the Conqueror in the capacity of grand master of the artillery. The first of this family who received any honour was Oliver St. John, who was created in 1622 a peer of Ireland, by the title of viscount Grandison, of Limerick; and in 1626 a peer of England, by the title of baron Tregoze, of Highworth, co. Wilts, which titles became extinct at his death; but sir Henry St. John, the descendant of his elder brother, and the fourth baronet, was created in 1716 baron St. John, of Battersea, and viscount St. John; and his son Henry, the statesman above-mentioned, was in 1712 raised to the dignities of baron St. John, of Lydiard Tregoze, co. Wilts, and viscount Bolingbroke, co. Lincoln.

ST. JOHN, Lord, a title enjoyed by the elder branch of the above-mentioned family, which was conferred in 1558 on Oliver St. John, who was created a baron of this realm by the title of lord St. John, of Bletsoe, whose descendant Oliver, the fourth lord, was advanced to the dignity of earl of Bolingbroke, that became extinct at his death. [Vide Bolingbroke] The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms and Crest. Vide Bolingbroke.

Supporters. Two monkies proper.

ST. JOHN, Mildmay, another branch of the same family, enjoys the baronetcy derived from that of Mildmay. This latter family was very numerous, and is said to have been of great consequence in the reign of Stephen.

ST. LAMBERT, Charles Francis de (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1717 at Nancy, and died in 1805, leaving 'Les Fêtes de l'Amour et de l'Hymen,' &c.; 'Les Quatres Parties du Jour;' 'Les Saisons,' a poem; 'Consolation de la Vieillesse;' 'Catechisme Universel,' &c.

ST. LAURENCE (Her.) the name of a family which has enjoyed the barony of Howth by tenure since the reign of Henry II. Thomas Laurence, the 27th baron, was created in 1730 viscount Lawrence, and earl of Howth.

ST. LAURENCE, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Howth.

ST. LEGER (Her.) the name of a Norman family, which came over with the Conqueror, and has since been ennobled in the person of Arthur St. Leger, who was created in 1703, baron of Kilmaydon, and viscount Doneraile.

ST. PALAYE, John Baptist de la Currie de (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1697 at Auxerre, and died in 1781, leaving 'Memoires sur l'Ancienne Chevalerie,' 3 vols. 12mo.; 'L'Histoire des Troubadours,' 3 vols. 12mo. besides some Poems.

ST. PIERRE, Jacques Henri Bernardin de, another French writer, was born in 1737 at Havre de Grace, and died in 1814, leaving 'Etudes de la Nature,' 'Paul et Virginie,' and some other works of a popular cast.

ST. QUENTIN (Geog.) a town of Picardy, in the department of Aisne, situated on the river Somme, 22 m. S. Cambray, 40 S. by E. Arras, and 45 S. Amiens. The French, under the constable Montmorency, were defeated in 1557 by the Spaniards, near this town, which was taken by assault.

ST. REAL, Cæsar, Richard de (Biog.) a miscellaneous French writer, and native of Chamberri, in Savoy, who died in 1692, was the author of 'De l'Usage de l'Histoire,' 12mo. Paris, 1672; 'La Vie de Jesus Christ,' and other works, which were all printed in 5 vols. 12mo. 1722.

ST. SEBASTIAN (Geog.) a city and sea-port of Biscay, in Spain, seated at the foot of a mountain, on the top of which is an ancient castle in ruins, 50 miles E. Bilboa, 50 N. W. Pampeluna. Lon. 1° 56′ W. lat. 43° 24′ N. This town has been taken by the French more than once, namely, in 1719, 1794, and in 1808, but it was retaken by storm in 1813 by the British under lord Wellington.

ST. SIMON, Louis de Rouvroi, Duke of (Biog.) a French writer of Memoirs, was born in 1675, and died about 1757, leaving 'Memoirs of the Reign of Louis XIV and the Regency,' published in 13 vols. 8vo.

ST. VINCENT, John, Earl of (Hist.) an admiral, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born at Meaford in 1734, and entering early into the navy, was promoted to the rank of Post Captain in 1760, and rising by his distinguished merits to that of Vice Admiral, he was nominated Commander-in-chief of the naval force in 1793, on the expedition against the French islands in the West Indies, the successful issue of which was followed by the victory obtained in 1795 over the French off the Cape St. Vincent, when admiral Jervis was rewarded for his gallantry and skill with the peerage. In 1801 he was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty, which post he resigned in 1804, and after having continued his active services to the end of the war, he died in 1823. [Vide Plate XVI]

ST. VINCENT, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles conferred on admiral Jervis above-mentioned, which became extinct at his death, but the viscounty devolved on his nephew Edward Jervis Ricketts, who assumed the name and arms of Jervis only. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a chevron ermine, between three martlets or.

Crest. A demi-pegasus issuing from a wreath.

Supporters. On the dexter side an eagle grasping in his left talon a thunderbolt; on the sinister side a pegasus charged on the wing with a fleur-de-luce.

Motto. "Thus."

SALADIN (Hist.) or Salaheddin, the celebrated sultan of Egypt, and successor of Adad, who signalized himself by his valour during the crusades in opposition to Richard, king of England, died after a reign of 22 years, in the year of the Hegira 589, A. D. 1199. [Vide Plate II]

SALAMANCA (Geog.) an ancient city in the north-west of Spain, situated on the ascent of three hills, the river Tormes flowing at their base, 158 miles W. N. W. Madrid. Lon. 5° 10′ W. lat. 41° 21′ N. This town, called in Latin Salmantica, is celebrated for its university, which was founded in 1239, and maintained its reputation for a long time. There are also several vestiges of antiquity, particularly a Roman road leading southward to Merida, and a Roman bridge over the Tormes. The banks of that river and the adjacent country were the scene of an engagement in 1812 between the British, under lord Wellington, and the French, under Marmont, in which the latter were defeated with some loss.

SALAMIS (Geog.) Σαλαμὶς, or Salamina, now Calouri, an island in the Saronicus Sinus, on the southern coast of Attica, which is rendered memorable by the naval victory gained by the Greeks over the Persians, in which the latter lost 200 ships, A. C. 480. Herod. l. 8, c. 56; Pind. Nem. od. 2; Æschyl. in Pers.; Strab. l. 2; Val. Max. l. 5; C. Nep. in Them. &c.

Titles. Marquis and earl of Salisbury, viscount Cranbourne, and baron Cecil, of Essingdon.

Arms. Barry of ten argent and azure, over all six escutcheons three, two, and one, sable, each charged with a lion rampant of the field, a crescent for difference.

Crest. On a wreath six arrows interlaced or, heads and feathers argent, girt together with a bandage or, belt azure, garnished or, and over those arrows a morion cap azure.

Supporters. Two lions ermine.
Motto. "Sero sed serio."

Salisbury, William, second Earl of, a nobleman, who though descended from a grandfather and a father, both able statesmen, inherited, according to Clarendon, nothing but their titles. After acting the part of a faithless courtier towards his sovereign in his troubles, he did not hesitate to take his seat as a commoner amongst those who had been accessory to his murder.

Salisbury, James, the fourth Earl of, being a convert to the Romish faith, was presented by the Grand Jury of Middlesex in 1688, as a popish recusant, and was threatened, together with the Earl of Peterborough, with a prosecution on a charge of high treason, for departing from their allegiance, and being reconciled to the court of Rome, but the prosecution was waved, and he died in 1694.

Salisbury, John of (Ecc.) a monk, and native of Old Sarum, the friend and confident of Thomas à Becket, was exiled by Henry II for seven years, on account of his adherence to this prelate, and on his return to England, was a witness to the murder of the latter, and in endeavouring to ward off one of the blows, received a serious hurt in the arm. He was promoted to the bishopric of Chartres in 1172, and died in 1182, leaving, among other works, his 'Polycration,' &c. which was published in 8vo. at Paris, in 1513, and at Leyden in 1595; and a French translation, entitled 'Les Vanitez de la Cour,' 4to. Paris, 1640.

Salisbury, William (Biog.) a Welch writer, and native of Denbighshire, who was educated at Oxford, and died about 1570, was the author of 'A Dictionary English and Welch,' 4to. 1547, besides other works mentioned by Wood.

Salisbury (Geog.) vide Sarum.

SALLENGRE, Albert Henry de (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1694 at the Hague, educated at Leyden, and died in 1723, leaving 'L'Eloge de l'Yvresse,' 1714; 'Histoire de Pierre de Montmaur,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'Novus Thesaurus Antiquitatum,' 3 vols. fol. 1718, a supplement to Grævius; 'Essai d'une Histoire des Provinces Unies pour l'Année, 1621, &c.' 4to. &c. SALLO, Denis de (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1626, and died in 1669, after having projected the 'Journal des Sçavans,' which gave rise to the periodical works so general throughout Europe, and known in English by the name of Reviews.

SALLUSTIA (Numis.) vide Salustia.

SALLUSTIUS, Caius Crispus (Hist.) an historian, and native of Amiternum, passed through the offices of questor and consul, but was degraded from the rank of senator by the censor Appius, on account of the depravity of his morals. Embracing, however, the cause of Cæsar, he was by him restored to a seat in the senate, and died about 50 years before the Christian æra. He married Terentia, the divorced wife of Cicero, which is supposed to have caused a violent animosity between the orator and the historian. Sallust wrote a history of Rome, and other things, of which his History of Catiline's Conspiracy, and of the Wars of Jugurtha, are extant. The best editions of Sallust are those of Haverkamp, 2 vols. 4to. Amst. 1742, and of Edinburgh, 12mo. 1755. [Vide Plate XXV]

Sallustius, Secundus Promotus, a native of Gaul, was high in the favour of the emperor Julian, by whom he was made prefect of his native country. On the death of Jovian, the imperial dignity was offered to him, but he declined the honour. Liban. Vit. Jul.; Ammian. Marcellin. l. 21; Theodoret. l. 3.

SALMASIUS (Biog.) or Saumaise, Claude, a scholar and philologer of the 16th century, of an ancient and noble family of Semur-en-Auxois, in Burgundy, was the author of numerous works on criticism, law, and philosophy, among others, of 'Pliniani Exercitationes,' &c. 2 vols. fol. Lugd. Bat. 1629, and Ultraj. 1629; 'De Usuris,' 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1638; 'Achillis Tatii Alexandrini Eroticon,' &c. 12mo. ibid. 1640; 'De Homonymis Hiles Atricæ Exercitationes ineditæ,' &c. but he is most generally known in England by his 'Defensio regia pro Carolo I,' &c. or a Defence of the regal Government of England, which was answered by Milton, by order of the usurping powers. [Vide Plate XXII]

SALMANTICA (Geog.) a town of Lusitania, a province of Hispania, called by Polybius, Ἑλμαντική; by Livy, Hermantica; by Ptolemy, Σαλμάντικα; now Salamanca, was captured by Annibal. Polyb. l. 3; Liv. l. 3; Ptol. l. 1.

SALMERON, Alphonsus (Ecc.) one of the first and most zealous disciples of Ignatius, was born in 1516 at Toledo, and died in 1585, after having been employed as a missionary in Germany, Poland, the Low Countries, and Ireland. He was also present at the council of Trent, and contributed to the foundation of a Jesuits' college at Naples. His works have been published in 8 vols. fol.

SALMON, William (Biog.) a physician, who died in 1700, was the author of 'The Complete Physician,' 8vo.; 'A Universal Herbal,' fol.; 'Polygraphice, or the Arts of Drawing,' &c.

Salmon, Nathaniel, an English antiquary, who was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1742, wrote 'A Survey of the Roman Antiquities in the Midland Counties in England,' 8vo. 1726; 'A Survey of the Roman Stations in Britain,' &c. 8vo.; 'The History of Hertfordshire,' &c.; 'The Lives of the English Bishops, from the Restoration to the Revolution,' &c.; 'The Antiquities of Surrey,' &c.; 'The History and Antiquities of Essex.'

SALMURIUM (Geog.) the Latin name for Saumur.

SALOME (Bibl.) Σαλώμη, the wife of Zebedee, and one of the holy women who ministered to our Saviour. Mark xv. 40.

Salome, Herodias' daughter, who danced before Herod according to the Scripture account, which does not mention her by name. Joseph. Antiq. l. 18.

Salome (Hist.) daughter of Antipater, and sister of Herod the Great, who was one of the wickedest of women and caused much mischief in Herod's family. Joseph. Antiq. l. 15.

SALONA (Geog.) a town of Illyricum, and a Roman colony, which was the native place of the emperor Diocletian, who retired thither on his abdicating the empire, and built a palace, the ruins of which are still remaining. Salona is now a mean village of Austrian Dalmatia, on a bay of the Adriatic bearing the same name, 2 miles N. E. Spalatro. Cæs. de Bell. Civ.; Mel. l. 2; Strab. l. 7; Plin. l. 3; Dio. Zonaras. Procopius, &c.

Salona (Numis.) medals are extant of this town, bearing the inscriptions COLONIA MARTIA JULIA SALONA—COL. CLAUDIA AUGUSTA PIA VETER. SALONA, &c.

SALONICHI (Geog.) or Salonica, the ancient Thessalonica, a large and handsome city of Macedonia, in European Turkey, standing at the northern extremity of a great bay or gulf, 272 miles W. Constantinople, 252 E. S. E. Ragusa. Lon. 22° 56′ S. lat. 40° 38′ N.

History of Salonichi.

In the year 1313 Salonichi was ceded by the Greek emperor to the Venetians, who were dispossessed of it about eight years afterwards by the Turks under Amurath I. It presents but few remaining antiquities, except the propylæa of the ancient Hippodrome, two triumphal arches of Augustus and Constantine, the church of St. Sophia, now a Turkish mosque on the model of that at Constantinople.

SALONINA, Cornelia (Hist.) a Roman empress and wife of Gallienus, who, after having distinguished herself by her virtues public and private, shared the fate of her husband and family, who were murdered, A. D. 268.

Salonina (Numis.) numerous medals are extant of this empress, bearing her effigy as in the annexed figure; inscription COR. SALONINA AUG.—CORNELIA SALONINA AUG*usta*; and in the Greek ΚΟΡ. ΣΑΛΩΝΕΙΝΑ CЄΒ.; sometimes with the epithet Chrysogone, as CAΛ. ΧΡΥΣΟΓΟΝΗΣ—CAΛΩ. ΧΡΥCΟΓΟΝΗ. C. &c.; on the reverse, ABUNDANTIA AUG.—ABUNDANTIA TEMPORUM—DEAE SEGETIAE—DIANA LUCIFERA—FECUNDITAS AUG.—JUNO VICTRIX, &c. Medals were struck of this empress by the principal cities in Greece, &c. Vaillant, Beger, &c.

SALONINUS, Cornelius (Hist.) the son of Gallienus and Salonina, was set over the army of Gaul by his father, but was slain by the arts of the usurper Posthumus.

Saloninus (Numis.) this prince, whose effigy is given on medals as in the annexed figure, is styled sometimes after his father. Q. JUL. SALONINUS GALLIENUS NOB. CAESAR; but mostly after his grandfather Valerian, as VALERIANUS CAES. — COR. SAL. VALERIANUS NOB. CAES.—C. P. LIC. VALERIANUS CAES. &c. Vaillant, Beger, &c.

Arms. Gules, a lion rampant argent, crowned or, between three crescents of the last.

Crest. A demi-lion rampant couped argent, crowned or, holding in his paw a crescent of the last.

SALUSTIA Barbia Orbiana (Numis.) or Sallustia, a Roman princess, formerly thought to be the wife of Decius, but now considered to be the wife of Alexander Severus, of whom little is known, except by medals of Severus, bearing her effigy as in the annexed figure; inscription, on the obverse, SAL. or SALL. BARB. ORBIANA AUG.; on the reverse, IMP. CAES. M. AUR. SEV. ALEXANDER.

SAMARIA (Bibl.) שמרון, in Greek Σωμερὼν, the capital city of the kingdom of Samaria, or of the ten tribes, which was built by Omri, king of Israel; besieged twice by Benhaded, and once by Shalmanaser in the reign of Hezekiah; three years after which it was taken and reduced to a heap of stones, but was rebuilt by the Cuthites in the time of Ezra, and was inhabited by the Macedonians in the time of Alexander the Great in consequence of a revolt of the Samaritans. 1 Kings xiii. xxii. &c.; Ezra iv.; Nehem. iv. The Jews resumed full possession of the country in the time of John Hyrcanus, who took Samaria, and ruined it, according to Josephus, so that the river ran through its ruins. It continued in this state until Aulus Gabinius, proconsul of Syria, restored it, and gave it the name of Gabiniana; but it was very inconsiderable until Herod the Great restored it to its ancient lustre, and gave it the Greek name Sebaste, i. e. Augusta, in honour of Augustus. The country of Samaria lay between Judæa and Galilee. The inhabitants, well known in Scripture by the name of Samaritans, were composed of heathens, who had been transplanted thither by the kings of Assyria, and schismatical Jews, who mingled the worship of idols with that of the true God. Being refused permission to assist in the building of the temple at Jerusalem, they used their endeavours, and for some time successfully, to prevent the progress of the work, and afterwards erected a temple for themselves on Mount Gerazim; hence, though claiming to be of the same kindred, the Samaritans had no dealings with the Jews. Ezra iv.; Neh. ii.; Joseph. l. 11.

SAMBUCHUS, John (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1531 at Tirnau, in Hungary, and died in 1584, leaving 'Emblemata,' 8vo. Antv. 1576; 'Icones Medicorum,' fol. Antv. 1603; besides a number of other works in prose and poetry.

SAMMES, Aylett (Biog.) a lawyer and antiquary, took his degrees at Cambridge, but was incorporated at Oxford in 1677, and died in 1679, leaving 'Britannia Antiqua,' &c. which is however ascribed by Anthony Wood to his uncle.

SAMNIUM (Geog.) or Samnis, a town and country of Italy inhabited by the Samnites, a people who were implacable enemies to the Romans, in the first ages of the empire, until they were extirpated, A. C. 272. Liv. l. 7; Dionys. Hal. l. 2; Strab. l. 5; Eutrop. l. 2, &c.

SAMOS (Bibl.) Σάμος, the island described under Geography, where St. Paul went ashore as he was going to Jerusalem. Acts xx. 15.

Samos (Geog.) or Samus, an island in the Ægean Sea, on the coast of Asia Minor, which at present bears the same name in the Grecian Archipelago, on the coast of Natolia to the E. of the isle of Nicaria. It is 24 miles long, 12 broad, and about 70 in circumference. The principal town at present is Vati, which is distinguished by its large and convenient harbour, situated on the north side of the island; lon. 27° 12′ E. lat. 37° 46′ N.

History of Samos.

It was anciently called Parthenia, Anthemusa, Melamphyllus, and was successively in the possession of the Leleges and the Ionians. The Samians were at first governed by kings, afterwards by a democracy and an oligarchy. They assisted the Greeks against the Persians, after which they became subject to the Athenians, from whom they revolted; and, being reduced by Eumenes, king of Pergamus, were restored to their ancient liberties by Augustus. On the decline of the Roman empire Samos passed into the hands of the Saracens, and subsequently into those of the Turks, who, although a Turkish aga resides there, have, contrary to their usual policy, left the power in the hands of the Greeks.

Samos, the former capital of the island, was built upwards of 900 years before the Christian æra, and was famous, not only for its magnificence, but also as the birth-place of Pythagoras. The city walls still remain cased inside and outside with white marble, and the ruins of a theatre are to be seen, the seats of which were built not on arches, but on the sides of the hill. It was 240 feet wide, and the space for the seats 80 feet wide. Of the temple of Juno, one of the wonders of Samos, sufficient remains to attest its magnificence. Several of the bases and pedestals are to be seen on the north side, although almost buried in the ground, and an entire shaft on the south side. Herodot. l. 1, c. 142; Thucyd. l. 1; Cic. ad Frat. Ep. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 1; Strab. l. 10; Mel. l. 2; Lucan. l. 8; Plin. l. 5; Paus. l. 7.

Samos (Numis.) this island and town are known by the inscriptions on medals—CΑΜΙΩΝ—ΔΗΜΟC ΣΑΜΙΩΝ—ΣΑΜΙΩΝ ΠΥΘΑΓΟΡΗC, &c. The Samians struck medals, either as an independent state, or in honour of Augustus, Livia, Caligula, Agrippina, jun. Nero, Titus, Trajan, Adrian, M. Aurelius, L. Verus Commodus, Sept. Severus, Caracalla, Domna, Geta, Macrinus, Diadumenianus, Heliogabalus, Sœmias, Mæsa, Alexander Severus, Mammæa, Maximinus, Gordianus, Gordianus Pius, Philippus, jun. Trajanus Decius, Etruscilla, Gallienus, Salonina, Saloninus, and Valerianus.

SAMOSATA (Geog.) Σαμόσατα, now Scempsat, a town of Commagene, in Syria, near the Euphrates, below Mount Taurus, where Lucian was born. Strab. l. 16; Joseph. l. 7; Plin. l. 5.

Samosata (Numis.) medals are extant of this town, in which it is styled a metropolis, sacra, asylum, and autonomos, or enjoying its own laws.

SAMOTHRACE (Bibl.) Σαμοθράκη, the island described under Geography, where St. Paul arrived first after departing from Troas for Macedonia. Acts xvi.

Samothrace (Geog.) Σαμοθρηΐκη, an island in the Ægean Sea, on the coast of Thrace, opposite the mouth of the Hebrus, from which it is about 32 miles distant. The inhabitants are supposed to have been a colony of the Pelasgians and Phœnicians. Herod. l. 7; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 23; Paus. l. 7; Flor. l. 2.

Samothrace (Numis.) this island is distinguished on some medals by the inscription ΣΑΜΟΘΡΑΚΩΝ, &c.

SAMPSON, Thomas (Biog.) a puritan and nonconformist, was born in 1517 at Playford, in Suffolk, educated at Oxford, and died in 1589, after having been busy, both by his writings and his preaching, in the spread of his principles.

SAMSON (Bibl.) שמשון, son of Manoah, of the tribe of Dan, and judge of Israel for the space of 28 years, from A. M. 2867 to 2887, whose history is narrated in Judg. xvi. &c.

SAMUEL (Bibl.) שמואל, son of Elkanah and Hannah, of the tribe of Levi, and of the family of Kohath, was a prophet and judge of Israel for many years, and died at the age of 98, A. M. 2947, A. Salmant. 1587; 'Grammaticæ Græcæ Compendium,' 8vo. Antv. 1581 and Salmant. 1592; besides other grammatical works, and also editions of Virgil, Horace, and Persius, &c.

Sanchez, Gaspar, a Jesuit, was born in 1553 at Cifuentes, in New Castile, and died in 1628, leaving several commentaries on the Scriptures.

SANCHO (Hist.) surnamed the Fat, a king of Leon and Asturias, succeeded his brother Ordogno in 956, and was poisoned in 967 by the chief of a rebellion, whom he had pardoned. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

Sancho, the name of some counts or kings of Castile.

Sancho I, surnamed the Great, succeeded Garcias III on the throne of Navarre, and became also, by his marriage with Nuna, eldest daughter of Sancho Garcias, count of Castile, also master of Castile, and was killed in 1034 as he was going on foot to Oviedo to visit some relics.

Sancho II, eldest son of Ferdinand the Great, received Castile as his share of his father's dominions in 1065, soon after which he deprived his brothers, Alphonso of Leon, and Garcias of Galicia, and compelled the first to retire to a monastery, while he confined the latter in prison; but while he was besieging his sister Urraca, in Zamora, he was slain by one of her followers by a stratagem in 1072. The effigy of this and the following kings are given as in the annexed cuts.

Sancho III, surnamed the Desired, succeeded his father Alphonso VII in 1156, and died in 1158, after a reign of little more than a year, when he was succeeded by his son Alphonso III.

Sancho IV, succeeded his father Alphonso X in 1284, and died after a turbulent reign of 10 years, when he was succeeded by his son Ferdinand IV.

Sancho, the name of several kings of Navarre.

Sancho I, surnamed Garcias, succeeded his father Garcias Inigo, and was succeeded by Garcias II.

Sancho II, son and successor of Garcias II, surnamed Abarca, was killed in 984 in battle with the Castilians after a reign of 24 years.

Sancho III, the same as Sancho I of Castile.

Sancho IV, who began to reign in 1054, was dethroned by his cousin, Sancho V, in 1074.

Sancho VI, surnamed the Wise, died in 1194, after a warlike reign of 43 years.

Sancho I, king of Portugal, succeeded his father, Alphonsus I, in 1185, and died in 1212, after having signalised himself against the Moors.

Sancho II, succeeded his father Alphonsus II, but being dethroned by his brother Alphonsus, he died in 1248, at the age of 48.

Sancho, Ignatius (Biog.) a negro, was born on board a Spanish slave ship in 1729, baptised at Carthagena by the name of Ignatius, brought to England at an early age on the death of his parents, and after having been for some time in the service of the duke of Montrose, he was set up by the latter in the grocery business, and died in 1780, leaving several pieces of poetry, and a tract on the theory of music, &c.

SANCHONIATHON (Biog.) a reputed Phœnician author, as old as the Trojan war, who is said to have written a work on the 'Antiquities of Phœnicia,' which was translated into Greek by Philo-Biblius, of which some fragments only remain. The authenticity of this book is much doubted.

SANCROFT, William (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1616 at Fresingfield, in Suffolk, educated at Cambridge, whence he was driven and deprived of his fellowship during the usurpation. At the restoration he was promoted successively to a prebend of Durham, to the mastership of Emanuel College, Cambridge, the deanery of York, the deanery of St. Paul's, the archdeaconry of Canterbury, and, finally, in 1677 he was advanced to the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury, but was suspended in 1689 for refusing to take the oaths, and subsequently deprived of it by a form of law; when he retired to his native place, and died in 1693, after having bestowed great sums of money in charity and endowments, particularly to Emanuel College, Cambridge. As an author he left but few works, among which are 'Modern Politics, taken from Machiavel, Borgia, and other modern authors, by an Eye-witness,' 12mo. 1652; 'Nineteen Familiar Letters,' &c. From his MSS., which were deposited by bishop Tanner in the Bodleian, were collected and published by the Rev. John Gutch, of Oxford, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1781; 'Miscellaneous Tracts relating to the History and Antiquities of England and Ireland.'

SANCTORIUS (Biog.) or Santorius, a physician, was born in 1561 at Capo d'Istria, near the Gulf of Trieste, and died in 1636, leaving a number of works, which were printed altogether in 4 vols. 4to. 1660.

SANDBY, Paul (Biog.) an artist, was born at Nottingham in 1732, and died in 1809, after having acquired a considerable reputation in that branch of engraving called aquatinto. Thomas Sandby, his brother, who died in 1798, became professor of architecture in the Royal Academy.

SANDEMAN, Robert (Biog.) the leader of a religious sect called after him, was born at Perth in 1723, and died in 1771, after having given a new interpretation to the Calvinistic doctrine of faith, in which he was followed by many who objected to the mystical explanation of the more rigid Calvinists.

SANDERS, Nicholas (Biog.) in Latin Sanderus, a Roman Catholic writer, was born about 1527 at Charlewood, in Surry, educated at Oxford, and died in Ireland about 1580, where he was sent on a mission to the Catholics, who were at that time in a state of rebellion. He wrote among other things 'De Visibili Monarchiâ Ecclesiæ,' Lovan. 1566, and fol. Antv. 1581, &c.; 'De Origine et Progressu Schismatis Anglicani,' 8vo. Colon., and reprinted at different times and places. The former of these works was animadverted upon by Dering, Clerk, and others; and the latter by bishop Burnet in the Appendix to his history.

SANDERSON, Robert (Ecc.) an English prelate, descended from an ancient family in Yorkshire, was born in 1587, educated at Oxford, and, after having been a sufferer for his steady adherence to his sovereign, whom he attended in all his troubles, he was, at the restoration, promoted to the see of Lincoln, and died in 1663, leaving among his works, 1. 'Logicæ Artis Compendium,' 1615. 2. 'De Juramenti Obligatione,' 8vo. 1647, and reprinted several times since; with 'De Obligatione Conscientiæ,' 8vo. 1656; and of both these there was an English translation, entitled 'Prelections on the Nature and Obligation of Promissory Oaths and of Conscience,' 3 vols. 8vo. London, 1722. 3. 'Censure of Mr. Antony Ascham his Book of the Confusions and Revolutions of Government,' 8vo. 1649. 4. 'Episcopacy, as established by Law in England, not Prejudicial to the Regal Power,' 1661. 5. 'Pax Ecclesiæ; about Predestination, or the Five Points,' printed at the end of his life by Walton, 8vo. 6. 'The Power communicated to Princes, and the Obedience required of the Subject.' 7. 'Physicæ Artis Compendium,' Oxon, 1671. 8. 'Nine Cases of Conscience resolved,' 8vo. 1678; the last of these nine cases, on the Use of the Liturgy, is published by Walton in his Life of Sanderson, under the title of 'Bishop Sanderson's Judgment concerning Submission to Usurpers,' &c.

Sanderson, Robert (Biog.) an antiquary, descended from a respectable family of Durham, was born in 1660 at Egglestone, in that county, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1741. He is principally known by the share he had in the compilation of 'Rymer's Fœdera,' the three last volumes of which were executed by him alone.

Sanderson, Nicholas, vide Saunderson.

SANDERUS, Anthony (Biog.) a topographer and antiquary, was born in 1586 at Antwerp, and died in 1664, leaving, 1. 'Dissertatio Parænetica pro Instituto Bibliothecæ Publicæ Gandavensis,' 4to. Motto. "Post tot naufragia portum."

SANDWICH (Geog.) a sea-port town and borough of Kent, in England, and one of the Cinque Ports, situated on the river Stour, about two miles from the coast, 13 m. E. Canterbury, 67 E. by S. London. Lon. 1° 20′ E. lat. 51° 16′ N. This town, which is supposed to occupy the site of the Portus Rutupensis, rose to considerable importance in the reign of Edward IV, by whom it was new walled, ditched, and fortified with bulwarks against the invasions of the French and other enemies, from whom it suffered very much. Sandwich was first incorporated by Edward III.

SANDWICH ISLANDS, a group of Islands in the North Pacific Ocean, discovered by captains Cook and King in 1778, which have been subsequently visited by Vancouver, Meares, Turnbull, and other navigators. They consist of 11 islands, extending in latitude from 19° to 23° N., and in longitude from 200° to 206° E. Owyhee, the principal of these islands, is memorable as the place where captain Cook lost his life in a quarrel with the natives.

SANDYS, Sir Edwin (Hist.) second son of the archbishop mentioned under Ecclesiastical History, was born in Worcestershire about 1561, educated at Oxford, and died in 1621, after having been imprisoned for the rebellious spirit he displayed, which was inherited by his four sons. Edwin, his second son, was the noted colonel who received his mortal wound at the battle of Worcester. Sir Edwin Sandys, who bequeathed 1500*l.* to the University of Oxford for the foundation of a metaphysical lecture, was the author of 'Europæ Speculum,' &c. Hag. 1629, and frequently reprinted.

SANDYS, Edwin (Ecc.) an English prelate, and native of Lancashire, was born in 1519, educated at Cambridge, imprisoned during the reign of queen Mary, on account of his attachment to Protestantism, raised to the see of Worcester in 1559, translated to that of London in 1570, and in 1576 to the archiepiscopal see of York, and died in 1588.

SANDYS (Her.) the family of the archbishop above-mentioned was ennobled in the person of Samuel Sandys, who was appointed in 1741 Chancellor and Under Treasurer of the Exchequer, and created baron Sandys, of Ombersley, in 1743, which title became extinct at his death in 1797, but was revived in favour of his niece and heiress, Mary, the marchioness of Downshire. The family name therefore of baron Sandys is at present Hill.

SANDYS, the name of an ancient family, probably a branch of the one above-mentioned, which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1809 on sir Edwin Bayntun Sandys; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth, Sandys, or, a fess dancette, between three cross croslets fitché gules; second and third pean, a bend losengy argent, for Bayntun.

Crest of Sandys. A griffin segreant per fess or and gules.

Crest of Bayntun. A griffin's head erased sable, charged with a cross croslet fitché or.

SANDYS, George (Biog.) seventh and youngest son of archbishop Sandys above-mentioned, was born in 1577, educated at Oxford, and died in 1643, leaving his 'Travels,' &c., the seventh edition of which was published in 1673; besides his Poems, &c.

SANNAZARIUS, James (Biog.) an Italian and Latin poet, was born at Naples in 1458, and died in 1530, leaving a number of works, which have gone through many editions, of which the 'Opera omnia Latina,' 8vo. Venet. 1535, is the most complete.

SAPO (Biog.) vide Sappho.

SAPOR (Hist.) the name of three kings of Persia.

SAPOR I, succeeded Artaxerxes A. D. 242, and died after a reign of 30 years, in which he took the emperor Valerian and flead him alive. Poll. in Trigint. Tyrann.

SAPOR II, succeeded his father Hormisdas A. D. 309, and died after a reign of 70 years, in which he had experienced great vicissitudes. Sozom. Hist. l. 2; Agathias, &c.

SAPOR III, son of Sapor II, succeeded his uncle Artaxerxes in 384, and died in 389.

SAPPHO (Biog.) Σαπφὼ, a celebrated poetess of Lesbos, who was born A. C. 600, and threw herself from mount Leucas into the sea in a fit of despair, because her passion for Phaon, a youth of Mitylene, was not returned. Of all her compositions only two fragments are remaining; but the verse in which she wrote has been called, after her, Sapphic verse. Herod. l. 2; Horat. l. 2, od. 13; Plin. l. 22; Athen. l. 13. [Vide Plate XXVII]

SARACENE (Geog.) a part of Arabia Petræa, which gave its name to the Saracens, who distinguished themselves as the zealous and successful propagators of Mahometanism. [Vide Syria]

SARAGOSSA (Geog.) a celebrated city in the north-east of Spain, the capital of Arragon, situated on the banks of the Ebro, 175 m. E. N. E. Madrid. Lon. 1° 42′ W., lat. 41° 38′ N.

History of Saragossa.

This town, which was a place of some consideration in the time of the Romans, by whom it was called Cæsar-Augusta, now corrupted into Saragossa, has been rendered memorable in modern times by withstanding two of the most obstinate sieges that were ever known, conducted by the French in 1808 and 1809. In the former of these sieges the French were compelled to retire; nor did they succeed in the second attack until after a bombardment of six weeks and continued mining, which reduced the illustrious Pallafox and his companions to the utmost extremity.

SARAH (Bibl.) שרה, wife of Abraham, and daughter of Terah, Abraham's father, but by another mother, was born

A. M. 2018, A. C. 1986, and died at the age of 127. Gen. xi. &c.

SARAH (Hist.) the daughter of Raguel and Anna, of the tribe of Naphthali and of the kindred of Tobit. Tob. iii.

SARASIN, John Francis (Biog.) a French writer, was born about 1604 at Hermanville, in Normandy, and died in 1654, leaving 'Discours de la Tragedie,' and 'L'Histoire du Siege de Dunkerque,' &c.; besides his posthumous works, which were published by Menage, and an additional two volumes in 1675.

SARAVUS (Geog.) now the Soar, a river of Belgium, falling into the Moselle.

SARBIEWSKI (Biog.) or Sarbievius, Matthias Casimir, a Jesuit and Latin poet, was born in Poland in 1595, and died in 1640. His poems were printed by Barbou in 12mo. 1759.

SARDANAPALUS (Hist.) Σαρδαναπάλλος, the fortieth and last king of Assyria, celebrated for his effeminacy and luxury, was besieged in Ninus by two of his officers, Belesis and Arsaces, who had conspired against him, and, despairing of success, burnt himself in his palace, with his eunuchs, concubines, and treasures, 820 years before the Christian æra, which terminated the Assyrian monarchy. Herod. l. 2; Diod. l. 2; Cic. in Tusc. l. 5; Strab. l. 14; Schol. Aristoph. in Av.

SARDICA (Geog.) a town of ancient Illyrium, now called by the Turks Sophia, or Sofia, and by the inhabitants Triadizza, which was formerly the residence of the despots of Servia. A general council was held here in 347 by order of the emperor Constans, for the purpose of supporting Athanasius and the Nicene creed, which were vehemently attacked by the Arians. Athanas. Apol.; Socrat. Hist. l. 2; Sozom. l. 3; S. Hilar. Fragment. de Synod. &c.

SARDINIA (Geog.) the largest island in the Mediterranean next to Sicily, situated between Italy and Africa, to the south of Corsica, between lon. 7° and 9° E. and lat. 38° and 41° N. Cagliari is the capital. Its principal promontories are Capo Falcone, Capo Mulgarin, Capo Teulada, and Carbonara, &c. Its rivers are the Aristano and Flumendoso. Its bays or gulfs are those of Cagliari, of Santa Rosa, and of Algheri, &c.

History of Sardinia.

Sardinia, which was known to the ancients by the same name, is said to have been so called from Sardus, a son of Hercules, who settled there with a colony from Libya. The Carthaginians were long masters of this island, but were obliged to give it up to the Romans A. C. 231, in whose hands it remained until its conquest by the Saracens, from whom it was taken by the king of Arragon, after which it was retained by the crown of Spain until 1719, when it was ceded to the duke of Savoy. Under this government it acquired, by subsequent accessions of territory, such political importance as to be erected into a kingdom. Sardinia suffered, in common with all Italy, during the revolutionary war; but the reigning family recovered their possessions on the fall of Buonaparte in 1814, and also obtained the addition of the Genoese territory in 1815.

SARDIS (Geog.) Σάρδις, or Sardes, now Sart, one of the oldest and most celebrated towns of Asia Minor, the capital of the kingdom of Lydia, situated at the foot of mount Tmolus, on the banks of the Pactolus. It fell into the hands of Cyrus A. C. 548, was burnt by the Athenians A. C. 504, which was the cause of the invasion of Attica by Darius, and was afterwards exposed to different sieges from the Cimmerians, Persians, Macedonians, &c. Antiochus Soter was also defeated in its vicinity by Eumenes, king of Pergamus, A. C. 262. Herod. l. 1; C. Nep. l. 1; Strab. l. 13; Plin. l. 5, &c.

SARDIS (Numis.) many medals of this town are extant, which it struck, either as an independent state, or in honour of Augustus, Drusus and Germanicus, Claudius, Nero, Vespasian, Domitian, Domitia, Trajan, Plotina, Marciana, Adrian, Antinous, Antoninus Pius, L. Verus, Sept. Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Tranquillina, Philip sen., Philip jun., Valerian sen., Gallienus, Salonina, Saloninus, Valerian jun.

SAREPTA (Bibl.) a city of the Sidonians, between Tyre and Sidon, called in the Old Testament Zarephath, after the Hebrew צרפתה, 1 Kings xvii.; but in the Greek of St. Luke Σάρεπτα, Luke iv.; by Josephus Σαρεφθὰ; by Stephanus Σάραπτα; and by the Arabians Tzarphand; which is the name by which it is now know among the natives. This place is celebrated in Scripture as the residence of the prophet Elijah, who dwelt here with a poor widow during the famine. 1 Kings xvii.; Obad. 20; Joseph. Antiq. l. 8; Plin. l. 5.

SARNELLI, Pompey (Ecc.) an Italian prelate, was born at Polignano in 1649, and died in 1724, leaving 'Lettere Ecclesiastiche,' 9 vols. 4to.; 'Il Clero Secolare,' &c.; 'Memorie Cronologiche de' Vescovi et Arcivescovi di Benevento.'

SARTI, Joseph (Biog.) a musical composer of Faenza, was born in 1730, and died in 1790, after having obtained a high reputation by his compositions, particularly by his sonatas.

SARTO, Andrea del (Biog.) or Vannucchi, an Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1471, and died in 1520, leaving the reputation of a master in his art.

SARUM (Geog.) or Old Sarum, an ancient borough of Wiltshire, so called in distinction from Salisbury, or New Sarum, which stands two miles north of it, and is situated near the confluence of the Wily and the Avon, 21 m. N. E. Southampton, 83 W. by S. London. Lon. 1° 47′ W., lat. 51° 4′ N.

History of Sarum.

Sarum, which in the Roman Itineraries is distinguished by the name of Sorbisdunum, and among the Saxons by that of Searobyrig, whence both the more modern names are evidently derived, was a town or fortress of the Belgæ, who originally inhabited the counties of Wilts and Hants. After suffering much from the ravages of the Danes it was fortified by Alfred the Great, and continued to be the seat of royal authority for some time after it had, by the rise of the new city, sunk in importance. It still continues to exercise the elective franchise, which it has enjoyed since the reign of Edward III. A parliament was assembled to meet in Salisbury in the reign of Edward I, and also in 1338, when the earl of Mortimer broke in upon the assembly with an armed force. Richard Stafford, duke of Buckingham, was executed in the first year of Richard III in this city, which was frequently laid under contribution during the civil wars. The see of Sherborne was transferred to Old Sarum in the time of William the Conqueror, and the cathedral was begun by bishop Osmund, which was, however, demolished in the 14th century, and the ecclesiastical establishment removed to the new city, where a cathedral was begun to be erected in 1219. Of the fortress of Old Sarum nothing remains except a circular mound.

SATURNINUS, Publius (Hist.) a brave general, who, after enjoying the confidence of Valerian and Gallienus, was proclaimed emperor by his soldiers, and shortly after assassinated by them on account of the severity of his discipline in 262. Trebell. Poll. Trigint. Tyrann.

SATURNINUS, Sextus Julius, one of the most celebrated warriors in his time, who gained signal victories in the reigns of Aurelian, Tacitus, and Probus, by all of whom he was much beloved; but, having suffered himself, although against his will, to be proclaimed emperor by his soldiers in opposition to the latter emperor, he was besieged by him in Apamea, and killed about 282. Vopisc. in Saturn.; Euseb. in Chron.

SATURNINUS (Ecc.) a heretic, and native of Antioch, who was a disciple of Simon the magician, and spread the impieties of his master. S. Iren. l. 6; Euseb. Hist. Ecc. l. 4; S. Epiphan. Hær. 13, &c.

SATURNINUS, (Numis.) medals are extant of the last tyrant of this name bearing the inscription, IMP. C. SEX. JUL. SATURNINUS AUG. Some few medals have also been ascribed to the other tyrant of this name, but not with any degree of certainty. Mediob. Impp. Rom.; Band. Imp. Rom.

SATURNUS (Myth.) Κρόνος, Saturn, a son of Cœlus and Terra, who was dethroned by his son Jupiter, and, taking flight, he found refuge in Italy with king Janus, with whom he reigned conjointly. His reign there was so mild and beneficent that the poets called that the golden age. Hom. Il. l. 1, &c.; Hesiod. Theog. v. 138; Apollod. l. 1; Cic. de Nat. Deor.; Virg. Æn. l. 8; Ovid. Fast. l. 4; Paus. l. 8, &c.

SATURNUS (Numis.) this deity being considered as the god of time is commonly represented in the figure of an old man armed with a scythe; but in the annexed figure he has wings, to denote the swiftness of time, and shackles, to denote its slowness, or, more properly, the slow revolutionary movement of the planet Saturn. The scythe, sickle, or pruning-hook, which was assigned to him by the ancients, has been interpreted to denote the destroying power of time over sublunary things.

History of Savoy.

Savoy, in the Latin Sabaudia, was originally inhabited by the Allobroges, and other Celtic tribes, and on the conquest of the country by the Romans, formed a part of Gallia Narbonensis. In the reign of Honorius it was first over-run with the barbarous invaders of Europe, and at length became subject to princes of its own; among whom was Bertold, or Berold, who reigned in the 11th century, and is said to have been descended from Wittikind the Great, duke of Saxony. He and his successors bore the title of count, until the reign of Amadeus VIII, who procured its erection into a duchy from the emperor Sigismund. The following is a list of the princes of Savoy:

Counts.	Began to reign.	Counts.	Began to reign.
Berold	A. D. 1000	Boniface	A. D. 1253
Humbert I	1023	Peter	1263

Otho	1048	Thomas II
Amadeus II.	1060	Amadeus V.	1285
Humbert II	1095	Edward.	1323
Amadeus III.	1103	Aimon	1329
Humbert III.	1149	Amadeus VI	1343
Thomas I.	1188	Amadeus VII	1383
Amadeus IV	1233	Amadeus VIII.	A. D. 1391
Dukes.	Began to reign.	Dukes.	Began to reign.
Lewis	1434	Charles III	A. D. 1504
Amadeus IX.	1465	Emanuel Philibert	1553
Philibert I.	1472	Charles Emanuel	1580
Charles I.	1482	Victor Amadeus	1630
Charles II.	1489	Francis Hyacinth	1637
Philip II.	1496	Charles Emanuel II.	1638
Philibert II	1496	Victor Amadeus II.	1675

This last duke being crowned king of Sardinia in 1713, his successors reigned over Sardinia, Piedmont, Genoa, and Savoy, until the late revolutionary war, when the French seized Savoy, and annexed it to their territory; but on the fall of Bonaparte, the king of Sardinia recovered the possessions of his ancestors.

SAURIN, James (Biog.) a celebrated preacher among the Protestants of France, was born at Nismes in 1677, and died in 1730, leaving a number of Sermons and controversial works.

SAXO GRAMMATICUS (Biog.) a Danish historian in the 12th and 13th centuries, wrote 'Historia Danica,' fol. Paris, 1514, Bas. 1534, Franc. 1576, &c.

SAXONES (Geog.) a people of Germany, near the Chersonesus Cimbrica, who migrated to England, where they established the well-known Heptarchy. They also established themselves in Germany, and became formidable enemies to the French until the time of Charlemagne, who reduced them to subjection, and compelled their duke Wittikind to pay an annual tribute, and to be converted. Saxony, the country which they inhabited, and which was so called after them, remained in the family of Wittikind for some time, when it passed into that of Billing, by the gift of the emperor Otho I, to Herman Billing, one of the ministers of his court. The posterity of Herman enjoyed this territory under the title of duke for 146 years, when the male issue became extinct at the death of Berno, the great grandson of Magnus, eldest son of the first duke. By the marriage of one of the daughters of Magnus, to Henry the Black, Duke of Bavaria, Saxony passed, after some changes, into that family, who were of the Guelphic race; but Henry, surnamed the Lion, duke of Saxony, having fallen under the displeasure of the emperor Frederick, he was put to the ban of the empire, and deprived of all his states except Brunswick and Luneburg, which still continue to his descendants. That part of Saxony, which was afterwards called the Electorate of Saxony, was given to Bernhard, son of Albert the Bear, count of Ascania, descended from Wittikind, the first king or duke of the Saxons. He was the first elector, and was succeeded in the electorate by Albert I, Albert II, Rodolph I, Rodolph II, Wenceslaus, Rodolphus III, and Albert III. From this family descended the houses of Anhalt and Saxe-Lawemburg; but at the death of Albert without posterity, the electorate was transferred by the emperor Sigismund to Frederic the Warlike, margrave of Misnia, and, as is said, a descendant also from Wittikind the Great. Among the successors of this Frederic, was Frederic, surnamed the Wise, who was one of the first protectors of Luther. John, his brother and successor, who was also zealous for the establishment of Lutheranism. John Frederic, his son, surnamed the Magnanimous, being the chief of the Smalkaldic league, maintained a long warfare against the emperor Charles V, but was at length defeated, taken prisoner, and deprived of his states, which were given to his cousin Maurice, the ancestor of the present house of Saxony. During the late revolutionary war, the elector, by his submission to Bonaparte, procured the title of king, which was confirmed to him by the Congress of Vienna, but the kingdom of Saxony was limited to a part only of the country which bore that name, and extended in the north of Germany from the Weser on the W. to the frontiers of Poland on the E. including the three circles of Westphalia, Upper Saxony, and Lower Saxony. The present kingdom includes the circle of Meissen, Leipzig, Erzgeberge, Vogtland, part of Merseburg, and Upper Lusatia.

SCHWARTZ, Bertholet (Biog.) the reputed discoverer of gunpowder, and a native of Friburg in the 13th century, is said to have made this discovery in prison, while he was engaged in some chemical experiments.

SCIOPPIUS, Gaspar (Biog.) a German writer, who is said to have been one of the most arrogant and contentious critics of his time, was born about 1576, and died in 1649, leaving a number of works, which are enumerated by Niceron.

SCIPIO (Hist.) an illustrious family at Rome, which was a branch of the gens Cornelia.

SCIPIO, Lucius Cornelius, a consul with Cn. Fulvius Maximus, U. C. 456, A. C. 298, beat the Etrusci, and distinguished himself on several other occasions. Liv. l. 10.

SCIPIO, Cn. Cornelius, surnamed Asina, experienced a defeat in his first consulship; but in his second he took several places in Sardinia, and defeated and killed the Carthaginian general Hanno; in his last consulship he defeated a Carthaginian fleet of 200 sail, and took Panormum. Liv. l. 17; Zonar. Annal; Val. Max. l. 5.

SCIPIO, Cn. Cornelius, a son of the preceding, and a consul with Minutius Rufus, conquered the people of Istria.

SCIPIO, P. Cornelius, surnamed Africanus, son of the preceding, signalised his valour and piety at the age of 18, by saving the life of his father at the battle of Ticinus; and after giving the most extraordinary proofs of his valour and prudence, he eclipsed all his former exploits by the defeat of Annibal. [Vide Plate XIII] Cic. in Brut.; Liv. l. 2, 3, &c.; Eutropius, Aurelius Victor, &c.

SCIPIO, L. Cornelius, surnamed Asiaticus, and brother of Africanus, whom he accompanied in his expedition into Africa, was afterwards raised to the consulship U. C. 564, A. C. 190, when he defeated Antiochus, and killed upwards of 50,000 of the enemy, from whom he exacted entire submission. On his return he was thrown into prison on a charge of peculation; but his innocence being made evident, he obtained distinguished honours on account of his successes. Liv. l. 38; Aurelius Victor, de Vir Illust.

SCIPIO, surnamed Nasica, son of Cneius Scipio, and cousin to Africanus, triumphed over the Boii during his consulship; after which he was chosen to bring the statue of the goddess Cybele into Rome with great pomp and solemnity. He also distinguished himself by his zeal in behalf of the two Scipios, Africanus and Asiaticus. Cic. Orat. l. 3; Liv. l. 29; Val. Max. l. 1; Plin. l. 34, &c. [Vide Plate XIII]

SCIPIO, Nasica, grandson of the preceding, surnamed Serapion, distinguished himself by killing Tiberius Gracchus with his own hand. Cic. in Amic. c. 12; Val. Max. l. 5; Plin. l. 21.

SCIPIO, Q. Metellus Pius, grandson, or great grandson of the preceding, fought at the battle of Pharsalia on the side of Pompey, and afterwards killed himself rather than fall into the hands of the enemy.

SCIPIO, Publius Æmilianus, son of Paulus Æmilius, the conqueror of Perseus, was adopted by the son of Scipio Africanus, and was surnamed Africanus the Younger, on account of his exploits in Africa, which ended in the capture of Carthage and the destruction of the Carthaginian empire. This Scipio was found strangled in his bed, A. C. 128, and in the 56th year of his age, as was then generally supposed by Papirus Carbo, C. Gracchus, and Fulvius Flaccus, who were introduced into his bed-room by his wife Sempronia.

SCOPAS (Biog.) an architect and sculptor of Ephesus, who lived about 430 years A. C. was employed by Artemisia in raising the Mausoleum to her deceased husband. Cic. Div. l. 1; Vitruv. l. 9; Horat. l. 4, od. 8; Plin. l. 34.

SCOPOLI, John Anthony (Biog.) a naturalist, was born in 1725 at Cavalese, in the bishopric of Trent, and died in 1788, leaving 'Entomologia Carniolica,' 8vo. Vindob. 1763; 'Anni quinque Historico-Naturales,' 8vo.; 'Flora Carniolica,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1772; 'Fundamenta Botanicæ,' &c. 8vo. Pap. 1783; 'Deliciæ Floræ,' &c. fol. Ticin. 1786, &c.

SCOT, Reynolde (Biog.) an English gentleman, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1599, wrote 'The Discoverie of Witchcraft,' &c. in which he contends against the commonly received opinions of that day on the subject of witches. It was much read and frequently reprinted.

SCOTLAND (Geog.) the northern part of the island of Britain, which forms one division of the United Kingdom.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean, N. by the North Sea, E. by the German Ocean, S. by the Irish Sea, and S. E. by England, from which it is separated principally by the Tweed. It extends from N. to S. 270 m.; but its greatest breadth does not exceed 150, and is in some places not more than 30.

Division. It is naturally divided into two principal districts, named Highlands and Lowlands, so called from the hilly or flat nature of the country; but its civil division is into 33 counties, namely, Shetland and Orkney, Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, Cromarty, Inverness, Argyle, Bute, Nairn, Elgin, Banff, Aberdeen, Kincardine, Forfar, Perth, Fife, Kinross, Clackmannan, Stirling, Dumbarton, Linlithgow, Edinburgh, Hadington, Berwick, Renfrew, Ayr, Wigton, Lanark, Peebles, Selkirk, Roxburgh, Dumfries, and Kirkcudbright.

Principal Rivers. The Spey, the Don, the Tay, the Tweed, the Clyde, the Forth, the Dee, the Esk, the Annan, and the Nith. It also contains many lochs, or lakes.

History. Scotland, which was called by the Romans Caledonia, was first visited by the Roman general Agricola, who penetrated to the foot of the Grampian Hills. The history of the Scottish nation previous to that period, and for some centuries after, is involved in the obscurity incident to the early accounts of most other nations. They were in all probability governed by princes of their own, as the names of more than forty are given by historians from the time of Fergus I, who is said to have founded the kingdom about 334 years before the Christian æra, to that of Fergus II, the commencement of whose reign is dated about A. D. 400. The following is a list of his successors in chronological succession.

On the accession of James VI to the throne of England in 1603, the history of Scotland became materially blended with that of the latter country, and on the passing of the Act of Union in 1707, the two kingdoms became incorporated into one, under the name of the Kingdom of Great Britain.

Ecclesiastical History. Christianity is said to have been introduced into Scotland under the auspices of pope Victor, in the reign of Donald; but the faith of its followers was corrupted at an early period by the heresies of the Pelagians, and the peace of the Christian church, as also the welfare of the state, afterwards suffered there more from the violences and outrages of the reformers than in any other country of Christendom. The Presbyterian party succeeded, not only in overturning the hierarchy of the Romish church, but also in the extirpation of episcopacy, whereby they contributed in no small degree to the miseries of rebellion and misrule, with which the two countries were for a long time desolated.

Writers on Scotland.

Hector Bœtius, John le Maire, George Buchanan, John Lesley, Thomas Dempster, Bede, Gildas, Geoffry of Monmouth, William of Malmesbury, Hoveden, Henry of Huntingdon, Ingulph, Asserius, Matthew Paris, Walsingham, Matthew of Westminster, &c.; also among the moderns—Mackenzie, Hailes, Hume, Robertson, &c.

SEJANUS, Ælius (Hist.) a native of Vulsinum, in Tuscany, rose into the favour and confidence of Tiberius, which he so grossly abused that he was strangled by his order, A. D. 31. Tacit. Annal. &c.; Suet. in Tib.; Dio. l. 53.

SEJOUR (Biog.) vide Dionis.

SELDEN, John (Hist.) a scholar and a public benefactor, was born in 1584, and died in 1654, after having acted a part in public affairs by abetting the cause of rebellion, which is little consistent with his learning. His memory will, however, be held in lasting esteem for the noble benefaction which he made of his library, consisting of 8000 volumes to the Bodleian, where it is deposited in a place specifically set apart for it. His works, consisting of treatises on law, antiquity, and theology, were collected by bishop Wilkins, in 3 vols. fol. 1726. [Vide Plate XII]

SELENE (Hist.) the daughter of Physcon, king of Egypt, and successively the wife of her two brothers Ptolemy Lathurus and Gryphus, was afterwards married to Antiochus, king of Syria.

SELEUCIA (Geog.) the name of nine towns built by Seleucus Nicator in various parts of Asia Minor, the principal of which was the town of Cilicia and the town of Syria. Polyb. l. 5; Strab. l. 16; Plin. l. 5; Ptol. l. 5; Epiphan. Hæres.; Ammian. Marcellin. l. 14.

SELEUCIA (Numis.) the town of Cilicia of this name, is distinguished on medals by its situation near the river Calycadnus, as ΣΕΛΕΥΚΕΩΝ ΤΩΝ ΠΡΟΣ ΤΩ ΚΑΛΛΥΚΑΔΝΩ. This town struck medals as an independent state, and also in honour of Adrian, Antoninus Pius, Sept. Severus, Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, Geta, Alexander Severus, Balbinus, Gordianus Africanus, Gordianus Pius, Tranquillina, Phillip, sen., Trebonianus Gallus, Valerian, sen. and Gallienus. Seleucia, in Syria, sometimes called Seleucia Pieria, is inscribed on some medals ΣΕΛΕΥΚΕΩΝ ΠΙΕΡΙΑΣ, vel ΤΩΝΕΝ ΠΙΕΡΙΑΣ; on others ΣΕΛΕΥΚΕΩΝ ΤΗΣ ΙΕΩΝ ΙΕΡΑΣ ΑΣΥΛ. ΑΥΤΟΝΟΜΟΥ, &c. This town struck medals as an independent state, and also in honour of Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius Nero, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Nerva, Trajan, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, Commodus, Sept. Severus, Caracalla, Plautilla, Heliogabalus, Alexander Severus.

SELEUCIDÆ (Hist.) a surname given to the kings of Syria. [Vide Syria and Seleucus]

SELEUCUS I (Hist.) surnamed Nicator, one of the captains of Alexander, founded the kingdom of Syria, A. C. 312, and was murdered after a reign of 32 years. The effigies of this and the following princes are given as in the annexed figures. Joseph. Antiq. l. 12; Plin. l. 6; Justin. l. 13.

SELEUCUS II, surnamed Callinicus, succeeded his father Antiochus, A. C. 246, and died by a fall from his horse, after a reign of 20 years, which was disturbed by frequent wars. Strab. l. 19; Justin. l. 27; Appian. de Bell. Syr.

SELEUCUS III, surnamed Ceraunius, succeeded his father, Seleucus II, in the 128th Olympiad, A. C. 226, and died of poison administered to him by Nicanor and Apaturius, two of his officers, in the third year of his reign, when he was succeeded by Antiochus the Great. Polybius, Justin. Appian. &c.

SELEUCUS IV, surnamed Philopator, succeeded his father, Antiochus the Great, in the 147th Olympiad, A. C. 191, and was poisoned in the 12th year of his reign by Heliodorus, one of his generals, when his brother, Antiochus, got possession of the throne. Strab. l. 16; Justin. Appian. &c.

SELEUCUS V, son of Demetrius Nicator, succeeded his father in the 164th Olympiad, 124 A. C. but was murdered by his mother Cleopatra, after the reign of a year, when his brother, Antiochus Gryphus, succeeded him.

SELEUCUS VI, succeeded his father, Antiochus Gryphus, in the 170th Olympiad, A. C. 97; but being driven from his kingdom by his cousin, Antiochus Eusebes, he retired to Mopsuesta, in Cilicia, where he was burnt to death by the inhabitants. Appian, Eusebius, &c.

SELIM (Hist.) the name of two emperors of the Turks.

SELIM I, the second son of Bajazet II, ascended the throne in 1512 by murdering his father and his elder brother Achmet, and died in 1520.

SELIM II, grandson of Selim I, succeeded his father Solyman II in 1566, and died in 1574.

SELJUKS (Hist.) Seljûkians, or Selgiucides, the name of a powerful dynasty, which derive their name from Seljûk, their founder, who was, according to most accounts, descended in the 34th degree from Afrasiab, the first king of Turkestân. This dynasty was divided into three branches; the first and principal was that of Irak, which ended with Togrol in the year of the Hegira 590, A. D. 1200; the second that of Kerman, which ended at the death of Mohammed Shah in the year of the Hegira 583; and the third that of Rum, because they reigned over a part of the Roman empire in the East. This dynasty ended, according to some accounts, about the year of the Hegira 700, and from its ruins sprung the present Ottoman empire.

SELKIRK, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Hamilton [vide Hamilton]; the family name of which is Douglas. The titles, arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Titles. Douglas, earl of Selkirk, lord Daer and Shortcleugh.

SELKIRK, Alexander (Biog.) a sailor, whose adventures gave birth to the popular tale of Robinson Crusoe, was born at Largo, in Fifeshire, about 1676, became in 1703 sailing-master of a privateer called the Cinque-Ports-Galley; but having a quarrel with the captain, the latter put him on shore at the island of Juan Fernandez, from which, after remaining six years, he was taken off by captain Rogers, and brought to England.

SELSEY, Lord (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Peachy [vide Peachy]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Azure, a lion rampant, double queued ermine, on a canton or, a mullet pierced gules.

Crest. On a wreath, a demi-lion, as in the arms, holding in his dexter-paw a sword erect argent, pommeled and hilted or.

Supporters. — — —

Motto. "Memor et fidelis."

SEMELE (Myth.) Σεμέλη, a daughter of Cadmus by Hermione, the daughter of Mars and Venus, was the mother of Bacchus by Jupiter; but being consumed with fire before the birth of her son, he was taken from the flames by Mercury, and nourished in the thigh of his father. [Vide Bacchus]

SEMIRAMIS (Myth.) Σεμίραμις, a celebrated queen of Assyria, daughter of the goddess Derceto by a young Assyrian. She is supposed to have lived about 1965 years before the Christian æra, and to have died in the 62d year of her age, and the 25th of her reign, when she is said to have been deified. Her reign was distinguished by wisdom, vigour, and military success. Herodot. l. 1; Apollod. l. 2; Diod. l. 2; Strab. l. 5; Mel. l. 1; Val. Max. l. 9; Paterc. l. 1; Ovid. Amor. l. 1, el. 5, &c.; Propert. l. 3, el. 11, &c.

SEMPLE (Her.) or Sempill, a Scotch family which is ennobled in the person of sir John Semhill, who was created a peer by the title of lord Semple. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

SEMPRONIA, gens (Hist.) a patrician family of Rome, which afterwards mingled with the plebeians. It is divided into the branches of the Gracchi, Scipios, and Atratini, &c.

SENA (Geog.) a town of Etruria, called by Pliny Colonia Seniensis, now Sienna. It also bore the name of Sena Julia, and is therefore supposed to have been a colony sent by Augustus. Plin. l. 3; Tac. l. 4.

SENAC, John (Biog.) a French physician, and native of Gascony, was born in 1693, and died in 1770, leaving, among his works, 'Traité de la Structure du Cœur et de ses Maladies,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'Traité des Causes, des Accidens, et de la Cure de la Peste.'

SENAC, Gabriel de Meilhan, son of the preceding, who died in 1803; wrote 'Memoires d'Anne de Gonzague,' 'Considerations sur les Richesses et le Luxe,' &c.

SENAULT, John Francis (Biog.) a divine of the Romish church, was born at Paris in 1601, and died in 1672, leaving, among other works, 'L'Usage des Passions,' 'L'Homme Chretien,' &c.

SENECA, L. Annæus (Hist.) a native of Corduba, in Spain, and son of M. Annæus Seneca mentioned under Biography, was born a year before the Christian æra; and, after having distinguished himself at Rome in the character of a pleader, was chosen as the preceptor, and subsequently the minister of Nero, but being suspected by the latter of having had a part in the conspiracy of Piso, he was ordered to destroy himself, which he attempted in vain to effect by opening his veins, and was therefore suffocated by the steam of a hot-bath in the 56th year of his age. [Vide Plate XXI] He was the author of several works, moral and philosophical; the best editions of which are those of Antwerp, fol. 1615, and of Gronovius, 3 vols. Amst. 1672. There are also tragedies extant which bear his name, but whether they belong to this Seneca or another is doubtful; the best editions of these are that of Gronovius, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1682, and the Delphin.

SENECA, M. Annæus (Biog.) father of the philosopher and statesman above-mentioned, was born at Corduba about 61 years before the Christian æra, and marrying Helvia, an illustrious Spanish lady, he had by her three sons; namely, Seneca, the philosopher; Annæus Novatus; and Annæus Mela, father of the poet Lucan. He came to Rome in the reign of Augustus, when he wrote his Declamations, in 10 books, of which five only remain. The works of this Seneca were first printed, with those of his son, in folio, Neapol. 1475; but the edition of Lipsius, fol. Antw. 1605, 1614, 1615, and frequently reprinted since, is the most esteemed.

SENNERTUS, Daniel (Biog.) a physician, and native of Breslaw, was born in 1572, and died in 1637, leaving a number of works which have been frequently reprinted. The last edition is that of Lyons, in 6 vols. fol. 1676.

SENONES (Geog.) a nation of Gallia Transalpina, who invaded Italy under Brennus; but, after uniting with the Umbri, Latins, and Etrurians, they were totally subdued by the Romans. The capital of this country was called Sennes, now Sens. Liv. l. 5; Sil. Ital. l. 8.

SENS (Geog.) a considerable town of Champagne, a former province of France, and of the modern department of the Yonne, situated at the confluence of the Yonne and the Vanne, 25 miles N. Auxerre, and 60 S. E. Paris. Lon. 3° 17′ E. lat. 48° 12′ N. This town was known to the Romans by the name of Senones, or Agendicum.

SEPTALIUS (Biog.) or Settala, Louis, an Italian physician, was born in 1552 at Milan, and died in 1633, leaving, among his works, 'Animadversionum et Cautionum Medicarum Libri duo,' &c.; 'De Peste, &c. Libri V;' 'De Margaritis Judicium,' &c.

SEPULVEDA, John Genes de (Biog.) a Spanish writer, was born at Cordova in 1491, and died in 1572, leaving, among his works, 'De Vita et Rebus Gestis Ægidii Cardinalis Albornotii,' &c. fol. Rom. 1521; 'De Justis Belli Causis contra Indos suscepti,' &c. in which he is charged with defending the cruelties exercised against the Indians; 'De Rebus Gestis Caroli V Imperatoris;' besides other works, which were all printed in 4 vols. 4to. at Madrid in 1780.

SEQUESTER, Vibius (Biog.) vide Vibius.

SERAPION, John (Biog.) an Arabian physician in the 10th century, who is supposed to have been the first writer on physic in the Arabian language. He was the author of a work which is known by its translation into Latin by the title of 'Practica Medicinæ,' and again by Torinus under that of 'Therapeutica Methodus.' Another Serapion is spoken of as the supposed author of a work entitled 'De Medicamentis tam Simplicibus quam Compositis.

SERAPIS (Myth.) an Ægyptian deity, supposed to be the same as Osiris.

SERARIUS, Nicholas (Biog.) a Jesuit, was born in 1555 at Ramberviller, in Lorrain, and died in 1610, leaving commentaries and other theological works, which were published collectively in 16 vols. fol.

SERASSI, Peter Anthony (Biog.) an Italian biographer, was born in 1721 at Bergamo, and died in 1790, leaving, among other works, a Life of Tasso, 2 vols. 4to. 1785.

SERENUS, Sammonicus (Biog.) a physician and poet in the reigns of Severus and Caracalla, was the author of a poem on medicine still extant; the last edition of which is that of Amsterdam, 8vo. 1706.

SERENUS, Aulus, a Latin poet, of whose writings only 16 verses are preserved. Nonn. Marcellin.; Martian. Capell.

SERGARDI, Louis (Biog.) a satirist of Sienna, who died in 1727, was the author of several Latin Satires, which were published under the name of 'Quintus Sectarius,' 8vo. Colon. 1698; 2 vols. 8vo. by Elzevir, 1700; and 4 vols. 8vo. Lucc. 1783.

SERGIA, gens (Hist.) a patrician family at Rome that branched out into the several families of the Fidenates, Catilinæ, Ocellæ, Planci, &c.

SERGIUS, Galba (Hist.) vide Galba.

SERGIUS (Ecc.) the name of some popes and prelates.

SERGIUS I, a native of Palermo, in Sicily, but a Syrian by extraction, was elected in 687 at the death of Conon, after the termination of the schism occasioned by one Theodore, a priest, and Pascal, an archdeacon. Sergius governed the church with great wisdom until 701, when he died, and had John VI for a successor.

SERGIUS II, a Roman, was elected after Gregory IV in 844, and died in 847, when Leo IV succeeded.

SERGIUS III, a pope of an abandoned character, procured by intrigues and violence his election to the papal-chair in 898, and died, or was expelled, in 910 universally hated for his vices. His natural son, by his mistress Marozia, was afterwards pope by the name of John XI; but Anastasius III was his immediate successor.

SERGIUS IV, bishop of Alba, was elected after John XIX in 1009, and governed the church until 1012, when Benedict VIII succeeded.

SERGIUS, the name of two patriarchs of Constantinople.

SERGIUS I, a Syrian by birth, succeeded Thomas in 610, and died in 639, after having disturbed the peace of the Christian church by upholding the doctrines of the Monothelites.

SERGIUS II, succeeded Sisinnius in 999, and died in 1019, after having displayed great hostility to the Romish church.

SERINGAPATAM (Geog.) a city of Hindoostan, capital of the district of Mysore, 10 miles N. Mysore, 290 W. by S. Madras. This town is strongly fortified; nevertheless lord Cornwallis compelled Tippoo Saib to make a treaty, whereby he relinquished half his dominions, and paid the sum of three millions and a half sterling to the conquerors. On the renewal of the war in 1799, the town was taken after Tippoo Saib and 8000 of his followers had been killed.

SERIPHUS (Geog.) now Serphanto, an island in the Ægean Sea, whither the Romans commonly sent their criminals into banishment. Apollod. l. 1; Strab. l. 20; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 27, &c.

SERPHANTO (Geog.) the ancient Seriphus, an island of European Turkey, in the Archipelago, between the island of Paros and the Gulf of Engia.

SERRANUS, Joannes (Biog.) or John de Serres, a French Protestant, who died in 1598, wrote 'Memoires de la troisième Guerre Civile,' &c.; 'Inventaire general de l'Histoire de France,' &c.; 'Recueil des Choses memorables avenues en France sous Henri II,' &c.; 'De Fide Catholica,' &c.

SERTORIUS, Quintus (Hist.) a Roman general, who, after distinguishing himself under Marius, was proscribed by Sylla, and obliged to fly for safety into Spain, where he established his authority as a sovereign, but was soon after assassinated by his officers at a feast, about 73 years before the Christian æra. Val. Max. l. 1; Paterc. l. 2; Plin. l. 8; Plut. in Vit.; Aul. Gell. l. 15; Flor. l. 3; Eutropius, &c.

SERVETUS, Michael (Ecc.) an anti-trinitarian and a physician of Villanueva, in Arragon, or Tudela, in Navarre, was born in 1511, and condemned to be burnt in 1553 at Geneva by those who were not less heretical than himself. John Calvin was at that time at the head of those who thus arrogantly sat in judgment on one for doing that of which they themselves were equally guilty. His theological works, which are now little known or read, contain the sophistry and hackneyed cavils which have characterized the productions of this sect in all ages; but as a physician he is said to have given the first hints respecting the circulation of the blood.

SERVIA (Geog.) an extensive province of European Turkey, situated between the Save and the Danube on the north, the Morava on the east, and the Drina on the west. This country, answering to the Mæsia Superior of the Romans, derived its name from the Servii, a Scythian tribe, who made a settlement there about 630, by permission of the emperor Heraclius, and raised an independent kingdom, the princes of which were styled despots. Lazar II, the last of these mentioned in history, died about 1458, after which Servia fell under the dominion of the Turks, and formed a part of Beglierbeglie.

SERVILIA (Hist.) a sister of Cato of Utica, who was exceedingly attached to Cæsar, notwithstanding the animosity which subsisted between him and her brother.

SERVILIA, gens, a family at Rome of patrician and Alban extraction, descended from king Tullius, was afterwards mingled with the plebeians, and was branched into the families of the Ahalæ, Cascæ, Gemini. [Vide Servilius]

SERVILIA, gens (Numis.) the coins or medals of this family are inscribed with the names of the Ahalæ, Cæpiones, Cascæ, Gemini, Isaurici, Rulli, and Vatiæ; and some of them bear, as in the annexed figure, the effigy of Servilius Ahala, the dictator, mentioned under History.

SERVILIUS AHALA (Hist.) a Master of the Horse to the dictator Cincinnatus, slew Mælius the demagogue in the midst of the people, whose protection was claimed by the latter. Ahala was banished for this murder, but, the sentence being afterwards repealed, he was raised to the dictatorship.

SERVILIUS, Publius, a proconsul of Asia in the age of Mithridates, who received the surname of Isauricus in consequence of his victories in Isauria, for which he gained a triumph.

SERVIUS TULLIUS (Hist.) the sixth king of Rome, was son of Ocrisia, a slave, descended from a good family of Corniculum by Tullius, a man who had fallen in defence of his country while fighting against the Romans. Servius, being educated in the family of Tarquin, rose by his merit to such distinction that the latter gave him his daughter in marriage, and made him successor to his throne; but, after reigning 44 years with great wisdom, he was assassinated by his son-in-law, Tarquin the Proud, U. C. 223, A. C. 533.

Servius, Sulpitius Rufus, an orator in the age of Cicero and Hortensius, who was sent on an embassy to M. Antony, but died before his return. A statue was raised in honour of him in the Campus Martius at the recommendation of Cicero. Cic. in Brut. &c.

Servius, Maurus Honoratus (Biog.) a grammarian and critic in the fifth century, is chiefly known by his commentaries on Virgil, which were first published by Valdarfer in 1471, and reprinted several times since; particularly by Robert Stephens in an edition of Virgil, fol. Paris, 1532, and by Fulvius Ursinus, 8vo. 1569; but the edition of Mascivius in 4to. 1717, is reckoned among the best. There is also extant a piece of Servius's entitled 'Centimetrum,' which is preserved in the collections of ancient grammarians; this was first printed in 1476.

SESOSTRIS (Hist.) Σέσωτρις, a celebrated king of Egypt before the Trojan war, is said to have died after a reign of 44 years, during which he made many conquests, built many cities, dug many canals, and performed many public acts of great benefit to his country. Herodot. l. 2, c. 102; Diodor. l. 1; Strab. l. 16; Lucan. l. 10; Plin. l. 33.

SESSITES (Geog.) now Sessia, a river of Cisalpine Gaul, falling into the Po. Plin. l. 3, c. 16.

SESTOS (Geog.) or Sestus, a town of Thrace, on the shores of the Hellespont, directly opposite to Abydos. [Vide Abydos]

SETHON (Hist.) Σεθῶν, a priest of Vulcan, who made himself king of Egypt after Anysis. Herod. l. 2, c. 14.

SETTLE, Elkanah (Biog.) a poetaster, who, though now forgotten, made some noise in his day by the violence and number of his writings, with which he successively supported the contending parties of the time. He died in 1723, a pensioner in the Charter-House.

SEVERA, Julia Aquilia (Hist.) vide Aquilia.

Severa, Valeria, the wife of Valerian and mother of Gratian, who secured the succession to her son by her dexterous management.

SEVERINA, Ulpia (Numis.) is known to have been the wife of the emperor Aurelianus, not from history, but from medals bearing her effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscriptions—SEVERINA P. F. AUG.—ULPIA SEVERINA; and on the reverse of some, IMP. AURELIANUS AUG.

SEVERINUS, Marcus Aurelius (Biog.) a physician of Tarsia, in Calabria, was born in 1580, and died in 1656, leaving some pieces, which were published under the title of 'Antiperipatias,' &c. 1661; an abridgment of his writings on surgery was published under the title of 'Synopseos Chirurgicæ Libri VI,' 1664.

SEVERUS, L. Septimius (Hist.) a Roman emperor, descended from a noble family of Leptis, in Africa, gradually exercised all the offices of the state, and, after the murder of Pertinax, he obtained the empire by the successive defeat and destruction of his rivals, Didius, Julianus, Pescenninus, Niger, and Albinus, and died at York in the 66th year of his age, A. D. 211, after a reign of upwards of 17 years. Spartian. in Vit.; Aurelius Victor, &c.

Severus, Alexander Marcus Aurelius, a native of Phœnicia, succeeded to the empire at the death of Heliogabalus, by whom he was adopted, and was murdered in his tent, in the midst of his camp, after a reign of 13 years, A. D. 235. Herodian, Spartianus, Aurelius Victor, Zosimus, &c.

Severus, Libius, was proclaimed emperor of the west at Ravenna, after the death of Majorianus A. D. 461, and was soon after poisoned. Marcellin. et Cassiodor. in Chron.

Severus (Numis.) medals are extant bearing the effigies of the three emperors above-mentioned, as in the subjoined figures.

The inscriptions for Septimius Severus are, C. L. SEPTI. SEVERUS P. F. AUG.—SEVERUS PIUS AUG.—DIVUS SEVERUS.—L. SEPT. SEVERUS PERT. AUG.—IMP. L. SEP. SEVERUS AUG.—C. L. SEPTI. SEVERUS; to which are added the ordinary titles of office, as, TR. P. I—XIX. COS. I—III. IMP. I—XIII; also the particular titles of PIUS; PARTHICUS MAXIMUS; BRITTANNICUS. The inscriptions on those of Alexander Severus are, ALEXANDER.—AU. S. ALEXAND. AUG.—M. AU. S. ALEXAND.—IMP. CAES. M. AUR. SEV. ALEXANDER AUG.—DIVO ALEXANDRO, &c.; to these were added sometimes, as his peculiar titles, PIUS; and FELIX; also the ordinary titles of office, TR. P. I—XIII.; COS. I—III. &c. The inscriptions on the medals of Libius Severus are, LIB. SEVERUS AUG.—D. N. SEVERUS P. F. AUG. &c. On the reverse of all the inscriptions are similar to those given under the earlier emperors, Augustus and Nero, &c. The medals of Septimius Severus are more numerous than those of the other two.

Severus, Lucius Cornelius (Biog.) a Latin poet in the age of Augustus, was the author of an heroic poem on Ætna, and some other pieces, of which only 33 verses are preserved besides his Ætna, which was published with notes, &c. by Le Clerc, 12mo. Amst. 1703. Quintil. l. 10.

Severus, vide Sulpitius.

SEVIGNE, Mary de Rabutin (Biog.) daughter of Celse Benigne de Rabutin, was born in 1626, married in 1644 to the marquis de Sevigné, and died in 1696, leaving a collection of Letters, which have been universally admired.

SEVILLE (Geog.) a city in the south-west of Spain, capital of Andalusia, situated on the Guadalquiver, 254 m. S. by W. Madrid, 45 N. Cadiz. Lon. 5° 38′ W., lat. 37° 24′ N.

History of Seville.

Seville, the Hispalis of the Romans, is a place of such antiquity that the date of its foundation is not known. It was taken by the Moors in 711, who kept it for 634 years, until the reign of Ferdinand III, king of Leon and Castile, by whom it was taken after a six months' siege. On the invasion of Spain by Buonaparte in 1808 Seville received the junta of Madrid, and did not surrender until 1810. It was again evacuated in 1812 in consequence of their defeat at Salamanca. In 1729 a treaty was concluded here between Spain, England, France, and Holland; in 1755 the city felt the shock of the earthquake which desolated Lisbon; and in 1800 the pestilential fever, which caused such mortality at Cadiz, carried off nearly a fourth of its inhabitants, the greater part of which were Gitanos, or gypsies, inhabiting the suburb of Triana. Seville was the birthplace of the emperors Trajan, Adrian, and Theodosius; also of Balbus the historian, of Augustus Columella, the writer on agriculture, St. Isidore, the bishop of Seville, Cervantes, Murillo, and the humane Las Casas. It contains several objects of interest to the antiquary, among which is a Roman aqueduct, which supplies the city with water from a distance of eight miles, and a large house, formerly the residence of a Moorish chief, which is in complete preservation.

Ecclesiastical History of Seville.

Seville is the see of an archbishop, and the metropolitan church is the largest in all Spain. Two councils were held here, namely, in 590 and 619.

SEVIN, Francis (Biog.) a French antiquary, and native of Sens, who died in 1741, wrote 'Une Dissertation sur Menes ou Mercure,' &c., and several letters from Constantinople, whither he had been sent to collect ancient MSS. These letters, and other papers of his on antiquarian subjects, were inserted in the 'Memoires' of the Academy.

SEWARD, William (Biog.) a biographer, was born in London in 1647, educated at Oxford, and died in 1799, leaving 'Anecdotes of some Distinguished Persons,' &c. 2 vols.; to which he added three more under the title of 'Biographiana.'

Seward, Anna, a modern poetess and writer, was born in 1747, and died in 1809; her 'Letters,' were published after her death, and her 'Poems,' &c. in 3 vols. 8vo.

SEWELL, William (Biog.) the historian of the Quakers, was born about 1650 at Amsterdam, and died in 1725. His 'History of the Quakers,' was written first in Low Dutch, and afterwards translated by himself into English; besides which he compiled 'An English and Dutch Dictionary,' and a 'Grammar,' &c.

Sewell, George, a poet and physician, was born at Windsor, educated at Eton and Cambridge, and died in 1726, leaving 'The Life of John Philips;' 'The Vindication of the English Stage,' &c.; 'Sir Walter Raleigh,' a tragedy, &c.

SEXTUS, Empiricus (Biog.) a Pyrrhonian or sceptical philosopher, who flourished about the reign of Commodus, was the author of several works, of which his 'Institutes of Pyrrhonism,' and his work against the 'Mathematici' are extant. A version of the former was made and printed by Henry Stephens in 8vo. 1592, and one of the latter by Hervetus was printed by Plantin as early as 1562. They have since been printed more than once with the Greek; but the edition of Fabricius, fol. Lips. 1718, is reckoned the best.

SEYMOUR, Sir John (Hist.) a valiant knight of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the commanders of the forces that vanquished the lord Audley and the Cornish rebels at Blackheath, in Kent, in 1497, and, after distinguishing himself on other occasions in the reign of Henry VII and VIII, he died in 1536, leaving among his daughters, lady Jane Seymour, who was raised to the throne by marrying the latter king.

Seymour, Lady Jane, eldest daughter of the preceding, became maid of honour to Anne of Boleyn, and having in that capacity attracted the notice of Henry VIII, she was married to him the day after the execution of the queen, and died in 1537, two days after the birth of her son, Edward VI.

Seymour, Edward, eldest son of sir John above-mentioned. [Vide Somerset]

Seymour, Thomas, Lord Dudley, third brother of the preceding, and Lord High Admiral of England, was nominated by Henry VIII one of the twelve assistants to the executors of his will during the minority of Edward VI, and, after having endeavoured for some time, by his intrigues and cabals, to get the reigns of government into his own hands, and to seize the person of the king, Edward VI, his nephew, he was at length committed to the Tower on a charge of high treason, and beheaded on Tower-Hill in 1548. This nobleman, whose ambition was boundless, aspired to the hand of the princess, afterwards queen Elizabeth, and, failing in this, he married Catherine Parr, the widow of Henry VIII. [Vide Plate XV]

Seymour, Sir Edward, Bart., a descendant from the eldest son of the first duke of Somerset, was faithful to his sovereign during the rebellion, and had his house of Bury Castle, in Devonshire, plundered and burnt, besides enduring many other hardships on account of his loyalty.

Seymour, Sir Henry, Knt., younger brother of the preceding, lived and died in the service and confidence of Charles I and II during their troubles. He was the bearer of the last message which this ill-fated monarch sent to his son previous to his murder.

Seymour, Sir Edward, Bart., eldest son of the sir Edward above-mentioned, made a considerable figure both at court and in the House of Commons in four several reigns. In 1667 he promoted the impeachment of lord Clarendon; in 1672 he was chosen Speaker of the Long Parliament, as it was called, and in the same year was sworn of the Privy Council. Having taken part in the revolution he was sworn of the Privy Council to king William, in which capacity he also served queen Anne, and died in 1707.

Seymour, Arabella, vide Stuart.

Seymour (Her.) a knightly family, which rose to high distinction in the reign of Henry VIII by the marriage of lady Jane Seymour above-mentioned. Her second brother, Edward, was created in 1536 viscount Beauchamp; in 1537 earl of Hertford; in 1546 baron Seymour and duke of Somerset; which titles being forfeited by the attainder of the first duke, Edward Seymour, his son, was created, in the first year of queen Elizabeth's reign, earl of Hertford and baron Beauchamp; and his grandson, sir William Seymour, was advanced in 1640 to the dignity of marquis of Hertford, and in 1660 was restored to the title of duke of Somerset. His younger brother, sir Francis Seymour, knight, was created in 16 Car. I. lord Seymour of Troubridge, which title became extinct at the death of Algernon, seventh duke of Somerset, when the titles of duke of Somerset and baron Seymour, devolved on sir Edward Seymour, bart., lineally descended from Edward, first duke of Somerset. [Vide Somerset] Another branch of the same family enjoys the titles of marquis and earl of Hertford, &c. [Vide Hertford]

Seymour, Lord, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the duke of Somerset.

Seymour, another family of this name, enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1809 on captain sir Michael Seymour for his distinguished naval services. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Azure, a pair of wings conjoined in pale, surmounted of a naval crown or, on a canton argent, an anchor sable.

Crest. On a naval crown or, two brands in saltire, inflamed at the ends proper, thereon an eagle rising also proper, looking at a sun or.

Seymour (Biog.) Anne, Margaret, and Jane, the three daughters of Edward, the first duke of Somerset, were distinguished for their poetical talents, which they displayed in some Latin distichs on the death of Margaret de Valois, queen of France, which were translated into French, Greek, and Italian, and printed in 8vo. Paris, 1551. The eldest, Anne, married the earl of Warwick, and afterwards sir Edward Hunter. Margaret and Jane died single; the latter as maid of honour to queen Elizabeth.

SFONDRATI, Francis (Hist.) a cardinal and statesman, was born in 1494 at Cremona, and died in 1550, leaving a poem on the Rape of Helen. His son became pope Gregory XIV.

SFORZA (Hist.) the name of an Italian family which has made some figure in history.

Sforza, James, surnamed the Great, to whom this family is indebted for its distinction, was born in 1369, and, after signalising his courage on many occasions, particularly in favour of Joan II, queen of Naples, was made constable of the kingdom, and drowned in the river Pescara in 1424 as he was pursuing the enemy.

Sforza, Francis, natural son of the preceding, and duke of Milan, distinguished himself no less as a statesman than as a warrior, and procured for himself, by the power of his arms, the title of duke of Milan, and the sovereignty of Genoa; after which he died in 1466.

Sforza, Galeas Maria, succeeded his father as duke of Milan, but his debaucheries and ferocious conduct caused him to be assassinated in a revolt of his people in 1476. His son, John Galeas Maria, was poisoned by his uncle, Lewis Maria, who, being seized by Louis de Tremouille, the general of Louis XII, was carried to France, where he died in prison in 1510. Maximilian Sforza, surnamed Hercules, and his brother Francis, obtained the dukedom of Milan for a short time, but were obliged to yield their rights to Francis I. The latter, however, was reinstated by the emperor Charles V, but died in 1535, leaving no issue.

Sforza, Catherine, natural daughter of Galeas Maria abovementioned, married Riaris, prince of Forli, and, on his being assassinated some time after, she fled to Rimini, which she defended with such determined bravery that she recovered her rights. She afterwards married John de Medicis; and again in 1500 defended Forli against Valentinois, natural son of Alexander VI, when she was less successful, being taken prisoner, and confined in the castle of St. Angelo. Although she quickly recovered her liberty, yet she was never restored to her dominions, but died shortly after.

SHADWELL, Thomas (Biog.) a dramatic poet, descended from a good family in the county of Stafford, was born at Stanton-Hall, in Norfolk, a seat of his father's, in 1646, and died in 1692, leaving a number of pieces, which were printed several times, particularly in 4 vols. 12mo. 1720.

SHAFTESBURY, Anthony Ashley (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1621, and, after taking a fluctuating and dubious part in the contest which ensued, was finally very zealous in bringing about the restoration, at which period he was sworn one of his majesty's Privy Council. In 1661 he was made Chancellor and Under-Treasurer of the Exchequer; in 1672 was raised to the post of Lord High Chancellor of England, which he resigned in 1673, and died in 1683 in Holland, whither he had retired to avoid the attacks of his political adversaries, who favoured the views of king James II. [Vide Plate IX]

Shaftesbury, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Cooper, [vide Cooper] which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Ashley Cooper, earl of Shaftesbury, baron Ashley, of Winborne, St. Giles's, baron Cooper, of Paulett, and baronet.

Arms. Argent, three bulls passant sable, armed and unguled or.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a bull passant sable, gorged with a mural coronet and armed or.

Supporters. On the dexter side a bull sable, gorged with a ducal coronet or; on the sinister a talbot azure, gorged as the dexter.

Motto. "Live, serve."

Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley (Biog.) grandson of the Anthony Ashley above-mentioned, was born in 1671, and died in 1713, leaving among his works his 'Characteristics,' by which he is principally known.

SHAKESPEAR, William (Biog.) the dramatist, was born at Stratford-upon-Avon on the 23d of April, 1564, and died on his birthday in 1616. His works were first published seven years after his death, but so little did they meet the public taste, that not more than four editions were printed in the 17th century. Among the numberless editions which have since followed, that published by Dr. Johnson, in conjunction with Mr. Steevens, which has been frequently reprinted, the fifth time in 1803, in 21 volumes 8vo., and that of Mr. Malone are reckoned the best. Mr. Malone's was first published in 10 vols. crown octavo, in 1790. His original notes and improvements are, however, incorporated in the editions of 1793 and 1803 by Mr. Steevens.

SHANNON, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Boyle, [vide Boyle] which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Boyle, earl of Shannon, viscount Boyle, of Bandon, and baron of Castlemartyr, in the kingdom of Ireland; and baron of Carleton, co. York.

Arms, &c. Vide Cork and Orrery.

Motto. "Spectemur agendo."

SHARP, James (Ecc.) archbishop of St. Andrew's, and the third prelate of that see, who fell a sacrifice to popular fury, was born of a good family in Banffshire in 1618, raised to the see of St. Andrew's at the restoration, and on the re-establishment of episcopacy in Scotland, and was murdered by some assassins of the Presbyterian party in 1679.

Sharp, John, an English prelate, descended from a family of some antiquity in 1644, educated at Cambridge, suspended from his office as archdeacon of Norwich during the reign of James, for the boldness of his discourses against popery, restored at the revolution, and raised to the see of York in 1691, was sworn of the Privy Council on the accession of queen Anne, and died in 1713. His Sermons have been collected and published in 7 vols. 8vo.

Sharp, Abraham (Biog.) a mathematician, was born about 1651 at Little Horton, in Yorkshire, and died in 1742, leaving 'Geometry Improved,' 4to. 1717.

Sharp, Thomas, son of John Sharp, archbishop of York, above-mentioned, was born about 1693, and died in 1729, leaving 'The Rubric in the Common Prayer and Canons of the Church considered;' 'Discourses on the Antiquity of the Hebrew Tongue,' &c.

Sharp, Granville, son of John Sharp, archbishop of York, above-mentioned, was born in 1734, and educated for the bar, which he relinquished for a life of study, and died in 1813. He was the institutor of the 'Society for the Abolition of the Slave Trade,' which he most zealously promoted by his writings and every other means in his power. He wrote 'A Representation of the Injustice and Dangerous Tendency of Tolerating Slavery,' &c.; 'Remarks on the Opinions of some of the most celebrated Writers on Crown Law respecting the due distinction between Manslaughter and Murder,' &c.; 'Remarks on the Uses of the Definitive Article in the Greek of the New Testament,' &c. 8vo. Durham, 1798.

Sharp, Samuel, a surgeon and pupil of Chesselden, who died in 1778, was the author of 'A Treatise on the Operations of Surgery,' and 'A Critical Enquiry into the Present State of Surgery.'

Sharp, William, an engraver, was born in 1749, and died in 1824, after having attained to a high degree of eminence in his art.

SHARPE, Gregory (Biog.) an English divine, and a native of Yorkshire, was born in 1713, and died in 1771, leaving 'Review of the Controversy on the Demoniacs;' 'Dissertations on the Origin of Languages,' &c.

SHARROCH, Robert (Biog.) an English divine, was born at Adstock, in Buckinghamshire, and died in 1684, leaving among his works, 'On the Propagating and Improvement of Vegetables,' 8vo.; 'De Officiis secundum Humanæ Rationis Dictata,' &c.; 'Judicia de Variis Incontinentiæ Speciebus,' &c.

SHAW (Her.) the name of three families which enjoy the baronetcy.

Shaw, the first family, descended from Hugo de Shaw, co. Chester, received this honour in 1660, in the person of sir

John Shaw, who was so created for the service which he rendered to Charles II during his exile. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

SHEFFIELD (Geog.) a manufacturing town of England, in the West Riding of York, situated on an eminence at the confluence of the Sheaf and Don, 36 m. S. Leeds, 162 N. N.W. London. Lon. 1° 29′ W. lat. 53° 22′ N. The origin of this town is unknown, but its name is doubtless derived from its vicinity to the river Sheaf. It was once celebrated for its castle, a strong fortress, supposed to have been built in the reign of Henry III, which was demolished in the time of the rebellion, after having maintained a long siege for the king.

SHELBURNE, William, Earl of (Hist.) Marquis of Lansdowne, a statesman, of the family of Petty, better known in History by the title of lord Shelburne, was born in 1737, sworn of the Privy Council to George III in 1763, and declared in the same year first Lord Commissioner of Trade and the Plantations, but resigning these latter posts shortly after, he was appointed in 1766 Principal Secretary of State for the Southern Department, which he resigned on the retirement of lord Chatham. On the accession of the marquis of Rockingham to the premiership, he was appointed Secretary of State for the Foreign Department, but resigned this post in 1783, on the coalition of North and Fox, and died in 1805, never after appearing in public life, but in opposition to the measures of government.

SHELBURNE, Earl of (Her.) vide Lansdowne.

SHELDON, Gilbert (Hist.) an English prelate, and a great public benefactor, was born in 1598 at Stanton, in Staffordshire, educated at Oxford, and elected Warden of All Souls College in 1635, but was deprived of this post by the usurping powers, in consequence of his steady adherence to his majesty, whom he attended as his chaplain in the Isle of Wight. At the Restoration he was made bishop of London, was translated in 1663 to the see of Canterbury, and died in 1677, after having built the schools at Oxford, for the acts and exercises, &c. which had been previously performed in St. Mary's church, besides contributing to the repair of St. Paul's Cathedral, and to his houses at Fulham, Lambeth, and Croydon, making several benefactions to All Souls Chapel, Trinity College Chapel, Christ Church Oxford, and Lichfield Cathedral, and also by abating fines to a vast amount.

SHELLEY (Her.) the name of three families, enjoying the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred on the first in the person of sir John Shelley in 1611; and on the second, in the person of sir Bysshe Shelley in 1806, both branches of the same family residing in the county of Sussex; and thirdly, on sir John Shelley Sydney, the eldest son of sir Bysshe Shelley, who was created in 1818. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a fess engrailed between three whelks or.

Crest. On a wreath, a griffin's head erased argent, beaked and ducally gorged or.

SHENSTONE, William (Biog.) a poet, was born in 1714 at Hales-Owen, Shropshire, and died in 1763, leaving several pieces, which were collected in 3 vols. 8vo. His poetry has likewise been published in the collections of British Poets. [Vide Plate XXIX]

SHERARD (Her.) the name of a family who derive their descent from Schirard, who, at the Conquest, had considerable possessions in the counties of Chester and Lancaster. His descendant, sir William, was created a peer in 1627, by the title of baron Sherard, of Leitrim, and Bennet, the third lord, was advanced in 1719 to the dignity of earl of Harborough.

SHERARD, Lord, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Harborough.

SHERARD (Biog.) or Sherwood, William, a botanist, and native of Leicestershire, was born in 1659, educated at Oxford, and died in 1728, leaving 3000*l.* for the endowment of the botanical professorship at Oxford. He is generally supposed to have been the author of 'Schola Botanica,' 12mo. Amst. 1689, and reprinted in 1691 and 1699.

SHERBORNE, Lord (Her.) baron of Sherborne, the title enjoyed by the family of Dutton, [vide Dutton] the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly argent and gules, in each piece of the second, a fret or, a crescent for difference.

Crest. On a wreath, a plume of ostrich feathers argent, azure, or, vert, and gules alternately.

Motto. "Servabo fidem."

SHERBURNE, Sir Edward (Hist.) the descendant of an ancient family at Stannyhurst, Lincolnshire, shared the fortunes of his royal master Charles I, whom he served as the commissary-general at the battle of Edgehill, and elsewhere, and died in 1702, after having experienced some vicissitudes of fortune from his adherence to the Romish religion, at the Revolution.

SHERIDAN, Richard Brinsley (Hist.) third son of Thomas and Frances Sheridan, mentioned under Biography, was born at Dublin in 1751, educated at Harrow School, and became a student at the Middle Temple, but was never called to the bar, having early engaged in the profession of a dramatic writer, and afterwards embarked in that of a politician. He was made one of the Under Secretaries in the Rockingham administration, and Secretary to the Treasury in the coalition administration; and on the death of Mr. Pitt, he became Treasurer of the Navy, but resigning these several posts at the different changes of administration, he exerted his abilities for the most part in the ranks of opposition, and died in 1816, leaving among his works as an author 'The Rivals,' a comedy; 'School for Scandal;' 'Pizarro;' 'A Letter to Henry Dundas,' &c. [Vide Plate XL]

SHERIDAN, Thomas (Biog.) the intimate friend of Dean Swift, is said to have been born about 1684 in the county of Cavan, and died in 1738, leaving a prose translation of Persius. One of the volumes of Swift's Miscellanies, consists almost entirely of letters between him and the Dean. [Vide Plate XXXIX]

SHERIDAN, Thomas, son of the preceding, was born in 1721 at Quilca, in Ireland, and died in 1788, after having distinguished himself as a performer on the stage. He is now remembered as the author of a 'Dictionary of the English Language,' and the 'Life of Swift.'

SHERIDAN, Frances, daughter of Mr. Chamberlaine, and wife of the preceding, of Dublin, was born about 1724, and died in 1767, leaving 'Sydney Biddulph,' a novel; 'Nourjahad,' a romance; 'The Discovery,' and 'The Dupe,' two comedies.

SHIPLEY, Jonathan (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born about 1714, educated at Oxford, raised after various preferments, to the bishopric of St. Asaph in 1769, and died in 1788, leaving some Sermons, Charges, and Parliamentary Speeches, which were published in 2 vols. 8vo. 1792. One of his daughters was married to sir William Jones.

SHIRLEY, Sir Robert, Bart. (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was imprisoned for his loyalty, in the Tower of London, by Oliver Cromwell, where he died during his confinement, not without suspicion of poison.

SHIRLEY (Her.) the name of a family which trace their descent from Saxon ancestors, who were of the first distinction in the time of Edward the Confessor, and have since been aggrandized by alliances with the most ancient and illustrious families in England. The progenitor of this family first on record was Sasuallo, or Sewallus de Etingdon, who resided at Nether-Etingdon, co. Warwick, about the reign of Edward the Confessor, which place had been the seat of his ancestors for several generations before. His grandson Sewallus, having transferred his seat from Etingdon to Shirley, first took the surname of de Shirley; and his descendant, sir Robert Shirley, knt. son of sir Robert Shirley, the loyalist above-mentioned, was introduced in 1677 into the House of Peers, as lord Ferrers, of Chartley, according to the ancient writ of summons; and in 1711 was advanced to the dignities of viscount Tamworth, and earl Ferrers, by reason of his descent from the ancient and noble family of Ferrers.

SHIRLEY, James (Biog.) an English dramatic writer and poet, was born about 1594 in London, and died in 1666, leaving 37 Plays, Tragedies, and Comedies, which were printed at different times; besides a volume of Poems, published in 1646. There was a Henry Shirley, a cotemporary of this author, who wrote a tragedy entitled 'The Martyr'd Soldier,' which was often acted with applause.

SHIRLEY, Anthony, a traveller, was born about 1565, educated at Oxford, and is supposed to have died in Spain in 1630, leaving 'A True Relation of the Voyage undertaken by Sir Anthony Shirley, Knight,' &c. inserted in the third volume of Hackluyt's Collection. His Travels into Persia were published in 4to. 1613.

SHORE, Jane (Hist.) wife of Matthew Shore, a goldsmith in Lombard-street, is known in history as the unhappy mistress of Edward IV, who, after the death of the latter, lived with lord Hastings, and being implicated by Richard III, in the conspiracy of that nobleman, she did penance on a charge of witchcraft, and being stripped of all her property, she died in the reign of Henry VII, in the utmost distress; and, as is said, in the ditch, named after her, Shore Ditch, although, according to Stow, this place was previously so named.

SHORE (Her.) the family name of lord Teignmouth, a title conferred on sir John Shore, who succeeded lord Cornwallis as Governor-general of India.

SHOREHAM, New (Geog.) a market and borough town of Sussex, in England, situated on the coast of the English Channel, on the east side of the river Adur, 16 m. N. N. W. Newhaven, 56 S. by W. London. Lon. 0° 16′ W. lat. 50° 50′ N. This town is noted in history for being built on the spot where Ella, the Saxon, landed with supplies from Germany, in aid of his countrymen Hengist and Horsa.

SHORT, Thomas (Biog.) a physician and native of Scotland, who died in 1772, published 'Comparative History of the Increase and Decrease of Mankind,' &c.; 'Natural History of Medicinal Waters;' 'Natural History of the Mineral Waters of Yorkshire,' &c.; 'A General Chronological History of the Air, Weather,' &c.

SHOVEL, Sir Cloudesley (Hist.) an English admiral, was born about 1650 near Clay, in Norfolk, entered early into the sea-service, and after distinguishing himself by a gallant attack on the vessels of the Tripolitans, which he burnt in their harbour, he was knighted for the skill and valour which he displayed at the battle of Bantry, and rose by his merits to the rank of Rear Admiral of England, Admiral of the White, Commander-in-chief of her Majesty's fleets, and one of the Council to Prince George of Denmark, as Lord High Admiral of England, all which posts he held at the time of his death, which happened in 1705, as he was on his return to England from the coast of France, when his vessel, and some others of the fleet, perished, but by what accident is not known.

SHOWER, Sir Bartholomew (Biog.) a lawyer, who died in 1701, has left 'Cases in Parliament Resolved and Adjudged upon Petitions and Writs of Error,' 1698, and reprinted in 1740; and 'Reports of Cases in Banco Regis,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1708-20, and reprinted in 1794.

SHREWSBURY, John, first Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself both as a soldier and a statesman, in the service of Henry V and VI, having been several times made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, where he reduced the rebellious chieftains to submission. He also shared in the glory of the victories gained by his royal master Henry V, but being afterwards employed in the wars of France during the unhappy reign of Henry VI, he was killed in 1453, at the battle of Chastillon, which proved fatal to the whole English army. This noble earl is said to have been victorious in forty several battles and dangerous skirmishes.

SHREWSBURY, George, fourth Earl of, was made one of the king's privy council in 1 Hen. VII, and distinguished himself in 1487 in the battle of Stoke, against Lambert Simnel and his adherents. In 5 Hen. VII he was one of the principal commanders of the forces sent in aid of the emperor Maximilian I, against Charles VIII; in 1513 he commanded the van of the army at the siege of Terouenne; in 1520 he was present at the memorable interview between Henry VIII, and Francis I of France, and after signalizing his zeal and courage in suppressing the rebellion of the North, called the Pilgrimage of Grace, and performing many other services for his sovereign, he died in 1541.

SHREWSBURY, Francis, fifth Earl of, followed the noble steps of his father, by which he gained the confidence of Henry VIII, and his three successors, and died full of honour in 1560. Notwithstanding his steady adherence to his religion, his great qualities recommended him so powerfully to queen Elizabeth, that she retained him among those few servants of the crown whom she admitted to her Privy Council when she mounted the throne.

SHREWSBURY, George, sixth Earl of, commanded, while a youth, 3000 men under his father, in the expedition against the Scots. In 1568 he had the custody of queen Mary committed to his charge, which he retained until 1584. In 1571, on the arraignment of the duke of Norfolk, he was made Lord High Steward of England, and after the execution of that nobleman he was constituted Earl Marshal of England, in which posts, as on every other occasion, he so comported himself, that at his death in 1590, he left behind him the character of a wise and faithful statesman, as also of a brave and worthy commander.

SHREWSBURY, Elizabeth, Countess of, the second wife of the preceding, who was her fourth husband, was the daughter and co-heir of John Hardwick, of Derbyshire, and after distinguishing herself in all her matrimonial relations by her rapacity, her pride, and her selfishness, she died in 1607, immensely rich, and without a friend. She was the cause of much trouble to the earl, by her jealousy, and the suspicions which she infused into the mind of his royal mistress respecting queen Mary, while the latter was in his keeping.

SHREWSBURY, Gilbert, seventh Earl of, was employed on three missions to France, and died in 1616.

SHREWSBURY, Francis, eleventh Earl of, died of the wound he received in 1667, in a duel with George Villiers, second duke of Buckingham, the paramour of his wife, Anna Maria, daughter to Robert, second earl of Cardigan, well known by the name of the infamous countess of Shrewsbury; who, after his death, was married secondly to George Rodney Bridges, of Keynsham, co. Somerset, esq. and died in 1702.

SHREWSBURY, Charles, twelfth Earl of, and only Duke of, godson to king Charles II, and first to whom his majesty stood godfather, was born in 1660. Notwithstanding he was in the service and confidence of this prince and his successor, he renounced the Romish religion, to which he belonged, and joining the prince of Orange, he forwarded the revolution, after which he was employed by king William as his Privy Councillor, and in other high offices, and also by queen Anne and king George I, until a little before his death, which happened in 1717.

SHREWSBURY, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Talbot, [vide Talbot] which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury, in England; Wexford and Waterford, in Ireland; baron Talbot, &c.

Arms. Gules, a lion rampant, within a border engrailed or.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a lion statant or, his tail extended.

Supporters. Two talbots argent.

Motto. "Prest d'accomplir."

SHREWSBURY (Geog.) an ancient market town, and capital of the county of Salop, situated on the banks of the Severn, 40 miles W. Lichfield, and 154 N. W. London. Lon. 2° 45′ W. lat. 52° 42′ N.

History of Shrewsbury.

Shrewsbury, called in the Latin of the middle ages Salopia, was built about the fifth century, and became the capital of the princes of Powis, who retained it for some ages, until they were dispossessed of it by the Saxons. In the reign of Alfred it was numbered among his principal cities, and being esteemed the most important fortress on the Marches of Wales, it was for many centuries the rendezvous of the English armies. In 1277, Edward I made this the principal seat of his court, while he was engaged in the final subjection of Wales. About two miles from the town was fought the famous battle of Shrewsbury, between Henry IV and the Northern rebels, headed by Percy, otherwise styled Hotspur, which proved fatal to the latter. During the rebellion, king Charles I came to this town, which preserved its allegiance, and on his arrival he was welcomed by the inhabitants; but on its capture in 1645 by the rebel forces, the royal cause suffered a severe blow, which it never recovered. The remains of a castle are still to be seen here, which was greatly enlarged by Roger de Montgomery, the Norman, who cleared away 51 houses for this purpose; also those of an abbey are still standing, which was founded by this nobleman.

SHROPSHIRE (Geog.) or Salop, an inland county of England, on the borders of Wales.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. by Denbighshire, E. by Staffordshire, S. by Worcestershire and Herefordshire, and W. by Radnorshire, Montgomeryshire, and Denbighshire, extending about 44 miles in length from N. to S. and 28 in breadth from E. to W.

Principal Towns. Shrewsbury the capital, Bishop's Castle, Bridgenorth, Ludlow, Wenlock, Newport, Wellington, &c.

Rivers. The river Severn runs through the middle of Shropshire, besides which are the Teme, the Shelbrook, the Elf Brook, the Weaver, &c.

History of Shropshire.

Shropshire, in Latin Salopiensis Comitatus, was inhabited by the Ordovici, and the Cornavii, in the time of the Roman invasion, and after the defeat of Caractacus, which is generally said to have taken place in this county, it became a part of the Roman province Flavia Cæsariensis. On the arrival of the Saxons it became the theatre of war between the Britons and them, and formed for some centuries a part of the kingdom of Powisland, of which Pengeverne, now Shrewsbury, was the capital; but in the reign of Offa it fell under the dominion of the Saxons, when an immense mound of earth was formed by the conqueror for its security. After the Norman conquest, nearly the whole of Shropshire was bestowed upon Roger de Montgomery. In the subsequent reigns the Lords of the Marches of Wales exercised an almost absolute dominion, except as far as it was controled by the power of the crown. [Vide Shrewsbury]

SHUCKBURGH (Her.) the name of a family that has been seated at Shuckburgh, in Warwickshire, ever since 1138, and enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1660 on sir Charles Shuckburgh, in reward for the distinguished loyalty displayed by his father, sir Richard Shuckburgh, during the rebellion. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a chevron between three mullets argent.

Crest. A blackmoor couped at the waist proper, with a dart in his hand or.

Motto. "Hæc manus ob patriam."

SHUCKFORD, Samuel (Biog.) an English divine, who was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1754, is principally known by his 'History of the World, Sacred and Profane,' 3 vols. 8vo.; besides which he wrote a treatise 'On the Creation and Fall of Man.'

SIAM (Geog.) an extensive kingdom of eastern Asia, situated in the heart of the great peninsula between India and China, where the English settled a factory very soon after visiting India; but withdrew it in 1623, and after making a second attempt with as little success, they finally gave up the scheme. The French, however, sent two successive embassies between 1660 and 1690, which promised success; but at length terminated in their expulsion from the kingdom.

SIBBALD (Her.) the name of an ancient family in North Britain, of which mention is made as early as the 13th century, when Duncanus Sibbald was witness to the charter of Rogerus Comes de Winton. Sir James Sibbald, a descendant of this family, who was in the civil service of the East India Company, and ambassador to the court of Hyder Ali Khan, was created a baronet in 1806. The name has since been changed to Scott, sir David Scott having succeeded his uncle in the titles. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a cross moline with a bordure azure.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet argent, a wheat-sheaf between two sickles proper.

SIBBALD, Sir Robert (Biog.) a physician, naturalist, and antiquary, of the family above-mentioned, descended from the Sibbalds of Balgonie, is supposed to have died about 1712, leaving his 'History of Fife,' a new edition of which was published in 1813; a Collection of several Treatises in folio concerning 'Scotland as it was of Old,' &c. Edinburgh, 1739; 'The Liberty and Independency of the Kingdom and Church of Scotland,' &c. 4to. 1704; 'De Rebus Gestis Gul. Vallæ,' 8vo. Edinb. 1705.

SIBBES, Richard (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1577 at Sudbury, in Suffolk, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1635, leaving a number of works, which have been lately reprinted in 3 vols. 8vo.

SIBTHORP, John (Biog.) a botanist and traveller, was born in 1758 at Oxford, where he was educated, and died at Bath in 1798, leaving 'Flora Oxoniensis,' 8vo. 1794; 'Flora Græca,' for the publishing of which in 10 vols. fol. as also of a Prodromus, he bequeathed a freehold estate to the University of Oxford.

SICHÆUS (Myth.) Sicharbas, or Aherbas, a priest of the temple of Hercules, in Phœnicia, and the husband of Dido, who was murdered by her brother Pygmalion for the sake of his riches. She was informed of this murder by the shade of her husband, who persuaded her to fly from Tyre, telling her of some treasures which she would find concealed. Virg. Æn. l. 1.

SICILIA (Geog.) Σικανίη, or Σικελίη, the largest and most celebrated island in the Mediterranean, otherwise called Trinacria, or Triquetra, from its triangular form, now Sicily. It is situated between Italy and the coast of Africa, extending from lon. 12° to 16° E. lat. 36° to 38° N. about 180 miles in length and 130 in breadth.

Principal Towns of Sicily.

History of Sicily, Ancient and Modern.

The original inhabitants of Sicily were a savage race, called by the poets Læstrygones and Cyclops, who were succeeded by the Sicani, a people of Spain, and lastly by the Siculi, a people of Italy. The Phœnicians and Greeks made some settlements there, particularly at Syracuse; but the Carthaginians at last became masters of the island, of which they were dispossessed by the Romans, who, on the capture of Syracuse by Marcellus, converted the island into a province, A. C. 198. In the eighth and ninth centuries Sicily fell into the hands of the Saracens, who remained in possession of it for 200 years, when they were succeeded by the Normans, who, under their leaders Robert and his son Roger, founded the kingdom of Naples and Sicily, which became subject in 1266 to Charles I of Anjou, a French prince; but, after the massacre of the French called the Sicilian Vespers in 1282, Sicily as well as Naples, which were united into one kingdom, and afterwards called the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, became subject to Spain, and has ever since, with occasional interruptions, been governed by a branch of the royal family of Spain.

SICILIA (Numis.) numerous medals are extant of the whole island, as also of the celebrated towns of Syracuse, Palermo, &c. which, for the most part, bear as a distinguishing type the figure of three legs, as in the annexed cut, emblematical of the figure of the island; to which are added the ears of corn, to denote its fertility. Ceres and Proserpine were particularly honoured on their medals.

SICILY (Geog.) vide Sicilia.

SICINIUS, Dentatus L. (Hist.) a Roman tribune, celebrated for his valour, and the honours he obtained in the field during a period of 40 years, in which he was present at 121 battles; and in reward for his services obtained 14 civic crowns, 3 mural crowns, 8 crowns of gold, 183 golden collars, 160 bracelets, 18 lances, and 23 horses, with all their ornaments. He could likewise show scars of 45 wounds received in his breast, particularly in opposing the Sabines when they took the capitol; but having rendered himself obnoxious to Appius Claudius on account of his popularity, he sent him to the army, where he was attacked and murdered, but not until he had killed 15 and wounded 30 of his assailants, when the remainder dispatched him by stones and darts thrown at a distance. Dionys. Hal. l. 8; Val. Max. l. 3; Aul. Gell. l. 11, &c.

SICORIS (Geog.) now Segre, a river of Hispania Tarraconensis, near which Cæsar defeated Afranius and Petreius, the partizans of Pompey.

SICULI (Geog.) a people of Italy, who, being driven from their possessions by the Opici, took refuge in Sicily, and gave their name to the island. Thucyd. l. 6; Diod. l. 5, &c.

SICULUM FRETUM (Geog.) the ancient name for the Straights of Messina. Plin. l. 3.

SICULUS (Biog.) vide Diodorus.

SICYON (Geog.) Σικυὼν, now Basilico, a town of Peloponnesus, and the capital of Sicyonia, which is celebrated as the most ancient kingdom of Greece. It began A. C. 2089, and ended A. C. 1088, under a succession of kings, of whom little is known except their names. Ægialeus is said to have been their first king. It became very powerful in the time of the Achæan league, when Aratus was at the head of the state, A. C. 251; but was destroyed and rebuilt by Antigonus, the son of Demetrius, who endeavoured to impose upon it the name of Demetrias. Apollod. l. 3; Cic. de Orat.; Liv. l. 32; Virg. Georg. l. 2; Strab. l. 8; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 36; Paus. l. 2; Plut. in Dem. &c.

SICYON (Numis.) medals of this town are extant, struck in honour of Domitian, Sept. Severus, Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, and Geta, bearing the inscription, ΣΙΚΥΩΝΙΩΝ; to which is added on one, ΤΗΣ ΙΕΡΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΑΣΥΛΟΥ.

SIDE (Numis.) a town of Pamphylia, which is principally known by its medals, struck in honour of Nero, Domitian, Trajan, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, L. Verus, Commodus, Albinus, Sept. Severus, Domna, Caracalla, Geta, Diadumenianus, Heliogabalus, Julia, Cornelia Paula, Alexander Severus, Sallustia Barbia Orbiana, Maximinus, Gordianus Pius, Tranquillina, Philip sen. and jun., Trajan Decius, Volusianus, Valerian, Gallienus, Solonina, and Saloninus, bearing the inscription, ΣΙΔΗΤΩΝ; with the addition of ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ.

SIDMOUTH, Viscount (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Addington [vide Addington]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Per pale ermine and sable, a chevron charged with four lozenges counterchanged, between three fleurs-de-lis counterchanged.

Crest. A mountain cat on a wreath, holding a shield between its paws, charged with a lozenge.

Supporters. Two stags proper, each encircled in the neck with a chain, to which a key is pendant.

Motto. "Libertas sub Rege pio."

SIDNEY, Henry (Hist.) the bosom friend and companion of Edward VI, in whose arms the youthful monarch expired, was in the service and confidence of queens Mary and Elizabeth, by which latter queen he was employed for 11 years as Lord Deputy of Ireland. During this period he administered the government with great valour and prudence, and died in 1586, leaving some of his letters to his son, which have been published.

SIDNEY, Sir Philip, son of the preceding, a statesman and an author, was educated at Oxford, appointed in 1576 ambassador to the court of Vienna, and after acting as Privy Councillor to queen Elizabeth, he was sent as general of the horse under the earl of Leicester, into the Netherlands, where he was mortally wounded in 1586, at the age of 32, while engaging with a convoy sent by the enemy to Zutphen. He wrote 'Arcadia,' 'Astrophel and Stella,' 'The Defence of Poesy,' 'Sonets,' &c.

SIDNEY, Algernon, a determined republican, second son of Robert, earl of Leicester, was born about 1617, entered heartily into the cause of the rebellion while its object was to destroy the monarchy, but refused to act under Oliver Cromwell or his son; and continued for some time abroad after the Restoration, until the death of his father in 1677, when he obtained from the king a particular pardon, and liberty to return, on the promise of constant and quiet obedience for the future; notwithstanding which he was implicated in the Rye-House Plot, condemned, and executed in 1683, complaining, after the manner of such people, that he had not had a fair trial. He left behind him 'Discourses upon Government,' the first edition of which was published in 1698, the second in 1704.

SIDNEY (Her.) the family of Penhurst Place, co. Kent, abovementioned under History, which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1818 on sir John Shelly Sidney, the eldest son of sir Bysshe Shelly, of Castle Goring. [Vide Shelly] The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth or, a pheon azure; second and third for Shelley.

Crests. First, a porcupine passant azure, armed, collared, and chained or; second for Shelley.

SIDON (Bibl.) צידן, the eldest son of Canaan, the founder probably of the city of Sidon, of which frequent mention is made both in the Old and New Testament. Josh. x.; Isai. xxiii. &c.

SIDON (Geog.) Σιδὼν, an ancient city of Phœnicia, situated on the shores of the Mediterranean, at the distance of about 50 miles from Damascus, and 24 from Tyre, with a harbour now called Said. The city of Sidon was taken by Ochus, king of Persia, after the inhabitants had burnt themselves and their possessions, A. C. 351; but it was afterwards rebuilt by the people in the vicinity. Hom. Odyss. l. 15; Diod. l. 16; Mel. l. 1; Plin. l. 36, &c.

SIDON (Numis.) the deity most honoured on the medals of this city was Astarte, a figure of whom standing on a vessel, or in other positions, was their ordinary type. [Vide Astarte]

SIDONIUS, Caius Sollius Apollinaris (Ecc.) a Christian writer, and bishop of Clermont, in France, which he vigorously defended against the Goths, was born in 430, and died at the age of 52, after having governed the church for 15 years. Of his works, nine books of Epistles, and about twenty-four Poems, are extant, which were published with notes by Father Sirmond, in 8vo. Paris, 1614, and reprinted in 4to. 1652.

SIENNA (Geog.) a city of Tuscany, capital of the province of Sienna, built on three eminences, 30 m. S. by E. Florence. Lon. 11° 10′ E. lat. 43° 22′ N.

History of Sienna.

Sienna, called by the Romans Sena, became subject to many vicissitudes after the reign of Honorius, and fell under the dominion of many masters; but at length formed itself into an independent republic, which was after some time destroyed by the successive invasions of the French and Spaniards, aided by their own intestine divisions; wherefore, in the latter part of the 16th century, it was ceded by Philip II of Spain to Florence, and has since had no distinct government. It was the birth-place of the popes Alexander III, Pius II, Pius III, Alexander VII, as also of many prelates, and was erected by Pius II into an archiepiscopal see. Two councils were held here, namely, one in 1421, which had been transferred from Pavia, and a second in 1589.

SIERRA LEONE (Geog.) a country of Western Africa, situated on the Atlantic, which was first discovered by the Portuguese, who formed settlements there, and were followed by all other European nations, for the purpose of carrying on the trade of slaves. It has, however, within these few last years acquired a celebrity, on account of the colony formed by the British nation for the purpose of abolishing that trade, of which it had hitherto been one of the principal marts. The scheme of forming a colony here was first suggested by Dr. Smeathman in 1783, and being warmly supported by many who were hostile to the system of slavery, a commencement was made in 1787, with a body of negroes, to the number of 400, who were conveyed with some whites to Sierra Leone, where a piece of ground was purchased 20 miles square from king Naimbanna. This colony, however, after having lost half its numbers by disease, was plundered and dispersed. Not discouraged by this failure, the friends of the scheme, who were now incorporated by Act of Parliament, under the title of the Sierra Leone Company, obtained a fresh supply for the colony to the amount of 1200 blacks from Nova Scotia, who were embarked in 1792, and on their arrival succeeded, in spite of all the obstacles which presented themselves, in rebuilding Freetown, the capital of the colony, and notwithstanding the capture and plunder of this town by the French in 1794, and numerous other disadvantages, the colonists erected other places, and have since been in a course of gradual and evident improvement.

SIGA (Geog.) now Ned-Roma, a town of Numidia, famous as the residence of Syphax. Plin. l. 5.

SIGÆUM (Geog.) or Sigeum, a town and promontory of Troas, now Cape Jannizari, which was the scene of the principal battles between the Greeks and the Trojans.

SIGALEON (Myth.) a god of silence among the Egyptians. Varr. de Ling. Lat. l. 3, 4.

SIGEBERT (Hist.) the name of some French princes.

SIGEBERT I, son of Clotarius I, inherited the kingdom of Austrasia, and was assassinated by means of Fridegonde, wife of Chilperic, in 575, at the age of 40, and after a reign of 14 years, in which he was successful against the Lombards and the Huns, who, with other barbarian tribes, invaded his dominions.

SIGEBERT II, surnamed the Younger, was raised to the throne of Austrasia in 631, by his father Dagobert II, king of France, and died in 656, after having acquired the reputation of extraordinary sanctity.

SIGEBERT, natural son of Thierri II, king of Burgundy and Austrasia, was placed on the throne of his father by queen Brunehaut in 602; but was deposed and put to death by Clotarius II.

SIGISMUND (Hist.) son of the emperor Charles IV, was born in 1368, made king of Hungary in 1386, elected emperor in 1410, and died in 1437, after having endeavoured in vain to quell the civil dissensions occasioned by the Hussites. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

SIGISMUND, fourth king of Burgundy, succeeded his father Gondebald in 516, and was thrown into a well with his wife and family in 523, by Clodomer, son of Clovis, who took him prisoner.

SIGISMUND, the name of three kings of Poland.

SIGISMUND I, surnamed the Great, was elected to the throne in 1507, after his father Casimir IV, and died in 1548. He restored Poland to its ancient glory.

SIGISMUND II, son of Sigismund I, succeeded his father, and died in 1572, after a reign of [illegible] years, which was disturbed by the heresies then beginning to spread over the world. At his death the House of Jagellon became extinct, and Henry, duke of Anjou, was his successor.

SIGISMUND III, son of John III, king of Sweden, ascended the Polish throne in 1587, and died in 1632, aged 66. As he was a steady Catholic he was excluded from his paternal kingdom of Sweden.

SIGNORELLI, Luca (Biog.) a Florentine artist, was born in 1439 at Cortona, and died in 1521, after having obtained the rank of a master in his art. He was particularly skilful in taking the naked figure with anatomical precision.

SIGONIUS, Charles (Biog.) an Italian scholar, descended from an ancient family of Modena, was born in 1524, and died in 1585, leaving 'De Republica Atheniensium;' 'De Regno Italiæ;' 'Fasti Consulares,' and other works, which were published together in 6 vols. fol. Mediol. 1733-34. His 'Fasti' were printed with the Oxford Livy in 1800.

SIHON (Bibl.) סיחון, king of the Amorites, refusing a passage to the Israelites was slain, and his army defeated. Numb. xvi.; Deut. i. &c.

SILANUS, D. (Hist.) a son of T. Manlius Torquatus, who, having been found guilty of extortion in the management of the province of Macedonia, was banished his father's presence, in consequence of which he went and hanged himself. Cic. de Fin. l. 1; Liv. epit. l. 54; Val. Max. l. 5.

SILAS (Bibl.) Σίλας, one of the chief men among the brethren, who returned with Paul and Barnabas from Jerusalem, and afterwards accompanied Paul in his travels. Acts xv.; 2 Cor. i. He is supposed by St. Jerome to be the same as Sylvanus, mentioned in the two Epistles of St. Paul to the Thessalonians. The Roman Martyrology places the festival of St. Silas on July 13.

SILENUS (Myth.) a demigod, who became the nurse, preceptor, and attendant of the god Bacchus. He is supposed to have been the son of Pan, and, receiving divine honours, had a temple at Elis. Cic. Tusc. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 191; Virg. Ec. l. 6; Ovid. Met. l. 4, &c.

SILESIA (Geog.) in the German Schlesien, in the Polish Zlesian, and in the Latin of the middle ages Silesia, a province of Germany, between Poland, Bohemia, Hungary, and Moravia. It belonged originally to Poland; but in the 14th century it was annexed to Bohemia by conquest, and passed with that country to the House of Austria, who, after a long contest, ceded the western part of it to Prussia, retaining the upper part, which is distinguished by the name of Austrian Silesia. The capital is Breslaw.

SILHOUETTE, Stephen de (Biog.) a French writer, who, for a few months filled the post of minister in France, was born at Limoges, and died in 1767, after having left, among other works, a translation of Pope's 'Essay on Man,' and of Bolingbroke's 'Dissertation on Parties,' &c.

SILIUS ITALICUS, Caius (Hist.) a Roman poet, who was called the Ape of Virgil, from his servile imitation of that poet, was consul in the year that Nero was murdered, and died in the reign of Trajan, in his 75th year. He wrote a History of the second Punic War in verse, of which the edition of Cellarius, 8vo. Lips. 1695, and that of Drakenborch, 4to. Ultraj. 1717, are among the best; to which may be added that of Ernesti, 2 vols. 12mo. Lips. 1791.

SILOAM (Bibl.) Σιλωάμ, a tower which fell upon and crushed 18 men, Luke xiii. 4; also a pool of Siloam, John ix. This is probably the same as the fountain of Siloam, near the walls of Jerusalem, of which Josephus makes mention. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 5.

SILVA, John Baptist (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1684 at Bourdeaux, and died in 1744, leaving 'Traité de l'Usage des differentes Sortes de Saignées,' &c. 2 vols.; 'Dissertations et Consultations,' &c.

SILVANUS (Bibl.) vide Silas.

SILVANUS (Myth.) a rural deity, son of Crathis, an Italian shepherd, or, according to Virgil, a son of Picus, whose worship was established in Italy about the age of Evander. Virg. Eclog. 10; Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Plut. in Par. &c.

SILVESTER (Ecc.) the name of two popes.

SILVESTER I, a Roman by birth, was elected after Melchiades in 314, and died in 335, after having assembled two councils at Arles for the purpose of establishing the tranquillity of the church, which was disturbed by the Donatists.

SILVESTER II, whose family name was Gerbert, was raised to the papal chair in 999, and died in 1003, leaving some Epistles, which to the number of 161 are still extant, and were published in 4to. Paris, 1611, and also in the Bibl. Pat. He was a learned man, and particularly skilled in mathematics.

SILVESTER (Her.) the name of a family originally from Bourdeaux, enjoying a baronetcy, conferred in 1815 on sir John Silvester, a physician; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a sea-lion ducally crowned or.

Crest. On a wreath of the colours, a lion couchant gules.

SILVESTRE, Israel (Biog.) a French engraver, was born in 1621 at Nanci, and died in 1691, leaving upwards of 700 prints as specimens of his skill.

SILURES (Geog.) the original inhabitants of that part of Britain called Wales.

SMITH, Sir Thomas (Hist.) a statesman and scholar, was born at Walden, in Essex, in 1512, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1562, after having been employed on embassies to Flanders and France during the reigns of Edward VI and Elizabeth. He wrote, 1. 'De Republica Anglorum,' &c. 4to. 1583, 1584; and with the additions 'Of the Chiefe Courts in England,' 1589 and 1594; it was afterwards reprinted both in English and Latin, and forms one of the 'Republicæ.' 2. 'De recta et emendata Linguæ Græcæ Pronunciatione.' 3. 'A Treatise concerning the correct Writing and true Pronunciation of the English Tongue.' 4. 'Four Orations for and against Queen Elizabeth's Marriage.' 5. 'Several Letters to Lord Burleigh and sir Francis Walsingham,' printed in the Complete Ambassador.' 6. 'Device for the Alteration and Reformation of Religion,' written in 1558, and printed among the Records at the end of Burnet's 'History of the Reformation.'

Smith, or Smythe, Sir John, a traveller and ambassador, related by marriage to Jane Seymour, the wife of Henry VIII, was sent by queen Elizabeth to Spain to intercede in behalf of the Netherlands, in which he was very successful. He wrote, 1. 'A Discourse concerning the Forms and Effects of divers Weapons,' &c. 4to. London, 1589 and 1590. 2. 'Certain Instructions, Observations, and Orders Military,' &c. 4to. 1594, 1595.

Smith, or Smyth, John, a great adventurer and captain, was born at Willoughby, in the county of Lincoln, and died, as is supposed, in 1631, after having rendered his name memorable by his numerous exploits. In the wars of Hungary in 1602, he overcame three Turks in three single combats, and cut off their heads; besides his numerous engagements with pirates, and the savage Indians, by whom he was once taken prisoner, but contrived to make his escape. He was some time Governor of Virginia and Admiral of New England, where he reduced the inhabitants to obedience, and reclaimed them from barbarism. To him are attributed a 'History of Virginia,' &c. fol. London, 1624; also a Map of Virginia,' &c. 4to. Oxford, 1612; 'New England's Tryals,' &c. 4to. Lond. 1620.

Smith, or Smyth, William (Ecc.) a prelate, and founder of Brazen-nose College, was, after different preferments, raised to the see of Lichfield and Coventry in 1493, translated to that of Lincoln in 1495, and died in 1513. In 1507 he concerted the plan of Brazen-nose College along with his friend, sir Richard Sutton, and lived to see it completed, the charter of the foundation having been granted to them in 1512.

Smith, Miles, an English prelate, and native of Hereford, was educated at Oxford, advanced to the see of Gloucester in 1612, and died in 1624, after having had a share in the present translation of the Bible, for which he was chosen from his skill in the oriental languages.

Smith, Edward, an Irish prelate, was born in 1665 at Lisburn, in the county of Antrim, promoted to the united see of Down and Connor in 1699, and died in 1720, after having had a seat in the Privy Council. He was the author of some papers inserted in the Philosophical Transactions 1695.

SMITH, John, an English divine, was born in 1659 at Lowther, in Westmoreland, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1715, after having prepared an edition of Bede's works, which was completed by his son George, who died in 1756. This latter also published a work entitled 'Britons and Saxons not Converted to Popery.'

SMITH, Robert, a divine and mathematician, was born in 1689, and died in 1768, leaving 'A System of Optics,' 2 vols. 4to.; and 'Harmonics; or the Philosophy of Musical Sounds.'

SMITH, John, a mezzotinto engraver, who flourished in the reign of king William, is pronounced by Horace Walpole to have been the best that ever appeared. He and Mr. Strutt have given a list of his works.

SMITH, Edmund, a dramatic writer, was born in 1668, educated at Westminster and Oxford, and died in 1710, leaving his celebrated tragedy of 'Phædra and Hippolitus,' which, with some pieces of poetry, were published in 1719 under the title of his works.

SMITH, George, a landscape painter, was born at Chichester in 1714, and died in 1776, after having obtained a considerable reputation in his art; as also his brothers, William and John, the former of whom excelled in portraits, and the latter in landscapes; they both died in 1764.

SMITH, William, an English divine, was born in 1711 at Worcester, educated at Oxford, and died in 1787, leaving translations of 'Longinus on the Sublime,' 8vo. 1739, which went through four editions; of Thucydides, 2 vols. 4to. 1753; reprinted in 8vo. 1781; and Xenophon's 'History of the Affairs of Greece;' besides 'Nine Sermons on the Beatitudes,' 8vo. 1782. In 1791 appeared 'The Poetic Works of the Rev. William Smith,' &c.

SMITH, Adam, a Scotch writer, was born at Kirkaldy in 1723, and died in 1790, leaving his well known works; the 'Theory of Moral Sentiments,' and an 'Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations.' [Vide Plate XL.]

SMITH, Charlotte, a novelist and a poetess, the daughter of Mr. Turner, a gentleman in Surrey, was married when very young to Mr. Smith, and died in 1806, leaving her well known and justly admired Sonnets; besides her popular novels of 'Emmeline, or the Orphan of the Castle;' 'Old Manor House,' &c. [Vide Plate XL.]

SMOLENSKO (Geog.) a town of Russia, situated on two hills, with a valley between them watered by the Dnieper, 235 m. W. S. W. Moscow, 350 S. by E. Petersburg. Lon. 31° 56′ E., lat. 54° 50′ N. This town was the scene of the first desperate conflicts between the Russians and French, on which occasion it was set on fire; and, on the disastrous retreat of the latter, its works were totally destroyed. Prince Potemkin, the favourite and general of Catherine II. was a native of this place.

SMOLLETT, Tobias (Biog.) an historian, novelist, and poet, grandson of sir James Smollett, of Bonhill, a member of the Scotch parliament, and one of the commissioners for framing the treaty of union, was born in 1721, and died in 1771, leaving 'A Continuation of Hume's History of England,' and 'A Collection of Voyages and Travels;' besides his well known novels of 'Roderic Random;' 'Humphrey Clinker,' &c. and a collection of Poems. [Vide Plate XL.]

SMYRNA (Bib.) Σμύρνη, the city described under Geography, whose angel or bishop Jesus Christ addresses by the mouth of St. John. Rev. ii. 8, &c. It is generally supposed to have been St. Polycarp who was thus addressed. Iren. l. 3, c. 3; Tertull. Præscript. c. 32; Hieron. de Vir. Illust.

SMYRNA (Geog.) a sea-port of Ionia, in Asia Minor, which the inhabitants believed was the birth-place of Homer, to whom they paid divine honours. It was said to have been built by the Æolians, and was successively in the possession of the Æolians, Ionians, Lydians, and Macedonians. It was rebuilt by Alexander, or, according to some, by Lysimachus, 400 years after it had been destroyed by the Lydians. Marcus Aurelius repaired it A. D. 180, after it had suffered severely from an earthquake. It has ever since been a flourishing city, known to the Turks by the name of Ismir, and to Europeans by its ancient name. In modern times it has been so distinguished for its trade as to be considered the emporium of the Levant. It is situated at the head of the gulf in the Grecian Archipelago, distinguished by the name of the Gulf of Smyrna. Lon. 27° 4′ E., lat. 38° 29′ N.

SMYRNA (Numis.) numerous medals are extant of this town, some of which bear the figure of an Amazon, in allusion to its supposed origin from an Amazon of that name.

SMYTH (Her.) the name of two families which enjoy the dignity and title of a baronet; as,

SMYTH of Upton, co. Essex, of which sir Robert Smyth was created in 1665; arms, &c. as follow:

Crest. A griffin's head erased gules, charged on the neck with two bars or, beaked and erased of the last.

Motto. "Qui capit capitur."

SMYTH, or Carmichael Smyth, the present name of a family which enjoys the baronetcy, conferred in 1821 on colonel sir James Carmichael Smyth. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, a fess wreathed azure and gules, within a bordure of the second, for Carmichael; second and third azure, a burning cup between two chess rooks or, within a bordure of the second.

SMYTHE (Her.) the family name of viscount Strangford, which title was first conferred in 1628 on sir Thomas Smythe.

SMYTHE, a family of Eshe, in the county of Durham, which enjoys the baronetcy, conferred in 1660 on sir Edward Smythe; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Sable, three roses argent.

Crest. A Turk's head gorged with a chaplet of laurel.

Motto. "Regi semper fidelis."

SNELL, Willebrod (Biog.) a mathematician, was born at Leyden in 1591, and died in 1626, leaving 'Apollonius Batavus,' which is attributed by some to his father, Rodolph Snell, who was also a mathematician; 'Typhis Batavus;' 'Doctrinæ Triangulorum Canonicæ,' 4to. 1624; 'Libra Astronomica et Philosophica,' &c.

SNORRO, Sturlesonius (Hist.) an Icelandic statesman and historian, was put to death by his enemy Gyssurus in 1241, after having been minister of state to one king of Sweden and three kings of Norway. He was governor of Iceland, and wrote 'Chronicum Regum Norwegorum;' 'Edda Islandica.'

SNYDERS, Francis (Biog.) a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1579, and died in 1657, after having executed some grand compositions of battles and huntings for the king of Spain, and other pieces, which have been greatly admired.

SO (Hist.) סוא, a king of Egypt, who made an alliance with Hoshea, king of Israel, to whom he promised assistance against Sennacherib, but did not perform his promise. 2 Kings xvii.; Usser. Annal.; Marsh. Canon.

SOAME (Her.) vide Buckworth.

SOCINUS, Lælius (Ecc.) founder of the Socinian sect, was born at Sienna in 1525, and was intended by his father, who was an able civilian at Bologna, for his own profession, but, taking up with the study of divinity, and early imbibing the notions of the reformers, who were at that time distinguishing themselves by their opposition to the Romish church, he, for the sake of safety, repaired to Zurich, and, although closely connected with Calvin and other reformers by the ties of friendship, yet he thought proper to broach opinions of his own respecting the doctrine of the Trinity, which rendered it necessary for him to seek an asylum in Poland, where he disseminated his opinions with greater security, and died in 1562. His tenets were afterwards more widely propagated by his nephew, Faustus Socinus, who died in 1604, at the age of 65.

SOCRATES (Hist.) Σωκράτης, a philosopher, who acquired considerable celebrity among the ancients, by whom he was styled the wisest of men. He was a native of Athens, where his father Sophroniscus followed the profession of a statuary, and his mother Phenarete that of a midwife. He for some time followed his father's occupation, but, addicting himself to the study of philosophy, he soon gained a number of followers, to whom he taught many doctrines that were in that day considered as singular, and brought upon him the charge of impiety, for which he was sentenced to death, and compelled to drink hemlock, in the 70th year of his age, about 400 years before the Christian æra. Socrates had many pupils that were much devoted to him, among whom the most distinguished were Plato and Xenophon. Since his death it has been the fashion to pass the highest and most unqualified eulogiums on his character and philosophy; but a calm examination of either will satisfy every unbiassed person that he has had credit for a much greater share of wisdom than he really possessed. His fanciful conceits, which provoked the ridicule of Aristophanes, the comic poet, in his comedy of the Clouds, entitle him to rank with the philosophists of the present day. [Vide Plate XXI] Xenophon, Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Plutarch, Diogenes Laertius, &c.

SOCRATES (Biog.) an ecclesiastical historian of Constantinople, surnamed Scholasticus, who flourished in the fifth century, and continued the history of Eusebius down to the year 440. This history has been translated into Latin, and published by Valesius, together with Eusebius and the other ecclesiastical historians, in Greek and Latin, and republished, with additional notes, by Reading, 3 vols. fol. Lond. 1720; also in English, fol. Cambridge, 1683.

SODOM (Bibl.) שדמה, the capital of Pentapolis, and for some time the residence of Lot, which, on account of the wickedness of its inhabitants, was destroyed by fire and brimstone from heaven A. M. 2107, A. C. 1897. Gen. xix.; Usser. Annal.

SOEMIAS (Hist.) vide Julia.

SOFIA (Geog.) the name given by the Turks to the ancient Sardica, a city in the north of European Turkey, capital of Bulgaria, 280 m. W. N. W. Constantinople, 160 W. N. W. Adrianople. Lon. 23° E., lat. 42° 50′ N.

SOGDIANA (Geog.) a country of Asia, now Zagatay, or Usbec, having Scythia on the N. the Sacæ on the E. Bactriana on the S. and Margiana on the W. Herod. l. 3, &c.

SOISSONS (Geog.) a town of Picardy, a former province of France, and of the modern department of the Aisne, situated in a plain watered by the river Aisne, 65 m. S. E. Amiens, and 70 N. E. Paris. Lon. 3° 19′ E., lat. 49° 22′ N. Soissons, called in the Latin Sucssio, and Civitas Augusta Suessionum, was the capital of a kingdom under the first race of French kings, and has subsequently borne the title of a county. It was also a bishop's see, suffragan of Rheims, where some councils were held, in 743, 853, 866, 1078, 1092, 1121, 1201, 1202, and 1455.

SOLANDER, Daniel Charles (Biog.) a naturalist, and pupil of Linnæus, was born in 1736, and died in 1782, after having been engaged by sir Joseph Banks to accompany him in Captain Cook's first voyage round the world in pursuit of discoveries in natural history.

SOLE, Antonio Maria dal (Biog.) a landscape painter of Bologna, was born in 1597, and died in 1677, after having attained considerable eminence in his art. His son, Joseph dal Sole, also a painter, was born in 1654, and died in 1719, after having gained the appellation of the modern Guido.

SOLEBAY (Geog.) vide Southwold.

SOLEURE (Geog.) in Latin Solodurum, a town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name, situated on the river Aar, 18 m. N. by E. Bern, 26 S. Basle. This town, with the adjacent country, was taken from Theodosius II by the Burgundians, and annexed to the kingdom of Burgundy, after which it passed successively into the hands of the French kings and the German emperors. It was made a free imperial city in the reign of Henry III, and received many privileges from Rodolphus and his successors; but it joined the canton of Berne in its wars with the dukes of Austria, and entered in 1481 into the Helvetic league.

SOLFATERRA (Geog.) a mountain of Naples, in the Terra di Lavoro, which was called by the ancients Forum Vulcani, and Campi Phlegræi.

SOLIGNAC, Peter Joseph de la Pimpie Chevalier de (Hist.) a French nobleman, was born at Montpelier in 1687, and died in 1773, after having spent the greater part of his life in the service of Stanislaus, king of Poland. He wrote a 'History of Poland,' and some other works.

SOLIMENE, Francis (Biog.) an Italian painter, surnamed L'Abate Ciccio, from his manner of dressing like an abbot, was born in 1657 of a good family at Novera de Pagani, near Naples, and died in 1747, after having gained the patronage and applause of the princes of France, Spain, Naples, and other countries.

SOLINUS, Caius Julius (Biog.) a grammarian, and native of Rome in the first century, or more probably, according to others, in the third century, is known by his work entitled 'Polyhistor,' of which an edition was published, with copious and extensive notes, in 2 vols. fol. by Salmasius.

SOLIS, Antonio de (Biog.) historiographer of the Indies to Philip IV of Spain, was born in 1610 at Placenza, in Old Castile, and died in 1686, leaving 'Historia de la Conquesta de Mexico,' translated into many languages, and frequently reprinted, particularly at Brussels, in folio, 1704. He likewise wrote some poems, dramatic pieces, and letters, which have been published at different times.

SOLODURUM (Geog.) the modern Soleure, a town of Helvetia, of such antiquity that its origin is not known. It was occupied by the Helvetii in the time of Julius Cæsar.

SOLOMON (Bibl.) שלמה, the son of David and Bathsheba, was born A. M. 2971, A. C. 1033, was anointed king of Israel before the death of his father, and died after a reign of 40 years. 2 Sam. vii. &c.; 1 Kings viii.; 1 Chron. &c.; Joseph. Antiq. l. 8; Usser. Annal. &c.

SOLON (Hist.) Σόλων, one of the seven wise men of Greece, was born at Salamis, educated at Athens, and, being a descendant of king Codrus, he was, after having travelled over all Greece, chosen as archon and sovereign legislator of his country, at a time when it was torn by civil dissensions. In this capacity he made the most salutary regulations for the government of the state, and, having bound the Athenians by an oath that they would observe his laws for 100 years, he resigned his office, retired from Athens, travelled into Egypt, and visited the court of Crœsus. After a 10 years' absence he returned to Athens where his regulations having been disregarded by his factious countrymen, the supreme power had been seized by Pisistratus. Unwilling to be a spectator of his country's misfortunes he retired to Cyprus, where he died in the 80th year of his age, 558 years before the Christian æra. About 154 verses are preserved in the collection of Greek poets under the name of Solon's Elegies. [Vide Plate VII] Herod. l. 1; Cic. in Sen.; Plut. in Sol.; Diog. l. 1; Paus. l. 1, &c.

SOLYMAN, Shah (Hist.) succeeded his nephew Mohammed as sultan of the Seljuks, in the year of the Hegira 554, A. D. 1164, was deposed the next year, and died the year after his deposition, in the 45th year of his age.

SOLYMAN, first sultan of the third dynasty of the Seljukians, which were distinguished by the name of Rum, because they reigned over the Roman empire, or more properly the Greek empire, began his reign about the year of the Hegira 462, A. D. 1072, and was slain in battle in 478, after having taken Nice, Antioch, and many other places from the Greeks. He made Nice his royal residence.

SOLYMAN, the name of several Turkish princes.

SOLYMAN I, surnamed Chelebi, second son of Bajazet, escaped from the fatal battle of Ancyra, and seized the throne of his father; but being opposed by his brother Musa, he was slain by one of the soldiers of the latter, in the year of the Hegira 809, A. D. 1419, after a reign of five years.

SOLYMAN II, surnamed Kanuni, succeeded his father Selim I, in the year of the Hegira 927, A. D. 1537, or, according to some, 1520, and died at the age of 76, after a reign of 46 years, during which he took the island of Rhodes, and the town of Buda; but was unsuccessful in his attack on Vienna, where he lost 80,000 men.

SOLYMAN III, son of Ibrahim I, succeeded his brother Mahomet IV after his deposition in 1687, and died in 1691, after having left his affairs to his favourite Mustapha Coprogli.

SOMERS, John, Lord (Hist.) a lawyer, and the son of John Somers, a lawyer, and an adherent of Oliver Cromwell during the rebellion, was born at Worcester in 1650; educated at Oxford; studied law in the Middle Temple, and being called to the bar, first distinguished himself as counsel for the seven prelates, who were tried for opposing the dispensing power of James II; and at the revolution, which he zealously advocated, he was quickly raised through the gradations of the law to the office of Lord Keeper in 1693, and to that of Lord Chancellor in 1697, from which he was removed in 1700, and impeached in the Commons; but acquitted in the Lords, in consequence of a difference between the two houses. After this he took only an occasional part in public concerns, as in the affair of the Union, which he warmly supported, and died in 1716, leaving among his works, as a writer, 'Translation of the Epistle of Dido to Æneas,' and of 'Ariadne to Theseus;' also of 'Plutarch's Life of Alcibiades.' [Vide Plate XVII]

SOMERS, Lord (Her.) a title originally conferred on the Lord Chancellor Somers above-mentioned, which became extinct at his death, but was revived in 1784 in the person of sir Charles Cocks, first baronet, and a descendant in the female line from the family of Somers; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a chevron or, between three stags' scalps and attires argent.

Crest. On a wreath, a mount proper, and thereon a stag lodged and regardant argent.

Supporters. On each side a lion ermine, gorged dancette vert.

Motto. "Prodesse quam conspici."

SOMERSET, Henry, third Duke of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, signalized his valour in an extraordinary manner in France, particularly in a desperate assault of the Castle of St. Anjou, in Mayenne, in 27 Hen. VI; but being afterwards taken prisoner at the battle of Hexham, in the county of Northumberland, in 1463, he was beheaded for his adherence to the House of Lancaster.

SOMERSET, Charles, first Earl of Worcester, vide Worcester.

SOMERSET, Edward, fifth Earl, and second Marquis of Worcester, vide Worcester.

SOMERSET, Edward, Duke of, an illustrious statesman, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself early in arms during the reign of Henry VIII, and at the death of that king was chosen Protector to his nephew Edward VI, and after holding other high offices he was at length, by the practices of his enemies, condemned for high treason, and beheaded in 1551. During his protectorship he had consented to the sentence which condemned his brother, Henry Seymour, Lord High Admiral, to the Scaffold. [Vide Plate VII]

SOMERSET, Robert, Earl of, of the family of Ker, or Carr [vide Ker], the favourite of James I, at first served the King in the capacity of his page; but rising into favour, he was constituted in 1613 High Treasurer of Scotland, made a Privy Councillor, and ennobled by the titles of viscount of Rochester, and earl of Somerset. He and his countess (the infamous countess of Essex) were afterwards tried and condemned for the murder of sir Thomas Overbury; yet, after suffering an imprisonment of three or four years, he obtained a pardon in 1624, and died in 1645. [Vide Plate IX]

SOMERSET, Duke of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Seymour [vide Seymour]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Seymour, duke of Somerset, baron Seymour, and baronet.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth or, on a pile gules, between six fleurs-de-lis azure, three lions of England (an augmentation granted by Henry VIII, on his marriage with lady Jane Seymour); second and third the paternal coat of Seymour gules, two wings conjoined in lure, tips downwards or.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet or, a phœnix in flames proper, with wings expanded or, in memory of Edward VI; but the original crest was on a wreath, a pair of wings conjoined in lure, tips downwards, and crowned or.

Supporters. On the dexter side an unicorn argent, maned or, gorged with a ducal collar azure, to which is affixed a chain or; on the sinister, a bull azure, maned, collared, chained, and hoofed, as that on the dexter.

Motto. "Foy pour devoir."

SOMERSET, the family name of the duke of Beaufort, whose ancestor Charles, natural son of Henry Beaufort, third and last duke of Somerset of that family, bore the title of lord Herbert, in right of his wife Elizabeth, the sole daughter and heir of William Herbert, earl of Huntingdon, lord Herbert of Ragland, Chepstow, and Gower. In 1514 he was advanced to the dignity of earl of Worcester; in 1626 Edward, the fourth earl, was created viscount Somerset, of Cashel, co. Tipperary, in Ireland; in 1642 his son Henry was created marquis of Worcester; and in 1682 his grandson Henry, the third marquis, was advanced to the dignity of duke of Beaufort.

SOMERSETSHIRE (Geog.) a maritime county of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. W. by the Bristol Channel, N. by Gloucestershire, E. by Wiltshire, S. E. by Dorsetshire, and S. W. by Devonshire; being about 65 miles long, and 45 broad.

Chief Towns. Bath and Wells, two cities which form one bishopric, part of Bristol, Bridgewater, Somerton, Ilchester, Frome, Glastonbury, Shepton Mallet, Somerton, Wellington, &c.

Chief Rivers. The Avon, the Ivel, the Thone, the Brew, and the Parret.

History. On the invasion of the Romans Somersetshire was inhabited by the Belgæ; it was annexed by the former to the province Britannia Prima, and formed a part of the kingdom of the West Saxons during the Saxon heptarchy. During the rebellion it was the scene of several actions between the royalists and the rebels, particularly at Lansdown, and it was afterwards the principal theatre of rebellion.

SOMERTON, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Normanton.

SOMERTON (Geog.) a town of Somersetshire, in England, situated on the river Parret, 13 m. S. by W. Wells, 123 W. by S. London. This town, which is supposed to have been a Roman citadel, was strongly fortified in the time of the Saxon heptarchy, was the residence of Ina, and several other West Saxon kings, and was plundered by the Danes in the ninth century. John, king of France, was confined in the Castle here, which, in the time of Leland, was converted into a prison.

SOMERVILLE (Her.) the name of a family which derives its descent from sir Gualter de Somerville, who accompanied William the Conqueror into England, and obtained from him Whichnour, in Staffordshire, and Aston in Gloucestershire. From his eldest son sir Gualter descended sir Philip de Somerville, of Whichnour, who there instituted the well-known gift of a flitch of bacon to the husbands and wives who had lived for a year and a day without any strife, or, as it is otherwise stated, to the husbands who made oath that for a year and a day after their marriage they would not have changed their wives for any other. The last of this house was William Somerville, the poet, mentioned under Biography. William de Somerville, the second son of the first-mentioned sir Gualter, attached himself to king David I, and settled in Scotland. His descendant, Thomas de Somerville, was created a peer of Scotland, by the title of lord Somerville, in the reign of king Robert. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth azure, three stars, two and one, accompanied with seven cross crosslets fitchée, three, one, two, and one argent; second and third argent, three leopards' heads affrontée in fess, between three annulets, two in chief and one in base gules.

Crest. On a wheel or, a dragon vert, spitting fire.

Supporters. Two hounds proper, collared gules.

Motto. "Fear God in life."

SOMERVILLE, William (Biog.) a poet, and the last of the English branch of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born at Edston, in Warwickshire, in 1692, and died in 1743. He is now principally remembered as the author of the 'Chase.'

SOMNER, William (Biog.) an English antiquary, was born at Canterbury in 1606, and died in 1669, leaving 'The Antiquities of Canterbury,' 4to. 1640; and Appendix, or Glossarium, to the 'Historiæ Anglicanæ Scriptores,' &c.; 'A Treatise of Gavel-Kind,' &c. 4to. 1660; 'Of the Roman Ports and Forts in Kent,' published by James Brome, 8vo. Oxford, 1693; 'Julii Cæsaris Portus Iccius illustratus à Somnero,' &c. 8vo. 1694; besides which he wrote an elegy on the death of king Charles, entitled 'The Insecurity of Princes.'

SONDES, Lord (Her.) baron Sondes of Lees Court, co. Kent, the title enjoyed by the family of Watson [vide Watson]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, on a chevron engrailed azure, between three martlets sable, as many crescents or, for Watson; second and third or, two chevrons gules, for Monson, with a crescent in each quarter for difference.

Crest. On a wreath, a griffin's head erased argent, gorged with a ducal coronet or.

Supporters. On the dexter side, a griffin argent, gorged as the crest; on the sinister, a bear proper, gorged with a belt, buckled with strap pendant argent, charged with three crescents or.

Motto. "Esto quod esse videris."

SOPHOCLES (Hist.) Σοφοκλῆς, a distinguished tragic poet of Athens, who, after having commanded the Athenian armies in several battles, sometimes as the colleague of Pericles, and after having exercised the office of archon, acquired still more celebrity by his tragedies, of which he composed 120, but seven only are extant, namely, his Ajax, Electra, Œdipus Tyrannus, Œdipus of Colonos, Antigone, the Trachiniæ, and Philoctetes. He obtained the prize over many competitors, among whom was his friend and master Æschylus, and also Euripides, who however divided the applause of the Athenian public. The children of Sophocles wanted to get the possessions of their father, and therefore accused him before the Areopagus of being in his dotage; for the confutation of which charge he recited before his judges the Œdipus of Colonos, which he had just composed, and thus obtained a decisive verdict in his favour, to the confusion of his wicked sons. He died in the 91st year of his age, 406 years before the Christian æra, through excess of joy at having obtained the poetical prize at the Olympic Games, or, according to Lucian, from being choked by a grapestone that stuck in his throat. The first edition of Sophocles was printed by Aldus, at Venice, in 1502; but the subsequent editions of Capperonius, 2 vols. 4to. Paris, 1780; of Geneva, 4to. 1603; of Brunck, 4 vols. 8vo, 1786, are the most esteemed. [Vide Plate XXX]

SOPHONISBA (Hist.) a daughter of Asdrubal, the Carthaginian, and a celebrated beauty, was married to Syphax, a prince of Numidia; but on the defeat of her husband by the Romans and Masinissa, she fell into the hands of the latter, who, becoming enamoured of her, married her; but when he found himself compelled by Scipio, the Roman general, to put her away, he persuaded her to take poison for his sake. Sallust. de Jug. Bell.; Liv. l. 30; Justin. l. 33.

SORACTE (Geog.) or Soractes, now Monte S. Oreste, a mountain of Etruria, near the Tiber, seen from Rome, at the distance of 26 miles. It was sacred to Apollo, thence called Soractis. Hor. l. 1, od. 9; Virg. Æn. l. 11; Strab. l. 5; Plin. l. 2; Leand. Albert. Descript. Ital.; Cluv. Ital. Antiq. &c.

SORBAIT, Paul (Biog.) a physician, and native of Hainault, who died in 1691, was the author of 'Concilium Medicum,' &c. 1679; 'Medicina Universalis,' &c.

SORBIERE, Samuel (Biog.) a French physician, was born in 1615, and died in 1670, leaving 'Lettres et Discours sur diverses Matières Curieuses,' 1659; 'Epistolæ Illustrium eruditorum Virorum.'

SORBONNE, Robert de (Hist.) founder of the celebrated College called after him, was born in 1201 at Sorbonne, otherwise Sorbon, a little village in the diocese of Rheims, of an obscure family, according to Moreri, and not of the blood royal as asserted by Dupleix. Having obtained considerable reputation for piety, he became the confessor and favourite of St. Louis, and died in 1274, bequeathing all his property, which was very considerable, to the Society of Sorbonne, founded by himself, to consist of secular ecclesiastics, who were provided with fellowships on condition that they devoted their time wholly to study and to teaching gratis, and admitted to the degrees principally of doctors and bachelors in divinity. He was the author of several theological works, some of which have been printed in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum.'

SOSIGENES (Biog.) a mathematician of Egypt, who was employed by Julius Cæsar to assist in the correction of the calendar. Plin. l. 18; Suetonius, Dion, &c.

SOSIPATER (Bibl.) Σωσίπατρος, a kinsman of St. Paul. Rom. xvi.

SOSIPATER (Hist.) a captain of Judas Maccabæus' army, who, with Dositheus, defeated ten thousand men of the army of Timotheus, shut up in a strong hold. 2 Macc. xii. 19.

SOSTHENES (Bibl.) Σωσθένης, chief of the synagogue at Corinth, who in a tumult was beaten by the populace. Acts xviii.

SOTO, Peter (Biog.) a Dominican, and native of Cordova, who attended Philip of Spain into England as his confessor, when the latter married queen Mary, was professor of divinity at Oxford, and at the death of Mary was called to the Council of Trent. He died in 1563, leaving 'Institutiones Christianæ,' 1548, and some controversial works. He is to be distinguished from Dominic Soto, a Dominican of Segovia, who was sent by Charles V to the Council of Trent, and died in 1560, leaving 'De Justitia et Jure,' &c.

SOTWELL, Nathaniel (Biog.) more properly Southwell, in Latin Sotwellus, an English Jesuit of the 17th century, and one of the historians of his order, continued the Lives of eminent Authors among the Jesuits down to his own time, which had been begun by Ribadeneira and Alejambe. His improved edition was published under the title of 'Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu, Opus inchoatum à R. P. Petro Ribadeneira,' &c. fol. Rom. 1676.

SOUCHAI, John Baptist (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1687 at St. Amand, near Vendome, and died in 1746, leaving a translation of Brown's Vulgar Errors, and an edition of Ausonius, &c.

SOUCIET, Stephen (Biog.) a Jesuit, was born in 1671 at Bourges, and died in 1744, leaving 'Observations Astronomiques,' &c. 3 vols. 4to.; 'Dissertations Critiques sur les endroits difficiles de l'Ecriture Sainte,' 4to.; 'Dissertations contre la Chronologie de Newton,' 4to. &c.

SOUFFLOT, James Germain (Biog.) an architect, was born at Trenci in 1713, and died in 1780, leaving the church of St. Genevieve at Paris among the specimens of his skill.

SOUTH, Robert (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1633 at Hackney, in Middlesex, educated at Oxford, and died in 1716, leaving several Sermons, which have been printed in 6 vols. 8vo.; besides 'Opera Posthuma Latina,' consisting of orations and poems; and his 'Posthumous Works,' containing three sermons, an account of his travels into Poland, and memoirs of his life, &c. 2 vols. 8vo. By his will he left his fortune for the benefit of the church, the clergy, and the poor.

SOUTHAMPTON, William, Earl of (Hist.) a statesman and a warrior, of the family of Fitz-William, died in 1543, after having distinguished himself in the several capacities of Vice-Admiral of the Fleet, Admiral of England, Wales, Ireland, &c. Lord Privy Seal, Treasurer of the King's Household, &c.

SOUTHAMPTON, Thomas, Earl of, son of William Wriothesly, York Herald, was employed on several embassies in the reign of Henry VIII, by whom he was made Lord Chancellor, and died in 1550. His grandson Henry, the third earl, who was the friend of lord Essex, and patron of Shakespear, died in 1624, and was succeeded by his son Thomas, the friend of lord Clarendon, who was constituted Lord High Treasurer, and died in 1667.

SOUTHAMPTON, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred in 1537 on William Fitz-William above-mentioned, which became extinct at his death in 1543; but was revived in the person of Thomas Wriothesly above-mentioned in 1547, and became extinct at the death of Thomas, the fourth earl, in 1667.

SOUTHAMPTON, Lord, the title conferred on admiral Charles Fitz-Roy, brother of the duke of Grafton, the arms, &c. of which are the same as the duke of Grafton's with the difference.

SOUTHAMPTON (Geog.) a borough and county town of Hampshire, which is a county of itself, standing between the Itchen and Test, which here flow into an inlet of the sea, called Trissanton Bay, or Southampton Water, 12 m. S.S.W. Winchester, 75 W. S. W. London. Lon. 1° 24′ W. lat. 50° 54′ N. The name of this town, which in Doomsday-book is written Hanton, or Hentune, is supposed to be derived from the river Ant, or Antin. The Romans had a station at Bittern, about a mile and a half from Southampton, named Clausentum, which was abandoned on the erection of the present town. In the ninth century it was exposed to frequent ravages from the Danes, until the reign of Canute, who made Southampton his occasional residence. In 1345 the army which afterwards fought the battle of Crecy embarked here, as also did that which in 1415 fought at Agincourt under Henry V.

SOUTHERN, Thomas (Biog.) an English dramatic writer, was born in 1659 at Dublin, and died in 1756, leaving several tragedies, which were collected and published in 3 vols. 12mo.; his 'Oroonoko, or the Royal Slave,' is reckoned his most finished piece. [Vide Plate XXXI]

SOUTHWELL, Robert (Ecc.) an English Jesuit and poet, said to have been descended from an ancient family in Norfolk, or Suffolk, was born in 1560, and being sent from Rome, as a missionary into England, was apprehended, put to the torture, and executed at Tyburn in 1595, for being a priest and a preacher of the Romish religion. His poetical works are said to have gone through 24 editions, of which 11 were printed between 1593 and 1600.

SOUTHWELL (Her.) the name of a family of great antiquity in the county of Nottingham, which enjoy the peerage conferred in 1717 on sir Thomas Southwell, bart. who was created baron Southwell; and Thomas George, the third lord, was created in 1776 viscount Southwell.

SOUTHWELL (Biog.) vide Sotwell.

SOUTHWOLD (Geog.) a sea-port town of Suffolk, in England, standing on a cliff near a fine bay, 20 m. S. Yarmouth, and 105 N. E. London. Lon. 1° 54′ W. lat. 52° 20′ N. Southwold Bay, or Solebay, as it is called in history, was the scene of two engagements between the English under the duke of York, and the Dutch under admirals Opdam, and De Ruyter, namely, one in 1665, when the Dutch were beaten with the loss of 70 sail; and the other in 1672, when the issue was doubtful.

SOZOMENES, Hermias (Biog.) an ecclesiastical historian of the fifth century, who was born at Bethelia, a town of Palestine, is known by a work on the affairs of the church, which he continued down to 440. He was cotemporary with Socrates, whose history he follows in the most important particulars. His work was translated and published by Valesius, with Eusebius and the other ecclesiastical historians; and republished with additional notes by Reading, in 3 vols. fol. Lond. 1720.

SPAGNOLETTO, Joseph Ribera (Biog.) an artist of Xativa, a city in Spain, about ten leagues from Valentia, was born in 1589, and died in 1656, leaving a reputation little inferior to that of Caravaggio, whose style he followed. His principal works are at Naples, and in the Escurial in Spain.

SPAIN (Geog.) a great country in the south-west of Europe.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded by the Atlantic, the Mediterranean, Portugal, and France, extending from lon. 9 W. to 4 E. and from lat. 36 to 43 N. Its length from E. to W., that is, from the extreme point of Catalonia, to that of Galicia, is 650 miles, its greatest breadth from N. to S. 550.

Division. It is divided into the provinces of Old and New Castile, Andalusia, Arragon, Estremadura, Galicia, Leon, Asturias, Murcia, and Upper Navarre, several of which have been distinct kingdoms.

Chief Towns, &c. Vide Hispania.

History. Spain, which by the Romans was called Hispania, by the Greeks Ἰβηρία, Hesperia, remained in the hands of the former people until the fifth century, when it was over-run by the Alani, the Vandals, and the Suevi; the Alani took possession of Lusitania, the Vandals and Suevi of Galicia, Vandalusia, since changed to Andalusia, and other parts of Spain; but these people being soon after overpowered by the Visigoths, the Vandals retired to Africa; but the Suevi, although compelled to yield to the superior power of the Goths, yet retained a part of their possessions, and reigned in Galicia, according to Isidorus, for the space of 175 years; that is, from Ermeric, A. D. 408, to Andeca, who was defeated and dethroned by Leovigild in 581, when the whole country was subject to the Goths, who, under their leader Ataulphus, established a kingdom in Spain about A. D. 412. His successors were as follow:

In the reign of the last king Roderic, the Gothic monarchy in Spain was entirely subverted by the Moors, who, in the year 711 or 712, obtained a decisive victory over the Goths, which terminated in the entire conquest of the country. But the victors had scarcely gained quiet possession of their new conquests, before they found an unexpected enemy in a Spanish count, named Don Pelayo, or Pelagius, who having collected together all the natives who had fled to the mountains, attacked the Moors, and, obtaining considerable advantages over them, established the kingdom of the Asturias, over which he began to reign about 718. [Vide Asturias and Leon] This kingdom was united to that of Castile in 1037; and by the union of the latter with that of Arragon, the whole of Spain was formed into one kingdom, in the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, whose successors were as follow:

Kings of Spain in Chronological Succession.

SPAITLA (Geog.) a town situated on a rising ground 110 miles S. W. Tunis. Lon. 9° 10′ E. lat. 35° 10′ N. This is the Suffetula of the ancients, and is distinguished by some magnificent remains of ancient architecture; there being three temples, two of the Corinthian, and one of the Composite order, still remaining in a state of considerable preservation. There is also a sumptuous triumphal arch of the Corinthian order, with a smaller one on each side.

SPALATRO (Geog.) a sea-port of Austrian Dalmatia, on the Gulf of Venice, 110 miles N. W. Ragusa, 30 S. E. Sebenco. This town, called in Latin Spalatum, is supposed to derive its name from Palatium, a palace, because Dioclesian, after his abdication, built a palace in the neighbourhood for his place of residence, from which the present town took its rise.

SPALLANZANI, Lazarus (Biog.) a naturalist, was born in 1729 at Scandiano, in Italy, and died in 1798, leaving 'Experiments on the Circulation of the Blood,' and other works, which contain an account of the horrid cruelties he committed for the purpose of acquiring knowledge.

SPANHEIM, Ezekiel (Hist.) a diplomatist and scholar, son of Frederic Spanheim, mentioned under Biography, was born at Geneva in 1629, and died in 1710, after having been employed by the Elector of Brandenburgh as envoy-extraordinary at Paris three several times, and also sent on an embassy to England, where he spent the close of his life. He wrote 'Dissertationes de Præstantiâ et Usu Numismatum

Antiquorum,' 4to. Rom. 1664, Paris. 1671, and in 2 vols. fol. Lond. 1706; 'De Nummo Smyrnæorum,' &c.; and 'Orbis Romanus,' &c. both of which were inserted in Grævius' Thesaurus; the latter was also printed in 4to. Lond. 1704; he also published an edition of 'Juliani Imperatoris Opera,' &c.; and his notes on Callimachus were inserted in Grævius' edition of that author. [Vide Plate XXII]

Spanheim, Frederic (Biog.) professor of divinity at Leyden, and father of Ezekiel Spanheim above-mentioned, was born in 1600, of a good family, at Amberg, in the Upper Palatinate, and died in 1649, leaving a number of works, theological and historical, which were published separately, and also with those of his son. Frederic Spanheim, his second son, who died in 1701, was also a considerable scholar and writer, whose works were published at Leyden, in 3 vols. fol. 1701-3.

SPARROW, Anthony (Biog.) an English prelate, was born at Depden, in Suffolk, in 1643, educated at Cambridge, driven from his fellowship for his loyalty, during the rebellion, raised to the see of Exeter in 1667, translated to that of Norwich in 1678, and died in 1685, leaving among his works as an author, 'Rationale of the Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England,' 12mo. 1657, and frequently reprinted; the best edition is that of 1722, with Downe's Lives of the Compilers of the Liturgy, &c.

SPARTA (Geog.) vide Lacedæmon.

SPARTACUS (Hist.) a Thracian shepherd, and a gladiator, headed an insurrection against the Romans, against whom he stood his ground for some time, and gained many advantages over the Roman commanders, but at length he was defeated by Crassus, and fell fighting bravely over the dead bodies of those whom he had slain, A. C. 71. In this battle no less than 40,000 of the rebels were slain. Cic. Phil. 4; Horat. l. 3, od. 14; Liv. Epit. l. 95; Paterc. l. 2; Eutrop. l. 6; Flor. l. 3; Oros. l. 5.

SPARTIANUS, Ælius (Biog.) a Latin historian, who wrote the Lives of all the Roman emperors, from J. Cæsar to Dioclesian, of which there are extant the Lives of Adrian and Verus, &c. to Geta, published in the 'Scriptores Historiæ Augustæ.'

SPEED, John (Biog.) an English historian, was born about 1555 at Farrington, in Cheshire, and died in 1629, leaving 'Theatre of Great Britain,' 1606, reprinted in 1650; 'The History of Great Britain,' &c. 1614. [Vide Plate XXVI] His son, John Speed, who studied at Oxford, and died in 1640, wrote 'Stonehenge,' a pastoral, &c. John, the younger son of the latter, who was educated at Oxford, and was driven from his scholarship at St. John's during the rebellion, wrote 'Batt upon Batt,' &c. a poem; and 'The Vision,' &c. a poem.

SPELMAN, Sir Henry (Biog.) an English antiquary, descended from an ancient family that flourished in Hampshire, in the reign of Henry III, was born in 1562 at Congham, near Lynn Regis, in Norfolk, studied law at Lincoln's Inn, and died in 1641, leaving among his works, 'Discourse concerning the Original of the Four Law Terms of the Year,' which, though written in 1614, was not published until 1684, and reprinted in Hearne's 'Curious Discourses;' 'Glossarium, or Archæologus,' the first part of which was published in 1626, and the second part in 1664; 'Collection of the Councils, &c. 1664; 'The Original Growth, Propagation, and Condition, of Tenures,' &c. His Miscellaneous Tracts, &c. were published by bishop Gibson, first as 'The English Works of Sir Henry Spelman,' to which, in 1698, he added 'The Posthumous Works,' and both collections were reprinted in one vol. fol. in 1723. His eldest son, sir John Spelman, died in the service of Charles I at Oxford, in 1643, leaving some few pieces in favour of the royal cause. Edward Spelman, esq. the translator of Xenophon, and of Dionysius Halicarnassus, and author of a Tract on the Greek Accents, who died in 1767, was great great grandson of sir Henry Spelman. [Vide Plate XXII]

SPENCE, Joseph (Biog.) an English divine and scholar, was born in 1698, educated at New College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow, and was accidentally drowned in 1760 in his canal at Byfleet, in Surry, leaving 'Polymetis,' &c. a third edition of which appeared in folio in 1774; 'An Account of the Life, &c. of Mr. Blacklock,' &c. 8vo. prefixed to his poems; 'Moralities,' &c.; 'Crito, or a Dialogue on Beauty.' [Vide Plate XXIV]

SPENCER, Robert, Lord (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was appointed ambassador in 1603 to Frederick, duke of Wirtemberg, and died in 1627, after having joined the opposition party of that day, which afterwards overturned the state.

Spencer, William, second Lord, and first Earl of Sunderland, imbibed the spirit of his father, and for a while joined the rebellious faction which was then gathering strength to do mischief, but not approving of their violent measures, he returned to his duty, and fought in support of his sovereign at Edgehill, and on many other occasions, until the battle of Newbury in 1643, when he fell fighting nobly, being struck by a cannon ball.

Spencer, Robert, second Earl of Sunderland. Vide Sunderland.

Spencer (Her.) the name of a family which claims descent from the ancient baronial family of De Spencer, but their direct ancestor, of whom mention is made in records, was sir John Spencer, who flourished in the reigns of Henry VII and VIII. His descendant, Robert Spencer, was created a peer in 1603, by the title of lord Spencer, of Wormleighton, and his son Robert, the second lord above-mentioned, was advanced in 1643 to the dignity of earl of Sunderland. Charles, the fourth earl, became in right of his mother, Anne, daughter and co-heir of John Churchill, duke of Marlborough, second duke of Marlborough; and John, the nephew of this duke, was created in 1761 viscount Spencer, and baron Spencer, of Althorpe, co. Northampton, and advanced in 1765 to the dignities of viscount Althorpe, and earl of Spencer. The arms, &c. are the same as those of the duke of Marlborough, with the difference.

Spencer, Lord, of Wormleighton, the title by which George Spencer, eldest son of the duke of Marlborough, was summoned to the House of Peers in 1806, during the life-time of his father.

SPENSER, John (Hist.) an English divine, and a benefactor to Corpus College, Cambridge, where he was educated, was born in 1630, and died in 1695, leaving an estate which cost him 3635*l.* for the augmentation of the mastership, fellowships, and scholarships, &c. of his college. He wrote 'De Legibus Hebræorum Ritualibus et earum Rationibus Libri tres,' 2 vols. fol. 1685, 4to. Hag. 1686, and 2 vols. fol. Cantab. 1727.

Spenser, Edmund (Biog.) an English poet of the first rank, was born about 1553 in East Smithfield, in London, educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, and died in 1598. The most celebrated of his poems is his Faerie Queene, of which an edition by Mr. Todd, in 6 vols. 8vo. 1805, is reckoned the best. Spenser's remains were interred in Westminster Abbey, near those of Chaucer. What became of his wife and children is not known, but two sons, Sylvanus and Peregrine, are said to have survived him. [Vide Plate XXVII]

SPERONI, Sperone (Biog.) an Italian writer, was born at Padua in 1500, and died in 1588, leaving a number of works, which were published in 5 vols. 4to.

SPES (Myth.) Hope, a moral deity among the ancients, to whom a temple was erected at Rome.

SPES (Numis.) this deity is represented on medals, as in the annexed figure; under the form of a female, holding a half-blown flower in her hand; inscriptions, SPES AUG.—AUGG. &c. SPES PUBLICA. —SPES REIPUBLICAE, &c. Vaillant. Præst.; Patin. Impp. &c.

SPIELMANN, James Reinhold (Biog.) a physician, was born at Strasburg in 1722, and died in 1782, leaving 'Elementa Chemica;' 'Prodromus Floræ Argentinensis;' 'Pharmacopœïa Generalis,' &c.

SPIGELIUS (Biog.) or Vanden Spieghel Adrian, a physician and anatomist, was born in 1578 at Brussels, and died in 1625, leaving several works, which were published by Vander Linden, in 2 vols. fol. 1645.

SPINCKES, Nathaniel (Biog.) a nonjuring divine, was born in 1654 at Castor, in Northamptonshire, educated at Cambridge, consecrated one of the nonjuring bishops in 1713, and died in 1727, leaving some controversial pieces.

SPINELLO, Aretino (Biog.) an Italian painter, was born at Arezzo in 1328, and died in 1420, leaving the portraits of the popes Innocent IV, and Gregory IX, among the successful specimens of his skill. His son, Paris Spinello, who died at the age of 56, was also a famous painter.

SPINOLA, Ambrose (Hist.) a Spanish general, descended from a noble Genoese family, was born in 1569, and being set over the Spanish armies in the Low Countries, he distinguished himself against prince Maurice, of Nassau, and afterwards was employed in Italy with equal advantage, but failing in his attempts on the citadel of Casal, owing to the imprudent orders he received from his government, he died in 1630, of chagrin, as is supposed.

SPINOZA, Benedict de (Biog.) an atheistical writer of Portuguese extraction, was born about 1633 at Amsterdam, and died in 1677, leaving 'Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, &c.'

SPINTHER, Lentulus (Hist.) a Roman consul, and one of Pompey's friends, who fought on his side at the battle of Pharsalia.

SPIRE (Geog.) or Speyer, a town in the west of Germany, situated at the confluence of the Spirebach and the Rhine, 54 m. S. by E. Mentz. Lon. 8° 29′ E. lat. 49° 19′ N.

History of Spire.

Spire, called by the ancients Nemetes, or Noviomagus Nemetum, was the burial-place of many of the emperors of Germany, who held their diets here until 1689, when it was burnt by the French, and not rebuilt until 1697. In one of the assemblies held here in 1529, the reformers entered a protest against certain proceedings of the emperors, whence they got the name of Protestants. From 1795 to 1814, Spire belonged to the French, but at present it is the capital of the Bavarian province of the Rhine. It was formerly a bishop's see, but the bishopric was secularized in 1802.

SPITZBERGEN (Geog.) the most northern country in Europe, consisting of a group of dreary islands. It was first discovered by sir Hugh Willoughby in 1553, who took it for a part of Greenland; and being visited again in 1695, by William Barentz, and John Cornelius, two Dutchmen, they pretended to be the first discoverers, and gave it its present name, from the sharp pointed and rocky mountains with which it abounded. The Dutch attempted to make a settlement here, but all the settlers perished.

SPIZELIUS, Theophilus (Biog.) a Lutheran divine, was born in 1639, and died in 1691, leaving 'De Re Literaria Sinensium Commentarius,' 12mo. Lugd. Bat. 1660; 'Sacra Bibliothecarum Illustrium Arcana retecta,' &c. 8vo. August. 1668; 'Templum Honoris reseratum,' &c. 4to. ibid. 1673; 'Felix Litteratus,' 1676; 'Infelix Litteratus,' 1680; 'Litteratus Felicissimus,' three works on a subject which has been lately treated of by Mr. D'Israeli, in his 'Calamities of Authors.'

SPOLETIUM (Geog.) now Spoleto, a town of Umbria, which was in vain attacked by Annibal, after the battle of Thrasymene. It was a Roman colony, and a municipal town, which is much spoken of by ancient writers, and commemorated in inscriptions, as IIII VIR MUNICIPI ET ORDO SPOLETINORUM ET DECURIONES ET MUNICIPES. Cic. pro Balb.; Liv. l. 22; Paterc. l. 1; Strab. l. 5; Plin. l. 3; Appian. de Bell. Civil. l. 5; Sueton. in Vespas.; Flor. l. 3; Ammian. Marcellin. l. 13; Paul. Diacon. Hist. Miscell. l. 10; Zonaras, Leander Alberti, Claverius, &c.

SPOLETO (Geog.) a town of the Ecclesiastical States, and a capital of a duchy of the same name, called by the Romans Spoletium, [vide Spoletium] near the small river Mareggia, 15 miles S. S. E. Foligno, 55 N. N. E. Rome. Lon. 12° 35′ E. lat. 42° 44′ N. Its chief antiquities are two of the town gates, the ruins of a theatre, and those of a temple.

SPON, James (Biog.) a scholar, antiquary, and physician, was born at Lyons in 1647, and died in 1687, leaving 'Recherches des Antiquités de Lyon,' 8vo. 1674; 'Ignotorum atque Obscurorum Deorum Aræ,' 8vo. 1677; 'Voyage de la Grece et du Levant,' 3 vols. 12mo. 1677; 'Histoire de la Ville et de l'Etat de Geneva,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1683; 'Recherches curieuses d'Antiquité,' 4to. 1683; 'Miscellanea eruditæ Antiquitatis,' fol. 1683, &c.

SPONDANUS (Biog.) or de Sponde, Henry, a French ecclesiastic, was born in 1568, and died in 1643, after having left the Protestant profession to return to the Romish church. He abridged, and continued, the Annals of Baronius, and wrote also 'Annales Sacri a Mundi Creatione ad ejusdem Redemptionem.'

SPORADES (Geog.) Σποράδες, a number of islands in the Ægean Sea, in the neighbourhood of Crete, which are so called from σπείρω, to scatter, because they are scattered in the sea. Strab. l. 2; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 4.

SPOTSWOOD (Ecc.) or Spottiswood, John, archbishop of St. Andrews, and the descendant of an ancient family, was born in 1565, raised to the archiepiscopal see of Glasgow in 1604, translated to that of St. Andrew's in 1615, and died in 1639, leaving his 'History of the Church of Scotland,' &c. 1605. His second son, sir Robert Spotswood, a lawyer, was put to death by the rebels for adhering to the marquis of Montrose.

SPRAGGE, Sir Edward (Hist.) a naval commander, distinguished himself particularly in the naval engagement with Opdam in 1665, when he was knighted for his extraordinary valour, and after displaying the same prowess on several other occasions, he was drowned in 1673, at the close of the memorable and hard fought action between him and Van Tromp. [Vide Plate XV]

SPRANGHER, Bartholomew (Biog.) a German painter, was born at Antwerp in 1546, and died in 1623, after having acquired the reputation of a master in his art, and been patronized and honoured by the emperors Maximilian II, and Rodolphus.

SPRAT, Thomas (Biog.) an English prelate, was born in 1636 at Tallaton, in Devonshire, educated at Oxford, and after various preferments was raised to the see of Rochester in 1684, where he died in 1713, leaving, besides a few poems, 'The History of the Royal Society;' 'The Life of Cowley;' 'The History of the Rye House Plot;' 'The Relation of his own Examination,' to which he was subjected, as also to imprisonment, in consequence of a false charge brought against him by two men of infamous characters, that he had joined with Sancroft, Marlborough, Salisbury, and others, in an association to restore James II.

SQUIRE, Samuel (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1714 at Warminster, educated at Cambridge, and after different preferments, was raised to the see of St. David's, where he died in 1766, leaving 'An Enquiry into the Nature of the English Constitution,' &c.; 'The Ancient History of the Hebrews vindicated;' 'Plutarchi de Iside et Osiride Liber Græcè et Anglicè,' &c. Cantab. 1744; 'An Essay on the Balance of Civil Power in England,' &c.

STAAL, Madame de (Biog.) better known by her maiden name Mademoiselle de Launan; was the daughter of a painter at Paris, who abandoning her, she was taken into the Priory of St. Louis, at Rouen, and afterwards became the waiting-woman and confident of the duchess of Maine, whose misfortunes she shared, by being committed to the Bastile. On her release she married M. de Staal, an officer of the Swiss guards, and died in 1750. Her 'Memoires,' written by herself, were published in 3 vols. 12mo.

STACKHOUSE, Thomas (Biog.) an English clergyman, who was born in 1680, and died in 1752, is best known as the author of 'The History of the Bible.'

STAEL, Anne Louisa Germaine Necker, Baroness de (Biog.) daughter of the once celebrated Necker, was born in 1766, married in 1786 baron de Stael, a Swede, and died in 1817, leaving a number of works, which procured her some celebrity in her day.

STAFFORD, William, Viscount (Hist.) younger son of Thomas, earl of Arundel and Surry, being implicated in the pretended plot, of which Titus Oates was the fabricator, was tried on a charge of high treason, condemned, and executed on Tower Hill in 1680.

STAFFORD, Henry, Earl of, son of the preceding, remained true to his sovereign James II, and retiring to France at the Revolution, died in 1719.

STAFFORD, Earl of (Her.) vide Howard.

STAFFORD, Lord, the title enjoyed by the family of Jerningham, which was claimed by sir William Jerningham, bart. as the son and heir of sir William Jerningham, whose mother Mary, wife of sir George Jerningham, bart. was daughter and heir of Francis Plowden, esq. of Plowden, in Shropshire, by lady Mary, sister of John Paul, fourth and last earl of Stafford. [Vide Jerningham]

STAFFORD, Marquis of, one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Gower, [vide Gower] which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Gower, marquis of Stafford, earl Gower, viscount Trentham, and lord Gower, baron of Sittenham, and baronet.

Arms. Quarterly, gules and azure, a cross ermine, charged with a sword in the scabbard in pale proper, &c.

Crest. A stag's head erased, on the neck a mural crown or.

Motto. "Virtute et Valore."—Over the crest, "Jubilee."

STAMFORD, Henry, first Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, after receiving the dignity of an earldom from his sovereign Charles I, was among the first to take up arms against him at the breaking out of the rebellion, but after having experienced a signal defeat from the royalist forces at Stratton, and suffered materially from the successes of the adverse party, he begged leave to retire to France, and died in 1673.

STAMFORD, Thomas, Earl of, was one of the most strenuous opposers of the Romish religion, and consequently of the government of king James II, for which he was imprisoned, but being admitted to bail, he was included in the general pardon in 1685. Being no less strenuous in support of the revolution, he was sworn of the Privy Council to king William in 1694, but dismissed from all his employments on the accession of queen Anne, and died in 1719.

Stamford and Warrington, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Grey [vide Grey], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Grey, earl of Stamford and Warrington, baron Grey, of Groby, baron Bonville and Harrington.

Stanhope, Sir Edward (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the principal commanders who vanquished John, earl of Lincoln, at the battle of Stoke, which was fought in behalf of the impostor, Lambert Simnel, in the reign of Henry VII. In 1497 he was one of the commanders against the lord Audley and the Cornish rebels at the battle of Blackheath, when he was knighted for his valour in the field, and died in 1511.

Stanhope, Sir Michael, second son of the preceding, was in the service of Henry VIII from his tender years, and afterwards in that of Edward VI; but being implicated in the ruin of the Protector Somerset, he was beheaded in 1551, on the same day with sir Thomas Arundell, on Tower-hill.

Stanhope, Philip, first Earl of Chesterfield, vide Chesterfield.

Stanhope, Hon. Alexander, only son of Philip, first earl of Chesterfield, by his second lady Anne, daughter of sir John Pakington, a Privy Counsellor, and favourite of queen Elizabeth; was nominated by king William on his accession his Envoy-Extraordinary to Charles II, king of Spain, and afterwards went in the same character to the States General, where he remained until the year 1706, when he was recalled at his own request, and died the year after.

Stanhope, James, first Earl, eldest son of the preceding, left the university at the age of 17 or 18 to accompany his father to Spain. In 1694 he went as a volunteer into Flanders, and gave signal proofs of his undaunted valour, particularly at the siege of Namur, where he was desperately wounded; in 1702 he went in the expedition under the duke of Ormond, and acquitted himself with no less gallantry at the taking of the fort of Rodendallo; and in 1708 he was declared Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in Spain, when he reduced the celebrated port of Mahon in the island of Minorca. He was likewise employed on several diplomatic missions, both to Spain and to France; and, after taking a prominent part in the administration of public affairs in the reign of George I as successively one of the Principal Secretaries of State and First Lord of the Treasury, &c. he died in 1720.

Stanhope, Charles, third Earl, a strenuous partizan in favour of liberty, was born in 1753, educated principally at Geneva, and died in 1818. Agreeably to his lordship's views, he laid aside the distinctions of the peerage, and left all his disposable property away from his family, who did not fall in with his ideas. As a man of science he ranked high, being the author of many inventions, which were much esteemed, as a new printing-press, a monochord for tuning instruments, a vessel to sail against wind and tide, &c.

Stanhope (Her.) the name of a family of considerable antiquity, and no small distinction in history, was first ennobled in the person of sir John Stanhope, third son of sir Michael Stanhope above-mentioned, who, for his services as a Privy Councillor in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I, was created in 1605 a baron by the title of lord Stanhope, baron of Harrington, which title became extinct at the death of his son Charles, the second lord Stanhope, in 1675. Philip Stanhope, grand-nephew of the first lord, was created in 1616 baron Stanhope, of Shelford, co. Nottingham, and in 1628 earl of Chesterfield, co. Derby. [Vide Chesterfield] James Stanhope, eldest son of Alexander above-mentioned, was created in 1717 baron Stanhope of Elvaston, co. Derby, and viscount Stanhope, of Mahon; and in 1718 earl of Stanhope; the arms of this branch of the family are as follow:

Arms and Crest. The same as the earl of Chesterfield; a crescent for difference.

Supporters. On the dexter side, a talbot ermine; on the sinister, a wolf or, ducally crowned azure, each charged on the shoulder with a crescent azure.

Motto. "A deo et rege."

Stanhope, William, the fourth and youngest son of John Stanhope, and grandson of John Stanhope, half-brother to the first earl of Chesterfield, was created in 1742 viscount Petersham and earl of Harrington. [Vide Harrington]

Stanhope, Lord, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Chesterfield.

Stanhope, another branch of the same family, descended from Philip the First, earl of Chesterfield, also enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet conferred in 1807 on sir Edwyn Francis Stanhope.

STANLEY, Sir John de (Hist.) a great soldier and statesman, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, overthrew a famous French champion in the presence of Edward III. He was afterwards employed by Richard II in Ireland, where, having reduced O'Neil, O'Connor, and other chieftains, he was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in 1379. In 1395 he signalized himself at Roxburgh Castle in Scotland; and, after being once more appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland on the accession of Henry V, he died in 1413.

Stanley, Thomas, first Lord, his grandson was constituted in the 9th year of king Henry VI, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, where he signalized himself by the firmness of his government, and was afterwards employed on several missions to Scotland.

Stanley, Thomas, first Earl of Derby, vide Derby.

Stanley, George, eldest surviving son of the first earl of Derby. [Vide Strange]

Stanley, Sir Edward, Lord Monteagle, fifth son of the earl of Derby. [Vide Monteagle]

Stanley, James, sixth son of the said earl of Derby, was, after different preferments, raised to the see of Ely in 1506, and died in 1515, after having been a great benefactor to Jesus College, Cambridge; also to Manchester College, of which he was warden; and to the episcopal palace at Somersham, in Huntingdonshire.

Stanley, Sir William, second son of Thomas, first lord Stanley, and brother to the foresaid earl of Derby, was appointed justice of the North on the accession of Richard III, and was afterwards very instrumental in procuring the crown for Henry VII at the battle of Bosworth; but being implicated in the conspiracy for setting Perkin Warbeck on the throne, he lost his head in 1494.

Stanley (Her.) the name of a family, who derived their descent from Adam de Audley, who came into England with William the Conqueror. His grandson Adam married Mabilla, daughter and heir of Henry de Stonley, or Stanley, lord of the manor of Stonley, or Stanley, co. Stafford. Thomas Stanley above-mentioned was the first that was ennobled, he having summons to Parliament in 1455 as lord Stanley. His eldest son Thomas was further advanced in 1485 to the dignity of an earl. Two branches of the same family also enjoy the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1660 on sir Thomas Stanley, descended from the third son of Thomas, the first lord Stanley; and in 1661 on sir William Stanley.

Stanley, Lord, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Derby.

Stanley, Thomas (Biog.) a scholar and critic, of the family above-mentioned, but in an oblique line, was the descendant of Thomas Stanley, a natural son of Edward, earl of Derby. He was born in 1625, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1678, leaving, 1. 'History of Philosophy,' &c. 1655, and reprinted in 1687; and in 4to. 1743; also translated into Latin, and published at Leipsig in 1711. 2. An edition of 'Æschylus,' which is unrivalled in value. Dr. Butler has reprinted this edition in 2 vols. 4to. with additional notes.

STANLEY, William, an English divine, was born in 1647 at Hinckley, in Leicestershire, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1730, leaving 'The Devotions of the Church of Rome compared with those of the Church of England,' and 'The Faith and Practice of a Church-of-England-Man,' besides some sermons, &c.

STANYHURST, Richard (Biog.) an historian, poet, and divine, and a native of Dublin in the 16th century, wrote, 1. 'Harmonia, seu Catena Dialectica in Porphyrium,' fol. Lond. 1570. 2. 'De Rebus in Hibernia Gestis, Lib. IV,' fol. Lond. and Antv. 1584. 3. 'Descriptio Hiberniæ,' inserted in Holingshed's Chronicle. 4. 'The four first Books of Virgil's Æneis in English Hexameters,' 8vo. 1583, &c.

STAPLEDON, Walter (Hist.) a statesman, prelate, and public benefactor, so named from Stapledon, in the parish of Cookberry, the ancient residence of the family, was advanced to the see of Exeter in 1307, after which he was appointed a Privy Counsellor and Lord Treasurer to Edward II, and employed on several important embassies; but becoming an object of popular resentment on account of his fidelity to his sovereign, he was murdered by the populace, who seized and beheaded him, Oct. 15, 1326, near the north door of St. Paul's, together with his brother, sir Richard Stapledon, while in his capacity as guardian of the city of London during the king's absence, he was taking measures to preserve the loyalty of the metropolis. According to Godwin, his body was buried in a heap of sand at the back of his house without Temple-bar; but Walsingham informs us that it was thrown into the river. His murderers, or as many of them as could be found, expiated their offence on the gallows. His memory is held in veneration for his love of learning, which he testified by the foundation of Hart-Hall, Oxford, called after him Stapledon-Hall; but by Edmund Stafford, bishop of Exeter, another great benefactor, was named Exeter-Hall, which became a corporate body in 1565, through the interest and exertions of sir William Petre, after which it acquired the name of Exeter College. [Vide Plate XII]

STAPLETON, Sir Robert, a loyalist and poet, who, after serving Charles I as gentleman-usher to the prince of Wales, adhered to his royal master in his troubles, was knighted for his valour at the battle of Edge-hill, and died in 1669 in the service and esteem of Charles II, leaving, besides his dramatic pieces, 'The Step-Mother,' and 'The Royal Choice,' &c. translations of Musæus and Juvenal, 'The Loves of Hero and Leander,' from the Greek of Musæus, which was published in 8vo. London, 1647, and afterwards reduced into a dramatic poem; his 'Juvenal' was also published in the same year. In 1650 he translated Strada's 'History of the Belgic War,' fol.

STAPLETON (Her.) the family name of lord le Despenser, who derived this title from the Despensers by the marriage of Catherine, the grand-daughter of Thomas, lord le Despenser, last earl of Westmoreland, with sir Thomas Stapleton, whose ancestors held the degree of knight as early as Henry II.

STAPLETON, Thomas (Biog.) a controversialist on the side of the Romish church, was born in 1535 at Henfield, in Sussex, educated at Oxford, and died in 1598, leaving a number of works that were published collectively in 4 vols. fol. Paris. 1590.

STATIRA (Hist.) a daughter of Darius, who was married to Alexander, but was cruelly put to death by Roxana after the decease of the conqueror. Justin. l. 12; Q. Curt. l. 4; Plut. in Alex.

STATIRA, a sister of Darius, who died in the camp of Alexander. Plut. in Alex.

STATIUS, Publius Papinius (Biog.) a Roman poet, who was descended from a good family of Naples, flourished in the reign of Domitian, and died about the 100th year of the Christian æra; the best editions of this writer are that of Barthius, 2 vols. 4to. Cygn. the Variorum, Lugd. Bat. 1671; and the Delphin, 2 vols. 4to. Paris. 1685.

STAVELEY, Thomas (Biog.) an antiquary, was born at Cassington, in Leicestershire, educated at Cambridge, studied law at the Inner Temple, and died in 1683, leaving large collections for the history of Leicestershire, besides two small works, entitled 'The Romish Horse-leech,' 8vo. 1674, and 'A History of Churches in England,' 8vo. 1712.

STAUNFORD (Hist.) or Stanford, Sir William, a distinguished lawyer, was born in 1509 at Hadley, in Middlesex, studied at Oxford and Gray's Inn, and passing through the various gradations of the law, was promoted to the bench as a judge of the Common Pleas in 1554, and died in 1558, leaving, 1. 'Placita Coronæ,' in French, 4to. 1557, and often reprinted since. 2. 'Exposition of the King's Prerogative,' printed with the former.

STAUNTON, Sir George Leonard, Bart. (Hist.) a physician, and son of a gentleman of small fortune in Galway, a county of Ireland, resided for some time in India as secretary to lord Macartney, in which capacity he was sent as one of the commissioners to treat of peace with Tippoo Saib. He was afterwards appointed secretary to lord Macartney on his embassy to China, and had also the title of Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary bestowed on him in order to be able to supply the place of the ambassador in case of any accident befalling the latter. On his return he published an account of the embassy in 2 vols. 4to. and died in 1801, leaving a son, sir Thomas Staunton.

STAVORDALE, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Ilchester.

STAWEL, Sir John (Hist.) a steady and consistent loyalist, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself by his valour and conduct during the fatal struggle which his sovereign and loyal subjects were making for their rights, until the capture of Exeter by sir Thomas Fairfax, when, in violation of the terms of capitulation, he was exposed to perpetual plunder, imprisonment, and ill-treatment from the usurping powers. He however lived to see the restoration, and died in 1662, at the age of 60. His sons, Ralph and George, deserved no less of their sovereign, for whom they fought manfully.

STAWEL (Her.) a family of considerable antiquity, which was ennobled in the person of Ralph Stawel, son of the royalist above-mentioned, who was created in 1682 a peer of this realm by the style and title of lord Stawel, baron Stawel, of Somerton, co. Somerset, which became extinct at the death of Edward, fourth lord Stawel, but was revived in the person of his daughter Mary, who was married to the right hon. Henry Bilson Legge, and was created in 1760 baroness Stawel, of Somerton; but at the death of her son, Henry Stawel Bilson Legge, in 1820 the title became again extinct.

STAYNER, Sir Richard (Hist.) a naval commander, first distinguished himself in 1655 by the destruction of the Spanish flotilla in the bay of Santa Cruz, which he effected under the orders of admiral Blake; and, after contributing to the restoration, he continued to serve his sovereign, Charles II, in the capacity of admiral.

STEARNE (Biog.) vide Sterne.

STEBBING, Henry (Biog.) an English divine, who was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1763, distinguished himself greatly in the Bangorian controversy.

STEDMAN, John Gabriel (Biog.) a military officer, and native of Scotland, was born in 1745, and died in 1797, after having been employed in the Dutch service against the revolted negroes of Surinam. He published an account of this expedition in 2 vols. 4to., and also a history of the American War.

STEELE, Sir Richard (Biog.) the first of the British essayists, was born in 1671 at Dublin, educated at Oxford, and died in 1729. He is known for the part which he took in 'The Tatler;' 'The Spectator;' 'The Guardian;' and 'The Englishman.' The first number of 'The Tatler,' which he began and carried on principally by himself, was published April 12, 1709, and the last Jan. 2, 1711. The first number of the 'Spectator,' which he wrote in concert with Addison, was published March 1, 1711; that of 'The Guardian,' March 12, 1713; besides which he wrote the comedies called 'The Tender Husband,' and 'The Lying Lover;' &c. and a religious book entitled 'The Christian Hero;' and several political tracts, which were collected and published in 12mo. 1715. The last paper of 'The Englishman,' and 'The Crisis,' forming part of these, occasioned his expulsion from the House of Commons on the score of their being seditious. [Vide Plate XXXVIII]

STEEN, Jan (Biog.) a painter, was born at Leyden in 1636, and died in 1689, or, according to Houbraken, in 1678, leaving several pieces, which have risen very materially in their value since his death, and fetch nearly as high a price as the works of the first masters.

STEEVENS, George (Biog.) a commentator on the works of Shakespeare, was born in 1736 at Stepney, studied for some time at Cambridge, and died in 1800. He commenced his editorial labours in 1766 by publishing 20 of Shakespeare's plays in 4 vols. 8vo. In 1770 he was employed with Dr. Johnson in the edition of all Shakespeare's plays in 10 vols. 8vo. 1773, which was first called Johnson's and Steevens' edition. In 1778 it was reprinted under the inspection of Mr. Steevens alone, and again in 1785. [Vide Plate XL]

STEFFANI, Agostino (Biog.) a musical composer, was born in 1655, according to the German authorities, at Leipzig, but Handel and the Italians make him a native of the Venetian state. He died in 1729, leaving a number of Operas, and also a little tract entitled 'Della Certezza de Principii della Musica.'

STELLA, James (Biog.) a painter of Flemish extraction, was born in 1596 at Lyons, and died in 1647, after having obtained considerable reputation in his art.

STENTOR (Myth.) Στέντωρ, a Greek at the Trojan war, who was remarkable for the loudness of his voice, which is said to have equalled that of 50 men. Hom. Il. l. 5.

STENWYCK (Biog.) or Steenwyck, Henry, a painter, surnamed the Old, was born at Steenwyck in 1550, and died in 1603. The genuine pieces of this master are said to be extremely scarce and highly prized.

STENWYCK, or Steenwyck, Henry, surnamed the Young, son of the preceding, and also a painter, was born about 1589, and died in London, but at what time is not known, after having found great encouragement in England. His widow followed the profession of perspective painting, both in the life-time of her husband and after his death, at Amsterdam, where she lived in affluence.

STEPHANAS (Bibl.) Στεφανᾶς, a Christian of Corinth, whose family St. Paul baptized. 1 Cor. i. 16; xvi. 15, &c.; Chrysost. Homil. 44.

STEPHANUS, Byzantinus (Biog.) a grammarian of the fifth and sixth centuries, and a native of Constantinople, whose Geographical Dictionary has descended to us in the form of an abridgement from the pen of Hermolaus the grammarian. The best edition of this work is that of Gronovius, 2 vols. fol. Lugd. Bat. 1694.

STEPHANUS, familiarly called in English Stephens, and in French Etienne, the name of a family of learned printers. Henry Stephens, the first of this family, was born in 1470, and died in 1520. He had three sons, Francis, Robert, and Charles, all printers, of whom Robert, who died in 1559, was the most known as the editor and printer of the Hebrew Bible in 4 vols. 4to., and 8 vols. 16mo.; the Latin Bible, fol. 1538-40; and the Greek New Testament, fol. 1530. His brother Charles, who died in 1564, was the author of 'Dictionarium Historico-Geographico-Poeticum,' 4to. 1566, and frequently reprinted since; also translated into English by Lloyd, and published at Oxford in 1670, and London in 1686. Henry, the eldest son of Robert, and the most distinguished of his family, was born in 1528, and died in an hospital at Lyons in 1598, in a state of derangement brought on by his distresses. His name is now become familiar by his Greek Thesaurus, which remains a stupendous monument of his industry and erudition; it was first published in 4 vols. fol., and has been lately reprinted, with considerable additions, at the press of Messrs. Valpy. He also wrote 'Ciceronianum Lexicon Græco-Latinum;' 'Dictionarium Medicum;' 'Admonitio de Abusu Linguæ Græcæ,' &c. There were two others of the same christian and surname, besides several others.

STEPHEN, St. (Bibl.) one of the seven deacons, and the first martyr, is supposed to have studied at the feet of Gamaliel. He was stoned to death by the Jews A. D. 33, and his death is memorable for the part which Saul, afterwards Paul, took in it. His memory has been particularly honoured in the Christian church. Acts vi.—viii.; S. August. de Civ. Dei. l. 22; Epiphan. de Christ. c. 4; Baron. Annal.

STEPHEN (Hist.) the name of several kings.

King of England.

STEPHEN of Blois, son of Henry, count of Blois, by Alice, daughter of William the conqueror, seized the English throne at the death of Henry to the injury of Matilda, the king's daughter, and the rightful heir, who, after a long struggle with various success, agreed in 1153 to leave Stephen in quiet possession of the kingdom, on condition that her son Henry should succeed at his death. Stephen died the following year, and Henry peacefully ascended the throne. [Vide Plate III]

Kings of Hungary.

STEPHEN, St., was born in 979, succeeded his father Geisa in 997, and died in 1038, after a reign of 41 years, during which he introduced Christianity, and established the government of his country, both political and ecclesiastical, by a code of wholesome laws. His queen Gisela, sister of the emperor Henry II, co-operated with him for the good of his subjects. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

STEPHEN II, succeeded Coloman II in 1114, and died after a reign of 17 years and upwards, in which he maintained a war against the Russians, the Venetians, and the Poles, &c.

STEPHEN III, succeeded his father Geisa III in 1161, and died in 1173, after having defeated his two uncles, Ladislaus and Stephen, who wanted to usurp the throne.

STEPHEN IV, succeeded his father Bela IV in 1260, and died in 1272. Otho. Fris. l. 1; Bonfin. de Reb. Hung.; Æn. Sylv. Hist. &c.

Kings of Dalmatia and Servia.

STEPHEN I, son of Crescimir I, succeeded his father in 1080, and died after a short reign.

STEPHEN II, son of Crescimir III, was restored to the throne of his ancestors by the emperor of Constantinople, and was succeeded by his son Crescimir IV.

STEPHEN III, the last king of Dalmatia, succeeded Zuinimir, and was killed in battle in 1102.

King of Poland.

STEPHEN, of the family of Bathori, was elected in 1575, and died in 1586, when his nephew Sigismund succeeded him.

STEPHEN (Ecc.) the name of several popes.

STEPHEN I, St. succeeded Lucius, bishop of Rome, in 254, and died in 257, having suffered martyrdom according to some accounts. He was succeeded by S. Sixtus. S. Cyprian. ep. 66; Baron. Annal.

STEPHEN II, succeeded Zachariah in 752, and held the see only a few days, when he was succeeded by STEPHEN III, who, by the assistance of Pepin, obtained from Aistulphus, king of Lombardy, the exarchate of Ravenna, and some other accessions to the papal dominions, and died in 757. Some writers have ascribed these events to the second pope of this name.

STEPHEN IV, or III, according to some, tore out the eyes of his rival, Constantine, who was deposed, and died in 772. He was succeeded by Adrian I.

STEPHEN V, or IV, a Roman by birth, was elected after Leo III, consecrated Louis the Debonnaire at Rheims immediately after, and died in 817, having Paschal I for a successor.

STEPHEN VI, succeeded Adrian VI in 885, and died in 891, having Formosus for a successor.

STEPHEN VII, or VI, was raised to the papal chair in 896, after the expulsion of Boniface the antipope, and was imprisoned and strangled by a faction in 900, when he was succeeded by Romanus I.

STEPHEN VIII, or VII, successor to Leo VI, died in 931, in the second year of his pontificate.

STEPHEN IX, or VIII, a German, succeeded Leo VII in 939, and died in 942, after having been attacked and his face disfigured by the Roman populace, who hated him. He was succeeded by Martin II.

STEPHEN X, or IX, brother of Godfrey, duke of Lorraine, was taken from the monastery of Mount Cassino to sit in the papal chair in 1057, and died the next year. Platin. et Ciacon. in Vit.; Baronius, Possevin, &c.

STEPHENS (Biog.) vide Stephanus.

STEPHENS, Jeremy, a divine, was born in 1592, and died in 1665, leaving 'Notæ in D. Cyprian. de Unitate Ecclesiæ,' 8vo. Lond. 1632; and 'Notæ in D. Cyprian. de Bono Patientiæ,' 8vo. 1633; 'Apology for the Ancient Right and Power of the Bishops to Sit and Vote in Parliaments,' 1660; 'B. Gregorii magni, Episcopi Romani, de Cura Pastorali,' &c.

STEPHENS, John, a military officer, who, after serving in the army of James II, had recourse to his pen for a subsistence, and died in 1726, leaving a 'Spanish and English Dictionary;' a translation of Mariana's 'History of Spain,' &c.

STEPHENS, Robert, an antiquary, who was educated at Oxford, studied law at the Middle Temple, and died in 1732, published a collection of Bacon's Letters in 2 vols. fol.

STEPNEY, George (Hist.) a statesman and a poet, descended from a family of Pendigrast, in Pembrokeshire, was born in London in 1663, and died in 1707, after having been sent on embassies to different foreign courts; as, that of the elector of Brandenburg, of the emperor of Germany, of the electors of Metz, &c. His poetical pieces have gained him a place in the collection of English poets; besides which he wrote some political pieces in prose, one of which, namely, 'An Essay on the Present Interest of England,' &c. was reprinted in the collection of Tracts called 'Lord Somers' Collection.'

STEARNE, John (Hist.) or Stearne, an Irish physician, nephew of archbishop Usher, was born in 1622 in the county of Meath, driven from his fellowship in the college of Dublin by the usurping powers, restored at the restoration, and died in 1669, leaving 'Aphorismi de Felicitate,' Eblan. 1654; 'De Morte Dissertatio,' 1656, and 1659, &c.; besides 'De Obstinatione, Opus Posthumum, Pietatem Christiano-Stoicam Scholastico more suadens,' which was published by Mr. Dodwell in 1672.

STERNE, Richard (Ecc.) an English prelate, descended from a family of Suffolk, was born at Mansfield, in Nottinghamshire, in 1596, educated at Cambridge, suffered much for his loyalty during the usurpation, was appointed bishop of Carlisle at the restoration, translated to the archiepiscopal see of York at the death of Dr. Frewen, and died in 1683, leaving many liberal benefactions to Benet and Jesus Colleges, to the rebuilding of St. Paul's, and other public purposes. Among his works as an author he left some Latin verses, and 'Summæ Logicæ,' &c.; besides which he had a share in the Polyglot Bible.

STERNE, John, an Irish prelate, and son of John Sterne above-mentioned, became successively vicar of Trim, chancellor and dean of St. Patrick's, bishop of Dromore in 1713, and of Clogher in 1717, and died in 1745, leaving his whole fortune to public institutions. He had previously expended very large sums on his episcopal palace and on the college of Dublin.

STERNE, Laurence (Biog.) said to be great grandson of the preceding, was born in 1713 at Clonmel, in the south of Ireland, and died in 1768, leaving his well-known works of 'Tristram Shandy;' 'Sentimental Journey;' some volumes of 'Sermons,' and some Letters, published since his death. [Vide Plate XXXVIII]

STERNHOLD, Thomas (Biog.) an English poet, was born, according to Hollingshed, at Southampton, studied some time at Oxford, and died in 1549, leaving 51 of the Psalms translated into English metre, to which were added the translations of the remainder by John Hopkins, his principal successor in this work. The complete version was printed in 1562.

STESICHORUS (Biog.) an ancient Greek poet, was born at Himera, a city of Sicily, and died in 556 A. C. at the age of 80, leaving a book of Lyrics, of which some few fragments are extant, inserted in the collection of Fulvius Ursinus, 8vo. Antv. 1568.

STETTIN (Geog.) a town in the Prussian states, capital of Pomerania, situated on the Oder, about 60 m. from the Baltic, 80 N. N. E. Berlin. Lon. 14° 45′ E., lat. 53° 25′ N. Stettin is a place of some antiquity, which was inhabited successively by the Vandals and Saxons, after which it was subject to the dukes of Pomerania, from whom it passed into the family of Brandenburgh. It was subsequently captured by the Swedes, in whose hands it remained for the most part until 1715, when it was finally ceded to Prussia, in whose possession it has remained ever since, except during the interval in which the French under Buonaparte prevailed in Germany.

STEVENS, William (Biog.) a learned citizen of London, and a hosier by trade, cousin to bishop Horne, was born in 1732 in the parish of St. Saviour's, Southwark, and died in 1807, after having employed as much leisure as the attention to his business afforded in the pursuits of learning, particularly in the study of theology. Among his works, which he published without a name, are 'An Essay on the Nature and Constitution of the Christian Church,' which has been placed by the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge among their tracts; 'A Discourse on the English Constitution, extracted from a late eminent writer,' &c. He afterwards collected all his pieces into a volume, and published them under the title of 'Ουδενος εργα;' i. e. the Works of Nobody, of which he gave copies as presents to his friends.

STEVINUS, Simon (Biog.) or Stevin, a French mathematician of Bruges, who died in 1633, was the author of several works on mathematical subjects, which were translated into Latin by Snellius in two volumes folio. There are also two editions in folio, both printed at Leyden in 1608, and 1634, with the notes of Albert Girard.

STEWART, Alexander (Hist.) High Steward of Scotland, was, in 1255, one of the counsellors to Alexander III, and one of the regents of Scotland. He acted as principal commander under that monarch at the battle of Largs, in Cunningham, in 1263, when the Scotch obtained a signal victory over the Norwegians under Haco, and is said to have died in 1283, in the 69th year of his age.

STEWART, James, succeeded his father as High Steward of Scotland, and, on the unfortunate death of Alexander III, he was appointed one of the six regents of that kingdom under queen Margaret; and, after having supported the cause of Baliol against king Edward to the utmost of his power, he died in 1309, in the 66th year of his age.

STEWART, Walter, who was born in 1293, and succeeded his father as High Steward, had a considerable share in the victory of Bannockburn; and, on the capture of Berwick from the English in 1318, the charge of that fortress was committed to the High Steward, who defeated the attempts made against it by Edward II, and afterwards endeavoured, by forced marches, to surprize the latter, who with difficulty escaped to York. This Walter acted his part on all occasions with a noble spirit, and died in the 33d year of his age. He married Marjory, the daughter of king Robert, and was destined, had he lived, to be his successor to the throne.

STEWART, Robert, son of the preceding, afterwards ascended the throne of Scotland by the title of Robert II.

STEWART, Robert, Duke of Albany, vide Albany.

STEWART, Sir Alan, of Dreghorn, ancestor to the duke of Lennox and Richmond, accompanied Edward Bruce into Ireland in 1315, where he had a share in the military exploits of that expedition. He was afterwards killed, with his two brothers, sir James and sir John, at the battle of Halidon-hill in 1333.

STEWART, Sir John, of Derneley, was sent into France in 1420 with John, earl of Buchan, and Archibald, earl of Wigton, at the head of 7000 well-chosen troops to the succour of Charles the Dauphin, afterwards Charles VII, and performed good service there in conquering the English, but was slain in an engagement near Orleans in 1428.

STEWART, Sir William, brother of the preceding, was taken prisoner in 1400 at Fullhopelaw, in Northumberland, and is said to have been released after 13 years' captivity, when he accompanied his brother, sir John Stewart of Derneley, or Darnley, and fell with him near Orleans. He is supposed by some to be the same as sir William Stewart of Jedworth, the ancestor of the earl of Galloway.

STEWART, Sir John, first Earl of Lennox, vide Lennox.

STEWART, Sir William, of Teviot-dale, was taken prisoner at the battle of Homildon in 1402 by Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur, and was executed by his order for high treason, upon the allegation that he had been a subject to the king of England in his early youth. This sir William Stewart, who is styled by some sir William Stewart of Jedworth and Teviot-dale, is considered to be the ancestor of the earl of Galloway, but, in the opinion of others, sir William Stewart of Jedworth, the undoubted ancestor of the earl of Galloway, was the brother of sir John Stewart of Derneley, or Darnley, who fell near Orleans as above-mentioned. On this latter supposition the earl of Galloway is the male representative of the royal house of Stewart, which is said to have failed at the death of cardinal York.

STEWART, William, second son of sir Thomas Stewart, ancestor of the earl of Blantyre, was born at Glasgow about 1479, and, embracing the ecclesiastical profession, he was raised to the see of Aberdeen in 1532, after having been constituted High Treasurer of Scotland in 1530. He was sent in 1534 on an embassy to England, and died in 1545, after having been employed in several secret commissions.

STEWART, Francis, son of John Stewart, natural son of James V of Scotland, was in special favour with James VI, by whom he was left to govern the kingdom in 1589, when the king went to Denmark; but, being afterwards charged with malpractices, he broke out into open rebellion, and attempted to seize the person of the king, but, failing in this and some other attempts to raise a party, he found himself at length deserted by all his followers, and obliged to fly the realm. He escaped first to France, and afterwards to Spain and Italy, where he lived and died in obscurity.

STEWART, Sir James, of Bute, grandfather of the first earl of Bute, was a firm adherent to his sovereign, Charles I, in the time of the rebellion, for which he suffered grievously in his person and estate, and died in 1662.

STEWART, Andrew, commonly styled Captain Andrew, who was of the family of lord Castle-Stewart, went from Scotland to Ireland in 1627, and, after having distinguished himself for an inflexible loyalty, he was put to death by the rebels in 1650.

STEWART (Her.) or, as it is mostly written in history, Stuart, the name of an ancient and noble family in Scotland, which gave birth to a race of Scottish kings, and is supposed by Pinkerton to be so called from Alan, who, in the reign of David I, was Dapifer; i. e. Steward of Scotland. His descendant Robert, the seventh Lord High Steward, ascended the throne of Scotland by the title of Robert II. Other branches of the same family successively enjoyed the titles of duke of Albany, duke of Lennox, duke of Ross, and marquis of Ormond, earl of Angus, earl of Arran, earl of Athol, earl of Buchan, earl of Bothwell, earl of Orkney, lord Methuen, lord Ochiltree, lord Pitterween, and lord St. Colme, which are now extinct. Other titles are still enjoyed by different branches of the same family; namely, marquis of Bute, marquis of Londonderry, earl of Galloway, earl of Moray, earl of Castle-Stewart, and earl of Traquair. The marquis of Bute derives his title from sir James Stewart, of Bute, who was created a peer in 1703 by the titles of viscount Mountjoy, baron Mount-Stuart, &c., and John, the fourth earl, was created in 1796 marquis of Bute. The ancestor of this house was sir John Stewart, or Stuart, son of king Robert II. The marquis of Londonderry derives his title from Robert Stewart, who was created in 1789 baron Stewart, in 1795 viscount Castlereagh, in 1796 earl of Londonderry, and in 1816 marquis of Londonderry. This branch of the noble house of Stewart descends from sir Thomas Stewart, of Minto, second son of sir William Stewart, of Garlies, ancestor to the earls of Galloway, who derive their title from Alexander Stewart, who was created lord Garlies in 1607, and earl of Galloway in 1623. This latter branch is descended from sir William Stewart, of Jedworth, above, whose precise relation to the royal line has been a matter of much dispute, as above-mentioned. On the part of the earl it is contended that the above sir William was second son of sir Alexander Stewart, of Derneley, or Darnley, who was grandfather of the first Stewart, earl of Lennox. The title of earl of Moray is derived from James Stewart, natural son of James V, and ancestor of this branch of the family, who was created by queen Mary, and as regent of the kingdom acted a distinguished part in his time. [Vide Moray] Francis, the eighth earl, was created in 1796 a British peer, by the title of baron Stuart, of Castle-Stuart. The title of earl of Castle-Stuart belongs to that branch of the Stewart family descended from Robert, duke of Albany, third legitimate son of Robert II of Scotland. Sir James Stewart, third son of Murdoc, second duke of Albany, was the father of Andrew, who was created lord Avandale. Andrew, the third lord, exchanged his barony of Avandale for that of Ochiltree; and Andrew, the fourth lord, after having sold his barony to his cousin, sir James Stewart, of Killeth, was created in 1619 baron of Castle-Stewart. Andrew Thomas, the sixth lord Castle-Stewart, was created in 1793 viscount Castle-Stewart, and in 1800 earl of Castle-Stewart. The title of earl of Traquair belongs to that branch of the Stewart family descended from James Stewart, natural son of James, earl of Buchan, who obtained a charter of legitimation in 1488. His descendant John, in the fifth degree, was created in 1628 lord Stewart, of Traquair, and in 1633 baron Linton, and earl of Traquair.

STEWART, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Castle-Stewart.

STEWART, the name of some other branches, which enjoy the baronetcy, conferred in 1803 on the right hon. John Stewart, late Attorney-General in Ireland, who was descended from Captain Andrew Stewart above-mentioned; and in the second case on sir Henry Stouart, or Stewart, a lineal descendant from sir Robert Stewart, of Daldowie, sixth son of sir John Stewart, of Bonkhill, son to Alexander, sixth Lord High Steward of Scotland.

The arms, &c. of the first branch are as follow:

Arms. Or, a lion rampant, within a double tressure counterflory gules, all within a bordure gobony argent and azure.

Crest. An unicorn's head couped argent, crined or, between two olive branches proper.

Motto. "Forward."

The arms of the second branch are as follow:

Arms. Or, a fesse chequé azure and argent, surmounted of a bend gules, charged with three buckles of the field; on a sinister canton gules, a lion passant gardant or, pierced with a dart proper (by special grant from king Robert II), and in base a broken spear, surmounted of a helmet, both proper.

Crest. A dexter hand grasping a thistle proper, issuant from an earl's coronet.

Supporters. Two lions rampant gardant proper, armed and langued gules, collared of the last, each collar charged with three buckles or.

Mottoes. Above the Crest, "Juvant aspera forteis;" below the Shield, "Virtutis in bello præmium."

STEWART, Sir James Denham (Biog.) a political writer, was born in 1713 at Edinburgh, and died in 1780, leaving 'Inquiry into the Principles of Political Œconomy,' 2 vols. 4to. 1767, and republished with other pieces, in 6 vols. 8vo. 1805.

STEWART, Matthew, a mathematician, was born in 1717 at Rothsay, in the Isle of Bute, and died in 1785, leaving among his works 'General Theorems,' 8vo. 1746; 'Propositiones more Veterum Demonstratæ,' &c.

STIFELIUS (Biog.) or Stifels, Michael, a mathematician, was born at Eslingen, in Germany, and died in 1567, at the age of 58, according to Vossius, but others say 80. His chief work is his 'Arithmetica integra,' 4to. Norimb. 1544.

STIGAND (Hist.) archbishop of Canterbury, was among the number of those who wished to make a stand against William the Conqueror, and accordingly set Edgar on the English throne after the battle of Hastings, but, finding further resistance unavailable, he, with the rest of the nobility, submitted to the conqueror, who for a time accepted his submission, but afterwards caused him to be degraded from his see on the ground of his being a usurper, stripped him of all his possessions, and suffered him to perish in prison.

STILICHO (Hist.) a general of the emperor Theodosius the Great, who, after having displayed much courage in the service of this prince, was detected in the reign of Honorius in a secret correspondence with the enemies of the Romans, for which he was beheaded A. D. 408, and his family were involved in his ruin. Prosper. et Marcellin. in Chron.; Claudian. de Stil.; Zosim. Hist. l. 5; Oros. l. 7.

STILL, John (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1543 at Grantham, in Lincolnshire, educated at Cambridge, raised to the see of Bath and Wells after the death of bishop Godwin, and died in 1607. An old play, entitled 'Gammer Gurton's Needle,' is ascribed to him as the production of his youth.

STILLINGFLEET, Edward (Ecc.) a prelate, descended from the ancient family of the Stillingfleets, of Stillingfleet, about four miles from York, was born in 1635 at Cranbourne, in Dorsetshire, educated at Cambridge, raised, after various preferments to the see of Worcester in 1689, and died in 1699, leaving 'Origines Sacræ,' and 'Origines Britannicæ,' two of his principal works, which were all collected and published in 6 vols. fol. 1710. [Vide Plate XI]

STILLINGFLEET, Benjamin (Biog.) grandson of the preceding, a poet and a naturalist, was born in 1702, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1771, leaving 'Miscellaneous Tracts on Natural History,' &c. 1759 and 1762; besides some poems, and six volumes of MS. collections on a 'General History of Husbandry,' which he had not completed at his death.

STILPO (Biog.) a stoic philosopher of Megara, who was in great favour with Ptolemy Soter and Demetrius, of whom Cicero speaks in terms of commendation. Cic. de Fat. c. 5; Senec. de Const. &c.

STIRLING (Her.) the name of two families which enjoy the baronetcy, conferred in 1792 on sir James Stirling, and in 1800 on sir Walter Stirling, of Erskine, co. Lanark. This latter family derive their descent from Henry, the third son of David, earl of Huntingdon, brother to king William the Lion, who in 1165 assumed the name of Stirling, because he was born at Stirling. The arms, &c. of the first family are as follow:

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet a dexter arm embowed in armour, the hand grasping a dagger all proper.

Supporters. On either side a hind semé of estoiles, and ducally gorged or.

Motto. "Gang forward."

STIRLING (Geog.) a town of Scotland, and capital of a county of the same name, situated in a plain that is watered by the Firth, 35 m. N. W. Edinburgh, and 29 N. E. Glasgow. Lon. 3° 59′ W. lat. 56° 6′ N.

History of Stirling.

The name of Stirling, which is a place of considerable antiquity, is supposed to be a contraction of Striveling, that is, a place of strife or contention, owing to the frequent encounters which took place in its neighbourhood. One charter is still extant, granted by Alexander I, conferring additional privileges on the burghers and freemen; but it is supposed to have been incorporated long before. It became a royal residence in the 12th century, when it was one of the strongest fortresses in the kingdom, and was one of the four delivered up to the English in 1174, for the ransom of William the Lion. It was several times taken and retaken in the reign of Edward I, was for a short time in the hands of the English in 1333, was captured by general Monk in 1651, and besieged by the insurgents in 1746. It was fitted up with great magnificence by James I, whose favourite residence it was when James II was born. The castle, which was once a place of great strength previous to the introduction of artillery, was enlarged and repaired in the reign of queen Anne, and is one of the Scottish forts, which by the articles of the Union are always to be kept in repair.

STOBÆUS, John (Biog.) a Greek writer in the fifth century, as is generally supposed, whose collection of extracts from ancient poets and philosophers is in part extant, and was first published in Greek, 4to. Venet. 1536; they have since been republished by Canter, in folio, 1609, under the title of 'Sententiæ;' and by Heren, in 4 vols. 8vo. 1792, under that of 'Eclogæ.' Grotius also published an excellent edition of the 'Dicta Poetarum,' 4to. Paris. 1623.

STOCK, Christian (Biog.) an oriental scholar, was born in 1672 at Camburg, in Germany, and died in 1733, leaving among his works, 'Clavis Linguæ Sanctæ Vet. Test.;' 'Clavis Linguæ Sanct. Nov. Test.' &c.

STOCKHOLM (Geog.) the capital of Sweden, situated at the junction of the lake Maelar, with an inlet of the Baltic, 320 m. N. E. Copenhagen, 420 W. St. Petersburgh, and 850 N. E. London. Lon. 18° 3′ E. lat. 59° 20′ N. This town, called in the Latin Holmia, is supposed to have been founded in the 13th century, and owes its present importance to the commercial advantages of its situation.

STOCKPORT (Geog.) a town of Cheshire, in England, situated on the river Mersey, 7 m. S. E. Manchester, and 176 N. N. W. London. Lon. 2° 12′ W. lat. 53° 25′ N. The castle of Stockport, which has long since been demolished, was held in 1173 by Geoffrey de Costentine against king Henry II, and on the breaking out of the rebellion the town was seized by the rebels, who in 1645 were compelled to surrender it to prince Rupert. In 1745 the bridge here was blown up, to cut off the retreat of the insurgents after their advance to Derby.

STOCKTON (Geog.) or Stockton-upon-Tees, a town of Durham, in England, situated on the north bank of the Tees, 21 m. S. E. Durham, and 244 N. London. Lon. 1° 16′ W. lat. 54° 30′ N. Stockton castle was once the residence of the bishops of Durham, who acted as governors of the town and neighbourhood. It was garrisoned in behalf of king Charles I; but falling into the hands of the rebels it was utterly destroyed. The only vestige remaining is a moat, that defended the castle on three sides.

STOEFLER (Biog.) or Stofler, John, a German mathematician, was born at Justingen, in Suabia, in 1452, and died in 1531, leaving 'Cosmographicæ aliquot Descriptiones,' 4to. 1537; 'Procli Sphæram Comment,' fol. 1541.

STRAFFORD, Thomas, Earl of (Hist.) the illustrious victim of party rancour, was born in 1593, in Chancery-lane, London, of an ancient family mentioned under Heraldry, and after having given vent to the effervescence of youth by occasional opposition to the measures of government, he was first made President of the Court of York, then Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and afterwards had the command of the forces sent against Scotland. Wherefore the House of Commons fearing his great influence, impeached him of high crimes and misdemeanours; but finding this method not so suitable to their purpose, they changed their course, and brought in a bill of attainder on a charge of high treason, which, by means of fraud and violence, was carried through the two houses, and by the same means unhappily obtained the assent of the king. Strafford was in consequence beheaded on Tower Hill in 1641, and his death prepared the way for that of his royal master, who repented of his assent to that measure to his last moments. [Vide Plate VII]

Strafford, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles conferred in 1689 on sir Thomas Wentworth, the statesman above-mentioned, which at the death of his son William, the second earl, in 1695, became extinct; but was revived in 1711 in the person of his cousin Thomas, lord Raby, who was created viscount Wentworth, and earl of Strafford. These titles became again extinct in 1799, at the death of Frederick Thomas, the fourth earl.

STRAHAN, William (Biog.) a printer, and many years printer to his majesty, was born in 1715 at Edinburgh, and died in 1785, leaving a thousand pounds to the Stationers' Company for purposes of charity. He wrote a paper in the 'Mirror,' and some other pieces. Dr. William Strahan, a civilian, and the translator of Domat's 'Civil Law,' is supposed to have been of the same family.

STRALSUND (Geog.) a considerable town of Pomerania, situated on the strait which separates the island of Rugen from the main land, 90 miles N. N. W. Stettin. Lon. [illegible] E. lat. 54° 19′ N. Stralsund, called in Latin Stralesundia, or Sundis, was built in the 13th century, became a member of the Hanseatic league, and afterwards successively subject to Sweden and Prussia. Although it suffered much at different times from sieges, yet it always recovered, in consequence of its advantageous commercial situation.

STRANGE, George, Lord (Hist.) eldest son of Thomas Stanley, earl of Derby [vide Derby and Stanley], had summons to Parliament in the lifetime of his father, by the title of lord Strange, and after having taken an active part in public business during the reigns of Edward IV, Richard III, and Henry VII, he died in 1497, leaving a son Thomas, who inherited his grandfather's title.

Strange, Sir John (Biog.) a lawyer, was born in 1696 in London, and died in 1754, leaving 'Reports,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1755; again in 2 vols. 8vo. 1782; and, thirdly, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1795.

Strange, Sir Robert, an engraver, was born in 1721, in the island of Pomona, in Orkney, and died in 1792, after having attained to an eminence in his profession, which procured him the honour of knighthood.

STRANGFORD, Viscount (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Smythe [vide Smythe]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

STRASBURG (Geog.) a considerable town of Alsace, situated at the influx of the Brusche into the Ille, and only half a mile from the Rhine, 66 m. N. Basle, 75 E. Nancy, 290 E. Paris. Lon. 7° 44′ E. lat. 48° 34′ N. Strasburg, well known to the Romans by the name of Argentoratum, has been since distinguished for nothing but its readiness to embrace the principles of the reformation, having driven out the bishop and the chapter in 1559; but on its being ceded to Louis XIV by the peace of Ryswick, the Romish religion was again established. During the late revolutionary war Strasburg was frequently the scene of military operations.

STRATFORD, John de (Hist.) archbishop of Canterbury, and regent in the reign of Edward III, distinguished himself by his undutiful behaviour towards his sovereign; and when, in consequence of the displeasure of the latter he was not summoned to Parliament, he appeared before the gates arrayed in his pontifical robes, holding the crozier in his hand, and accompanied by a train of priests and prelates, and required admittance as the first and highest peer in the realm; with which requisition the king, after refusing him admittance for two days, thought proper to comply.

Stratford, Nicholas (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1633 at Hemel-Hempstead, in Hertfordshire, educated at Oxford, raised after various preferments to the see of Chester in 1689, and died in 1707, leaving among his works, as an author, 1. 'Discourse concerning the Necessity of Reformation,' &c. 4to. Part I, London, 1685, which was followed by a second part. 2. 'Discourse on the Pope's Supremacy,' in answer to Dr. Godden, 4to. 1688. 3. 'The People's Right to read the Scriptures asserted,' 4to. 1688. 4. 'The Lay-Christian's Obligation to read the Scriptures,' 4to. 1688, 1689, &c.

Stratford (Her.) a family who trace their descent beyond the Conquest, and enjoy the peerage, conferred on John Stratford, who in 1763 was created baron of Ballinglass, in 1776 viscount Aldborough, in 1777 viscount Amiens, and earl of Aldborough.

Stratford (Geog.) or Stratford-upon-Avon, a large town of Warwickshire, situated on the banks of the Avon, 8 miles S. W. Warwick, and 94 N. W. London. Lon. 1° 41′ W. lat. 52° 12′ N.

History of Stratford.

Although this town dates its origin three centuries at least before the Norman conquest, yet it is chiefly celebrated as the birth-place of Shakspeare, who also spent the close of his life here, in a house which he purchased and called New-Place. This was originally built by sir Hugh Clopton, in the time of Henry VII; but on coming into the possession of the Rev. Francis Gastell in 1753, the building was by him razed to the ground. Stratford was, during the rebellion, the scene of some sharp skirmishes between the contending parties in their attempts to keep possession of the town; but the royalists having gained the mastery, queen Henrietta resided there until she went to meet the king at Edge-hill.

STRATHALLAN, Viscount (Her.) one of the titles to which James Andrew John Laurence Charles Drummond was restored in 1824, which had been forfeited in 1745, in consequence of the part which William, the fourth viscount, took in favour of the Stewart family.

STRATHAVEN, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Aboyne.

STRATNAVER, Lord (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Sutherland.

STRATO (Biog.) a philosopher of Lampsacus, the disciple and successor of Theophrastus in the charge of the Peripatetic School, was appointed preceptor to Ptolemy Philadelphus, and wrote several treatises, which are all lost. Cic. Acad. l. 1, &c.; Diog. l. 5; Senec. apud Aug. de Civ. Dei. l. 6.

STRATONIS Turris (Geog.) a city of Judæa, afterwards called Cæsarea by Herod, in honour of Augustus.

STRATTON (Geog.) a town of Cornwall, 46 m. W. Exeter, and 223 W. S. W. London, where a battle was fought in 1643, between the royalists under George, lord Lansdown, and the rebel forces under the earl of Stamford, in which the latter were completely routed.

STRAUCHIUS, Ægidius (Biog.) a Lutheran divine and mathematician, of Wirtemberg, who died in 1682, left, among other works, 'Breviarium Chronologicum,' of which the edition of 1745 is supposed to be the last.

STURMIUS, Leonard Christopher, son of the preceding, was born in 1669 at Altorff, and died in 1719, leaving an edition of the works of Goldmann on Civil Architecture, in 16 vols. fol. August. 1718-21; 'Sciographia Templi Hierosolymitani,' &c.

STURT, John (Biog.) an engraver, was born in London in 1658, and died in 1730, leaving, among his best works, the 'Book of Common Prayer,' engraved on silver plates.

STYLE (Her.) the name of an ancient family of Suffolk, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a fess or, fretted of the field, between three fleurs-de-lis, and within a border of the second.

Crest. A wolf's head couped proper; the lower part of the neck fretted as in the arms.

STYLE, William (Biog.) a law writer, was born in 1603, and is supposed to have died about 1679, leaving 'Reports,' fol. 1658; 'The Practical Register, or accomplished Attorney,' 8vo.; 'The Common Law epitomized,' &c.

STYLES (Her.) a family long seated in Wiltshire, which enjoys the dignity of a baronet conferred in 1714 on sir Francis Styles; their arms are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a fess engrailed sable, in chief three fleurs-de-lis of the second.

SUAREZ, Francis (Biog.) a Spanish Jesuit, was born at Grenada in 1548, and died in 1617, leaving a book against 'The Errors of the English Sect,' and 'Tractatus de Legibus,' fol. Lond. 1679; besides other works on theology, of which father Noel, a French Jesuit, made an abridgment, published at Geneva in folio, 1732.

SUCCOTH (Bibl.) סכות, a city beyond Jordan, between the brook Jabok, and that river where Jacob pitched his tents. Joshua assigned it to the tribe of Gad. Gen. xxxiii.; Josh. xiii. 27; Judg. viii. 5; Kings vii.

SUCCOTH, the first encampment of the Israelites after they left Egypt. Exod. xii. 37.

SUCKLING, Sir John (Hist.) a courtier and a poet, testified his attachment to the royal cause by raising a troop of horse for the service of the king in the time of the rebellion; but having met with some defeats, and no small share of ridicule from the rebel faction, he withdrew to go to France, and died on the way in 1641. His works have been often reprinted in 8vo. 1646, 1659, 1679, and very correctly in 1719 by Tonson, from which last edition they have been published in the 'British Poets.'

SUCRO (Geog.) now Xucar, a river of Hispania Tarraconensis celebrated for a battle fought there between Sertorius and Pompey, in which the former obtained the victory.

SUDELEY, Lord (Her.) the title conferred in 1574 on sir Thomas Seymour, Lord High Admiral of England, which became forfeited at his death in 1549.

SUDLEY, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Arran.

SUEUR, Eustache le (Biog.) a painter, was born at Paris in 1617, and died in 1655, after having attained a reputation far superior to that of his master, Simon Vonet, and any other French painter in his time. His Life of St. Bruno, in 20 pieces, originally painted for the Chartreux, are looked upon as the best specimens of his skill.

SUEUR, Thomas le, a mathematician and ecclesiastic, was born in 1703 at Rethel, in Champagne, and died in 1770, leaving 'Institutiones Philosophicæ,' 5 vols.; besides a Commentary on Newton's Principia, and other works.

SUETONIUS, C. Paulinus (Hist.) the first Roman general who crossed Mount Atlas with an army, of which expedition he wrote an account. He presided over Britain for 20 years, during which time he conquered Boadicea; and, after forsaking the interest of Otho, he attached himself to that of Vitellius.

SUETONIUS, C. Tranquillus, the son of a Roman knight of the same name, and an historian, was in favour with Adrian, and became his secretary, but was afterwards banished from court for his want of respect to the empress Sabina. In his retirement, he wrote a number of books, of which nothing remains, except his Lives of the twelve Cæsars, and some fragments of his Catalogue of illustrious Grammarians.

SUFFIELD, Lord the title enjoyed by the family of Harbord [vide Harbord]; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, azure and gules, an imperial crown or, between four lions rampant in saltire argent.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, lined ermine, a lion couchant argent.

Supporters. On the dexter, a lion ducally collared with a chain; on the sinister, a leopard gardant ducally collared also and chained.

Motto. "Æquanimiter."

SUFFOLK, Michael, Earl of (Hist.) of the family of De la Pole mentioned under Heraldry, was much in favour with Richard II, by whom he was made Chancellor and Keeper of the Great Seal, and died in 12 Richard II.

SUFFOLK, William, Duke of, second son of the preceding, succeeded, at the death of the earl of Salisbury, in the command at the siege of Orleans, which he was compelled to raise by the Maid of Oleans; and, being afterwards besieged at Jergeau, and taken prisoner, he negociated a truce with Charles VII of France, and afterwards concluded a treaty of marriage between Margaret of Anjou and Henry VI; but these measures brought upon him such odium that he was impeached by the Commons, banished by the king, and beheaded by his enemies on the side of the vessel which was carrying him into France in 1450.

SUFFOLK, John, Duke of, son of the preceding, married Elizabeth, sister to king Edward IV, and died in 1491.

SUFFOLK, Edmund, Earl of, second son of the preceding, served Henry VII in the wars which he carried on in France; but was afterwards obliged to fly from England t escape the displeasure of his royal master. He was, however, afterwards induced to return with a hope of pardon, when he was committed to the Tower, and after lying there for some time, he was beheaded in 1513 by order of Henry VIII, previous to his departure for France lest, during his absence, this nobleman, well-known for his intriguing temper, should raise a disturbance in the kingdom.

SUFFOLK, Charles, Duke of, the favourite and companion of Henry VIII, of the family of Brandon, in his youth secretly married Mary, queen Dowager of France, and sister to the king, notwithstanding which he was soon after re-instated in the favour of his royal master, and employed by him in his expedition into France, and on other occasions, until his death in 1546, which happened to the sincere regret of the latter.

SUFFOLK, Henry, Duke of, father of lady Jane Grey, entered early into the duke of Northumberland's scheme of placing the crown on the head of his daughter, and caused her to be proclaimed queen immediately on the death of Edward. Her pretensions, however, not being supported by the people, he acknowledged Mary, and was set at liberty after a short confinement; but being implicated in a fresh attempt to disturb the government, he was tried, condemned, and executed in 1554, soon after lady Jane and lord Guilford Dudley.

SUFFOLK, Thomas, first Earl of, of the Howard family mentioned under Heraldry, was knighted for his good services at the memorable engagement with the Spanish armada; and, after having signalized himself on several occasions at sea during the reign of Elizabeth, he was sworn of the Privy Council by king James I, acted as Lord Chamberlain in the discovery of the gunpowder plot, was constituted Lord High Treasurer of England in 1614, deprived of this latter office in 1618 on a charge of embezzlement, for which he and his countess were fined 38,000*l.* by the star-chamber, and died in 1626, after a remission of the greater part of his fine. His second wife, the lady so famous for her rapacity, was the daughter of sir Henry Knevit, of Charlton, in Wiltshire, knight, widow of Richard, eldest son of lord Rich. She is said to have abused the influence she had over her husband, by availing herself of his exalted situation to indulge her avarice, and taking bribes from all quarters. Her second daughter, Frances, and ninth child, was the infamous lady Essex.

SUFFOLK, Duke and Earl of (Her.) titles which have been conferred successively on the families of De la Pole, Brandon, Grey, and Howard. Michael De la Pole was created earl of Suffolk, 9 Rich. II; his second son William was advanced to the dignity of duke of Suffolk; both which titles became extinct at the death of Edmund de la Pole in 1513, but revived the same year in the person of Charles Brandon above-mentioned, and again in the person of Henry Grey, third marquis of Dorset, who married Frances, daughter and coheir of Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, by Mary, queen dowager of France. The earldom of Suffolk was afterwards given in 1603 to sir Thomas Howard above-mentioned, and is still enjoyed by that family [vide Howard] with other titles, which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Howard, earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, viscount Andover, and baron Howard, of Charlton.

Arms. The same as the duke of Norfolk, with a crest for difference.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a lion statant gardant, his tail extended or, gorged with a ducal coronet argent.

Supporters. On the dexter side, a lion gardant or, ducally gorged argent; on the sinister, a lion argent.

Motto. "Nous maintiendrons."

SUFFOLK (Geog.) a maritime county of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the S. by Essex, W. by Cambridgeshire, N. by Norfolk, and E. by the German Ocean, being about 50 miles long, and 30 broad.

Principal Towns. Bury, Ipswich, Sudbury, Orford, Woodbridge, &c.

Principal Rivers. The Orwel, Ouse, Stour, Waveny, &c.

History. Suffolk was inhabited by the Iceni, at the Roman invasion, after which it became a part of the province Flavia Cæsariensis, and during the Saxon heptarchy it belonged to the kingdom of East Anglia.

SUGER, Abbé (Hist.) a minister under Louis VI, died in 1152, after having acquired so high a reputation for worth and talent, that it was thought sufficient to write on his tomb, "Cy git l'Abbé Suger." His Life, which was written by Garvaise, a Dominican, was published in 3 vols. 12mo. and his works have been inserted in Du Chesnè's Collection.

SUICERUS, John Gaspard (Biog.) a German divine, was born at Zurich in 1619, and died in 1684, leaving 'Lexicon sive Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus Patrum Græcorum,' 2 vols. fol. Amst. 1728.

SUIDAS (Biog.) the author of a well-known Greek Lexicon, of whose personal history no particulars whatever are known. His Lexicon was first published at Milan, in Greek, in 1499, but the best edition is that of Kuster, Gr. and Lat. 3 vols. fol. Cantab. 1705; to this should be added Toup's 'Emendationes in Suidam.'

SUINTILA (Hist.) a king of the Visigoths, in Spain, succeeded Sisebut in 621, and was expelled the throne by Sisenandus, after a reign of ten years.

SUIRDALE, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Donoughmore.

SULLA (Hist.) vide Sylla.

SULLIVAN (Her.) or O'Sullivan, a family of Thames Ditton, formerly possessed of large territory in the county of Cork, now enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1804 on sir Richard Joseph Sullivan; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. — — —

Crest. On a ducal coronet or, a robin, in the beak a sprig of laurel proper.

Motto. "Lamh foisdineach an vachtar," i. e. What we gain by conquest we secure by clemency.

SULLY, Maximilian de Bethune, Duke of (Hist.) a statesman in the reign of Henry IV, was born in 1559 at Rosni, early engaged on the side of the Protestants, and after having had a narrow escape of sharing in the fate of those who fell at the massacre of St. Bartholomew, he attended Henry in his flight from France, and continued to serve him either as a statesman or a soldier, as the occasion required, until the death of his royal master, when he retired from public life, and died in 1641. [Vide Plate VIII] The 'Memoirs of Sully,' have always been esteemed the most authentic and interesting books of French history, the best edition in French is that of Paris, in 3 vols. 4to. and also in 8 vols. 12mo.; the English translation by Mrs. Charlotte Lennox, has been published both in 4to. and 8vo.

SULMO (Geog.) now Sulmona, an ancient town of the Peligni, about 90 miles distant from Rome, where Ovid was born. Cæs. de Bell. Civ. l. 1; Strab. l. 5; Ovid. passim.; Flor. l. 3, &c.

SULMONA (Geog.) the ancient Sulmo, [vide Sulmo] a town of Abruzzo Citra, in the kingdom of Naples, and the see of a bishop, 2[illegible] miles S. Civita de Chieti, and 72 N. Naples. Lon. 13° 59′ E. lat. 42° 3′ N. This town was greatly injured by an earthquake in 1709.

SULPITIA, gens (Hist.) an illustrious family of Rome, which settled there in the time of Romulus, and was divided into several branches, as the Galbæ, Paterculi, Rufi, Quirini, Galli, &c.

SULPITIA, a daughter of Paterculus, and wife of Fulvius Flaccus, so famous for her chastity, that she consecrated a temple to Venus Verticordia, a goddess, who was implored to turn the hearts of the Roman women to virtue. Plin. l. 7.

SULPITIA, gens (Numis.) coins or medals of this family are extant, bearing the surnames of Paterculus, Rufus, Quirinus, and some others, but particularly of the emperor Galba, who belonged to this family.

SULPITIA (Biog.) a poetess in the age of Domitian, who wrote a satire against the emperor, on his banishing philosophers from Rome, which consists of 70 verses, and is still extant. This satire was published at Strasburg, with other poems, by G. Merula, in 4to. 1509, but is usually inserted at the end of the satires of Juvenal. She is mentioned in terms of commendation by Martial and Sidonius Apollinaris.

SULPITIUS PÆTICUS, C. (Hist.) a consul with C. Licinius Stolo, U. C. 390, A. C. 364, during whose consulship the ceremony of driving a nail into the wall of the temple of Jupiter by the dictator, was introduced. Liv. l. 7; Val. Max. l. 2.

SULPITIUS SAVERRIO, P. a consul, was sent with his colleague Decius Mus, against Pyrrhus, who defeated them, U. C. 475, A. C. 279, Decius fell in the engagement. Cic. de Fin.

SULPITIUS, Gallus, a consul with Marcellus, was the first among the Romans who understood the nature of eclipses, by which he was enabled to foretel the time of one happening to his soldiers, whose fears were thus converted into admiration of his sagacity. Plin. l. 2, c. 12; Val. Max. 8.

SULPITIUS, Severus (Biog.) an ecclesiastical writer in the fifth century, who lived till about 420, was the author of 'Historia Sacra,' and some other things, which were printed by Le Clerc, with notes, 8vo. Lips. 1709; and by Jerome de Prato, in 2 vols. 4to. Venet. 1741-54.

SUNDERLAND, Henry, third Lord Spencer, and first Earl of (Hist.) was born in 1620, served as a volunteer in the royal army at the breaking out of the rebellion, and was killed at the battle of Newburgh in 1643. He married lady Dorothy Sidney, daughter of the earl of Leicester, to whom some letters, written from the royal camp, are extant.

SUNDERLAND, Robert, second Earl of, and son of the preceding, was early distinguished by his majesty king Charles II, by whom he was sent in 1671, as Ambassador Extraordinary into Spain, after which he resided for some time at Paris in the same character, at the French court. In 1673 he was appointed one of the Plenipotentiaries for concluding a general peace, and continued to act as a diplomatist during the negotiations of that period, and afterwards took a leading part in the affairs of state until a few years before his death, which happened in 1702.

SUNDERLAND, Charles, third Earl of, was sent in 1705 as Envoy Extraordinary, and Plenipotentiary to the Imperial Court, was appointed in 1706 one of the English Commissioners for treating about an union with Scotland; in 1708 he was chosen of the Privy Council to queen Anne, but was dismissed from office two years after. On the accession of king George I, he filled different posts until 1721, when he resigned them all, and died in 1722. This earl had three wives, the first of whom was lady Arabella, youngest daughter and co-heir of Henry Cavendish, duke of Newcastle; and the second, lady Anne, second daughter of the duke of Marlborough.

SUNDERLAND, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred in 1627 on Emanuel lord Scrope, of Bolton, which became extinct at his death in 1640. The title was afterwards revived in the family of Spencer, [vide Spencer] and is now one of the titles of the duke of Marlborough.

SUPERA, Cornelia Gnea (Numis.) an empress, of whom little is known, except by medals bearing her effigy as in the annexed figure, and the inscriptions, G. CORNEI. SUPERA AUG.; on the reverse, CONCORDIA AET. SC.—JUNO REGINA, &c. She is supposed to have been the wife of Trebonianus.

SURENHUSIUS, William (Biog.) professor of Greek and Hebrew at Amsterdam, who died about 1720, is principally known by his version of the Mischna of the Jews, with a Latin version and notes, which he began to publish in 1698, and completed in 1703, in 3 vols. fol.

SURITA (Biog.) or Zurita, Jerome, a Spanish historian, was born in 1512, of an ancient family at Saragossa, and died in 1580, leaving 'Annales de la Corona del Reyno de Aragon,' 7 vols. fol. Saragossa, 1562; 'Indices Rerum ab Aragoniæ Regibus gestarum, Libri tres,' Cæsaraug. 1578; besides an edition of Antoninus' Itinerary.

SURRY, Thomas, Earl of (Hist.) second duke of Norfolk, commonly known in history by his inferior title. [Vide Norfolk]

SURRY, Henry, Earl of, eldest son of Thomas, third duke of Norfolk, was involved in his father's disgrace, and being tried and condemned on a charge of treasonable practices, he was beheaded in 1547. He was reputed to be a poet and a scholar, as well as a warrior, having left some Songs and Sonnets, which were collected by Richard Tottell, in 4to. 1557, and reprinted in 1567, 1569, 1574, 1585, and 1587.

SURRY, Earl of (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the duke of Norfolk.

SURRY (Geog.) or Surrey, an inland county of England, bounded on the S. by Sussex, E. by Kent, W. by Berkshire and Hampshire, and N. by Buckinghamshire, from which it is separated by the Thames.

History of Surry.

Surry was originally inhabited by the Segontiaci, a people of Belgium, but under the Romans it formed a part of Britannia Prima, and during the Saxon heptarchy a part of the kingdom of Sussex. In the rebellion it took a leading part against the king.

SUSA (Geog.) Σῦσα, now Suster, a celebrated city of Asia, where the kings of Persia generally kept their treasures. Herod. l. 5; Xenoph. Cyr.; Strab. l. 15; Propert. l. 2; Lucan. l. 2; Plin. l. 6.

SUSSEX, Thomas, third Earl of (Hist.) son of Henry Ratcliffe, the second earl, a statesman in the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, was first employed in an embassy to the emperor Charles V, to treat of the projected marriage of queen Mary and Philip. Upon his return he was appointed Lord Deputy of Ireland, and soon after the accession of Elizabeth, President of the North, which post he resigned for that of Lord Chamberlain in 1572, and died in 1583.

SUSSEX, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred in 1529 on sir John Ratcliffe, which became extinct in 1641, at the death of Humphrey, the sixth earl.

SUSSEX, Duke of, one of the royal titles conferred in 1801 on prince Augustus Frederic, sixth son of his majesty George III, who was born in 1773.

SUSSEX (Geog.) one of the southern counties of England, bounded on the W. by Hampshire, N. by Surry, E. by Kent, and S. by the British channel. Chichester is the chief town.

History of Sussex.

The original inhabitants of Sussex were called Belgæ, and some of them Regni, at the Roman invasion, but on the settlement of the Saxons in England, this county, with Surry, was formed by Ælla into a kingdom, which was the smallest of the heptarchy, and was after a short time united to that of Wessex. Adelwach, the last of their titular princes, was subdued and slain by Ceadwalla, king of Wessex, who murdered his two infant sons, and took possession of his kingdom.

SUTCLIFFE (Biog.) or Southcliffe, Matthew, an English divine, who was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1628, left a number of controversial works, and the bulk of his property, for the erection of a college, to consist of polemical divines; the foundation of which had commenced under the auspices of king James, during his life, but was not continued after his death, for want of encouragement, in consequence of which the property was decreed to his heirs by the Court of Chancery.

SUTHERLAND, Countess of (Her.) the title enjoyed by Elizabeth Sutherland Gower, who succeeded her father William Sutherland, the 17th earl, in 1756, and was married in 1785 to George Gower, marquis of Stafford. This is the most ancient title in Great Britain, and was adjudged to her by the House of Lords, after a long and patient trial of the cause, in which she had as competitors, sir Robert Gordon, of Gordonstoun, bart. and George Sutherland, of Forse.

SUTTON, Sir Richard (Hist.) a descendant of the Suttons, of Sutton, near Macclesfield, in the county of Chester, who died in 1524, was a liberal co-founder of Brazen-Noze College, with Smyth, bishop of Lincoln, leaving several estates for the support of the foundation, which he had heartily co-operated in laying while he was alive.

SUTTON, Thomas, a descendant of the ancient family of Suttons, of Lincolnshire, was born in 1532 at Knaith, in that county, and died in 1611, after having endeared his memory to posterity by the foundation of the Charter House, for the support of which he left the bulk of his large property.

SUTTON (Her.) the name which has been assumed by the junior branches of the duke of Rutland's family, in consequence of the marriage of John, the eleventh earl, and third duke of Rutland, with Bridget, only daughter and heir to Robert Sutton, lord Lexington.

SUWORROW, Rimninski Alexander (Hist.) or, as it is pronounced Suvoroff, a distinguished Russian general, of Swedish extraction, was born about 1730, and entering into the army as a private in 1742, he attained by his merit, during an almost uninterrupted course of warfare, the rank of Field Marshal in the Russian service, and died in 1800. His principal exploits were the capture of Cracow, in the Polish war, and that of Ismailow in 1790, in the second Turkish war; and although his career of victory was impeded by the successes of the French in Switzerland and Germany, yet his reputation for skill and valour was unimpaired, and gives him a place in the first rank of military commanders.

SWAMMERDAM, John (Biog.) a naturalist and anatomist, was born at Amsterdam in 1637, and died in 1680, leaving, 1. 'Tractatus Physico-Anatomico-Medicus de Respiratione,' 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1667, 1677, and 1679, and 4to. 1738. 2. 'Historia Insectorum Generalis,' 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1685, having been previously published in Dutch, in 4to. Ultraj. 1669; the French translation appeared at the same time as the Latin. 3. 'Miraculum Naturæ,' &c. 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1672, 1679, &c. 4. 'Biblia Naturæ seu Historia Insectorum,' &c. 2 vols. fol. 1737, a less complete edition having been published in 1733.

SWANEVELT, Herman (Biog.) a Flemish painter, and said to be a disciple of Gerard Douw, was born in 1620, and died in 1680, after having acquired a reputation little inferior to that of Claude Lorraine.

SWEDEN (Geog.) a kingdom in the north of Europe.

Boundaries and Extent. Sweden has undergone some territorial changes, by losing, in 1809, the province of Finland, and receiving the accession of Norway, on ceding Swedish Pomerania. It is now bounded on the N. by Norwegian Lapland, E. by the Gulf of Bothnia and the Baltic, S. and W. by portions of the Baltic, and by Norway. It consisted originally of three kingdoms, Gothland, Sweden proper, and Norrland, the last including Swedish Lapland, but it is at present divided into 23 districts.

Principal Towns. Stockholm, the capital, Upsal, Gottenburg, Carlscron, Calmar, Norkoop, &c.

Lakes and Rivers, &c. The principal lakes, &c. are the Lake Wenner, Maler, Wetter, Hjelmar, Gulf of Bothnia, &c.; the principal rivers are the Dal, the Clara, the Gotha, the Umea, the Angerman, &c.

History. Loccenius, and other historians of Sweden, have given a chronological succession of kings who held this kingdom many centuries before the Christian æra, commencing as early as A. M. 2045, but for our present purpose it suffices to begin with Biorno, who is called the third of this name, the first Christian king of Sweden who begun his reign, according to some, in 831, and according to others, in 868. His successors reigned in the following order, as far as it can be collected from the confused and contradictory accounts of historians:

SWIETEN (Biog.) vide Van Swieten.

SWIFT, Jonathan (Biog.) a well-known wit and poet, of English extraction, and the celebrated dean of St. Patrick's, was born in Ireland in 1667, and died in 1745, after having been for three or four years previous to his death subject to occasional fits of derangement, and even madness, which terminated in almost total insensibility. His works have been printed often, and in various forms, of which that in 14 vols. 4to. is reckoned the most elegant; but the two editions in 19 vols. 8vo. under the superintendance of Mr. Nichols, are the most esteemed. [Vide Plate XXVIII]

SWIFT, Deane, a near relation of the preceding, being grandson to Godwin Swift, the dean's uncle, studied first at Dublin, and afterwards at Oxford, and died in 1783, leaving 'An Essay upon the Life, Writings, and Character, of Dr. Jonathan Swift,' besides which, he published in 1765, the eighth quarto volume of the Dean's works, and in 1768, two volumes of his 'Letters.'

SWINBURNE (Her.) a family who take their name from their ancient patrimony or habitation of Swinburne Castle, Northumberland; a descendant of which, sir John Swinburne, was created a baronet in 1660. The arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Party per fess gules and argent, three cinquefoils counterchanged.

Crest. Out of a ducal coronet or, a demi-boar rampant argent, crined or, langued gules.

Motto. "Semel et semper."

SWINBURNE, Henry (Biog.) a law-writer, and native of York, who died about 1624, wrote 'Treatise of Spousals, or Matrimonial Contracts,' 4to. 1686; 'Treatise of Testaments,' &c. which passed through seven editions, namely, 4to. 1590, 1611, 1635, 1677, 1728, and fol. in 1743, and greatly enlarged in 1803.

SWINTON, John (Biog.) an English antiquary, and a native of Chester, was born in 1703, and died in 1777, leaving, 1. 'De Linguæ Etruriæ Regalis vernacula Dissertatio,' 4to. Oxon. 1738. 2. 'De Priscis Romanorum literis,' 4to. Oxon. 1746. 3. 'De Primogenio Etruscorum Alphabeto,' &c. Oxon. 1746. 4. 'Inscriptiones Criticæ,' &c. 4to. Oxon. 1750. 5. 'De nummis quibusdam Samaritanis,' &c. besides several Dissertations, published in the Philosophical Transactions. He also had a share in the compilation of the Universal History.

SWITZERLAND (Geog.) a distinguished country of Europe.

Boundaries, Extent, and Division. It is bounded on the W. by France, S. by Italy, N. and E. by Germany, extending from E. to W. nearly 240 miles, and from N. to S. about 140. It is divided into 13 cantons, well known by the name of the Cantons of Switzerland, namely, Schweitz, Uri, Unterwalden, Berne, Zurich, Lucerne, Glaris, Zug, Appenzell, Schaffhausen, Fribourg, Solothurn, and Basle; to which may be added, as appendages or allies, the Grisons, Vaud, Ticino, St. Gall, Thurgau, Aargau, Neufchatel, Valais, and Geneva.

Principal Towns. Geneva, Basle, Berne, Zurich, Lausanne, St. Gall, Neufchatel, Friburg, Lucerne, Solothurn, &c.

Mountains. Switzerland is not only bounded by the Alps on the south and east sides, but the principal part of the interior is also traversed by them, which are distinguished by the names of Mont-Blanc, Mount St. Gothard, St. Bernard, Simplon, Jungfrau, Horn, Schreckhorn, &c. [Vide Alpes]

Rivers and Lakes. The principal rivers are the Rhone, the Ticino, the Aar, the Limmat, the Reuss, &c.; the principal lakes are those of Geneva, Constance, Neufchatel, Zurich, Lucerne, &c.

History of Switzerland.

Switzerland, which was well known to the Romans by the name of Helvetia, and the inhabitants by that of Helvetii, derives its modern name from Schweitz, one of its first formed cantons. After the fall of the Roman empire, it remained for some time in a state of obscurity, subject to many petty sovereigns, who were all reduced by the emperor of Germany, to whom this country remained in subjection until the reign of Albert, the son of Rodolph, when the Swiss, irritated by the oppressive conduct of the governors or bailiffs, whom he appointed, rose, first in the three mountainous districts of Schweitz, Uri, and Underwalde, about 1308. Their example was followed by those of Lucerne in 1332; of Zurich in 1351; of Zug and Glaris the next year; of Berne in 1353; of Friburg and Soleure in 1481; of Basle and Schaffhausen in 1501, and of Appenzell in 1513. These 13 cantons formed themselves into a confederacy, which has since been known by the name of the Helvetic League. Among the distinguished persons to which Switzerland has given birth, may be reckoned Zuinglius, the reformer; Paracelsus, the physician and alchymist; Haller, the naturalist; Gesner, the poet; the Bernouillis, mathematicians; Lavater, the physiognomist, &c.

SYBRECHT, John (Biog.) a landscape painter, was born at Antwerp about 1660, and died about 1703, after having attained to considerable eminence in his art.

SYDENHAM, Thomas (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1624 at Winford Eagle, and died in 1689, leaving a number of works, which have been collected and frequently printed in octavo; the last edition is that by Dr. George Wallis, 2 vols. 8vo. 1788.

Sydenham, Floyer, the translator of Plato, died in 1787, and is supposed to have been born in 1710.

SYDNEY, Algernon (Hist.) vide Sidney.

Sydney, Viscount (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by a branch of the family of Townshend [vide Townshend]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Townshend, viscount Sydney, baron Sydney, of Chislehurst, in Kent.

Arms. The same as Townshend, with a crescent for difference.

Crest. On a wreath, a buck tripping sable, attired proper, and charged on the shoulder with a crescent or.

Supporters. On the dexter side a lion or, collared, chained, and charged on the shoulder with a pheon's head azure; on the sinister a buck sable, attired or, collared and chained or, and charged on the shoulder with an escallop shell argent.

Syene (Geog.) a town of Egypt, alluded to by the prophet Ezekiel, which is now known by the name of Sycne, or Assouan, whither the poet Juvenal was banished. According to Strabo three Roman cohorts were stationed here to check the inroads of the Ethiopians. It was occupied by the French in 1799, who were expelled by the English in 1801, since which time it has been under the government of the Turks. Herod. l. 2, c. 28; Strab. l. 15; Plin. l. 5; Ptol. &c.

SYKES (Her.) a family of Berkshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1781 on sir Francis Sykes; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Gules, three tufts of reeds vert.

Crest. A swan rising from a tuft of reeds all proper.

Sykes, a family of Yorkshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1783 on sir Mark Sykes; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a chevron sable, between three fountains.

Crest. A demi river-deity rising from the reeds and blowing a shell, wreathed about the temples with reeds proper.

Sykes, Arthur Ashley (Biog.) an English divine, was born in London about 1684, educated at St. Paul's School, and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and died in 1739, leaving some controversial works in favour of Hoadley.

SYLBURGIUS, Frederic (Biog.) a German scholar, was born at Marpurg in 1546, or, according to Saxius, in 1536, and died in 1596, after having edited Aristotle, Herodotus, Cicero, Dionysius Halicarnassensis, Dion Cassius, Justin Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, Theodoret, and several other ancient authors.

SYLLA, L. Cornelius (Hist.) a Roman, of an illustrious family, who early opposed himself to Marius, and after having signalized himself in the wars against Jugurtha and Mithridates, he openly attacked Marius, on whose head he set a price, and putting to death the principal persons that favoured the interests of his rival, he established himself as perpetual dictator, and died about 75 years before the Christian æra, in the 60th year of his age, after having caused many thousands of the most opulent and powerful of the Romans to be slain. SYON (Geog.) a town of the Valais, on the Rhone, called in the Latin Sedunum.

SYPHAX (Hist.) a king of part of Numidia, who, marrying Sophonisba, the daughter of Asdrubal, forsook the alliance of the Romans and attached himself to the Carthaginians; but being defeated in battle by Masanissa, and taken prisoner, he was carried to Rome, where he adorned the triumph of the conqueror Scipio, and died in prison about 201 years before the Christian æra. Polyb. l. 14; Liv. l. 24; Plut. in Scip.; Flor. l. 2; Propert. l. 3; Ovid. Fast. l. 6.

SYRACUSÆ (Geog.) Συράκουσαι, now Syracuse, a celebrated city of Sicily, situat d at the north-east of the island, 30 m. S. S. E. Catania, 80 S. S. W. Messina. Lon. 15° 27′ E. lat. 37° N.

History of Syracuse.

Syracuse is said to have been founded about 732 years before the Christian æra, by Archias, a Corinthian, and one of the Heraclidæ. In its most flourishing state it extended about 22½ English miles in circumference, and was divided into four districts, namely, Ortygia, Acradina, Tycha, and Neapolis. At present its only inhabited part is the south-east corner, containing Ortygia, and part of Acradina. Syracuse was subject to different forms of government, both monarchical and democratical. Gelon having seized the sovereign power about 483 years before the Christian æra, put an end to the democracy for a time. He was succeeded by his sons Hiero and Thrasybulus, which latter being expelled, Syracuse continued under a popular government for 61 years, till the usurpation of the Dionysii, who were expelled by Timoleon, A. C. 343. During this period Syracuse had been subject to several sieges, of which the most memorable was that by the Athenians, A. C. 414, whose attack it successfully resisted. It was however taken after a long siege by the Roman consul Marcellus, A. C. 212, when Sicily became a Roman province. Its subsequent history is connected with that of the island, of which it is the capital. Syracuse is memorable as the birth-place of Archimedes, Aristarchus, Theocrites, and many other learned men of antiquity, as also of pope Stephen III. and several distinguished prelates. It was formerly a metropolitan church, but is now a bishop's see, suffragan of Montreal. Thucyd. l. 6; Pind. Pyth. od. 2; Scylax.; Diodor. l. 4, &c.; Dionys. Hal. Cic. in Verr. l. 4, &c.; Liv. l. 53; Cor. Nep. l. 20; Strab. l. 1, &c.; Mel. l. 2; Plut. in Marcell.; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 12; Fazell. Hist. Sicil.; Cluver. Antiq. Sicil. &c.

SYRACUSE (Numis.) numerous medals are extant of this city, several of which bear, as in fig. 1, the head of two females, supposed to represent the two daughters of Archias, the founder, and as in fig. 2, the head of a female with dishevelled hair, supposed to represent the nymph Arethusa, who presided over the fountain Arethusa, near Syracuse, and was much honoured by the inhabitants. The inscription mostly ΣΥΡΑΚΟΣΙΩΝ.

SYRIA (Bibl.) the country described under Geography, is mentioned in the Bible under the name of Aram. Deut. xxvi. 25.

SYRIA (Geog.) Συρία, a large country of Asia, having the Euphrates on the E., Mount Taurus on the N., the Mediterranean on the W., and Arabia on the S.

Division. It was divided into several districts or provinces, among which were Phœnicia, Seleucia, Judæa or Palestine, Mesopotamia, Babylon, and Assyria.

Principal Towns. Antioch on the Orontes, the former capital, now Antachin; Laodicæa, now Laudichia; Samosates, now Samsat; Hierapolis, now Th[illegible]ith; Apamea, now Aman, &c.

History of Syria.

Syria, which was also called sometimes Assyria, and now by the inhabitants Souristan, was subject to the Persians until the conquest of the latter by Alexander the Great, after whose death it fell to the lot of Seleucus Nicator, who erected it into a kingdom, called the kingdom of Syria, or Babylon, A. C. 312. His successors, surnamed the Seleucidæ, began to reign in the following order:

Kings.	A. C.	Kings.	A. C.
Antiochus I	283	Antiochus VI	144
Antiochus II	261	Tryphon	143
Seleucus II	246	Antiochus VII	139
Seleucus III	226	Alexander II	127
Antiochus III	223	Antiochus VIII	123
Seleucus IV	187	Antiochus IX	112
Antiochus IV	175	Antiochus X	95
Antiochus V	164	Antiochus XI	94
Demetrius I	162	Antiochus XII	87
Alexander I	150	Tigranes	83
Demetrius II	146	Antiochus XIII	69

This last Antiochus being conquered by Pompey, A. C. 65, Syria became a Roman province, with the exception of Damascus and its vicinity, which was governed by Aretas as a king. On the rise of the Saracen power Syria became the seat of their empire, and was governed by the caliphs or successors of Mahomet, who resided at Bagdad. The following is a list of the caliphs.

After Al Mosta'sem, the last caliph of Bagdad, had reigned nearly sixteen years, Hulagu Il Khan, who founded the Mungul dynasty in Iran, or Persia at large, son of Tuli Khan, fourth son of Jenghiz Khan, took the city of Bagdad, and, putting Al Mosta'sem and all his family to death, he abolished the caliphate and annexed Syria to his dominions, since which period it has formed a part of the Turkish empire, and been governed by chiefs, who more than once attempted to shake off the yoke of dependance on the Porte. Among the earliest of those who made this attempt was Fackardin, emir of the Druses, a people inhabiting the mountainous district of Lebanon, who, after having governed the country as a sovereign prince, was defeated, taken prisoner, and put to death. Daher, a powerful Arabian sheik, made a similar attempt in the middle of the last century, and after withstanding the armies of the Turks for some time, was finally overpowered and shared the same fate. The reign of his successor, Djezzar Pacha, is rendered memorable by the successful stand which, with the aid of some British seamen, he made against Bonaparte.

SYRTES (Geog.) two large sand-banks in the Mediterranean, one of which was near Leptis, and the other near Carthage. They were considered as very dangerous in navigation. Sallust. in Jug. c. 78; Virg. Æn. l. 4, v. 41; Mel. l. 1; Lucan. l. 9; Plin. l. 5; Solin. c. 40.

T.

TAAFFE (Her.) a family of considerable antiquity and repute in the counties of Louth and Sligo, which produced many eminent persons, no less renowned for their valour than for their fidelity to the crown, among whom was sir John Taaffe, who, for his own and his father's services during the wars in Ireland, was advanced in 1628 to the dignities of baron of Ballymore, and viscount Taaffe, of Corren. His son Theobald, the second viscount, was further advanced in 1639 to the dignity of earl of Carlingford, which title became extinct at the death of Theobald, the fourth earl, in 1738; but the titles of baron and viscount devolved on his next heir, male, Nicholas Taaffe. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a cross argent, frettee azure.

Crest. On a wreath, a dexter arm in armour embowed, brandishing a sword all proper.

Supporters. The dexter a horse argent, semée of etoiles sable; the sinister, a wyvern with wings expanded proper.

Motto. "In hoc signo spes mea."

TABITHA (Bibl.) Ταβιθὰ, otherwise called Dorcas, a Christian widow of Joppa, who was raised from the dead by St. Peter. Acts ix. 36.

TABOR (Bibl.) תבור, a mountain of Galilee, called by the Greek Ἀταβύριος, and by Josephus Ιταβύριος. According to modern accounts it stands alone in the midst of a great plain. Josh. xix. 22; Polyb. l. 5; Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 4, &c.

TABOUROT, Stephen (Biog.) a French author, who died in 1590, at the age of about 35, was the author of 'Les Bigarrures et Touches du Seigneur des Accords,' 2 vols. 12mo.; he having assumed the name of Seigneur des Accords, by which he is generally known.

TACCA, Peter James (Biog.) a sculptor, and native of Carara, who died at Florence in 1640, left, among the productions of his chisel, the statue of Ferdinand III, grand duke of Tuscany, and the equestrian figure of Philip IV.

TACHARD, Guy (Ecc.) a French Jesuit, who went as a missionary to Siam, with the ambassadors Chaumont and Choisi, and died in 1694, wrote an account of his two voyages, which were published in 2 vols. 12mo. Paris. 1689.

TACITUS, Caius Cornelius (Hist.) a Roman consul, and a celebrated historian of his own times, was born about U. C. 810, A. D. 56, practised at the bar during the reigns of Vespasian and Domitian, was raised to the consulship U. C. 850, in the reign of Nerva, and is most generally supposed to have died in the reign of Trajan. He was son-in-law to Agricola, the governor of Britain, and probably left issue, as M. Claudius Tacitus, the emperor, A. D. 275, claimed descent from him. The works of Tacitus, including a Dialogue concerning Oratory, which is ascribed to him, were first published at Venice by John de Spira, in 1468. Of the subsequent editions, that of Rome, in folio, 1515; that in 2 vols. 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1673; that in Usum Delphini, 4 vols. 4to. Paris. 1682; that of Brotier, 7 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1776; and that of Ernesti, 2 vols. 8vo. Lips. 1777, are among the most esteemed.

TACITUS, M. Claudius, succeeded Aurelian in the empire A. D. 275, but died, or was assassinated by the soldiers, after a reign of little more than six months. Vopisc. in Tacit.

TACITUS (Numis.) the medals of this emperor bear his effigy as in the annexed figure, inscriptions, IMP. TACITUS AUG.—IMP. CL. TACITUS AUG.—IMP. C. M. TACITUS AUG. &c.

TÆNARUS (Geog.) Ταίναρος, a promontory of Laconia, now Cape Matapan, where Neptune had a temple. Hom. Hymn. in Apoll.; Apollod. l. 2; Strab. l. 8; Mel. l. 2; Ovid. Met. l. 2; Senec. Herc. Fur. &c.

TAFFI, Andrea (Biog.) a sculptor, was born at Florence in 1213, and died in 1294, leaving a Dead Christ, as one of the most admired specimens of his skill.

TAGUS (Geog.) a river of Spain, now called by the natives Tajo, which falls into the Atlantic after having crossed Lusitania, or Portugal. The sands of the Tagus were mixed with gold according to the poets.

TALBOT, Gilbert (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, held three castles in the marches of Wales for Edward, prince of Wales, on the insurrection of the Welch under Llewellin in 1256; and, after serving Henry III both in a civil and military capacity on several occasions, died in 1274.

TALBOT, Richard, son of the preceding, assisted Edward I in the wars of Gascony, and on other occasions, and died in 1306.

TALBOT, Sir Gilbert, and Sir Richard, son and grandson of the preceding, were active and faithful commanders in the service of Edward III in Scotland and elsewhere.

TALBOT, Sir John, first Earl of Shrewsbury, vide Shrewsbury.

TALBOT, Sir Gilbert, third son of the second earl of Shrewsbury, was severely wounded at the battle of Bosworth while fighting bravely for the earl of Richmond, who, when he came to the throne, made him a Privy Councillor. He was afterwards one of the commanders at the battle of Stoke, near Newark, in Trent, when the earl of Lincoln and Lambert Simnel were defeated; and, after serving the kings Henry VII and VIII as deputy of Calais, &c. he died in 1516.

TALBOT, Charles, Lord, Lord High Chancellor of England, and son of William Talbot, bishop of Durham, was born in 1684, educated at Oxford, studied law at Lincoln's Inn, and was, after different preferments, sworn of the Privy Council to his majesty George II in 1733, and constituted Lord High Chancellor, but died in the height of his reputation in 1737.

TALBOT, William (Ecc.) an English prelate of the same family, was educated at Oxford, and, after various preferments, was raised in 1699 to the see of Oxford, from which he was translated in 1715 to that of Salisbury, and in 1722 to that of Durham, of which county he was Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum. He died in 1730, leaving eight sons, of whom Charles, the eldest, was the Lord Chancellor above-mentioned.

TALBOT, Peter, a Jesuit, descended from an ancient family in Dublin, acquired some celebrity in his day by the violent measures which he pursued in support of the Romish religion, for which he was imprisoned, and died in 1680, leaving some works written with great virulence against the English church. He is said to have paid his court to Oliver Cromwell in order to serve the purposes of his party, and to have joined Lambert in opposing General Monk's declaration for the king.

TALBOT (Her.) one of the most ancient and illustrious families in England, which was distinguished at and before the time of the Conqueror, but was first ennobled in the person of the celebrated sir Gilbert Talbot above-mentioned, who was summoned to parliament in 1330. His descendant, the famous warrior, sir John Talbot, was advanced in 1440 to the dignities of baron Talbot, Strange, Furnival, &c., and earl of Shrewsbury; and in 1446 earl of Wexford and Waterford of the Irish peerage. John Talbot, the eldest son of the first earl of Shrewsbury by his second marriage, was created lord Lisle, of Kingston Lisle, in Berkshire, in 1444, and viscount Lisle in 1451, which titles became extinct at the death of Thomas, the second viscount, in 1469. Charles, the twelfth earl of Shrewsbury, was advanced to the dignities of marquis of Alton, and duke of Shrewsbury, which titles became extinct at his death. [Vide Shrewsbury] A junior branch of the same family has also been ennobled in the person of Charles Talbot, Lord High Chancellor above-mentioned, who was created a peer of Great Britain in 1734 by the style and title of lord Talbot, baron of Hensol, co. Glamorgan. His son William was advanced in 1761 to the dignity of earl Talbot, which title became extinct at his death; but, having been created baron Dynever, this barony devolved on his daughter, lady Cecil Rice, and the barony of Talbot descended to his nephew, John Chetwynd Talbot, who was created in 1784 viscount of Ingestrie, co. Stafford, and earl Talbot, of Hensol, co. Glamorgan. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a lion rampant, within a border engrailed or, a crescent for difference.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a lion or, his tail extended.

Supporters. On each side a talbot argent, collared with a double tressure fleury counterfleury gules.

Motto. "Humani nihil alienum."

TALBOT, Lord, the title borne by the eldest son of the earl of Shrewsbury.

TALBOT, Robert (Biog.) an antiquary, and native of Thorp, in Northamptonshire, was educated at Oxford, and died in 1558, leaving a number of MS. collections, which proved of great service to Leland, Bale, Camden, and others.

TALBOT, Catherine, daughter of Edward Talbot, second son of William, bishop of Durham, above-mentioned, was born in 1720, and died in 1770, leaving 'Reflections on the Seven Days of the Week;' 'Essays on Various Subjects;' 'Letters to a Friend on a Future State;' 'Dialogues;' 'Prose Pastorals;' 'Imitations of Ossian;' 'Allegories;' and 'Poetry;' besides her correspondence with her intimate friend Mrs. Carter, which was published by the Rev. Montague Pennington.

TALIACOTIUS (Biog.) or Tagliacozzo, Gaspar, professor of medicine and anatomy in the University of Bologna, who was born in 1546, and died in 1599, is principally known for the talent which he is said to have possessed of restoring lost members of the body, particularly the nose. He wrote 'Epistola ad Hieronymum Mercurialem de naribus, multo ante abscissis, reficiendis,' 8vo. Francof. 1587; 'De Curtorum Chirurgia,' &c. fol. Venet. 1597; and reprinted in 8vo. Francof. 1598, under the title of 'Chirurgia nova de narium,' &c.

TALLARD, Camille d'Hostun, Count of (Hist.) a distinguished general, and marshal of France, was born in 1652, and, after having obtained considerable advantages, he was beaten by the duke of Marlborough at Blenheim, and, being taken prisoner, remained seven years in England. On his return to Paris he was created a duke in 1712, became Secretary of State in 1726, and died in 1728.

TALLIS, Thomas (Biog.) a musician, died in 1585, after having been organist, as is said, to Henry VIII and the three succeeding princes, his descendants. He set to music the several parts of the English liturgy which were at that time thought proper to be sung, namely, the 'Venite Exultemus,' 'Te Deum,' &c.; as also the Litany, well known by the name of Tallis' Service.

TAMERLANE (Hist.) or Timur Bek, the emperor of the Tartars, and the great conqueror of the east, is said by some to have been the son of a shepherd, and by others to have been of the blood royal. After having made great conquests in Persia and India, he completed his career of victory by the defeat of Bajazet, the emperor of the Turks, at the battle of Ancyra, when he took the latter prisoner, and died in 1415, in the 71st year of his age, and 36th of his reign. [Vide Plate II]

TAMESIS (Geog.) now the Thames, the celebrated river of Britain. Cæs. l. 5, &c.; Tacit. Annal. l. 14, &c.

TAMWORTH, Viscount (Her.) the title borne by the eldest son of the earl of Ferrars.

TANAIS (Myth.) a deity among the Persians and Armenians, supposed to be the same as Venus.

TANAIS (Geog.) a river of Scythia, now the Don, which divided Europe from Asia, and fell into the Palus Mæotis after a rapid course.

TANAQUIL (Hist.) the wife of Lucumon, afterwards called Tarquin, the fifth king of Rome, at whose death she secured the throne for her son-in-law, Servius Tullius.

TANCRED (Her.) otherwise written Tankard, Tanckard, or Tankred, a family of great antiquity, which possessed lands soon after the conquest in Boroughbridge, York, where the family house still remains. Sir Thomas Tancred, the first baronet of this family, was created in 1662; the arms, of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a chevron between three escallop shells gules.

Crest. An olive tree vert, fructed.

TANKERVILLE, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Bennet [vide Bennet], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a bezant between three demi-lions rampant argent.

Crest. On a wreath a scaling ladder or, &c.

Supporters. Two lions argent, each charged on its shoulder with a bezant, and crowned ducally or.

Motto. "Haud facile emergunt."

TANGIER (Geog.) a seaport of Fez, in Morocco, situated on the Straits of Gibraltar, 108 m. N. N. W. Fez, 38 S. S. W. Gibraltar. Lon. 5° 40′ W., lat. 35° 42′ N.

History of Tangier.

Tangier, called by the Romans Tingis, was surrendered to the Saracens by count Julian, and became afterwards a subject of contest between the Moors and the Portuguese. In 1437 it was besieged by prince Ferdinand, but his army was completely defeated, and subjected to an ignominious capitulation. In 1471 Alonso the king, his nephew, succeeded in capturing it; and in the reign of Charles II it was ceded to England as a marriage portion with the princess Catherine of Portugal; but in 1684 it was abandoned by the English, and its fortifications destroyed, since which time it has been a principal station for piracy.

TANNER, Thomas (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1674 at Market Lavington, in Wiltshire, educated at Oxford, raised to the see of St. Asaph in 1732 after various preferments, and died in 1735, leaving 'Notitia Monastica,' &c. 8vo. 1695; fol. 1744, and 1787, which last edition was almost entirely consumed by fire; also 'Bibliotheca Britannico-Hibernica,' fol. 1748.

TANTALUS (Myth.) Ταντάλος, a king of Lydia, and son of Jupiter by a nymph named Pluto, is celebrated for the punishment he underwent in hell, which, as well as the offence, is variously represented by mythologists. He is commonly said to have been doomed to sit in water up to his chin, which, when he attempted to drink, instantly withdrew from him, and in like manner the fruit which hung just over his head escaped from his grasp whenever he went to seize it. This punishment is said to have been inflicted on him for killing his son Pelops, and serving him up to the gods when they visited him. Hom. Odyss. l. 11; Pind. Olymp. od. 1; Euripid. in Iph.; Cic. Tusc. l. 1; Ovid. Am. l. 2; Horat. l. 1, sat. 1; Senec. in Herc.; Plut. in Par.

TAPPS (Her.) a family of Hampshire, which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1791 on sir George Ivison Tapps; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Azure, on a fess or, between three rhinoceroses argent, as many escallops gules.

Crest. A greyhound couchant per pale argent and sable, charged on the body with two escallops fessways counterchanged.

TARA, Baron (Her.) of Bellinter, co. Meath, the title enjoyed by the family of Preston. [Vide Preston]

TARANTO (Geog.) or Tarento, the ancient Tarentum, a considerable town in the south of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, built on a small island in the great bay called the Gulf of Taranto, 58 m. W. Lucca, 80 W. N. W. Otranto. Lon. 17° 29′ E., lat. 40° 35′ N. It is now of much less consideration than it was formerly.

TARENTUM (Geog.) Tarentus, or Taras, now Taranto, or Tarento, a town of Magna Græcia, situated on the Sinus Tarentinus, which is said to have been founded by a Lacedæmonian colony about 707 A. C., and long retained its independence and superiority over 13 tributary cities. It even engaged in a war with Pyrrhus against the Romans, which was called the Tarentine war, began about 281 years before the Christian æra, and terminated in the subjugation of Tarentum; but the Tarentines having called in the Carthaginians to their aid, gave rise to the first Punic war. Liv. l. 12; Val. Max. l. 2; Strab. l. 6; Mel. l. 2; Horat. l. 2, ep. 7; Plin. l. 8; Ælian. Var. Hist.; Macrob. Sat. l. 2, &c.

TARENTUM (Numis.) many medals are extant of this town, bearing for their ordinary type the figure of a young man sitting on a dolphin, and carrying a trident, &c. as in the annexed figure; inscriptions—TAPENTINΩN, and TAPAΣ.

TARLETON (Her.) the name of an ancient family of Lancaster, which received the honour of the baronetcy in 1818 in the person of general sir Bannestre Tarleton; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a chevron erminois, between three cinquefoils or.

Crest. On a wreath, between two ostrich feathers argent, a mural crown gules, thereon a leopard's face.

Motto. "Post nubila Phœbus."

TARPEIA (Hist.) the daughter of Tarpeius, governor of Rome, who opened the gates of the city to the Sabines on condition of receiving their gold bracelets, which they threw upon her as they entered, together with their shields, and thus crushed her to death. She was buried in the capitol, called after her the Tarpeian rock, whence offenders were frequently thrown down. Liv. l. 6; Virg. Æn. l. 8; Propert. l. 4, el. 4.

TARQUINIA (Hist.) a daughter of Tarquinius, and wife of Servius Tullus, who died of grief, as is said, in consequence of the murder of her husband.

TARQUINIUS, Priscus (Hist.) the fifth king of Rome, otherwise called Lucumon, the son of Demaratus, a native of Greece, who, migrating to Rome, obtained the good graces of Ancus Martius, the reigning monarch, by whom he was nominated at his death the guardian of his children, when he managed to secure the throne for himself. He was assassinated by the two sons of his predecessor U. C. 177, A. C. 577, in the 80th year of his age, and the 38th of his

TARQUINIUS, grandson of the preceding, surnamed Superbus, on account of his pride, having married Tullia, the daughter of Servius Tullus, he was instigated by her to the murder of his father-in-law, upon which he ascended the throne of Rome; but, through the misconduct of his son Sextus, he was expelled from the city, after a reign of about 25 years. He died 14 years after his expulsion, during which period he had made a fruitless attempt, with the assistance of king Porsenna, to recover his throne. The Romans availed themselves of this circumstance to abolish the regal government and to appoint consuls, U. C. 245, A. C. 509. Dionysius, Livy, &c.

TARQUINIUS, Collatinus, one of the relations of Tarquinius Superbus, and the husband of Lucretia, was first chosen consul with L. Junius Brutus on the expulsion of the Tarquins, but retired from Rome some time after in consequence of his relationship to the exiled king.

TARQUINIUS, Sextus, the eldest son of Tarquinius Superbus, assisted his father by a stratagem in the conquest of the Gabii, was expelled from Rome with the latter on account of the violence offered to Lucretia, and was afterwards killed fighting bravely against the Romans in his attempt to re-establish his father in the kingdom. Dionysius, Livy, &c.

TARRACO (Geog.) now Tarragona, the capital of a province or division of Spain, which was called after it Hispania Tarraconensis. It is said to have been founded by the two Scipios, and was famous for its vines.

Mart. l. 13, ep. 118.

Tarraco Campano tantum cessura Lyæo.

And was reckoned an important place.

Auson. in Encerit.

Corduba non, non arce potens tibi Tarraco certant.

TARRAGONA (Geog.) a town of Catalonia, in the north-east of Spain, near the river Francoli, on the shores of the Mediterranean, 49 m. W. S. W. Barcelona, and 278 E Madrid. Lon. 1° 15′ E., lat. 41° 8′ N.

History of Tarragona.

Tarragona, which was called by the Romans Tarraco, was so little exposed to the accidents of war that the inhabitants used to boast that it had never been taken. It experienced this fate, however, in the late revolutionary war in Spain, when it was besieged, captured, and barbarously treated by the French general, marshal Suchet. It is the see of an archbishop, and was also the seat of several councils namely, in 516, 614, 1242, 1279, 1371, and 1593.

TARSHISH (Bibl.) תרשיש, second son of Javan. Gen x. 4.

TARSHISH, the country or place whither Solomon sent his fleets. 1 Kings x.; 2 Chron. ix. This is supposed by Josephus and others to be the same as Tarsus, the well-known city of Cilicia, and by St. Jerome and others to be Carthage, but divers conjectures have been formed on this subject.

TARSUS (Bibl.) Ταρσὸς, the city described under Geography which is celebrated as the birth-place of the apostle Paul Acts ix. &c.

TARSUS (Geog.) the capital of Cilicia, situated on the Cydnus, and said by some to have been founded by Sardanapalus. It was once the rival of Athens and Alexandria and was celebrated as the birth-place, not only of St. Paul but of Antipater, Archidamus, and Athenodorus. Strab l. 14; Mel. l. 1.

TARSUS (Numis.) numerous medals are extant of this city, on which it is distinguished by the surnames of ΑΔΡΙΑΝΗ, in honour of Adrian; ΑΝΤΩΝΕΙΝΙΑΝΗ, in honour of Caracalla; ΜΑΚΡΕΙΝΑΝΗ, in honour of Macrinus; ΚΟΜΟΔΙΑΝΗ, in honour of Commodus; and ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΙΑΝΗ, in honour of Alexander Severus; it was also entitled a metropolis, sacred, an asylum, and Neocori; as, ΤΑΡΣΟΥ ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛΕΩΣ.—ΤΑΡΣΟΥ ΔΙΣ ΝΕΩΚΟΡΟΥ ΚΟΙΝΟΝ ΚΙΛΙCΙΑC.—ΤΑΡΣΕΩΝ ΤΗΣ ΙΕΡΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΑΣΥΛΟΥ, &c.

TARTAGLIA (Biog.) or Tartalea, Nicholas, a mathematician, was born at Brescia, in Italy, and died in 1558, leaving 'Nova Scientia Inventa,' 4to. 1537, translated into English by Lucar, and published at London in folio, 1588.

TARTARY (Geog.) a country of Asia, which, in its most general sense, extends from the Eastern Ocean to the Caspian Sea, and from Corea, China, Tibet, Hindoostan, and Persia, to Russia and Siberia, lying between 55° and 135° E. lon., and between 35° and 55° N. lat. It may be considered under two grand divisions; namely, Eastern and Western Tartary. The greatest part of the former belongs to China, and is therefore denominated Chinese Tartary. A considerable part of Western Tartary has been conquered by the Russians; but that part east from the mountains of Imaus to the Caspian Sea, is called Independent Tartary. These vast countries include the central part of Asia, and derive their name from the Tartars, or Tatars, as they were originally called, a tribe of barbarians who were well known to the ancients by the name of Scythians, and, after spreading themselves over Europe and Asia, became celebrated under the different names of Huns, Tartars, Monguls, Turks, &c.

TARTINI, Joseph (Biog.) a musical performer and composer, was born in 1692 at Pirano, in Istria, and died in 1770, after having attained to the greatest eminence in his art. He published solos and concertos at different times; but his principal works are 'Trattato di Musica,' 4to. 1754; and 'Dissertazione de' principi dell' Armonia Musicale,' &c.

TASSIE, James (Biog.) an artist in the modelling department, who was born at Glasgow, and died in 1799, after having practised for a number of years with great success in modelling portraits of wax.

TASSO, Torquato (Biog.) an Italian poet of the first rank, and a descendant of the illustrious house of the Tassi of Almenno, was born in 1544, and died in the 51st year of his age, after a life chequered with misfortunes. [Vide Plate XXVII] The works of Tasso, among which his 'Rinaldo,' 'Aminta,' and 'Gierusalemme Liberata,' are the principal, have been often printed, collectively and separately, at various times and places. Of his Jerusalem Delivered not less than 132 editions have been enumerated. This work and his Aminta have been translated into English and published, the latter in 1628, and the former in 1713; and again by Mr. Hoole. His whole works were published in 6 vols. fol. Florence, 1724; but the edition of Venice, in 4 vols. 4to. is reckoned the best.

TASSONI, Alessandro (Biog.) an Italian poet, was born at Modena in 1565, and died in 1635, leaving 'Secchia rapita,' many times reprinted, particularly in 1624; 'Considerazione sopra il Petrarca;' 'Pensieri diversi;' 'La Tendarosa,' &c.

TATE, Francis (Biog.) an antiquary, and native of Northamptonshire, was born in 1560, studied first at Oxford, and afterwards at the Middle Temple, and died in 1616, leaving several MSS. some of which have been inserted in Gough's 'Collectanea Curiosa.'

TATE, Nahum, a psalmodist, was born in 1652 at Dublin, where he was educated, and died in 1715, leaving a version of the Psalms, which he executed in conjunction with Dr. Brady; besides miscellaneous poems, &c.

TATIANUS (Ecc.) Tatian, a writer of the primitive church, a Syrian by birth, and a disciple of Justin's, is remembered by some works which are extant, of which his 'Oratio ad Græcos,' is the only one that is admitted to be genuine. This was first printed at Zurich in 1546, together with the Latin version of Conradus Gesner, and afterwards subjoined to Justin Martyr's works, fol. Paris. 1636; but the edition of Oxford, 12mo. 1700, is the most esteemed.

TATIUS, Titus (Hist.) a king of Cures, among the Sabines, made war upon the Romans after the rape of their women, but peace being concluded between the two people, and the Sabines admitted into the city of Rome, Tatius shared the sovereign authority with Romulus for six years, at the end of which he was murdered at Lanuvium A. C. 742. His effigy is given on medals of the Tituria gens, as in the annexed figure.

TATIUS (Ecc.) vide Achilles.

TAUBMANN, Frederick (Biog.) a German critic, and native of Franconia, was born about 1565, and died in 1613, leaving Commentaries on Plautus and Virgil, &c.

TAVERNIER, John Baptist (Biog.) a French traveller, was born at Paris in 1605, and died in 1689, leaving his 'Travels,' first printed in 3 vols. 4to. Paris, 1676-79; but most commonly in 6 vols. 12mo.

TAUROMINIUM (Geog.) a town of Sicily, built in the age of Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse.

TAURUS (Geog.) the largest mountain of Asia, which is properly called Taurus in Cilicia, and in other countries is known by the names of Amanus, Antitaurus, Caucasus, &c.

TAYGETUS (Geog.) a mountain of Laconia, in Peloponnesus, where the women used to celebrate the orgies of Bacchus. It hung over the city of Peloponnesus, on which it is said to have fallen in consequence of an earthquake, and to have destroyed the suburbs. Strab. l. 8; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 2.

TAYLOR, Jeremy (Ecc.) a distinguished prelate, was born at Cambridge in 1613, where he was educated, and took his degree of A. B. in 1631; he suffered for his integrity during the rebellion and usurpation; and, after having attended his majesty, Charles I, as his chaplain, was raised at the restoration to the united see of Down and Connor, and died in 1667, leaving 'Liberty of Prophesying,' 4to. 1647; 'The Life of Christ,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1650; 'The Rule and Exercise of Holy Living,' of which the 28th edition was published in 1810; 'Rule and Exercises of Holy Dying,' published in 1651; 'Ductor Dubitantium,' or the Rule of Conscience, &c. fol. 1660, which is the largest and most laborious of his works; besides a number of sermons, &c. Several of his smaller pieces were collected and published in 1657 under the title of 'A Collection of Polemical and Moral Discourses,' &c. [Vide Plate XI]

TAYLOR, John (Biog.) usually called the Water Poet, from his being a waterman as well as a poet, was born in 1580 in Gloucestershire, and died in 1655, after having preserved his loyalty uncontaminated in an age of rebellion. His works were collected and published in folio in 1630.

TAYLOR, Silas, an antiquary, was born in 1624, educated at Oxford, and died in 1678, leaving his 'History of Harwich.

TAYLOR, Brook, a mathematician, was born in 1685 at Edmonton, in Middlesex, and died in 1731, leaving 'New Principles of Linear Perspective,' &c. 1715, and reprinted several times since; besides several papers in the Philosophical Transactions.

TAYLOR, John, a critic, was born in 1704 at Shrewsbury, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1766, leaving an edition of Lysias and Demosthenes, which have secured him a lasting reputation as a scholar.

TAYLOUR (Her.) the family name of the marquis of Headfort.

TEIGNMOUTH, Lord (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Shore.

TELAMON (Myth.) Τελαμὼν, a king of the island of Salamis, son of Æacus and Endeis, and father to Teucer and Ajax, who, on that account, is called Telamonius heros. Hom. Il. passim.; Pind. Isth. Od. 6; Sophocl. in Ag.; Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 97; Anton. Liber. 38; Paus. l. 2, &c.

TELCHINES (Myth.) a people of Rhodes, who were the inventors of many useful arts, and passed for the sons of the sea. They were all destroyed in a deluge by Jupiter. Diod. l. 5; Ovid. Met. l. 7; Euseb. in Chron.

TELEGONUS (Myth.) a son of Ulysses and Circe, born in the island of Ææa, where he was educated. When arrived at man's estate, he sailed for Ithaca to make himself known to his father; but being shipwrecked on the coast, he was attacked by Ulysses and Telemachus as an invader, and unwittingly killed his father. He is afterwards said to have married Penelope, and to have had by her a son named Italus, who gave his name to Italy. Diod. l. 7; Horat. l. 3, od. 29; Ovid. Fast. l. 3; Serv. ad Æn. l. 2, &c.

TELEMACHUS (Myth.) Τηλεμάχος, a son of Ulysses and Penelope, who went in search of his father after the Trojan war accompanied by Minerva under the form of Mentor. On his return the suitors of his mother endeavoured to kill him, but he avoided their snares. After the death of Ulysses, he fled to Italy in consequence of having had the misfortune to kill his mother-in-law Circe. Hom. Odyss. pass.; Hygin. Fab. 95

TELEPHUS (Myth.) Τηλέφος, a king of Mysia, son of Hercules and Auge, who was exposed as soon as born on Mount Parthenius, but was preserved by some shepherds. He was afterwards adopted by Teuthras, who made him his heir; and, on his marrying a daughter of Priam, he assisted the latter in the Trojan war, and was killed by Achilles. Apollod. l. 2; Hygin. Fab. 101, &c.

TECTOSAGES (Geog.) or Tectosagæ, a people of Gallia Narbonensis, whose capital was Tolosium, or the modern Toulouse. The Tectosagæ were among the number of Gauls who pillaged Rome under Brennus. Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 6; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3; Liv. l. 38; Strab. l. 4; Justin. l. 32; Flor. l. 2.

TEFFLIS (Geog.) the capital of Asiatic Georgia, seated on the Kur, 110 m. N. Erwan, 200 S. S. W. Astracan. Lon. 44° 50′ E. lat. 41° 40′ N. It was taken in 1723 by the Turks, in 1734 by Kouli Khan, and in 1797 by Aga Mohammed Khan, after which it became subject to Russia.

TEGEA (Geog.) or Tegæa, now Moklia, a town of Arcadia, in Peloponnesus, founded by Tegeates, a son of Lyceon; the inhabitants of which were called Tegeates. Strab. l. 8; Ovid. Met. l. 8; Paus. l. 8.

TELL, William (Hist.) one of the founders of Swiss independence, who is said to have been sentenced by Geisler, a governor under the emperor Albert, by way of punishment, to shoot an apple off the head of his son, which, having effected without injury to the latter, he afterwards shot the governor through the heart, and joining with other revolters, sent all the Austrian governors out of the country, and laid the foundation of the Helvetic League. Tell is supposed to have lost his life in an inundation at Burgeln in 1354, 47 years after this event. The last male of his race, of whom there is any account, was John Martin Tell, of Attinghausen, who died in 1684. His descent, in the female line, became extinct in 1720.

TELLIER, Francis Michael (Hist.) Marquis de Louvoi, was born at Paris in 1641, made Minister of War in 1664, succeeded his father in 1666 as Secretary of State, was appointed in 1683 superintendant of buildings, &c. and died in 1691. The 'Testament Politique' published under his name was written by Courtils.

TELLIER, Michael (Biog.) a Jesuit, was born in 1643 in Normandy, and died in 1719, leaving, among his works, 'Defense des nouveaux Chrêtiens,' &c.

TELLUS (Myth.) vide Terra.

TEMPE (Geog.) a valley of Thessaly, between Mount Olympus on the north and Ossa on the south, through which the river Peneus flowed into the Ægean Sea. It is celebrated by the poets for the pleasantness of its situation, and the coolness of its shades. Diod. l. 4; Virg. Georg. l. 20, 469; Ovid. Met. l. 10, 569, &c.; Strab. l. 9; Mel. l. 2; Dionys. Perieg. v. 219.

TEMPESTA, Antonio (Biog.) a Florentine painter, was born in 1555, and died in 1630, leaving many paintings, particularly of landscapes, animals, and battles, which are highly esteemed.

TEMPESTA, Peter, an artist of Haerlem, otherwise called Molyn and Pietro Mulier, was born in 1637, and died in 1701. His pictures are very rare, and are held in great estimation.

TEMPLE, Sir William (Hist.) a statesman and writer, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1628 in London, educated at Cambridge, and employed by Charles II as a negociator on different occasions, particularly in framing the triple alliance between England, Sweden, and Holland in 1668, as also in managing the treaty which afterwards terminated in the peace of Nimeguen. Although he was afterwards much in the confidence of Charles, and his successors James and William, yet he gradually withdrew from public concerns; and, taking no part in the revolution, he died in 1700, leaving several works, which have been published at different times, separately and collectively. [Vide Plate IX] His son, John Temple, was appointed Secretary at war by king William in 1689, but drowned himself in a fit of melancholy after having been scarcely a week in office.

TEMPLE (Her.) the name of a family of some consideration in the time of Edward VI, when Peter Temple had a grant of the manor of Merston Boteler, co. Warwick, &c. and was likewise owner of the manor of Stowe, in Buckinghamshire, where his descendants fixed their residence. Sir Richard Temple, of Stowe, bart. was created in 1714 baron of Cobham, in Kent, and in 1718 viscount Cobham, which titles devolved upon his lordship's decease to his sister, viscountess Cobham and baroness Cobham, relict of Richard Grenville, of Wotton, esq. who was advanced in 1749 to the dignity of countess Temple; George Grenville Nugent Temple, the second earl Temple, was created in 1784 marquis of Buckingham, and his son Richard was advanced in 1822 to the dignities of marquis of Chandos, duke of Buckingham and Chandos. From Anthony Temple, second son of the Peter before-mentioned, descended sir William Temple, the statesman above-mentioned, and also Henry Temple, who was created in 1722 baron Temple, of Mount Temple, and viscount Palmerston, of Palmerston, co. Dublin.

TEMPLE, the baronetcy which had been conferred on this family in 1612 in the person of sir Thomas Temple, the ancestor of viscount Cobham above-mentioned, is still enjoyed by his descendants.

TEMPLE, Sir William (Biog.) provost of Trinity College, Dublin, was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1626, leaving 'Analysis Anglica triginta Psalmorum,' &c.

TEMPLE, Sir John, a lawyer and son of the preceding, was the author of 'A History of the Irish Rebellion in 1641,' 4to. 1646, 8vo. 1746, and republished by baron Maseres in 4to. 1812. He was the father of sir William Temple, the statesman above-mentioned.

TEMPLEMAN, Peter (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1711 at Dorchester, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1769, leaving a translation of Norden's Travels, &c. He is to be distinguished from Thomas Templeman, author of 'Tables of the Population and Magnitude of the several Kingdoms of the World,' who died in 1729.

TEMPLETOWN, Viscount (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Upton [vide Upton], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Upton, viscount Templetown and lord baron Templetown, of Templetown, co. Antrim.

Arms. Sable, a cross moline argent.

Crest. On a ducal coronet or, a war-horse passant sable, caparisoned or.

Supporters. The dexter, a war-horse, caparisoned as the crest. The sinister, a man in complete armour proper, garnished or, in his right hand a spear erect, on his left arm a shield of the arms bordered or, and on his head a steel-cap with a plume of feathers gules.

TENEDOS (Geog.) Τένεδος, an island of the Ægean Sea, so called from Tenes, son of Cycnus and Proclea, opposite Troy, about 12 miles distant from Sigæum, and 56 N. Lesbos. It bears the same name at present, and is situated, according to modern Geography, in the Grecian Archipelago. Lon. 26° E. lat. 39° 53′ N.

History of Tenedos.

This island, which is close to the coast of Asia Minor, at a small distance from the entrance of the Dardanelles, became famous during the Trojan war, and has retained its importance from its situation, near the mouth of the Hellespont, its forts affording a safe anchorage to vessels bound to Byzantium, or Constantinople, as it is now called. The emperor Justinian erected a large magazine here to receive the cargoes of corn destined for the supply of the capital. The Genoese and Venetians long disputed the possession of this island; but it was taken in 1302 and annexed by the caliph Othman to the Turkish empire. Hom. Odyss. l. 3; Diod. l. 5; Strab. l. 13; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 5; Virg. Æn. l. 2; Ovid. Met. l. 1, &c.

TENIERS, David (Biog.) a Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1582, and died in 1649, leaving a good reputation as an artist. His eldest son David, who was a disciple of his father, was nicknamed "The Ape of Painting," because he could imitate every sort of painting with remarkable exactness. He died in 1694, at the age of 84. His brother Abraham was also highly esteemed as a painter.

TENISON, Thomas (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1636 at Cottenham, in Cambridgeshire, at a time that his father, who was rector of Mundesley, in Norfolk, was suffering for his loyalty by the loss of his living. He took his degrees of A. B. and A. M. in 1656-60 as a scholar on archbishop Parker's foundation of Benet College, Cambridge, was, after various preferments, raised to the see of Lincoln in 1691, succeeded Tillotson in the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury in 1694, and after having taken an active part in public concerns during the reigns of William and Anne, he died in 1715, leaving some controversial works.

TEOS (Geog.) Τέως, or Teios, now Sigagik, a maritime town on the coast of Ionia, in Asia Minor, opposite to Samos. It was one of the twelve cities of the Ionian confederacy.

TERAH (Bibl.) תרח, son of Nahor, and father of Nahor, Haran, and Abraham, had Abraham at the age of 72, and died at the age of 275. Gen. xi. He was born A. M. 1878, A. C. 2126. Usser. Annal. &c.

TERBURGH, Gerard (Biog.) a Dutch painter of Zwol, near Overyssel, who died in 1681, at the age of 73, was looked upon as little inferior to Mieris and Gerard Dow.

TERENTIA (Hist.) the wife of Cicero, by whom he had M. Cicero and Tullia, was afterwards repudiated for infidelity, when she successively married Sallust and Messala Corvinus, and died in her 103d or, according to Pliny, in her 117th year. Cic. ad Attic. l. 11, ep. 16, et ad Fam. &c.; Val. Max. l. 8; Plin. l. 7; Plut. in Cic.

TERENTIA, the wife of Mecænas, with whom it was said that Augustus carried on an intrigue. Dio. l. 54.

TERENTIANUS, Maurus (Biog.) a poet and grammarian of Carthage, who is supposed to have flourished in the third century, was the author of a Treatise on the Rules of Versification, which consists of 2981 verses. This poem was first published in 1497 at Milan, with Ausonius, by Merula, who discovered the manuscript in a monastery at Bobbia. It has since been inserted in Putsche's edition of the 'Grammatici Veteres,' 4to. Han.; the best separate edition is said to be that by Jacobus Micyllus, 8vo. Francof. 1584.

TERENTIUS, Publius (Biog.) a native of Carthage, in Africa, celebrated for his Latin comedies. He was originally a slave, but manumitted on account of his genius. He enjoyed the friendship of Scipio and Lælius, and died at the age of 35, as is supposed, while on his return to Rome from Greece, whither he had gone to collect Menander's plays, some of which he had already translated. Six only of his plays are extant; of which the edition of Elzevir, 12mo. 1635; the Variorum, 8vo. 1686; that of Westerhovius, 2 vols. 4to. 1726; that of Bentley, 4to. 1726; and that of Zeunius, 2 vols. 8vo. Lips. 1774, are reckoned among the best. [Vide Plate XXX]

TERENTIUS, Varro, vide Varro.

TERGESTE (Geog.) called by Strabo Τεργέστη, by Ptolemy Τεργέστον, now Trieste, a town of the Carni, on the borders of Illyricum, and situated on the Sinus Tergestinus, or Gulf of Trieste. It is said to have been a colony, and is commemorated in an inscription AED. II. VIR. JUR. D. TERGESTE. Paterc. l. 2; Strab. l. 7; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Ptol. l. 2; Dionys. Perieg. v. 382.

TERNE, Henry (Hist.) a naval captain, who, as commander of the Dreadnought, displayed extraordinary gallantry in the action with the Dutch in 1665, and was killed the following year on board the Triumph in the action with the same enemy.

TERPSICHORE (Myth.) Τερψιχόρη, one of the Muses, and a daughter of Jupiter and Mnemosyne, who presided over dancing. Apollod. l. 1; Juv. l. 7; Aus. Ep. 138; Schol. Euripid. in Arg. Rh.; Eustath. in Il. 10.

TERRA (Myth.) Γαῖα, one of the most ancient of the heathen deities, wife of Uranus, and mother of Oceanus, the Titans, Cyclops, Giants, Rhea, Themis, &c.

TERROR (Myth.) an emotion of the mind, which was made a deity, and an attendant on Mars and Bellona.

TERTIUS (Bibl.) Τέρτιος, St. Paul's amanuensis.

TERTULLIANUS, Quintius Septimius Florens (Ecc.) the first Latin writer of the primitive church, was born at Carthage, and becoming a convert to Christianity, he employed his talents in its behalf, chiefly during the reigns of Severus and Caracalla, i. e. from 194 to 216, and died, as is supposed, at an advanced age. The principal editors of the collected works of Tertullian are Rhenanus, who published his edition at Basle in 1521; Pamelius, whose edition appeared at Antwerp in 1579: and Rigaltius, whose edition published in 1634, is reckoned preferable to either of the former.

TERTULLUS (Bibl.) Τέρτυλλος, one of Paul's accusers, who preferred his accusation before Felix. Acts xxiv. 1, &c.

TESTA, Pietro (Biog.) an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Lucca in 1611, and was drowned in the Tiber in 1650 in endeavouring to recover his hat, which had been blown into the river. He applied himself to copying the antiques at Rome, which procured him a place among distinguished painters.

TETHYS (Myth.) Τηθὺς, the principal of the sea-deities, was wife of Oceanus, and daughter of Cœlum, or Uranus, and Terra. Hesiod. Theog. v. 336; Hom. Il. l. 14; Apollod. l. 1; Virg. Georg. l. 1; Ovid. Met.

TETRAPOLIS (Geog.) vide Antioch.

TETRICUS, Pivesus (Hist.) or Pesuvius, a prefect of Gaul, was saluted emperor at Bourdeaux at the solicitation of Victorinus; but, wearied with the insolence of the soldiery, he surrendered himself to Aurelian, by whom, after being led in triumph, he was treated with many marks of respect, and made governor of Lucania. His son C. Pacuvius Pivesus Tetricus, who had been made the partner of his throne, was also conducted in triumph by Aurelian, and afterwards permitted to live in the enjoyment of his property.

TETRICUS (Numis.) medals are extant of the usurpers above-mentioned, both father and son, bearing their effigies as in the annexed figures; inscriptions IMP. PESU. TETRICUS AUG.—C. PAC. TETRICUS AUG.

TEUCER (Myth.) Τεῦκρος, a king of Phrygia, and son of the Scamander by Ida, who is said to have first introduced the worship of the goddess Cybele. The Trojans were from him called Teucri. Apollod. l. 3; Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 3, &c.

TEUCER, a son of Telamon, king of Salamis, who was one of Helen's suitors, and signalized himself by his valour during the Trojan war. Being dispossessed of his kingdom by his father, because he did not revenge the death of his brother Ajax, he retired to Cyprus. where his posterity are said to have remained until the time of Evagoras. Hom. Il. l. 8; Apollod. l. 3; Horat. l. 1; Paterc. l. 1, &c.

TEUTA (Hist.) a queen of Illyricum, who, having caused the Roman ambassadors P. Junius, and T. Coruncanius, to be put to death, was defeated by the Romans in battle. Liv. l. 20; Plin. l. 34; Flor. l. 2.

TEUTONES (Geog.) or Teutoni, a people of Germany, who, with the Cimbri, made incursions into Gaul, and cut in pieces two Roman armies. They were at length defeated by Marius.

TEWKESBURY (Geog.) a town of Gloucestershire, in England, situated on the river Avon, 10 miles N. Gloucester, and 102 W. N. W. London. This town is memorable for the battle fought in its neighbourhood in 1471, between the houses of York and Lancaster, which proved fatal to the cause of the latter, queen Margaret and her son being both taken prisoners. The field on which this battle was fought is still called the Bloody Meadow, and is about half a mile from the town. Tewkesbury was also the scene of many engagements during the rebellion.

TEXEIRA, Joseph Peter (Biog.) a Portuguese Dominican, was born in 1543, and died in 1620, leaving 'De Portugalliæ Ortu,' &c. 1582.

TEXEIRA, Peter, a Portuguese traveller and historian in the 16th century, who is known by his work on the Persian History, entitled 'Relaciones del Origen, y Succession de los Reyes de Persia,' &c. 8vo. Amberes, 1610, translated into French under the title of Voyages de Texeira, &c. 2 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1681.

TEXEL (Geog.) an island of the Netherlands, at the entrance of the Zuyder Zee, in the neighbourhood of which three several battles have been fought between the English and Dutch, namely, in 1653, when Blake defeated Van Tromp; in 1673, which was fought with doubtful success; and in 1799, when the Dutch, disaffected to the republican government, surrendered after a very slight resistance.

TEYNHAM, Lord (Her.) the title enjoyed by the family of Roper; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Party per fess azure and or, a pale and three roe-bucks' heads erased counterchanged.

Crest. On a wreath, a lion rampant sable, holding a ducal coronet between his paws or.

Supporters. On the dexter side a buck or, on the sinister a tiger regardant argent.

Motto. "Spes mea in Deo."

THADDEUS (Bibl.) Θαδδαῖος, a surname of Jude the apostle. Matt. x; Mark iii.

THADDEUS (Ecc.) one of the seventy disciples, supposed to be the brother of St. Thomas, who is said to have sent him to Abgarus, king of Edessa. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 1, c. 13.

THAIS (Hist.) a famous courtesan of Athens, who accompanied Alexander in his Asiatic conquests, and instigated him to set Persepolis on fire. Propert. l. 2.

THALASSIUS (Hist.) a beautiful young Roman, who at the rape of the Sabine women, secured to himself a virgin of peculiar beauty, by exclaiming as he carried her away, that she was for Thalassius, whereby he prevented all competition. Their marriage being afterwards attended with peculiar felicity, the word Thalassius was from that time made use of at the Roman nuptials, to denote a wish that those who were married might enjoy a similar felicity.

THALES (Biog.) one of the seven wise men of Greece, and a native of Miletus, in Ionia, died in the 96th year of his age, 548 years before the Christian æra, after having made himself famous by his discoveries in astronomy. [Vide Plate XXI.]

THALESTRIS (Hist.) a queen of the Amazons, who is said to have gone 35 days' journey attended by 300 women, to meet Alexander, during his Asiatic conquests. Justin. l. 2; Q. Curt. l. 6.

THALETES (Biog.) a Greek poet, who is often confounded with Thales. He is said to have been cotemporary with Lycurgus.

THALIA (Myth.) Θάλεια, one of the Muses who presided over festivals, as also pastoral and comic poetry.

THALIA (Numis.) vide Musæ.

THAMES (Geog.) one of the most noted rivers of Great Britain, called by the Romans Tamesis. Its two most probable sources, the Isis and the Churn, are in Gloucestershire, and form their junction near Cricklade. At Lechlade it is joined by the Coln and Lech, when it becomes navigable. At Oxford, where it retains the name of Isis, it is joined by the Charvel, at Abingdon by the Ock, and at Dorchester by the Thame. In its course from Wallingford to Reading, and London, it receives the Kennet, Loddon, Wey, Mole, Lea, Roding, Darent, and Medway.

THANET, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Tufton, [vide Tufton] which with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Tufton, earl of Thanet, baron Tufton, of Tufton, and baronet.

Arms. Sable, an eagle displayed ermine, within a bordure argent.

Crest. On a wreath, a lion sejeant proper.

Motto. "Alis volat propriis."

THAPSUS (Geog.) a town of Africa Propria, where Scipio and Juba were defeated by Cæsar. Liv. l. 29.

THARUP, Thomas (Biog.) one of the best modern Danish poets, was born at Copenhagen in 1749, and died in 1821, leaving Cantatas and Hymns, which are highly esteemed.

THASUS (Geog.) or Thasos, a small island in the Ægean Sea on the coast of Thrace, opposite the mouth of the Nestus, anciently known by the names of Æria, Æthria, Acte, Ogygia, &c. It now bears the names of Thasos, Thasus, or Tasso, and is described in modern Geography as an island in the Grecian Archipelago, at the entrance of the Gulf of Contessa. The chief town of the same name is situated lon. 24° 39′ E. lat. 40° 46′ N. It was the birthplace of Polygnotus, the painter. Herod. l. 2; Liv. l. 33; Corn. Nep. in Cim. c. 2; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 14; Ælian. Var. Hist.

THEBÆ (Geog.) Θῆβαι, the name of two cities of the greatest celebrity in history.

THEBÆ, the magnificent city of Ægypt, capital of the district of the Thebais, was denominated Hecatompylos, on account of its hundred gates; and Diospolis, as being sacred to Jupiter. It is celebrated by Homer for the part which it bore in the Trojan war, and also for its magnitude. Hom. Il. l. 9, v. 382.

> Οὐδ' ὅσ' ἐς Ὀρχομενὸν ποτινίσσεται ἠδ' ὅσα Θήβας
> Αἰγυπτίας, ὅθι πλεῖςα δόμοις ἐν κτήματα κεῖται
> Αἱθ' ἑκατόμπυλοί εἰσι.

Thebes was destroyed by Cambyses, king of Persia, and notwithstanding the immense thickness of its walls, it was but a heap of ruins in the time of Strabo, enough of which still remains to raise the admiration of every beholder. Herod. l. 2; Diodor. l. 2; Strab. l. 17; Mel. l. 1; Propert. l. 4, el. 5, &c.

THEBÆ, Thebes, or, as it is called by the Turks, Thiva, the capital of Bœotia, is styled by Pindar, Heptapylos, and is noted by the poets as the scene of many of the fables of antiquity, particularly respecting its foundation by Cadmus, of its deliverance from the Sphinx by Œdipus, and its siege by Adrastus, and his companions, known by the name of The Seven Chiefs before Thebes, all which circumstances have been celebrated in the writings of Æschylus, Euripides, and Sophocles. While Epaminondas was at the head of affairs, Thebes was enabled to make a stand against all the states of Greece, but it was subjugated by Philip, king of Macedonia, destroyed by Alexander the Great, in consequence of its revolt, and repaired by Cassander, son of Antipater, in the 111th Olympiad, 335 A. C. but it never recovered its importance. Thebes could boast of giving birth to Pindar, whose house was the only thing saved, by desire of Alexander, amidst the universal ruin which he occasioned. Apollod. l. 2; Strab. l. 9; Mel. l. 2; Plut. in Pel.; Paus. l. 2, &c.

THEMIS (Myth.) Θέμις, a daughter of Cœlus and Terra, who married Jupiter, by whom she became the mother of the Parcæ and the Horæ, &c. She was considered as the goddess of Justice, and was the first of the deities to whom the heathens raised temples. Her oracle was famous in Attica in the age of Deucalion. Hesiod. Theogn. v. 902; Apollod. l. 1; Ovid. Met. l. 1; Fest. de Signif. Vert. &c.

THEMISTIUS (Bibl.) a philosopher of Paphlagonia, in the age of Constantius, wrote some commentaries on Aristotle, fragments of which are still extant; as also thirty of his orations. The edition of Themistius by Harduin, fol. Paris, 1684, is reckoned the best.

THEMISTOCLES (Hist.) Θεμιστοκλῆς, a celebrated general of Athens, whose father's name was Neocles, and his mother's Euterpe, or Abrotonum, a native of Halicarnassus. After having been disinherited by his father on account of his vices, his ambition was roused to seek his own advancement, and having, by popular arts, obtained a place in the government of his country, he was made commander of the Athenian fleet, at the time of the Persian invasion, and immortalized his name by the victory of Salamis, which destroyed the fleet of Xerxes, and saved his country from further desolation. He afterwards shared the fate of popular leaders, by being banished from the city which he had preserved, and died of poison, as is said, at the age of 65, about 449 years before the Christian æra. [Vide Plate XIII.] Herod. l. 7; Thucyd. l. 1; C. Nep. et Plut. in Vit.; Paus. l. 1; Ælian. Var. Hist.

THEOBALD, Lewis (Biog.) a miscellaneous writer and critic, was born at Sittingbourne, in Kent, and died in 1744. He is principally known for having provoked the ire of Pope, who made him the hero of his Dunciad, in consequence of his criticisms on that poet's translation of Homer.

THEOCRITUS (Biog.) Θεόκριτος a distinguished poet of Sicily, in the reign of Hiero, to whom one of his Idylls is inscribed. It has been said by some that he was put to death by order of Hieronymus, king of Syracuse; but others have supposed that he is confounded with Theocritus, an historian and rhetorician of Chios, who suffered this fate by order of Antigonus. Theocritus was first published in folio at Milan in 1493, but the subsequent editions by Heinsius, 8vo. Oxon. 1699; by Warton, 2 vols. 4to. Oxon. 1770; by Valknaer, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1773, are the most esteemed. Polewhele has translated this author into English verse, with notes, as has also Fawkes. [Vide Plate XXVII]

THEODAHATUS (Hist.) or Theodatus, a king of the Goths, in Italy, succeeded Athalaric, and was killed in a mutiny by his own soldiers, in the third year of his reign, A. D. 535 or 536, after having been compelled to sue for peace from Justinian. The effigy of this prince is given as in the annexed figure.

THEODEBERT (Hist.) the name of two kings of Austrasia.

THEODEBERT I, succeeded his father Thierri in 534, and died in 548, just as he was on the point of making war on Justinian. His effigy is given, as in the annexed figure.

THEODEBERT II, succeeded his father Childebert II, as king of Austrasia, in 595, and was killed at Cologne in 611.

THEODORA, Flavia Maximiana (Hist.) daughter of Eutropia, the wife of Maximianus Hercules, was married to Constantius Chlorus, by whom she had many children. Her effigy is given, as in the annexed figure.

THEODORA, wife of the emperor Justinian, was a favourer of the Eutychians, and other heretics, who disturbed the peace of the church at that time. Procop. de Bell. Goth.; Evag. Hist. &c.

THEODORE, Anthony (Hist.) a king of Corsica, who, after having been successively in the service of Germany, Holland, England, France, and Portugal, was raised by the malcontents of Corsica to the throne, in 1736, but being unable to make a stand against the Genoese, to whom the island belonged, he retired to different countries, in order to endeavour to gain assistance, and at length died in 1756, in a state of great indigence, having been for some years previous to his death a prisoner in the King's Bench, for debt.

THEODORE (Ecc.) the name of two popes.

THEODORE I, succeeded John IV in 641, and died in 649, when he was succeeded by Martin I.

THEODORE II, a native of Rome, who held the pontificate only 20 days, in 898, was succeeded by John IX.

THEODORE, archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of king Egbert, died in 690, at the age of 88, after having established an ecclesiastical discipline, contained in his 'Penitential,' which, with his other works, were collected by James Petit, and printed at Paris, 2 vols. 4to. 1677.

THEODORET (Ecc.) bishop of Cyrus, a city of Syria, was born in 386, nominated to this see in 420, and died between the years 457 and 470, according to different accounts. The works of Theodoret were published in Greek and Latin by Father Sirmond, in 4 vols. fol. Paris. 1642; and a new edition by Schulze, in 5 vols. 4to. or 10 vols. 8vo. Hal. 1768-74. His Ecclesiastical History has been translated and published by Valesius, with Eusebius and the other ecclesiastical historians, and republished by Reading, 3 vols. fol. Lond. Phot. Cod. 31, &c.; St. Leo in Epist.; Gennad. in Catal. &c.

THEODORIC (Hist.) or Thierri, the name of two kings of France, vide Thierri.

THEODORIC, the name of two kings of Spain.

THEODORIC I, a king of the Visigoths in Spain, otherwise called Theoderede, succeeded Vallia in 419, and was killed in battle against Attila in 451. His effigy and that of the following prince are given, as in the annexed figures.

THEODORIC II, second son of the preceding, succeeded his brother Thorismund in 453, and was killed in 465 or 466, by his brother Euric, after a reign of thirteen years.

THEODORIC, king of the Ostrogoths in Italy, and natural son of Valemir, was given up as an hostage to the emperor Leo I, in 461, and having rendered him considerable service, was sent in 484 into Italy against Odoacer, whom he defeated and put to death, by which means he became master of Italy, strengthened his power by marrying the sister of Clovis, and died in 526.

THEODOSIUS, Flavius (Hist.) a Roman emperor, surnamed Magnus, from the greatness of his exploits, began to reign conjointly with Gratian in 379, and died in 395, after having gained many signal victories over the barbarians. The Roman empire was divided between his two sons, Arcadius and Honorius. [Vide Plate II] Socrat. l. 5, &c.; Zosim. l. 4.

THEODOSIUS Flavius II, or Jun. son of Arcadius, succeeded his father at the age of eight, in 408, and died in 450. The effigies of this and the following emperor are given, as in the annexed figures.

THEODOSIUS, Flavius III, son of Mauritius and Constantina, was made a partner in the throne of his father in 590, and is generally supposed to have been put to death by order of Phocas.

THEODOSIUS, surnamed Adramyttenus, was elected to the empire much against his will in 715, and retired to a monastery two years after.

THEODOSIUS (Biog.) a mathematician, surnamed Tripolites, who flourished, as is supposed, in the first century, wrote a work on the doctrine of the Sphere, which was translated from the Greek into the Arabic, and from this into the Latin, but the Arabic version being very defective, a more complete one, in Greek and Latin, was published at Paris in 1558, by Pena; it has since been published and commented upon by Dr. Barrow.

THEODOTION (Ecc.) a disciple of Tatian, and afterwards a follower of Marcion, exchanged this last profession for that of a Jew, and translated the Old Testament into Greek. His translation is looked upon to be more unfaithful than that of Aquila. Baron. Annal.; Simon. Hist. Crit. du V. T.

THEODOTUS (Ecc.) or Theodore, surnamed Cassiteros, son of the patrician Michael and brother-in-law of Constantine Copronymus, obtained the good graces of Leo the Armenian, by which he procured his election to the patriarchate of Constantinople in 815, after the expulsion of Nicephorus, and retained it until 821, during which period he exerted his power against the use of images. Cedrenus, Zonaras, &c.

THEODULPHUS (Ecc.) bishop of Orleans in the ninth century, and a native of Cisalpine Gaul, was in favour with Charlemagne, whose will he was appointed to sign, and was afterwards in the confidence of Louis le Debonnaire, but being charged with taking part in the conspiracy of Bernard king of Italy, he was imprisoned at Angers, and died in 821, after having been, as is said, released from his confinement. He composed, in prison, the hymn beginning with Gloria, laus, et honor, part of which, in the Roman Catholic service, is sung on Palm Sunday. Besides which, he wrote other works, of which P. Sirmond published a collection, in 8vo. 1646.

THEOGNIS (Biog.) a Greek poet of Megara, who was born in the 59th Olympiad, about 550 years before the Christian æra, was the author of several poems, particularly one of a moral cast, of which more than a thousand verses are extant, and have been preserved in different collections of the Minor Poets. One of the best editions is that of Blackwall, 12mo. Lond. 1706.

THEON (Biog.) a philosopher and mathematician of the fourth century, has left some commentaries on the ancient mathematicians, particularly Ptolemy, which are to be found in some editions of his Almagest. He, or another author of the same name, wrote a work on rhetoric, entitled 'Progymnasmata,' printed at Basle in 1541; but the edition of Leyden, in 8vo. 1626, is reckoned the best.

THEOPHANES (Biog.) a Greek historian of Mitylene, who was much in favour with Pompey, of whose wars he wrote a history, quoted by Strabo and Plutarch.

THEOPHANES, an historian and an abbot, of an illustrious family of Byzantium, who died in exile in 818; wrote a Chronicle, which was published with the version of Father Goar, in 1655.

THEOPHANES, Prokopovitch (Ecc.) a Russian prelate, was born in 1681, and having gained the favour of Peter the Great, and Catherine, he was successively promoted to the see of Prescof, and the archiepiscopal see of Novogorod, and died in 1736, leaving, among other works, a Life of Peter the Great.

THEOPHILE (Biog.) a French poet, surnamed Viaud, was born about 1590 at Clerac, in the diocese of Agen, and died in 1626, leaving a collection of Poems, a Treatise on the Immortality of the Soul, &c.

THEOPHILUS (Hist.) succeeded his father Michael, in the Eastern empire, in 829, and died in 842, leaving his son Michael for his successor.

THEOPHILUS (Ecc.) the sixth bishop of Antioch, who governed that church from 169 to 182 and left several works, of which, only three Letters addressed to Autolycus, are remaining. Some have supposed this Theophilus to be the person whom St. Luke addresses in his Gospel, and in the Acts, but the period of time in which the two lived, make this very improbable. Origen. Hom. I in Luc.; Ambros. in Luc.; Epiphan. Hær.

THEOPHILUS, a patriarch of Alexandria, succeeded Timotheus in 385, and died in 412, after having succeeded in eradicating idolatry out of Egypt. His memory is however less honoured on account of his treatment of St. Chrysostom, whom he caused to be deposed. Socrates, Sozomenes, et Theodoret Hist. Eccles.

THEOPHRASTUS (Biog.) a philosopher, and disciple of Aristotle, a native of Eresium, in the island of Lesbos, was born in the second year of the 102d Olympiad, A. C. 371, and died in the 107th year of his age, leaving a number of works, of which, among those that are extant, the principal are his History of Plants, and his Characters. The first was published in the fourth volume of the Aldine edition of Aristotle, Venet. 1497; and since reprinted separately by Bodæus in 1644. His Characters have passed through many editions, of which that by Needham, 8vo. Cantab. 1712; and that by Fischer, 8vo. Coburg. 1763, are reckoned the best. There is an entire edition of his works by Heinsius, fol. Lugd. Bat. 1613. Cic. in Tusc. l. 3, &c.; Strab. l. 13; Quintil. l. 10; Diog. in Vit.; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 2. [Vide Plate XXXIII]

THEOPHYLACTUS (Ecc.) a patriarch of Constantinople, and son of Romanus, who caused his own children to be raised to the throne to the detriment of his son-in-law Constantine Porphyrogenitus. He was placed over the see of Constantinople in 933, and died in 956, after having governed the church little to his own honour.

THEOPHYLACTUS, archbishop of Acridia, in Bulgaria, in the 11th century, was the author of Commentaries on the four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Minor Prophets, which have been published in Greek and Latin at different times. His Epistles have also been published in Greek by Meursius, 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1617. His works were altogether published in 4 vols. fol. Venet. 1754-63.

THEOPHYLACTUS (Biog.) surnamed Simocatta, who flourished in the seventh century, wrote a History of the Emperor Mauritius, which was published with the version and notes of Pontanus, fol. 1647, so as to form a part of the 'Corpus Byzantinæ Historiæ.'

THEOPOMPUS (Hist.) a king of Sparta, of the family of the Proclidæ, who is said to have created the Ephori, and to have died after a long and peaceful reign, A. C. 723.

THEOPOMPUS (Biog.) a Greek historian of Chios, and disciple of Isocrates, whose compositions are all lost except a few fragments quoted by ancient writers. Cic. ad Attic. l. 2, ep. 6; Dionys. Hal. l. 1; C. Nep. l. 7; Quintil. l. 2; Plut. in Lys.

THERA (Geog.) one of the Sporades in the Ægean Sea, anciently called Callista, now Santorin, which was first inhabited by Phœnicians. Herod. l. 4; Strab. l. 8; Plin. l. 2.

THERMA (Geog.) another name for Thessalonica.

THERMÆ (Geog.) a town of Sicily, where were the baths of Selinus, now Sciacca; also another town near Panormus, now Thermini. Cic. in Verr. 2.

THERMÆ (Numis.) medals of this town are distinguished by the inscriptions—ΘΕΡΜΙΤ. ΘΕΡΜΙΤΑΝ, &c.

THERMODON (Geog.) Θερμώδων, now Termeh, a river of Cappadocia, in the ancient country of the Amazons.

Virg. l. 11, v. 659.

Quales Threïciæ quum flumina Thermodoontis
Pulsant, et pictis bellantur Amazones armis.

Herod. l. 2, &c.; Strab. l. 11; Mel. l. 1; Propert. l. 3, el. 12; Ovid. Met. l. 2; Plin. l. 37.

THERMOPYLÆ (Geog.) Θερμοπύλαι, a small pass leading from Thessaly into Locris and Phocis, celebrated for the battle fought there for three successive days, A. C. 480, between the army of Xerxes and 300 Spartans, of which latter only one survived to relate the glorious exploits of his countrymen. Another battle was fought there between the Romans and Antiochus, king of Syria. Herod. l. 7; Liv. l. 36; Strab. l. 9; Mel. l. 2; Paus. l. 7.

THERON (Hist.) Θήρων, a tyrant of Agrigentum, who married Demarete, the daughter of Gelon, and died in 472 A. C. Herodot. l. 7; Pind. Olymp. od. 2.

THERSITES (Myth.) Θερσίτης, one of the meanest among the Grecian chiefs at the Trojan war, who was deformed in his person and low in his character, indulging in indecent railleries against his companions in arms. Achilles killed him with a blow of his fist, because he laughed at his mourning the death of Penthesilea. Thersites is now become proverbial for a low foul-mouthed fellow. Hom. Il. l. 2, &c.; Apollod. l. 2; Ovid. ex Pont. l. 4; Juv. Sat. 8.

THESEUS (Myth.) Θησεὺς, one of the most celebrated heroes of antiquity, king of Athens, and son of Ægeus by Æthra, the daughter of Pittheus, first rescued his country from the dreadful tribute of seven youths and seven maidens which Minos annually required, by the destruction of the monster Minotaurus, by whom they were devoured, and on his return he ascended the throne of his father A. C. 1235; and after having gained many victories, particularly against the Centaurs, he is fabled to have gone into the infernal regions with his friend Perithous, with the intent of bringing away Proserpine; but being caught in the attempt by Pluto, he was tied to a huge stone on which he had sat to rest himself. From this situation Hercules is said to have released him; but on his return to Athens he found his throne occupied by Mnestheus, and being unable to expel the usurper he retired to the court of Lycomedes, king of Scyros, by whom he was thrown down a precipice and killed. Hom. Odyss. l. 21; Hesiod. in Scut. Her.; Apollon. l. 1; Apollod. l. 3; Catul. de Nup. Pel. &c.; Virg. Æn. l. 6; Ovid. Met. l. 7; Hygin. Fab. 14, &c.; Propert. l. 3; Lucan. l. 2; Stat. Theb. l. 5; Senec. in Hypol. 951.

THESPIA (Geog.) now Neocorio, a town of Bœotia, at the foot of mount Helicon. Strab. l. 9; Plin. l. 4.

THESPIS (Biog.) a Greek poet, who flourished upwards of 500 years before the Christian æra, is supposed to have been the inventor of tragic representations, which he exhibited on a temporary stage, erected on a cart, as he went from place to place

Horat. Art. Poet. v. 275.

Ignotum Tragicæ genus invenisse camœnæ
Dicitur et plaustris vexisse poëmata Thespis,
Quæ canerent, agerentque peruncti fæcibus ora.

Diog. in Heracl. Pont.; Plut. in Sol.; Suidas, &c.

THESPROTIA (Geog.) Θεσπρωτία, now Vajelitia, a country of Epirus, at the west of Ambracia, celebrated for the rivers Acheron and Cocytus, which were fabled to be the rivers of hell. Thucyd. l. 1; Strab. l. 7; Paus. l. 1, &c.

THESSALIA (Geog.) a country of Greece, which was more or less extensive according to the meaning of the term, comprehending sometimes a whole region, and sometimes a part. Thessalia propria, or Thessaly, properly so called, to which Strabo gives the name of Θεσσαλιῶτις, was situated between Greece and Macedonia, and was at different times known by the names of Æmonia, Pelasgicum, Argos, Hellas, Dryopis, Æmathia; but that of Thessaly, which it derived from its king Thessalus, prevailed. It is now called Janna. Dionys. 110; Diodor. l. 4; Liv. l. 32; Strab. l. 8; Mel. l. 2; Tibull. l. 2, el. 4; Ovid. Am. l. 3, el. 7.

THESSALONICA (Bibl.) Θεσσαλονίκη, a city described under Geography, was visited by St. Paul, who, with Silas, preached the gospel there, and established a church, to which the apostle addressed two of his epistles, written at the end of A. D. 52, or beginning of A. D. 53. Acts xvii. The first epistle to the Thessalonians was the first in the order of time of all St. Paul's epistles.

THESSALONICA (Geog.) an ancient town of Macedonia, so called, as is said, after Thessalonica, the wife of Cassander, although, according to Stephanus Byzantinus, it received this name from Philip, king of Macedon, by whom it was beautified in commemoration of his victory over the Thessalonians. It was originally named Therma, from the Sinus Thermæus, on which it stood, and now Salonichi. This town is memorable both in sacred and profane writings. Cic. in Pis. c. 17; Liv. l. 29; Strab. l. 7; Mel. l. 2.

THETFORD (Geog.) a town of Norfolk, in England, 29 m. S. W. Norwich, 80 N. N. E. London. Lon. 0° 43′ E. lat. 52° 25′ N.

History of Thetford.

This ancient town, the Sitomagus of the Romans, was once a place of such note, that it had twenty churches and eight monasteries, besides other religious houses, and still retains vestiges of its ancient splendour. During the Saxon heptarchy it formed the metropolis of the kingdom of East Anglia, and was afterwards honoured with the presence of several English monarchs, particularly Henry I and II. and James I, which latter prince made it one of his hunting seats, and his palace still bears the name of the King's House. Thetford was also a bishop's see in the 12th century, which was afterwards translated to Norwich.

THETIS (Myth.) Θέτις, one of the sea-deities, daughter of Nereus and Doris, on whose marriage with Peleus the goddess of Discord threw a golden apple into the midst of the assembly, to be given to the fairest of all the goddesses. Hom. Il. l. 1; Hesiod. Theogn.; Apollod. l. 1; Catull. de Nupt. Pel. et Thet.; Ovid. Met. l. 11; Hygin. Fab. 34; Schol. Pind. Pyth.

THEUDAS (Bibl.) Θευδᾶς, an impostor, to whom Gamaliel refers. Acts v. 36.

THEUDAS (Hist.) another impostor, who pretended to be a prophet, and deceived many of the Jews, until Fadus, governor of Syria, sent some troops of horse after them, who killed and took many and carried Theudas's head to Jerusalem. This Theudas is much later than the one mentioned in Scripture. Joseph. Antiq. l. xx. c. 2.

THEVENOT, Melchisedec (Biog.) a writer of travels, was born in 1621 at Paris, and died in 1692. His 'Travels into the Levant,' were published in French, fol. Paris, 1663, and in English in 1687.

THEVET, Andrew (Biog.) historiographer to the king, who died in 1590, at the age of 88, was the author of 'Vies des Hommes illustres,' the folio edition of which is of some value on account of the portraits.

THIERRI (Hist.) or Thierry, the name of some French kings.

THIERRI I, third son of Clovis II, ascended the throne of Neustria and Burgundy in 670, by the interest of Ebroin, the mayor of the palace, and died in 691, after having suffered a defeat from Pepin, king of Austrasia. The effigies of this and the following king are given as in the annexed figures.

THIERRI II, son of Dagobert III, was taken from a cloister to ascend the throne of France in 720, and died in 737.

THIERRY I (Hist.) the son of Clovis I, and king of Austrasia, died in 534, at the age of 51, after having reigned 23 years, during which he made Metz the capital of his kingdom, and gained considerable advantages over the Danes who invaded his dominions, and over his brother Childebert, who tried to dispossess him.

THIERRY II, second son of Childebert, was born in 587, succeeded his father as king of Burgundy and Austrasia, and died in 613.

THIONVILLE (Geog.) a town in the north-east of France, in the former duchy of Luxemburg, situated on the Moselle, 17 m. N. Metz, 22 S. Luxemburg. It was taken by the duke of Guise in 1558, and ceded to the Spaniards; but being retaken by the French in 1643 it was surrendered to them by the peace of the Pyrenees. Some councils were held in this town in the reign of Charlemagne and his successor.

THIRLBY, Styan (Biog.) a critic, was born at Leicester in 1692, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1753. His edition of Justin Martyr, published in folio, 1723, is much esteemed.

THISBE (Myth.) vide Pyramus.

THOMAS, St. (Bibl.) one of the twelve Apostles, called in the Greek Δίδυμος, i. e. a twin, was appointed an Apostle a little before the passion of our Saviour, and is noted in Scripture for his incredulity. Matth. x; Luke vi; John x—xx. He was also called Jude, according to Eusebius, who relates that Thaddeus was sent by this Apostle to king Abgarus. [Vide Thaddeus]

THOMAS A BECKET (Ecc.) vide Becket.

Thomas, William, an English prelate, was born in 1613, educated at Oxford; was driven from his vicarage of Langhorn, in Northumberland, by the rebels; and after suffering many hardships, he was raised in 1677 to the see of St. David's, and translated to that of Worcester six years after; but having made up his mind at the revolution not to take the required oaths, he was on the point of resigning his bishopric when he died. He published in his life-time 'An Apology for the Church of England, 1678-9,' and some single sermons; and after his death appeared his 'Letter to the Clergy,' and an imperfect work, entitled 'Roman Oracles silenced.'

Thomas, John, an English prelate, was born in 1712 at Carlisle; educated at Oxford; succeeded Dr. Pearce, according to his most earnest wish at his death, in the see of Rochester in 1774; and died in 1793; after having expended 3000*l.* on the ancient palace at Bromley, and left 500*l.* towards enlarging the parish church at Bromley. A collection of his 'Sermons and Charges' was published in 2 vols. 8vo. 1803. There were two other prelates of the name of John Thomas living about the same time, the first successively bishop of Peterborough and Salisbury, who died in 1766; and the second successively bishop of Peterborough, Salisbury, and Winchester, who died in 1781.

Thomas (Her.) the name of two families which enjoy a baronetcy, conferred on the first in 1694, in the person of sir John Thomas, descended from an ancient family of Tresimont, co. Hereford; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a chevron and canton ermine.

Crest. A demi-unicorn ermine, armed, crined, and unguled or, supporting a shield sable.

Motto. "Virtus invicta gloriosa."

Thomas of Yapton Place, co. Sussex, received this honour in 1766 in the person of sir George Thomas, Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of all his Majesty's Leeward Caribbee Islands in America. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Argent, three lions rampant, two and one gules, a chief azure.

Motto. "Honesty is the best policy."

Thomas, William (Biog.) grandson of Dr. William Thomas, bishop of Worcester above-mentioned, was born in 1670, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1738, leaving 'Antiquitates Prioratûs Majoris Malverne,' 1725; besides his edition of Dugdale's 'Warwickshire,' in 1730; and his 'Survey of the Cathedral Church of Worcester.' He had also collected materials for a History of Worcester, to which Dr. Nash acknowledges himself highly indebted.

THOMASIUS, James (Biog.) a philosopher and historian, was born in 1622 at Leipzig, and died in 1684, leaving 'Philosophia Instrumentalis et Theoretica;' 'Miscellaneæ varii Argumenti,' &c.

Thomasius, Christian, a jurist, and son of the preceding, died in 1728, leaving among his works, 'Introductio ad Philosophiam Aulicam;' 'Introductio in Philosophiam moralem cum Praxi;' 'Historia Sapientiæ et Stultitiæ;' 'Fundamenta Juris Naturæ et Gentium,' &c.; 'Entwurf der Grundlehren für einen studiosum Juris;' 'Vollständige Erläuterung der Kirchenrechtsgelehrheit,' &c.; besides many other works both in Latin and German.

THOMASSIN, Louis (Biog.) a French ecclesiastic, was born in 1619 at Aix, in Provence, and died in 1695, leaving 'Glossarium Universale Hebraicum,' &c. fol. Paris. 1697; besides numerous dissertations on ecclesiastical discipline.

THOMOND, Marquis of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of O'Bryen [vide O'Bryen]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. O'Bryen, marquis of Thomond, earl of Inchiquin, baron of Inchiquin and Burren, co. Clare.

Arms. Gules, three lions passant gardant in pale parti per pale or and argent.

THOMSON, James (Biog.) an English poet of the first rank, was born in 1700 at Ednam, in Roxburghshire, and died in 1748. Of his poems his 'Seasons' are the principal, and of these the 'Winter' was first published in 1726, which was followed by the publication of the 'Summer' in 1727, of 'Spring' in 1728, and of 'Autumn' in a 4to. edition of his works in 1730. He likewise wrote the tragedies of 'Agamemnon,' acted in 1738; 'Edward and Eleonora,' another tragedy, which he had prepared for the stage in 1739; 'Alfred,' a masque; 'Tancred and Sigismunda,' in 1745; and 'Coriolanus,' a tragedy, and his last piece, which was just finished before his death, and afterwards brought on the stage. [Vide Plate XXIX]

THOMYRIS (Hist.) vide Tomyris.

THORESBY, Ralph (Biog.) an antiquary, descended from a very ancient family in Yorkshire, was born in 1658 at Leeds, and died in 1725, leaving 'Ducatus Leodiensis; or, the Topography of Leeds,' &c. fol. 1715, since reprinted under the care of the Rev. T. D. Whitaker; and 'Vicaria Leodiensis,' &c.

THORIUS, John (Biog.) an English writer, although of foreign extraction, was born in 1568 in London, and published 'A Spanish Dictionary and Grammar,' 4to. 1590; besides some translations from that language. The time of his death is not known.

Thorius, Raphael, a French physician, whose real name was Thoris, died of the plague in London in 1625, leaving 'Hymnus Tabaci,' a poem in praise of tobacco, 8vo. 1627; and reprinted in the 'Musæ Anglicanæ,' 1697.

THORNDIKE, Herbert (Biog.) an English divine, was educated at Cambridge, and after suffering during the usurpation, died in 1672, leaving, among other things, 'A Discourse concerning the Primitive Form of the Government of Churches,' 8vo. Cambridge, 1642; 'A Discourse of the Right of the Church in a Christian State, with a Review by way of Appendix,' 8vo. London, 1649; 'Just Weights and Measures,' &c. 4to. London, 1662; 'Origines Ecclesiæ,' Lond. 1670; besides his 'Epilogue to the Tragedy of the Church of England,' which was published in 1659, and was not considered favourable to the cause he professed to espouse.

THORNHILL, Sir James (Biog.) an English painter, the son of a gentleman of an ancient family in Dorsetshire, was born in 1676, and died in 1734, after having acquired a considerable fortune and reputation by the practice of his art.

THORNTON, Bonnell (Biog.) a miscellaneous and humourous writer, was born in 1724 in London, educated at Oxford, and died in 1768. He wrote the 'Connoisseur,' in conjunction with Colman, and numerous pieces in the magazines and journals of the day. [Vide Plate XXXIX]

THOROLD (Her.) a family of Saxon origin and of great antiquity, which has been seated for many centuries in the county of Lincoln, where several of the name have been sheriffs at different times. One Thorold is said to have been sheriff of Lincolnshire in 794, and Thoroldus de Buckenhold was sheriff of the said county in 1052, and founder of Spalding. Sir William Thorold, who was created a baronet in 1642, suffered much for his loyalty. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, three goats saliant argent.

Crest. On a wreath, a roebuck passant argent, attired or.

THORPE, John (Biog.) an antiquary, was born in 1714, and died in 1792, published 'Registrum Roffense, or a Collection of Records,' &c. which had been prepared by his father; 'Custumale Roffense,' &c.; besides some papers in the 'Philosophical Transactions,' and the 'Bibl. Topographica Britannica.'

THOU, James Augustus de (Hist.) vide Thuanus.

THRACIA (Geog.) Θράκη, a large country of Europe, which now forms the province of Romania. It was situated at the south of Scythia, bounded by mount Hemus, having the Ægean Sea on the S., Macedonia on the W., the Euxine on the E. It is said to have received its name from Thrax, the son of Mars. Herod. l. 4, c. 99; C. Nep. in Alc.; Strab. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 3; Ovid. Met. l. 11; Flor. l. 3.

THRASYBULUS (Hist.) Θρασύβουλος, a general of the Athenians, who expelled the thirty tyrants, was killed in his camp by the inhabitants of Aspandus, whom his soldiers had plundered without his knowledge, A. C. 391. Xenoph. Hellen. l. 1, &c.; Cic. Phil.; C. Nep. in Vit.; Val. Max. l. 4.

THRASYMENUS (Geog.) or Trasymenus, a lake of Italy, near Perusium, now called the Lake of Perugia, is celebrated for the battle fought between Annibal and the Romans under Flaminius, A. C. 217, which terminated so fatally for the latter, who lost upwards of twenty thousand in killed and prisoners, besides several thousands which were covered with wounds. Polyb. l. 3; Liv. l. 22; Strab. l. 5, &c.

THRELKELD, Caleb (Biog.) a natural historian, was born in 1676 at Keiberg, in Cumberland, and died in 1728, leaving 'Synopsis Stirpium Hibernicarum Alphabeticæ dispositum,' &c.

THROCKMORTON (Her.) or Throgmorton, the name of a family of considerable antiquity, derived from the manor of Throckemorton, Throcmorton, or Throckemortona, co. Worcester, which was in their possession soon after the Conquest. Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, the statesman mentioned under History, had his residence at Couchton, in Warwickshire, where also sir Robert resided who was created a baronet in 1642. He was a great sufferer for his loyalty; his house at Couchton having been plundered, and converted into a garrison by the rebel forces. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, on a chevron argent, three bars gemels sable.

Crest. An elephant's head.

Motto. "Virtus sola nobilitas, or moribus antiquis."

THROGMORTON, Sir Nicholas (Hist.) son of sir George Throgmorton, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was imprisoned on suspicion of having been implicated in Suffolk's conspiracy; but was so happy in his defence as to escape by an acquittal. On the accession of queen Elizabeth he was employed by her in various negotiations, both in France and Scotland, which he conducted with the greatest abilities, and died in 1570, at the age of 57, not without suspicion of having been poisoned by the earl of Leicester.

THROSBY, John (Biog.) a topographer, was born in 1740, and died in 1803, leaving 'The Memoirs of the Town and County of Leicester,' 6 vols. 12mo. 1777; 'Select Views in Leicestershire,' &c.; 'The History and Antiquities of the Ancient Town of Leicester;' 'Letters on the Roman Cloaca at Leicester,' 1793, &c.

THUANUS (Hist.) or, in French, De Thou, James Augustus, an historian and a statesman, was born in 1553 at Paris, and died in 1617, after having preserved his fidelity to the crown in the midst of the factions with which the kingdom was torn. He was much in the favour and confidence of Henry IV, during whose reign he was concerned in many negotiations with the Protestants, and was instrumental in bringing forward the edict of Nantes, which was signed in 1598. He is now best known by his 'Historia sui Temporis,' first printed at Paris, in folio, 1604, and more completely at London, in 1733. He also wrote 'De Re Accipitrariâ,' 4to. Paris. 1514; and some poetical pieces, as 'Metaphrasis Poetica librorum sacrorum aliquot;' and 'Crambe, Viola, Lilium,' &c. 4to. Paris. 1611. [Vide Plate XXV]

THUANUS, Francis Augustus, eldest son of the preceding, was beheaded at Lyons in 1642, at the age of 35, for not revealing a conspiracy which had been made known to him against cardinal Richelieu.

THUCYDIDES (Hist.) a general and historian of Athens, the son of Olorus, who was early engaged in arms during the Peloponnesian war; but having suffered himself to be defeated by Brasidas, was banished from Athens in the eighth year of the war, when he began to write his History of the Events which passed under his own Observation. He died in his native city, whither he had been recalled from exile, in the 80th year of his age, A. C. 391. Thucydides was first printed by Aldus in 1502; of the subsequent editions that of Henry Stephens, with the Latin version, of Laurentius Valla, fol. Paris. 1588; of Hudson, fol. Oxon. 1696; of Duker, 2 vols. fol. Amst. 1732; and the Glasgow edition, in 8 vols. 12mo. 1788, are esteemed the best. The English translation, by Hobbes, has been superseded by that of Dr. Smith. [Vide Plate XXV]

THUNBERG, Charles Peter (Biog.) a Swedish botanist, and the pupil of Linnæus, who died at the end of the last century, was the author of 'Flora Japonica,' 8vo. Lips. 1784.

THURLES, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Ormonde and Ossory.

THURLOE, John (Hist.) secretary to Cromwell during the usurpation, was born in 1616 at Abbots-Roding, Essex, and being educated for the law, he obtained some appointments by the influence of judge St. John; after which he became, in 1645, secretary to the commissioners at Uxbridge, and from that period took an active part in every measure of the rebels except the murder of the king. At the restoration he was imprisoned on a charge of high treason, but soon afterwards released, and died in 1668. His 'State Papers,' in 7 vols. fol. were published by Dr. Birch in 1742. [Vide Plate XVIII]

THURLOW, Edward, Lord (Hist.) a statesman and lawyer, son of the Rev. Thomas Thurlow, rector of Ashfield, in Suffolk, was born about 1732, studied at Cambridge, and afterwards at the Middle Temple, when being called to the bar he passed through the several gradations of office to the post of Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain in 1778, which he resigned in 1783; he was re-appointed in the same year, and resigning again in 1792, he died in 1806, after having taken an active part in the affairs of the times. [Vide Plate XVII]

THURLOW (Her.) the name of a family in Suffolk, which was ennobled in the person of the Lord Chancellor above-mentioned, who was created a peer in 1778, by the title of lord Thurlow, of Ashfield, co. Suffolk; and in 1792 by the title of lord Thurlow, of Thurlow. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a chevron cottised sable, three port-cullises with chains and rings argent.

Crest. On a wreath, a raven close proper, with a port-cullis hung round its neck argent.

Supporters. Two eagles regardant sable, a port-cullis hung round each of their necks argent.

Motto. "Justitiæ soror fides."

THWAITES, Edward (Biog.) a Saxon scholar, was born in 1667, educated at Oxford, and died in 1711, leaving 'Heptateuchus, &c. Dano-Saxonicè,' &c. Oxon. 1698; besides an edition of 'Dionysii Orbis Descriptio,' &c. published in 1697.

THYESTES (Myth.) Θυέστης, a son of Pelops and Hippodamia, and grandson of Tantalus, debauched Ærope, the wife of Atreus, his brother, because he would not admit him as a colleague on the throne of Argos; and the latter, in revenge, caused the children born to him by Ærope to be served upon table at a feast, to which Thyestes was invited. On the death of Atreus he mounted the throne of Argos, from which he was expelled by Agamemnon and Menelaus, and banished to the island of Cythæra, where he died. Sophocl. in Ajac.; Apollod. l. 2, c. 4; Ovid. in Ib. v. 359; Hygin. Fab. 86; Senec. in Thyest.; Lucan. l. 1; Lactant. ad Theb. l. 4; Schol. Euripid. ad Orest.; Serv. ad Æn. l. 1.

THYNNE (Her.) a family which flourished under the original name of Botevile, in the 13th century, and now enjoys the dignity of the peerage, first conferred on sir Thomas Thynne, who was created in 1682 baron Thynne, co. Wilts; and viscount Weymouth, co. Dorset. Thomas, the third viscount Weymouth, was created in 1789 marquis of Bath.

THYNNE, Francis (Biog.) an antiquary and herald, descended from an ancient branch of the above-mentioned family, was born at Stretton, educated at Oxford, and died about 1611, or somewhat earlier, as is conjectured. He wrote 'A Discourse of the Dutye and Office of an Heraulde of Armes,' published by Hearne in 1605; 'Histories concerning Ambassadors, and their Functions,' 1651.

THYSIUS, Anthony (Biog.) a scholar, and miscellaneous writer, was born at Harderwyck, in Holland, about 1603, and died in 1670, leaving 'Historia Navalis,' &c.; 'Compendium Historiæ Batavicæ,' &c.; besides editions of several classic authors.

TIBALDI (Biog.) an Italian artist, otherwise called Pellegrino, who died about 1592, was employed for nine years as architect and painter in decorating the Escurial, in the service of Philip II of Spain.

TIBERIAS (Geog.) a famous city of Galilee, on the western shore of the Lake of Gennesareth, which was otherwise called the Sea of Tiberias. Herod the Tetrarch, who built this city, about A. D. 19, endowed it with great privileges, which, together with its advantageous situation, soon raised it to the rank of capital of Galilee. Tiberias was taken in 1100 by the Christians, under Godfrey of Bouillon; but retaken by the Saracens in 1186, through the treachery of Raymond III, count of Tripoli. It is now in the hands of the Turks, and presents no remains of antiquity except a very ancient church.

TIBERIS (Geog.) or Tibris, originally called Albula, now the Tiber, a well-known river of Italy, on which Rome was built. This river rises in the Appennines, and receiving a number of smaller rivers in a course of about 150 miles, it falls 15 miles below Rome into the Mediterranean, in Lon. 11° 8′ E. lat. 41° 47′ N. At Rome it is little more than 100 yards across.

TIBERIUS, Claudius Drusus Nero (Hist.) a Roman emperor, descended from the Claudia gens, was adopted by Augustus some time before his death, after having distinguished himself in his service in several campaigns in Illyricum, Pannonia, and Dalmatia, &c. At the death of this emperor, Tiberius assumed the reins of government, and died in the 78th year of his age, A. D. 37, after a reign of 22 years 6 months and 26 days, when he was succeeded by Caligula. [Vide Plate I] Tacit. Annal. l. 6, &c.; Sueton. in Vit.; Dio, Eutropius, Victor, &c.

TIBERIUS, Constantinus, a Thracian by birth, was chosen by Justin the Younger as a colleague in the empire, which he governed alone at the death of the latter until 582, when he died, after a reign of four years. Evagr. l. 6; Agathias, Nicephorus, &c.

TIBERIUS, Absimarus, vide Absimarus.

TIBERIUS (Numis.) medals of the first emperor of this name bear his effigy [vide Plate I], inscriptions—TI. AUGUS. DIVI AUGUSTI F. IMP. CAESAR.—TI. ΚΑΙΣ. ΣΕΒ. ΥΙΟΣ.—TI. ΚΑΙΣΑΡ ΘΕΟΥ ΣΕΒ. ΥΙΟΣ. ΣΕ. ΑΡΧ. ΜΕΓ ΔΗ ΕΞ, with the additions of TR. P. I—XXXIX; COS. I—V.; PONT. MAX.; IMP. I—VIII. The medals of the second emperor are distinguished by the inscription—D. N. TIB. CONST. P. P. AUG.

TIBULLUS, Albius (Biog.) a Latin poet, the cotemporary and friend of Virgil and Horace, who died in the 44th year of his age, left four books of 'Elegies,' which are commonly printed with Catullus and Propertius, of which the editions of Vulpius, Patav. 1737, 1749, 1755; of Barbou, 12mo. Paris, 1754; and of Heyne, 8vo. Lips. 1776, are the most esteemed; but the first of these is reckoned the superior. Horat. l. 1, ep. 4; Ovid. Am. l. 3, el. 9; Quintil. l. 3; Gyrald. de Poet. Hist.

TIBUR (Geog.) an ancient town of the Sabines, about nine miles distant from Rome.

TIBUR, a town of Latium, now Tivoli, which is said to have been built by the Greeks.

Hor. l. 2, od. 6.

Tibur Argæo positum colono.

Ovid. Amor. l. 3, el. 6.

Nec te prætereo, qui, per cava saxa volutans,
Tiburis argei pomifer arva rigas.

It derived its name from Tiburtus, one of its founders.

Virg. Æn. l. 7, v. 670.

Tum gemini fratres Tiburtia mœnia linquunt
Fratris Tiburti dictam cognomine gentem
Catillusque, acerque Coras, Argiva juventus.

It was watered by the Anio, and is celebrated for its pleasantness by Horace.

Hor. l. 1, od. 7.

Quam domus Albuneæ resonantis
Et præceps Anio, et Tiburni lucus, et uda Mobilibus pomaria rivis.

Cic. de Orat. l. 2, c. 65; Liv. l. 8.

TICHBORNE (Her.) a family of Saxon origin, of which mention is made as early as the reign of Henry II, when Roger de Ticheburne, a valiant knight, was possessed of the lordship of Ticheburne, in Hampshire, the present residence of his descendants, one of whom, sir Benjamin Tichborne, was created a baronet in 1620; and his grandson, sir Henry, was a distinguished loyalist, who suffered much for his fidelity to his sovereign in the time of the rebellion. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Vaire, a chief or.

Crest. On a wreath, a hind's head couped proper, between a pair of wings gules.

Supporters. Two lions gardant gules.
Motto, "Pugna pro patria."

TICINUS (Geog.) now Tesino, a small river near Ticinum, now Pavia, where the Romans were defeated by Annibal. Strab. l. 5; Plin. l. 2; Ital. l. 4.

TICKELL, Thomas (Biog.) a poet, was born in 1686 at Bridekirk, in Cumberland, educated at Oxford, and died in 1740, leaving several pieces, which have procured him a place among the British Poets. He was the friend of Addison, and a contributor to the Spectator. [Vide Plate XXVIII]

TICKELL, Richard, a poet, of the same family, died by a fall from the window of his apartment, at Hampton Court, in 1793, leaving 'The Project,' a poem, which first appeared in 1778; 'The Wreath of Fashion,' and 'Anticipation,' two other poems; besides some dramatic pieces, &c.

TIERNEY (Her.) a family of Brighthelmstone, which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1818 on sir Matthew John Tierney, physician in ordinary to his present majesty, George IV, then prince regent.

TIGLATH-PILESER (Bibl.) תגלת־פלאסר, or, Tiglath-Pilareser, a king of Assyria, to whom Ahaz, king of Judah, sent ambassadors, to desire his assistance against Rezin, king of Assyria, and Pekah, king of Israel. 2 Kings xvi. He began to reign at Nineveh A. M. 3257, A. C. 747, and died after a reign of 19 years, having Shalmaneser for his successor.

TIGRANES (Hist.) a king of Armenia, who made himself master of Assyria and Cappadocia. He married Cleopatra, the daughter of Mithridates, and assisted his father-in-law in his war against the Romans; but finding himself unable to make a stand against so powerful an enemy, he ensured his continuation on his throne by a timely submission to Pompey.

TIGRANES, the name of some kings, who were permitted to govern Armenia during the emperors.

TIGRIS (Geog.) now Basilensa, a river of Asia, rising on mount Niphates, and falling into the Persian gulf in the time of Pliny; but now the Tigris falls into the Euphrates. Mel. l. 1; Lucan. l. 3; Plin. l. 6; Ptol. l. 5.

TIGURINI (Geog.) a warlike people inhabiting the country now called Switz, Zurich, and Schaffhausen; their capital was Tigurum, now Zurich.

TILLEMANS, Peter (Biog.) a painter of Antwerp, who died in England in 1734, at the age of about 50, particularly excelled in landscapes.

TILLEMONT, Lewis Sebastian le Nain de (Biog.) was born in 1637 at Paris, and died in 1698, leaving his two well-known works, namely, his 'Histoire des Empereurs,' and 'Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire Ecclesiastique;' of which last he lived to publish only four of the sixteen volumes. [Vide Plate XXVI]

TILLOTSON, John (Hist.) archbishop of Canterbury, and descended from a family anciently written Tiltson, of Tiltson, in Cheshire, was born in 1630 at Sowerby, in Yorkshire, educated at Cambridge, and being high in favour with king William and queen Mary, he was raised in 1689 much, as we are informed by his letters, against his own inclination, from the deanery of Canterbury to the archiepiscopal see, and died in 1694, leaving a course of Sermons, which have secured him a lasting reputation. His posthumous works were published immediately after his death, and again in 3 vols. fol. 1742. [Vide Plate XI]

TILLY, John Tzerclais, Count de (Hist.) a distinguished general, descended from an ancient and illustrious family, is said to have quitted the society of the Jesuits for a military profession, in which he signalized himself, particularly at the battle of Prague in 1620, at the capture of Breda and Minden, and at the defeat of the Danish army at the battle of Lutter in 1626. In 1629 he was appointed plenipotentiary for concluding a peace with the Danes, and the next year he was invested with the supreme command of the Imperial forces, when, after capturing Brandenburg, Magdeburg, and Leipzig, he was defeated by Gustavus Adolphus, and died in 1632, of the wound which he received in defending the passage of the Lech.

TILSIT (Geog.) a town of Prussian Lithuania, situated on the two rivers the Tilse and the Niemen, 50 miles S. S. E. Memel, 56 E. N. E. Konigsburg. The castle of Tilsit is said to have been built in the 13th century; but the town, which is of much later date, is worthy of notice only on account of a treaty which was entered into in 1807, between the king of Prussia and Bonaparte, which was highly injurious to the interests of the former, as well as to those of all Europe.

TIMÆUS (Biog.) a Pythagorean, and native of Locris in the age of Plato, who left a treatise on the immortality of the soul, which is still extant, prefixed in some editions to Plato's 'Timæus.'

TIMANTHES (Biog.) a celebrated painter of Sicyon in the reign of Philip, the father of Alexander the Great. His painting of Iphigenia is highly commended by the ancients. Cic. de Orat. c. 22; Val. Max. l. 8; Plin. l. 35; Quintil. l. 2.

TIMNA (Bibl.) תמנע, concubine of Esau; also a son of Eliphaz, and grandson of Esau, &c. Gen. xxxvi.; 1 Chron. i.

TIMNATH (Bibl.) תמנה, a city of Judah, and also of the Philistines, where Samson married a wife. Josh. xv.; Judg. xiv.

TIMON (Bibl.) Τίμων, one of the first seven deacons. Acts vi.

TIMON (Biog.) a Greek poet of Phlius, in Peloponnesus, son of Timarchus, in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, who died in the 90th year of his age. He wrote several dramatic pieces, which are all lost, and a poem entitled 'Silli,' fragments of which have been collected by Henry Stephens in his 'Poesis Philosophica.' He is not to be confounded with Timon the Athenian, who was designated by the epithet of the Misanthrope. Plut. in Alcib. &c.; Paus. l. 6; Lucian. in Tim.; Aul. Gell. l. 3; Athen. l. 6; Diog. l. 9; Suidas, &c.

TIMOLEON (Hist.) Τιμωλέων, a popular leader in Corinth, son of Timodemus and Demariste, who, after murdering his brother because he aimed at the supreme power in Corinth, went into Sicily, and successfully waged war against Dionysius the Younger, tyrant of Syracuse, and the petty tyrants of the neighbouring cities, which were by his means reduced to popular governments. He died at Syracuse, about 337 years before the Christian æra.

TIMOTHEUS (Hist.) Τιμόθεος, a general of Antiochus Epiphanes, who, after being twice defeated by Judas Maccabæus, was killed at Gazara, whither he had fled from the field of battle. 2 Macc. viii. &c.

TIMOTHY (Bibl.) a disciple of St. Paul, and native of Derbe, or Lystra, who was set over the church of Ephesus as its first bishop. He is spoken of frequently in Scripture as the companion and beloved disciple of the apostle, who addressed two of his Epistles to him. Acts xiv. xvi. &c.; 1 Cor. iv.; Rom. xvi. &c.

TINDAL, Matthew (Biog.) an English deistical writer, was born about 1657 at Beerferres, in Devonshire, educated at Oxford, and died in 1733. He first insidiously attacked the Church of England in several pamphlets, and afterwards unmasked himself by his work entitled 'Christianity as Old as the Creation.'

TINDAL, Nicholas, nephew of the preceding, was born in 1687, educated at Oxford, and died in 1774, leaving among other things 'Antiquities, Sacred and Profane,' &c. translated from Calmet; and a translation of Rapin's History of England,' &c.

TINGIS (Geog.) now Tangier, a maritime town of Africa, built as was fabled by the giant Antæus, and taken by the Roman general Sertorius. Mel. l. 1; Strab. l. 3; Plin. l. 5; Plut. in Sert.

TINTORETTO, Giacopo (Biog.) an Italian painter, so called because he was the son of a dyer, whose family name was Robusti. He was born at Venice in 1512, and died in 1594, after having aimed at establishing a school of his own, which should rival that of Titian and Michael Angelo, and not altogether without success. He had a son Dominico, and a daughter Marietta, who were both skilful painters.

TIPPOO-SAIB (Hist.) the well-known adversary of the English in India, succeeded his father, Hyder Ali, on the throne of Mysore in 1782, and, after opposing the Great Mogul, with considerable success, he aimed, by his intrigues with the French, as well as by open hostilities, at reducing the British power, but, being defeated in all points, he was compelled to make peace with lord Cornwallis in 1792, and to give his two sons as hostages. He, however, made another effort by the renewal of the war in 1799, but the capture of Seringapatam, and his own death, placed the kingdom of Mysore in the hands of the victors. He was killed at the age of 52, leaving among other treasures, a valuable collection of works in the Sanscrit language, which were deposited in the library at Calcutta. [Vide Plate II]

TIRABOSCHI, Girolamo (Biog.) an Italian writer, was born at Bergamo, in the Venetian States in 1731, and died in 1794, leaving among other things, 1. 'Vetera Humiliatorum Monumenta,' &c. 3 vols. 4to. Mediolan. 1766. 2. 'Biblioteca Modenese,' &c. 6 vols. 4to. Modena, 1781. 3. 'Storia della Litteratura Italiana,' 16 vols. 4to. Modena, 1787-94. 4. 'Memorie Storiche Modenesi,' &c. 4 vols. 4to. 1793-94.

TIRESIAS (Myth.) Τειρεσίας, a celebrated prophet of Thebes, who is said to have lived seven times men's ordinary age, and to have died at length of drinking the cold waters of a fountain, which chilled his blood. He was deprived of his sight by Juno, for an affront which he put upon her sex, and received at the same time the gift of prophecy from Jupiter. Hom. Odyss. l. 11; Æschyl. Sept. ante Theb.; Sophocl. in Œdip.; Pindar. Nem.; Theocrit. Id. 24; Callim. Hymn. in Pall.; Apollod. l. 3; Diodor. l. 4, &c.

TIRIDATES (Hist.) a king of Parthia, who succeeded Phraates on his expulsion, but was soon after obliged to yield the throne to his rival, when he fled to Augustus for protection. Justin. l. 4; Suet. in Ner. c. 13.

TISI (Biog.) or Tisio, Benvenuto, a painter, and disciple of Raphael, likewise called Il Garofalo, was born at Ferrara in 1481, and died at the head of the school of Ferrara in 1559.

TISIPHONE (Myth.) one of the furies, daughters of Nox and Erebus. [Vide Furiæ]

TISSAPHERNES (Hist.) Τισσαφέρνης, a satrap of Persia, who, after having commanded the forces of Artaxerxes at the battle of Cunaxa against Cyrus, and thereby obtained the daughter of the king in marriage, was put to death by order of the latter, in consequence of his being defeated by Agesilaus. Thucyd. l. 8; Xenophon. l. 1, c. 1, &c.

TITAN (Myth.) Τιτὰν, a son of Cœlus and Terra, according to some mythologists, but this name is applied by Orpheus and Lucian to Saturn; by Virgil and Ovid to the sun; and to Prometheus by Juvenal. Orph. Hymn. 13; Diod. l. 5; Virg. Æn. l. 4; Ovid. Met. l. 1; Juv. sat. 14.

TITANES (Myth.) Τιτᾶνες, a name given to the sons of Cœlus and Terra.

TITCHFIELD, Marquis of (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the duke of Portland.

TITIAN (Biog.) or Tiziano Vecellio, the great painter, was born in 1480 at the Castle of Cador, in Friuli, educated under Sebastiano Zuccati, of Trevigi, and afterwards under Giovanni Bellini, and died in 1576. Titian left behind him two sons and a brother, of whom Pomponio, the eldest, obtained preferment in the church, and Horatio, the youngest, was a painter. [Vide Plate XXXV]

TITUS (Bibl.) surnamed Justus, a native of Corinth, with whom St. Paul lodged when he quitted the house of Aquila. Acts xviii. 7. Some have supposed this to be the disciple of St. Paul, but the contrary opinion generally prevails. S. Chrysost. Ep. ad Tit.

TITUS, a disciple of St. Paul, by whom he was converted, and, after being employed on several missions, was made bishop of Crete A. D. 63. Tit. i.; Gal. ii.; 2 Cor. xii.

TITUS, Vespasianus (Hist.) a Roman emperor, the son of Flavius Vespasianus and Domitilla, was born at Rome A. D. 42, succeeded his father in the empire in 76, and died of a fever, or, according to some accounts, of poison, at the age of 41, after a reign of little more than two years, during which he fulfilled our Saviour's prophecy, by the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the Jewish nation. He was lamented by his subjects as a father, and was succeeded by his brother Domitian. [Vide Plate I] Joseph. de Bell. Jud.; Suetonius, et Dio. in Vit.

TITUS, Quarcinus (Hist.) a usurper, who, on the revolt from Maximinus the Thracian, was set up as emperor by the Osrohenians, and soon after assassinated in his tent, according to Herodian and Julius Capitolinus.

TITUS (Numis.) some medals are extant of the usurper above-mentioned, bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscription —DIVO TITO.

TITYUS (Myth.) Τιτύος, a celebrated giant, son of Terra, or, according to others, of Jupiter, who, having offered violence to Latona, was killed by her children, and doomed to have his entrails devoured by vultures. Hom. Odyss. l. 7; Pind. Pyth. Od.; Apollon. Rhod. l. 1; Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 55; Tibull. l. 1; Horat. l. 3; Ovid. Met. l. 4, &c.

TIVOLI (Geog.) a town of Campagna di Roma, situated on an eminence, 15 m. E. N. E. Rome. It is the ancient Tibur, and not less remarkable than formerly for the falls of the river Teverone, or Anio, which gliding gently through the town, precipitates itself over a rock in a mass of nearly 100 feet. On the summit of the steep are the remains of a temple of Vesta, as is supposed, and in the neighbourhood are vestiges of different villas, particularly the villa Adriana.

TLEPOLEMUS (Myth.) Τληπόλεμος, a son of Hercules and Astyochia, was chosen king of Rhodes. He went to the Trojan war, where he was killed by Sarpedon. Hom. Il. l. 2; Apollod. l. 2; Diod. l. 5; Hygin. Fab. 97.

TMOLUS (Geog.) a mountain of Lydia, now Tomalitze, which was the source of the river Pactolus. Theophrast. Hist. l. 4; Virg. Georg. l. 2; Strab. l. 13; Plin. l. 3; Sil. Ital. l. 7, &c.

TOL-ADONIJAH (Bibl.) טוב־אדניה, a Levite, sent with others by Adonijah to instruct the people. 2 Chron. xvii.

TOBAGO (Geog.) one of the Carribbee islands in the West Indies, about 25 m. in length, and 12 in its greatest breadth. This island was first discovered by Columbus in 1498, but was not occupied by any European power until 1632, when some Zealanders formed a colony there, and erected a fort, which was soon after destroyed by the Spaniards. A colony was then formed by James, duke of Courland, who received a formal grant of the island from Charles II of England. On the extinction of the Kettler family, who held the duchy of Courland, Tobago reverted to the English crown, to which it was ceded in full right by the treaty of Paris in 1763. It was, however, taken by the French in 1781, but retaken by the British in 1793.

TOBIAH (Bibl.) טוביה, an Ammonite, and an enemy to the Jews, who strenuously opposed the rebuilding of the temple after the return from Babylon. Neh. ii. &c.

TOBIAH, son of Nokoda, whose children and grand-children returned from the captivity. Ezra ii. &c.

TOBIAH (Hist.) Tobias, or Tobit, the son of Tobiel, and grandson of Ananiel, of the tribe of Naphtali, whose history is related in the book bearing the name of Tobit, which, though considered apocryphal by the Protestants, was admitted as canonical by several of the ancient fathers, and is still held as such in the Romish church.

TOBIAS (Hist.) brother-in-law to the high-priest Onias II, father of Joseph, and grandfather of Hyrcanus. Joseph. Antiq. l. 12, c. 4.

History of Toledo.

Toledo, in Latin Toletum, was successively the seat of government under the Goths, the Moors, and the kings of Castile. The Gothic kings fixed their residence here in the sixth century; but, being taken by the Moors in the eighth, it became the abode of a viceroy, and eventually of an independent prince. In the eleventh century it fell into the hands of the Christians, and in the subsequent century it was exposed to three sieges from the Moors, by whom, however, it was not taken. In 1467 it was besieged and taken, and again in 1641, when on each occasion it was consumed by fire. On this account, as also on account of the removal of the government to Madrid, this city has lost much of its consequence.

Ecclesiastical History of Toledo.

This city is the see of an archbishop, who is the primate of all Spain, and the first of the grandees; the suffragans are Cordova, Segovia, Carthagena, Mercia, Siguença, Osma, Cuença, Jaën, and Valladolid. Councils were held here in the years 400, 531, 589, 610, 636, 633, 646, 655, 656, 675, 68?, 684, 688, 694, 701, &c.

TOLER (Her.) the name of a family, originally from Norfolk, which settled in Ireland in the reign of Charles I, and enjoys the peerage in two of its branches; John Toler, Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, was created a peer in 1800 by the title of baron Norbury, and his eldest son, Daniel, succeeded his mother in 1822 in the barony of Norwood.

TOLLIUS, James (Biog.) a scholar, and native of Ingra, near Utrecht, who died in 1696, was the editor of 'Ausonius,' 8vo. 1671, and of 'Longinus,' 4to. 1694, and the author of 'Epistolæ Itinerariæ,' &c.

TOLMACH (Hist.) or Talmash, Thomas, an English officer, descended from a family more ancient than the Norman Conquest, distinguished himself in the service of William III, in the passage over the river Shannon, at the taking of Athlone, and at the battle of Aghrim, in Ireland; also at the battle of Landen in 1693; but was killed the following year in the unfortunate attempt to destroy the harbour of Brest.

TOLLEMACHE (Her.) or Talmasch, an ancient Scotch family, which enjoys the titles of baron of Huntingtower, and earl Dysart, first conferred in 1643 on William Murray. They have since passed into the family of Tollemache, which is represented at present by Louisa, countess Dysart.

TOLOSA (Geog.) a town of Gallia Narbonensis, now Toulouse, which became a Roman colony under Augustus. It is so ancient that the time of its foundation is not known, but, according to Justin, it existed as early as the fifth century of the Roman æra, or from the building of Rome, when it was famous for its two temples of Apollo and Minerva. After the conquest of the country by the Romans it was reckoned among the number of cities in alliance with them. In 646 U. C. it joined the Cimbri, who were at war with the Roman republic, on which occasion it was taken and pillaged by Q. Servilius Cæpio, who, having sacrilegiously taken a quantity of gold out of the temple, is said to have perished, with all who took part in the plunder. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3, c. 30; Strab. l. 4; Aul. Gell. l. 3; Justin. l. 32; Aurelius Victor, Paul Orosius, &c.

History of Toulon.

This town is very ancient, and is supposed to be the Tolonium, or Tolentium, mentioned in the Notitia Imperii; but of its origin, and the derivation of its name, little is known. It was decorated by Tolumnus, a general of the Goths, in the reign of Theodoric, and was in all probability called after him. It was besieged by Victor Amadeus II, duke of Savoy in 1707, and after having been occupied by the English in 1793, it was suddenly evacuated again on being besieged by the republicans, who vented their rage on such of the inhabitants as were suspected of having favoured the English.

TOULOUSE (Geog.) a celebrated city of France, formerly the capital of Upper Languedoc, now of the department of the Garonne, situated on the Garonne, 150 miles S. E. Bourdeaux, 420 S. by W. Paris. Lon. 1° 26′ E. lat. 43° 35′ N.

History of Toulouse.

Toulouse, which is one of the largest and most ancient cities in France, was called by the Romans Tolosa Tectosagum, Tolosum, and Tolosatium. On the decline of the empire it fell into the hands of the Visigoths, and was the capital of the kingdom of Aquitania, formed by Clovis I, but its counts, which were at first only governors, became at length independent princes, and were among the number of the twelve peers of France, after the union of the county with the French crown. Toulouse was frequently honoured with the presence of their kings, and became celebrated for its parliament, which was the second in the kingdom, and supposed to be coeval with that of Paris; and for its university, also the second in the kingdom, which was founded in the time of Charles the Fair. In 1814 it was the scene of an obstinate battle between the British, under lord Wellington, and the French, under marshal Soult, which terminated to the advantage of the former. Toulouse has but few remains of antiquity, except the ruins of an amphitheatre, and some few vestiges of an aqueduct.

Ecclesiastical History of Toulouse.

S. Saturninus, vulgarly called S. Sernin, was the apostle and first bishop of Toulouse, who is supposed to have preached the Gospel there in the middle of the third century, and to have suffered martyrdom in the reign of Valerian, after having founded there a Christian church, which was governed by 48 bishops until 1317, when it was erected into a metropolitan see. Councils were held here in the years 829, 843, 883 or 886, 1056, 1090, 1110, 1118, and subsequent years to 1128.

TOUP, Jonathan (Biog.) a critic, descended from a good family in Dorsetshire, was born in 1713 at St. Ives, in Cornwall, took his degree of A. B. at Oxford, and that of A. He was puritanical enough to submit to the usurpers, but sufficiently loyal to be a conformist. Among his works are 'Logica Apodeictica,' 'Enchiridion Didacticum,' &c. George Tully, another divine of the same family, was one of the translators of Plutarch's 'Morals,' Cornelius Nepos, and Suetonius.

TULPIUS, Nicholas (Hist.) a physician and a statesman, whose family name was Dirx, was born in 1593 at Amsterdam, and died in 1674, after having filled the highest offices in the state. In 1672 he contributed very materially towards rousing the spirit of resistance which was made to Louis XIV when he attacked Holland, whereby the city of Amsterdam was saved. His fellow citizens in consequence struck a medal in honour of his memory. Among his works, as an author, his 'Observationum Medicarum Libri tres,' 12mo. Amst. 1641, &c. is the best known; this was reprinted, with a forth book, at Amsterdam in 1672, &c.

TUNBRIDGE, Viscount (Her.) the title borne by the eldest son of the earl of Rochford.

Tunbridge (Geog.) a town of Kent, in England, situated on the river Tun, 14 m. S. S. W. Maidstone, 30 S. E. by S. London. It is principally remarkable for the remains of a castle, built by Richard de Tunbridge, otherwise Fitzgilbert, afterwards earl of Clare, a kinsman of William the Conqueror, who, for his services at the battle of Hastings, rewarded him with numerous lordships. Tunbridge Wells, the springs of which are of a chalybeate kind, are at the distance of five or six miles from the town.

TUNES (Geog.) the Latin name for Tunis, the town of Africa near which Regulus was defeated. Polyb. l. 1; Diodor. l. 14; Liv. l. 30, &c.

TUNGRI (Geog.) a tribe of Germans living on the banks of the Maese, whose chief city was Atuatica, now called Tongeren. Tacit. de Germ.; Cluver. German Antiq.

TUNIS (Geog.) a city of Barbary, capital of a territory of the same name, called by the Romans Tunes. It is situated not far from the site of ancient Carthage, on a bay of the Mediterranean of the same name.

TUNSTALL (Ecc.) vide Tonstall.

Tunstall, James (Biog.) an English divine, was born about 1710, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1772, leaving 'Epistola ad C. Middleton;' 'Observations on the Collection of Epistles between Cicero and Brutus;' 'Vindication of the Power of the State to prohibit Clandestine Marriages,' &c.

TURBERVILLE, George (Biog.) an English poet, descended from a family of some note in Dorsetshire, was born about 1530, and died after 1594, leaving 'Songs and Sonnets,' 1567 and 1570; 'Tragical Tales,' &c. 1576; besides translations of Ovid's Epistles, &c. To him are also attributed 'Essays Politic and Moral,' &c. 'A Book of Falconrie,' &c. although there were two other persons of both his names, and students of Oxford, who were his contemporaries.

TURENNE, Henry de la Tour d'Auvergne, Viscount de (Hist.) second son of the duke of Bouillon by Elizabeth, daughter of William I, of Nassau, prince of Orange, was born at Sedan in 1611, and having entered early into the military profession, he signalised himself on every occasion in which he was called upon to act during a 17 years' service under different generals, when in 1644 he was, in reward for his distinguished conduct, raised to the rank of Field Marshal; in which capacity he pursued his career of glory during all the wars of that period until the year 1675, when he was killed by a cannon ball as he was examining a spot near the village of Salzbach, on which to erect a battery. [Vide Plate XIV]

TURGOT, Anne Robert James (Hist.) a French minister of State, descended from a very ancient family, in Normandy, was born in 1727 at Paris, and died in 1781, after having filled various offices with little credit to himself, or advantage to his country. His measures were considered as calculated to precipitate the revolution which has since desolated France.

TURGOT (Ecc.) an ecclesiastic and historian of Saxon origin, who was raised in 1109 to the see of St. Andrews, in Scotland, and died in 1115, was the author of a History of the Church of Durham, which was afterwards published by Simeon, of Durham, under his own name.

TURIN (Geog.) a city of Piedmont, in the north of Italy, the capital and seat of the Sardinian monarchy, situated on a plain on the western bank of the Po, which here receives the waters of the Dora Ripuaria, 75 miles S. W. Milan, 185 W. N. W. Florence, 320 N. W. Rome. Lon. 7° 40′ E. lat. 45° 4′ N.

History of Turin.

Turin, called by the ancients Taurinum, or Augusta Taurinorum, passed from the Romans to the Lombards, from whom it was taken, with the rest of the kingdom, by Charlemagne, and was afterwards successively transferred to the marquisses of Saluzzo, and, lastly, to the princes of Savoy, who made it the capital of their states. Since that period it has been frequently exposed to sieges or captures, particularly by the French, who took it in 1640, besieged it in 1706, and occupied it during the late revolutionary war.

TURKEY (Geog.) a large empire extended over Europe, Asia, and Africa.

Boundaries. Turkey, in Europe, is bounded on the N. by Croatia, Sclavonia, Hungary, Transylvania, and Poland; E. by New Russia, the Black Sea, the Sea of Marmora, and the Archipelago; S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by that sea and the Venetian territories. Turkey, in Asia, is bounded on the N. by the Black-Sea and Circassia, E. by Persia, S. by Arabia, and W. by the Mediterranean. In Africa the Turks have Egypt, part of Nubia and Barca, and the states of Tripoli, Tunis, and Algiers under their protection.

History. The Turks, who gave their name to the country of Turkey, derive their origin from Turk, whom they affirm to have been the son of Jafis, or Japhet; but according to the Chinese accounts the Huns and the Turks were the same people, who, at different times, went under these different names; but the latter name does not appear to have been given them until about the beginning of the sixth century, when they became known by it in Europe, although a tribe of ancient Scythians, named Turci, are spoken of by Pomponius Mela, and Pliny, who place them among the nations dwelling in the neighbourhood of the river Tanais, and the Palus Mæotis. Since that period this name has been generally applied to the different tribes of barbarians, otherwise called Tartars, who settled in Tartary; to the Seljuks, who overrun Persia; Monguls, or Moguls, who founded the Mogul empire; and more particularly to the Othmans, or Ottomans, who founded the Ottoman empire, and are supposed to have come originally from Turkestan, or some other part of Tartary. Although the country retains the name of its original inhabitants, yet the empire, which owes its rise to Othman I, its first emperor, has since, by way of pomp, been styled the Ottoman Empire, the Ottoman Port, the Sublime Port, or simply the Port. Othman was declared sultan of the Turks in the year of the Hegira 700, A. D. 1310, having for his successors the following princes:

Constantinople having been captured by Mahomet II, became, from that time, the capital of the Ottoman, or Turkish emperors, who assumed the title of Grand Seignior.

TURNEBUS, Adrian (Biog.) a critic and translator, was born at Andeli, near Rouen in 1512, and died in 1565. His principal work was his 'Adversaria,' which, with his miscellaneous pieces, went through many editions separately, and were afterwards published, with his translations of Aristotle, Theophrastus, Plutarch, &c. in 3 vols. fol. Argentorat. 1600.

TURNER, Thomas (Hist.) brother to bishop Turner hereafter-mentioned, was born in 1645 at Bristol, educated at Oxford, and died in 1714, leaving the bulk of his fortune, which was very considerable, in public and charitable uses, particularly 6000*l.* for improving the buildings of Corpus Christi College, where he was educated.

TURNER, Francis (Ecc.) an English prelate, was educated at Winchester School and New College, Oxford, where he took his degrees of A. B. and A. M. in 1659 and 1663, was raised, after various preferments, to the see of Rochester in 1683; was committed to the Tower in 1688, with his five other brethren, for petitioning the king against the "Declaration for liberty of Conscience:" notwithstanding which, on the accession of William and Mary, he was deprived of his bishopric for refusing to take the oaths, and died in 1700.

TURNER (Her.) the name of a family of Ambrosden, in Oxfordshire, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1733 on sir Edward Turner; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth, argent, a fer-de-mouline pierced sable, for Turner; second and third, azure, a fess indented between three martlets or, for Page.

Crest. A lion passant gardant argent, holding in his dexter paw a fer-de-mouline as in the arms, ducally crowned or.

TURNER, William (Biog.) a naturalist, was born at Morpeth, in Northumberland, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1568, leaving, among other things, his 'Herbal,' which was published complete in the year of his death.

TURNOUR (Her.) the family name of the earl of Winterton, which title was conferred in 1761 on Edward Garth, a descendant in the female line from sir Edward Turnour, Speaker of the House of Commons in Ireland in 1661, and Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer.

TURNOUR, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Winterton.

TURNUS (Myth.) a king of the Rutuli, who, being engaged to marry Lavinia, the daughter of Latinus, waged war with his rival Æneas, by whom he was killed in single combat. Virg. Æn. l. 7; Tibull. l. 2; Ovid. Fast. l. 4, &c.

TURONES (Geog.) a people of Gallia Lugdunensis, whose capital, Cæsarodunum, is now called Tours.

TURTON (Her.) a family which has flourished for a considerable time in the county of Stafford, and enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1796 on sir Thomas Turton; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Or, ten trefoils slipped vert, four, three, two, and one, a canton gules.

Crest. Out of a mural coronet argent, a cubit arm erect vested vert, cuffed of the first, holding in the hand proper, a banner per pale argent and vert, fringed or, staff argent, headed or.

TUSCANY (Geog.) a grand duchy of Italy, extending from 42° to 44° of N. lat. and bounded by the Appennines on one side, and that part of the Mediterranean on the other which is denominated the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Sea.

Chief Towns. Florence, the capital, Leghorn, Pisa, Sienne, Cortona, &c.

Principal Rivers. The Arno, the Ambrone, and the Chiana.

History. Tuscany, the country which was known to the Romans by the name of Etruria, or Hetruria [vide Hetruria], passed from their hands to those of the Lombards; and, after having retained its independence for a length of time, it became subject to the house of Medicis, who governed it with the title of grand duke. On the extinction of this family in 1737, it became annexed to the house of Austria, in whose possession it has since remained, except during the interval of Bonaparte's usurpation.

TUSCULUM (Geog.) now Frescati, a town of Latium, famous for the magnificent villas in its neighbourhood.

TUSSER, Thomas (Biog.) an English poet, styled the British Varro, was born about 1515 at Raven-hall, near Witham, in Essex, and died about 1580, leaving his 'Five hundred Points of Good Husbandry,' by which he is now remembered.

TUTBURY (Geog.) a market town of Staffordshire, in England, situated on the river Dove. Lon. 71° 7′ W. lat. 42° 20′ N. This town is noted for its ancient castle, the remains of which testify that it was one of the grandest, as it was also one of the most famous, in England.

TWEDDELL, John (Biog.) an enterprizing scholar, was born in 1769 at Threepwood, near Hexham, co. Northumberland, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1799 in Greece, whither he went to explore the remains of art and science. A volume has been published since his death under the title of 'Remains of the late John Tweddell,' being a selection of his letters, &c. with a republication of his 'Prolusiones Juveniles,' 4to. 1815.

TWEEDALE, Marquis of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Hay [vide Hay], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Hay, marquis of Tweedale, earl of Tweedale and Gifford, viscount of Walden, and lord Hay, of Yester.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth, azure, three cinquefoils argent, for Fraser; second and third, gules, three bars ermine, for Gifford, of Yester; over all the paternal coat of Hay argent, three inescutcheons two and one gules.

Crest. A goat's head erased argent, horned or.

Supporters. Two bucks proper, attired or, collared azure, the collars charged with three cinquefoils argent.

Motto. "Spare nought."

TWELLS, Leonard (Biog.) an English divine, who was educated at Cambridge, and died in 1742, published a 'Critical Examination of the late new Text and Version of the Testament, in Greek and English;' 'Life of Dr. Pocock;' 'A Vindication of the Gospel of St. Matthew,' 8vo.

TWINING, Thomas (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1734 in London, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1804, leaving a translation of Aristotle's Poetics,' &c.

TWISDEN (Her.) vide Twysden.

TWISS, William (Biog.) a Calvinist, who was appointed prolocutor of the Westminster Assembly in the time of the rebellion, was born about 1575 at Newbury, in Berkshire, educated at Winchester School and New College, Oxford, and died in 1646, leaving a number of works written after a Calvinistic fashion.

Twiss, Richard, a miscellaneous writer, who died in 1821, at the age of 74, was the author of 'Travels through Portugal and Spain;' 'A Tour through Ireland;' 'Anecdotes of Chess;' 'A Trip to Paris;' 'Miscellanies,' &c.

TWISTLETON (Her.) the family name of lord Say and Sele.

TWYNE, John (Biog.) an antiquary, and native of Hampshire, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1581, was the author of a work entitled 'De Rebus Albionicis, Britannicis atque Anglicis Commentariorum Libri duo,' 8vo. Lond. 1590; and is said to have written an epistle prefixed to the 'History of king Boccus and Sydracke,' 4to. 1510.

Twyne, Thomas, third son of the preceding, who died in 1613, at the age of 70, translated Lhuyde's 'Breviary of Britayne,' &c.

Twyne, Brian, son of Thomas, and grandson of John Twyne above-mentioned, wrote the first regular account of Oxford, which was published under the title of 'Antiquitatis Academiæ Oxoniensis Apologia in tres Libros divisa,' 4to. Oxon. 1608; the object of which was to prove, in answer to Kaius, that Oxford was 1267 years older than Cambridge. He left a collection of MSS. to the university, of which Wood availed himself.

TWYSDEN, Sir Roger, the second baronet of the family mentioned under Heraldry, and a distinguished royalist, was one of the first to oppose the rebellious designs of those who murdered their sovereign, and overturned the state. After suffering severely for his loyalty, he had the happiness to see the government of his country restored, and died in 1672.

Twysden, Thomas, brother of the preceding, became one of the justices of the King's Bench after the restoration; and, having obtained the honour of the baronetcy, he changed his name to Twisden, and became the founder of the family of the Twisdens, of Bradbourn, in Kent.

Twysden (Her.) a family of considerable antiquity in Kent, which, in two of its branches, enjoy a baronetcy first conferred in 1611 on sir William Twysden, of Roydon-hall, East Peckham, Kent, father of sir Roger above-mentioned; and, in the next case, on Thomas Twysden above-mentioned, second son of the preceding. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gyrony of four argent and gules, a saltire between four cross crosslets all counterchanged.

Crest. On a wreath, a cockatrice sejant gules, winged, &c. or.

The arms of the junior branch are the same as the first duly differenced.

Motto. "Prævisa mala pereunt."

TYCHICHUS (Bibl.) Τυχικὸς, a disciple of St. Paul, who was employed by the apostle to carry letters to several of the churches. Acts xx. 4; Ephes. iv.; Col. iv. &c. The Greeks, who make S. Tychichus to be one of the seventy, celebrate his feast, Dec. 8 or 9.

TYDEUS (Myth.) Τυδεὺς, a son of Œneus, king of Calydon, by Peribœa, who, in consequence of the accidental murder of one of his friends, fled to the court of Adrastus, king of Argos, whom he assisted, as one of the seven chiefs, in the Theban war. On his return to Argos, he was attacked by 50 Thebans, who lay in wait for him, and, after having killed many of them, he fell by the hand of Menalippus, but not before he had given the latter a mortal wound. He was the father of Diomedes, who is commonly distinguished by the patronymic Tydides. Hom. Il. l. 4 &c.; Æschyl. Sept. Ante. Theb.; Eurip. in Suppl.; Apollod. l. 1; Diodor. l. 2; Virg. Æn. l. 6; Ovid. in Ib.; Hygin. Fab. 69, &c.

TYE, Christopher (Biog.) a musician and musical preceptor to prince Edward, afterwards king Edward VI, set the 'Actes of the Apostles' to music, and left many other pieces of sacred music.

TYNDAL (Biog.) or Tindale, William, one of the first and the most active of the English reformers, was born in 1500, near the borders of Wales, studied partly at Oxford, and partly at Cambridge, where he took his degrees; but being exceedingly zealous in propagating the notions he had formed respecting religion, he found it necessary for his safety to retire to the continent, where he began the translation of the New Testament, and, by its publication, he aided the cause that was then daily gaining ground. Being, however, afterwards seized at Brussels by order of the emperor, he was, after an imprisonment of about a year, tried, and sentenced to death by virtue of the emperor's decree made in the assembly at Augsburg, in consequence of which he was first strangled, and then burnt in 1536. It is said that his translation of the New Testament was bought up by order of bishop Tonstall, and burnt by the common hangman in Smithfield, which only served to aid the cause that the good bishop hoped to ruin.

TYNDARIDÆ (Myth.) Τυνδαρίδαι, a patronymic for the children of Tyndarus, king of Lacedæmon, by the celebrated Leda, namely, Castor, Pollux, and Helen. Hom. Il. passim. &c.

TYNEMOUTH (Geog.) a village of Northumberland, in England, situated at the mouth of the Tyne, about a mile below North Shields. It is chiefly noted for its ancient castle and priory, which was a place of great strength, and belonged to the earls of Northumberland. It was in good repair in the reign of queen Elizabeth, was besieged and taken by the rebels in 1644, and has since been made a depot for arms and military stores.

TYPHÆUS (Myth.) Τυφωεὺς, or Typhon, Τυφῶν; a famous giant, son of Tartarus and Terra, who had a hundred heads like those of a dragon. He made war on heaven in revenge for the death of his brethren, but being put to flight by the thunderbolts of Jupiter, he was crushed under Mount Ætna. Hom. Hymn.; Hesiod. Theogn. v. 306; Herod. l. 2; Æschyl. Sept. Ante. Theb.; Schol. Pind. &c.

TYRANNIO, St. (Ecc.) Τυραννίων, one of the most celebrated martyrs in the persecution of Diocletian, who, as bishop of Tyre, was active in supporting the faith of the suffering Christians, who were dragged before the tribunal, and after having been confined in prison for six years, was finally thrown into the Orontes. Euseb. Hist. l. 88.

TYRANNIO (Biog.) a grammarian of Amisus, the friend of Cicero, and master of Strabo, being carried captive to Rome by Lucullus in the Mithridatic war, acquired great wealth there by teaching. He was fond of books, of which he made a collection to the number of 30,000 volumes. To his care and industry is ascribed the preservation of Aristotle's works. Cic. ad Quint. l. 2, ep. 4; Suidas, Hesychius, &c.

TYRAWLY, Baron (Her.) of Ballingrobe, co. Mayo; the title enjoyed by the family of Cuff.

TYRCONNEL, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Carpenter [vide Carpenter], which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Paly of six argent and gules, on a chevron azure, three crosslets or.

Crest. On a wreath, a globe in a frame or.

Supporters. Two horses party per fess embattled argent and gules.

Motto. "Per acuta belli."

TYRE (Bibl.) צור, Τύρος; the celebrated city of Phœnicia, described under Geography, was, in its ancient state, allotted to the tribe of Ashur, and was, according to the prophecies of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, A. M. 3419, A. C. 585; but being afterwards rebuilt, it was among the first to embrace Christianity. Josh. xix. 29; Jerem. xxvii. &c.; Ezek. xxv.; Isai. xxiii. &c.

TYRE (Geog.) a town of Palestine, in Syria, on the coast of the Mediterranean, situated on a peninsula which projects from the shore into the sea, 18 miles S. S. W. Saida, and 60 S. W. Damascus. Lon. 35° 20′ E. lat. 33° 10′ N.

History of Tyre.

Tyre, now called by the inhabitants Sur, or Sour, and by the ancients Tyrus [vide Tyrus], became a subject of contest between the Christians and Saracens during the Crusades, being taken by Baldwin I after a siege of four months and a half. It was besieged, but without effect, by Saladin in 1188, but was finally yielded to the Saracens in 1291, when the inhabitants, terrified at the cruelties committed at Acre, took to their ships, and abandoned the city. From that period it has gradually fallen into decay, and is now only a village.

Ecclesiastical History of Tyre.

This city was distinguished for its zeal in the cause of Christianity on its first promulgation, and its church was made the first archbishopric under the patriarchate of Jerusalem. A council was held here in 335 by Constantine the Great for the purpose of opposing the progress of the Arian heresy; but the heretical prelates were so numerous that they procured the deposition and banishment of St. Athanasius. Another council was held in 448, and a synod in 518.

TYRELL (Her.) a family of great antiquity, whose ancestor, sir Walter Tyrell, came over with the Conqueror. Sir John Tyrell, his descendant, was created a baronet in 1809. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, within a bordure engrailed gules, two chevrons azure.

Crest. A peacock's tail issuing from the mouth of a boar's head couped erect.

Supporters. Two tigers regardant.

Motto. "Sans crainte."

TYRRELL, Sir Richard (Hist.) a naval commander, and nephew to sir Peter Warren, attained the rank of post-captain in 1743, and that of admiral and commander-in-chief on the Antigua station in 1762, but died in 1766.

TYRRELL, James (Biog.) grandson of archbishop Usher, was born in Westminster in 1642, educated at Oxford, studied law at the Temple, and died in 1718, leaving, 1. 'Patriarcha non Monarcha,' &c. in answer to sir Robert Filmer's work on the subject of the divine right of princes. 2. 'Bibliotheca Politica,' &c. dialogues in favour of a limited monarchy, published at different times in 4to. and afterwards collected into one volume folio, 1718, and reprinted in 1727. 3. An Abridgment of Bishop Cumberland's work, entitled 'A brief Disquisition of the Law of Nature,' 1692, and reprinted in 1701. 4. 'General History of England,' &c. 5 vols. fol. generally bound in three, London, 1700, 1704; besides his dedication to the posthumous work of archbishop Usher, entitled 'The Power communicated by God to the Prince,' &c.; also an appendix to Parr's 'Life of Usher.'

TYROL (Geog.) a province of the Austrian empire, bounded by Bavaria, Carinthia, Austrian Italy, and Switzerland, which formed a part of the ancient Rhætia. From its geographical position and natural strength, it has rarely been exposed to the evils of war; but in the contests which ensued from the French revolution, it was made to suffer from the exactions of Bonaparte, and a violent transfer to the Bavarian government, but was restored to Austria in 1815.

TYRONE, Earl (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the marquis of Waterford.

TYRTÆUS (Hist.) Τυρταῖος, a Greek elegiac poet, and native of Attica, who so animated the Lacedæmonians by his martial songs, in the second Messenian war, that they defeated the Messenians at all points; for which he was made a citizen of Sparta. Of his compositions nothing is extant, except the fragments of four or five elegies. Plut. de Leg. l. 1; Aristot. Polit. l. 5; Horat. de Art. Poet. v. 402; Strab. l. 8; Paus. l. 4, &c.

TYRUS (Geog.) Τύρος, Tyre, or Sour, the ancient city of the Phœnicians, which was built by the Sidonians, and distinguished into the Old and New Tyre; the former of which, also called Palætyros, was built on the sea-shore, and is supposed to have been the city mentioned in Scripture, which was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar [vide Tyre]; and the New Tyre, which was built on an island. This latter was taken by Alexander after a six months' siege, A.C. 332, when it was almost ruined; but it recovered its importance, and was a place of great note in the time of the Roman emperor.

Tyrus (Numis.) medals of this town are inscribed very frequently ΤΥΡΟΥ ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛΕΩΣ; and also with the additions of ΙΕΡΑΣ ΑΣΥΛΟΥ, and ΑΥΤΟΝΟΜΟΥ. It was likewise named SEPTIMIA, in honour of Septimius Severus, by whom it was formed into a colony; as, COL. SEPT. TYRUS METROPOL. This town struck medals, either as an independent state, or in honour of Vespasian, Nerva, Trajan, Pescennius, Septimius Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, Geta, Macrinus, Diadumenianus, Heliogabalus, Julia Mæsa, Aquilia Severa, Annia Faustina, Alexander Severus, Julia Mamæa, Gordianus Pius, &c.

TYRWHITT, Thomas (Biog.) a scholar and critic, descended from a very ancient baronet's family in Lincolnshire, was born in 1730, educated at Eton, whence he was removed to Queen's College, Oxford, and, after studying law at the Temple, he for a short time held the office of Clerk of the House of Commons, and died in 1786, leaving, 1. 'An Epistle to Florio,' &c. 4to. London, 1749. 2. 'Translations in Verse,' &c. 4to. 1752. 3. 'Observations and Conjectures on some Passages in Shakspeare,' 8vo. 1766. 4. 'Proceedings and Debates in the House of Commons,' &c. 2 vols. 8vo. Oxford, 1766. 5. 'The Manner of holding Parliaments,' &c. 8vo. London, 1768. 6. 'Fragmenta duo Plutarchi,' &c. 7. 'The Canterbury Tales of Chaucer,' 4 vols. 8vo. and a 5th volume in 1778; since reprinted in 2 vols. 4to. at Oxford. 8. 'Dissertatio de Babrio,' &c. 1776. 9. 'Notes on Euripides.' 10. 'Poems, supposed to have been written at Bristol,' &c. twice republished in 1778, tending to prove that they were not written by any ancient author, but by Chatterton, which occasioned some dispute in the learned world. 11. An edition of Orpheus' 'ΠΕΡΙ ΛΙΘΩΝ,' &c. 12. 'A newly discovered Oration of Isæus against Menecles,' 1785. He also left materials for a new edition of Aristotle's Poetics, which were published by Drs. Burgess and Randolph, afterwards bishops of St. David's and London, in 1794, both in a 4to. and 8vo. form.

TYSON, Edward (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1649 at Bristol, educated at Oxford, and died in 1708, leaving the 'Anatomy of a Porpoise,' 4to.; 'The Anatomy of a Pigmy compared with that of a Monkey,' &c.

Tyson, Michael, an English divine, was born in 1740, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1780, leaving some Poems, and two papers in the Archæologia; but he is principally noticed for his skill in drawing and etching.

TYTLER, William (Biog.) an historical writer, was born in 1711 at Edinburgh, and died in 1792, leaving 'Inquiry, Historical and Critical, into the Evidence against Mary, Queen of Scots,' &c. 8vo. 1759; frequently reprinted, and extended in 1790 to 2 vols. 8vo.; 'A Dissertation on the Marriage of Queen Mary to the Earl of Bothwell,' published in the first volume of the Transactions published by the Society of Antiquaries in Scotland; 'The Poetical Remains of James I of Scotland,' &c.; 'A Dissertation on Scottish Music,' &c.; 'Observations on the Vision, a Poem;' 'On the Fashionable Amusements in Edinburgh during the Last Century,' &c. Mr. Tytler was father to the hon. Alexander Frazer Tytler, lord Woodhouselee, lately one of the Judges of the Supreme Civil Court of Law in Scotland, to whom the public are indebted for an 'Essay on the Principles of Translation;' 'Elements of General History;' 'Life of Lord Kaimes,' &c.

TZETZES, John (Biog.) a grammarian of Constantinople, who died about the end of the 12th century, wrote 'Commentaries on Lycophron,' which he first published under the name of his brother, Isaac Tzetzes; they are inserted in Potter's edition of Lycophron, fol. Oxon. 1697; also 'Chiliades,' &c.; 'Allegories on Homer,' and other works; the Chiliades were published at Basle in folio, 1546, and the Allegories by Morel, in 8vo. Paris, 1816.

U, V.

VABALLATHUS (Hist.) a descendant of Odenatus, a celebrated king of Palmyra, whose queen Zenobia was his second wife. She governed for some time in the name of this prince, who on her defeat was reduced to a private station. It has been doubted whether Vaballathus was the son of Zenobia, or the son of Herodian, a son of Odenatus by his first wife. Vopisc. in Aurelian.; Trebell. Poll. Trigint. Tyrann.

Vaballathus (Numis.) medals of this emperor bear his effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscription—VABALLATHUS, with the addition of V. C. R. I. M. D. R., on the signification of which antiquaries are not agreed.

VADIANUS, Joachim (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1484 at St. Gal, and died in 1551, leaving an edition of Pomponius Mela; 'Scholia in Plin. Nat. Hist.; and 'De obscuris Verborum Significationibus.'

VAHL, Martin (Biog.) a botanist, was born at Bergen, in Norway, in 1749, and died in 1804, leaving 'Flora Danica,' 6 vols. 1785; 'Symbolæ Botanicæ,' 3 vols.; 'Eclogæ Americanæ,' 2 vols.; 'Decades Iconum,' 3 vols.; 'Enumeratio Plantarum,' &c. 2 vols. 8vo. Hafn. 1804—1807.

VAILLANT, John Foi (Biog.) a medallist, was born at Beauvais in 1632, and died in 1706, leaving, 1. 'Numismata Imperatorum Romanorum præstantiora,' &c.; a second edition in 3 vols. 4to. 1694. 2. 'Seleucidarum Imperium,' &c. 4to. Paris. 1681. 3. 'Numismata ærea Imperatorum,' &c. 2 tom. fol. Paris. 1688. 4. 'Numismata Imperatorum et Cæsarum a Populis Romanæ Ditionis Græcè loquentibus,' &c. 4to. Paris. 1698, and fol. Amst. 1700. 5. 'Historia Ptolemæorum,' &c. fol. Amst. 1701. 6. 'Nummi Antiqui Familiarum Rom.,' &c. 2 tom. fol. Amst. 1703. 7. 'Arsacidarum Imperium,' &c. 4to. Paris. 1725. 8. 'Achæmenidarum Imperium,' &c. 4to. Paris. 1725. His son, John Francis Foi Vaillant, also wrote some pieces on the subject of medals.

VAILLANT, Sebastian, a botanist, was born at Vigny, near Pontoise, in 1669, and died in 1722, leaving 'Botanicon Parisiense,' fol. Lugd. Bat. 1727, published by Boerhaave.

VAISSELLE, Joseph (Biog.) an historian, was born in 1685 at Gaillac, in Agenois, and died in 1756, leaving 'Origine de la Monarchie Françoise;' 'Histoire Generale de la Province de Languedoc,' 5 vols. fol. 1730, and subsequent years; and an abridgement of this work in 6 vols. 12mo. was published in 1740; 'Geographie Universelle,' &c. 4 vols. 4to. 1755.

VALDEMAR (Hist.) the name of some Danish princes.

VALDEMAR I, succeeded Canute IV in 1157, and died in 1185, when he was succeeded by Canute V.

VALDEMAR II, successor to Canute V in 1202, died in 1242, and was succeeded by Eric VI.

VALDEMAR of Sleswick, was elected on the abdication of Christopher II, but resigned soon after, in consequence of the illegality of his election, when Christopher was restored to the throne.

VALDEMAR III, succeeded Christopher II in 1341, after an interregnum of seven years, and died in 1376, leaving his throne to his daughter Margaret.

VALDEMAR, a king of Sweden, succeeded Eric the Stammerer in 1250, and died in 1277, leaving Magnus his successor.

VALDES (Biog.) or Valdesso, John, a military officer, who, after serving in the armies of Charles V, turned polemic, and founded a religious sect, of which little is known except that it was in opposition to the Church of Rome. He died in 1540, leaving some Commentaries on the Bible, but is now principally known by a work which in the English translation is entitled 'Considerations on a Religious Life.' This work is translated from an Italian translation of the original Spanish by Mr. Nicholas Ferrar, and was printed at Oxford in 1638.

VALENCE (Geog.) a town of Dauphiny, a former province of France, and capital of the modern department of the Drome, situated on the Rhone, 42 m. S. W. Grenoble, 55 S. by E. Lyons. Lon. 4° 59′ E., lat. 44° 55′ N. Valence, called by the Romans Valentia, and Segalaunorum Urbs, was once a colony, yet retains but few vestiges of its ancient inhabitants. Its church was founded in the second century by St. Felix, Fortunatus, and Achilleus, whom St. Irenæus sent thither. Its most ancient bishop, of whom particular mention is made, was St. Æmilianus, who had many successors that were distinguished for their piety and zeal. It suffered much during the religious wars of the sixteenth century, and it was a place of refuge for pope Pius VI, after being driven from Rome by the French government. He died there in 1799. Several councils have been held at Valence; namely, in 37[illegible], 529, 584, &c.

VALENCIA (Geog.) a large province in the east of Spain, lying between lat. 37° and 40° N.

Principal Rivers. It is watered by three great rivers; the Xucar, the Segura, and the Guadalaviar; besides others of less note, as the Palencia, and the Mejares, &c. all flowing from the mountains to the Mediterranean.

Principal Towns. Valencia, the capital, Segorbe, Alicant, &c.

History. Valencia, in the Latin Valentia, was the country of the Edetani, or Sedetani, according to Livy and Strabo, and the Contestani, at the time when Spain was conquered by the Romans. On the decline of the empire, it fell into the hands of the Goths, from whom it was taken by the Moors, and formed into a kingdom in the 8th century, of which they kept possession until the 13th century, when it was annexed to Arragon, but still retaining its own form of government. In consequence, however, of the part which it took against the Bourbons in the war of succession, it was deprived of its independence, and obliged to conform to the laws of Old Castile.

VALENCIA, the capital of the above-mentioned province, situated on the Guadalaviar, two miles from the sea, 170 m. E. S. E. Madrid. Lon. 0° 23′ W., lat. 39° 28′ N.

History of Valencia.

Valencia, the Valentia Contestanorum, or Editanorum, of the Romans, was taken from the latter by the Goths, who retained it until 715, when it was occupied by the Moors. It was taken by the Cid in 1094, and granted to him as a dependency on the crown of Castile. At his death it devolved to his widow Ximene, who heroically maintained a long siege against the Moors in 1100, but was at length compelled to surrender. The capture of this place by the king of Arragon in the thirteenth century completed the conquest of the kingdom. In the war of succession it suffered much for its adherence to the Austrian candidate; and in the late revolutionary war it was twice attacked by the French, and in the second attempt it was taken in 1812.

VALENCIENNES (Geog.) a town of French Flanders, situated on the Scheldt, 28 m. S. E. Lisle, and 120 N. N. E. Paris. Lon. 3° 32′ E., lat. 50° 21′ N.

History of Valenciennes.

Valenciennes, called in Latin Valentianæ, or Valentinianæ, has been exposed to captures or sieges at different times. The French, under marshals Turenne and De la Ferté, besieged it in 1656, but were obliged to raise the siege by Don John of Austria, who took De la Ferté prisoner. In 1677 Louis XIV, who commanded in person, was more successful, and took the place by assault, which was confirmed to him the following year by the treaty of Nimeguen. In 1793 it was taken after a severe siege by the allies, under the command of the duke of York, but surrendered the following year to the French, in whose possession it has since remained.

VALENS, Publius Valerius (Hist.) a proconsul of Achaia in the time of Gallienus, was proclaimed emperor, and a short time after murdered by his own soldiers. Trebell. Poll.

VALENS, Flavius, an emperor, and son of Gratian, was admitted to a share in the empire by his brother Valentinian in 364, and was burnt to death in the 50th year of his age, and the 15th of his reign, A. D. 378, in a house whither he had fled for refuge from the Goths, by whom it was set on fire. Ammian. Marcellin. l. 31; Socrates, Sozomenes, Theodoret, &c.

VALENS (Numis.) medals are extant of the emperor above-mentioned, bearing his effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscriptions—D. N. VALENS P. F. AUG. Some few medals are ascribed to the usurper of this name, which are distinguished by the inscription, II. ΚΟΥιντος ΟΥΑΛηριος ΟΥΑΛενς, &c.; but these are said to be exceedingly rare.

VALENTIA, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Mountnorris.

VALENTIA (Geog.) now Valence, a town of Hispania Tarraconensis, on the river Turius, which was ruined by Pompey, but restored by Julius Cæsar, who founded a colony there. Liv. Epit. l. 55; Sallust. Hist. l. 3; Plin. l. 3.

VALENTIA (Numis.) the town in Spain, commemorated its founder, Julius Cæsar, on its medals, by taking the name of Colonia Julia Valentia; as, COL. JUL. VAL., or C. J. V. &c. The medals of this town are thus to be distinguished from those of Valentia, a town of the Bruttii, which are inscribed simply VALENTIA.

VALENTINE, Basil (Biog.) the real or assumed name of an alchymist, supposed by some to have flourished in the 14th and by others in the 15th century. He is now remembered by his discovery of the virtues of antimony, as also by several works, which have been published in Latin, Dutch, French, English, and other languages. His 'Currus triumphalis Antimonii,' is best known.

VALENTINIAN (Hist.) the name of three Roman emperors.

VALENTINIAN I, the son of Gratian, succeeded Jovian in 364, and died in 375, after having left to his brother Valens the empire of the east, while he retained the west. He was succeeded by his son Gratian. Ammian. Marcellinus; Prosper et Cassiodorus in Chron.; Orosius, &c.

VALENTINIAN II, second son of the preceding, was proclaimed emperor a few days after his father's death, succeeded his brother Gratian in 383, and was strangled by Arbogastes, one of his officers, in 392, after having reigned alone upwards of eight years. He had Theodosius the Great for his successor.

VALENTINIAN III, Flavius Placidius, son of Constantius and Placidia, daughter of Theodosius the Great, was born at Ravenna in 419, succeeded his father in 423, and was murdered in 454 by Petronius Maximus, to whose wife he had offered violence. Evagrius, Procopius, Cassiodorus, &c.

VALENTINIAN (Numis.) medals are extant of the three emperors above-mentioned, bearing their effigies, as in the subjoined figures; inscriptions for Valentinian sen.—D. N. FL. VALENTINIANUS P. F. AUG. &c.; for Valentinian jun.—D. N. VALENTINIANUS JUN. P. AUG.; for Flavius Placidius Valentinian—D. N. FL. PLAC. VALENTINIANUS P. F. AUG. &c.

VALENTINUS (Ecc.) author of the heretical sect called Valentinians, was an Egyptian by birth, and having been disappointed in a bishopric to which he aspired, he began to propagate a set of new doctrines which he framed from the Heathen mythology mingled with the mysteries of the gospel. The rise of his heresy was in the reign of Adrian, and he himself died about A. D. 160. Irenæus was the principal writer against Valentinus, and was followed by Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, and others.

VALENTINUS, Michael Bernard (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1657 at Giessen, in Germany, and died in 1726, leaving 'Historia Simplicium Reformata,' fol. Francof. 1716, and 1726; 'Amphitheatrum Zootomicum,' &c. fol. ibid. 1720.

VALERIA, gens (Hist.) one of the most ancient Roman families, of Sabine extraction, which is said to have migrated to Rome with king Tatius. They were particularly distinguished in the branches of the Messalæ, Corvini, Messalinæ, Flacci, Catulli, &c.

VALERIA, gens (Numis.) medals are extant of this family, inscribed by the surnames ACISCULUS, BARBATUS, CATULLUS, CORVINUS, FALTUS, FLACCUS, MESSALA, LAEVINUS, MESSALINUS, NIGER, and POTITUS.

VALERIANUS, Publius Licinius (Hist.) a Roman emperor, was elected after Gallus in 253, and died a prisoner to Sapor, king of Persia, after a reign of seven years. He was treated with the utmost indignity and cruelty by this prince, who had treacherously got him into his power, and is said to have caused him to be flayed alive, and his mangled body to be sprinkled with salt. Valerian was succeeded by his son Gallienus, whom he had made a partner of his throne. His younger son, of the same name as himself, was declared Cæsar Augustus, but perished with his brother. Aurelius Vict.; Dutropius, Eusebius, &c.

VALERIANUS (Numis.) medals are extant of the princes, father and son, above-mentioned, bearing their effigies, as in the annexed figures; inscriptions for the father—IMP. VALERIANUS P. F. AUG.—IMP. LIC. VALERIAN. AUG.—IMP. C. P. L. VALERIANUS AUG. Inscriptions for the son—LIC. VALERIANUS.—VALERIANUS NOB. CAESAR. — P. C. L. VALERIANUS NOB. CAES.

VALERIANUS, Pierius (Biog.) or Valeriano Bolzani, an Italian writer, was born at Belluno, in Venice, about 1477, and died in 1558, leaving 'Hieroglyphica,' &c. Basil. 1566; besides some notes on Virgil, and some pieces on antiquity, inserted in Grævius's Thesaurus. After his death were published 'Contarenus, sive de Literatorum Infelicitate Libri duo,' 8vo. Venet. 1620; 'Antiquitatum Bellunensium Libri quatuor,' 8vo. &c.

VALERIO (Ecc.) or Valiero Augustine, a prelate, and native of Venice, descended from one of the best families in that city, was born in 1531, appointed bishop of Verona in 1565, created a cardinal in 1583 by Gregory XIII, and died in 1606, leaving 'De Rhetoricâ Ecclesiasticâ Libri tres,' 8vo. Venet. 1574, and frequently reprinted since; besides other works, of which a complete list is given in a work entitled 'De Cautione adhibendâ in edendis Libris.'.

VALERIUS, Publius (Hist.) surnamed Publicola, on account of his popularity, was very active in assisting Brutus to expel the Tarquins. He gained a victory over the Etrurians at the time that Brutus and the sons of Tarquin fell, and died after having been four times consul. Liv. l. 1; Flor. l. 1; Plut. in Vit.

VALERIUS, Corvinus, a tribune of the soldiers under Camillus, died in the 100th year of his age, after having been six times honoured with the consulship. Cic. in Cat.; Liv. l. 7; Val. Max. l. 8; Plut. in Mar.

VALERIUS, Flaccus (Biog.) vide Flaccus.

VALERIUS, Maximus, a Latin writer in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, to whom he dedicated his 'Libri novem Factorum Dictorumque Memorabilium,' still extant, and first published at Metz in folio in 1471, and reprinted at Venice in the same year. Of the subsequent editions that by Thysius, 8vo. 1670, the Delphin, 4to. 1679, and that by Torrenius, 2 vols. 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1726, are reckoned the best.

VALESIUS, Henry (Biog.) or Henry de Valois, a French critic, was born at Paris in 1603, and died in 1676, leaving 1. 'Excerpta Polybii,' &c. 4to. 1634. 2. An edition of Ammianus Marcellinus, 4to. 1636; reprinted with additional notes in folio 1681, and 1693. 3. An edition of the Ecclesiastical Historians; namely, Eusebius in 1659; Socrates and Sozomenes in 1668; Theodoret and Evagrius, &c. in 1673; reprinted in 3 vols. fol. Amst. in 1699, and again under the care of William Reading, Cantab. 1720. 4. Notes, &c. on Harpocration, published after his death by Gronovius.

VALESIUS, Adrian, brother of the preceding, who died in 1692, at the age of 85, was the author of 'Gesta Franco-rum,' &c. 3 vols. fol. 1646-58; and 'Notitia Galliarum,' &c. fol. 1675; besides other works.

VALINCOURT, John Baptist du Trousset de (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1653 at St. Quintin, in Picardy, and died in 1730, leaving 'Lettres à Madame la Marquise de-'sur le sujet de la Princesse de Cleves,' 12mo. Paris, 1678; 'Observations Critiques sur l'Œdipe de Sophocle.'

VALLA, Laurentius (Biog.) a scholar, was born at Rome in 1407, and died in 1465, leaving, besides translations of Livy, and Thucydides, also 'Elegantiæ Linguæ Latinæ,' fol. Rom. 1471, and 4to. Paris. 1542.

VALLETORT, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Mount-Edgecombe.

VALLE, Peter de la (Biog.) a traveller and native of Rome, died in 1652. His 'Viaggi, descritti da lui medesimo in Lettere Familiari all' Eruditto suo Amico Mario Schipano,' &c. was first published in 1650, and again in 4 vols. 4to. 1662, at Rome; the French translation by Carreau and le Comte, in 4 vols. 4to. 1663, and 8 vols. 12mo. Rouen, 1745. There is also an English translation.

VALLISNIERI, Antonio (Biog.) a physician of Padua, was born in 1661, of a noble and ancient family, at the castle of Trasilico, in Modena, and died in 1730, leaving numerous works on physic and natural history, which were published in Italian, in 3 vols. fol. Venice, 1733.

VALMONT DE BOMARE, James Christopher (Biog.) a French naturalist, was born at Rouen in 1731, and died in 1807, leaving 'Dictionnaire Raisonné Universel d'Histoire Naturelle,' which has passed through many editions in 8vo. and 4to. The last edition was published in 15 vols. 8vo. Lyons, 1800.

VALOIS (Biog.) vide Valesius.

VALSALVA, Antony Maria (Biog.) a physician, was born at Imola in 1666, and died in 1723, leaving a number of anatomical dissertations, which were published in Latin at Venice, in 2 vols. 4to. 1740.

VANBROUGH, John (Biog.) a dramatic poet and architect, descended originally from a Flemish family of Ghent named Vanburg, was born in the reign of Charles II, and died in 1726. His principal works, as an architect, are Blenheim, and Castle-Howard in Yorkshire, built for the earl of Carlisle, deputy to the Earl Marshal. Among his dramatic pieces are his 'Æsop,' a comedy, 1698; 'The False Friend,' another comedy, 1702; 'The Confederacy;' 'Provoked Wife,' &c.

VAN DALE, Anthony (Biog.) a physician, was born in Holland in 1638, and died in 1708, leaving 'Dissertatio super Aristea,' &c.

VANDER-LINDEN, John Antonides (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1609 at Enckhuysen, in Holland, and died in 1664, leaving an edition of Celsus and Hippocrates, besides several works on medical subjects.

VANDER DOES, vide Does.

VANDER NEER, vide Neer.

VANDERVELDE (Biog.) Vandenvelde, or Vandevelde, William, a painter, called the Old, in distinction from his son, was born at Leyden in 1610, and died in 1693, after having distinguished himself by his skill in representing sea-fights, having attended the two naval engagements of that time between the Dutch and English for the purpose of making the representation more correct. His son William, called the Young, who died in 1707, at the age of 74, was even more happy than his father in the representation of the same subjects. His pieces are highly prized, and eagerly sought after. They both lived and died in England.

VANDYCK, Sir Anthony (Biog.) a distinguished portrait painter, and a disciple of Rubens, was born at Antwerp in 1598, and died in 1641, in the service of king Charles I, by whom he was particularly patronized. [Vide Plate XXXVI] Among his most distinguished performances, are a whole length portrait of Charles I in his coronation robes, also portraits of George Villiers, the second duke of Buckingham, and lord Francis, his brother, when children, at Kensington; of Philip, earl of Pembroke, at Wilton, &c.; and lastly, of the earl of Strafford, and his secretary, at Wentworth House.

VANE, Sir Henry (Hist.) a knight, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, obtained this honour for his valiant behaviour at the battle of Poictiers in 1356.

VANE, Sir Henry, an English statesman of the same family, who, after enjoying the confidence of both James I and Charles I, and acting both in a diplomatic and civil capacity on different occasions, forfeited the esteem of his sovereign by joining, from personal motives, in the prosecution of the earl of Strafford. He is said to have taken part in no other measures against the king, and died in 1654, in the 69th year of his age.

VANE, Sir Henry, son of the preceding, and one of the most turbulent enthusiasts engendered by the rebellion, was born in 1612, educated at Westminster and Oxford, and executed in 1662, for imagining and compassing the death of king Charles I, and for taking upon him and usurping the government, notwithstanding he had not been expressly concerned in the king's death. His writings are said to be a picture of the visionary and clouded character of his mind. [Vide Plate XVIII]

VANE (Her.) the original name of the families of the earl of Westmoreland and Darlington, which was first changed to Fane, by John Fane, ancestor of the latter nobleman, whose elder brother was the ancestor of sir Henry above-mentioned, who resumed the original name of Vane. Christopher Vane, his grandson, and fourth son of sir Henry Vane, Junior, was created a baron of this realm in 1699, by the title of lord Barnard, of Barnard Castle, in the bishopric of Durham; and William, his youngest son, was created in 1720, a viscount and baron of Ireland, by the title of viscount Vane, and baron of Duncannon, which became extinct at his death. Henry, son of the second lord Barnard, was created in 1753 a viscount and an earl, by the title of viscount Barnard, and earl of Darlington. [Vide Darlington]

VANE, a family of Cumberland, which enjoys the dignity and title of a baronet, conferred in 1786 on sir Lionel Wright Vane Fletcher; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Three gauntlets sinister.

Crest. An arm embowed couped at the shoulder, grasping a sword all proper.

VAN HUYSUM (Biog.) vide Huysum.

VANLOO, John Baptist (Biog.) a painter, was born at Aix, in Provence, about 1684, and died in 1746, after having distinguished himself in historical as well as portrait painting. His brother Charles, who died in 1765 painter to the king of France, and his two sons Louis Michael, first painter to the king of Spain, and Charles Philip, painter to the king of Prussia, fully supported the honour of the family.

VAN MANDER, Charles (Biog.) another artist, was born at Meulebeke, near Courtray, in 1548, and died in 1605, after having distinguished himself as a writer as well as a painter. His 'Lives of the Painters,' established his literary character; and his Terrestrial Paradise, and The Deluge, obtained him the reputation of a good artist.

VANNECK (Her.) the family name of baron Huntingfield; a title conferred in 1796 on sir Joshua Vanneck, the third baronet.

VANNES (Geog.) a town of Brittany, a former province of France, and a chief place in the modern department of the Morbihan, 60 miles S. W. Rennes, and 70 W. by N. Nantes. Lon. 2° 45′ W. lat. 47° 39′ N. This town derived its name from its original inhabitants the Veneti. It is a bishop's see, and was the scene of an action in 1800, between the royalists under Georges, and the republicans under Brune, in which the former were defeated.

VANNI, Francis (Biog.) a painter, was born at Sienna in 1563, and died in 1610, leaving numerous specimens of his skill at Sienna, Rome, Pisa, and Pistoia.

VAN SWIETEN, Gerard (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1700 at Leyden, and died in 1772, leaving among his works 'Commentarii in Hermanni Boerhaarvi Aphorismos,' 5 vols. 4to.

VANUCCHI (Biog.) vide Perugino and Sarto.

VANUDEN, Lucas (Biog.) a landscape painter, was born at Antwerp in 1595, and died in 1663. He was so perfect a colourist, that Rubens often had recourse to him to finish his back grounds.

VARANES (Hist.) the name of several kings of Persia.

VARANES I, succeeded Hormisdas I in 274, and died in 277.

VARANES II, succeeded his father Varanes I, and died in 294, after having been unsuccessful against the Romans.

VARANES III, began to reign in 420, and died in 440, after having persecuted the Christians.

VARCHI, Benedict (Biog.) an historian, poet, and critic, was born at Florence in 1502, and died in 1565, leaving 'Storia Fiorentina,' &c. fol. 1721, Leyden, 1723; and a recent edition in 5 vols. 8vo. 1803; besides Poems, Orations, &c.

VARIGNON, Peter (Biog.) a mathematician, was born at Caen in 1654, and died in 1722, leaving 'Projet d'une Nouvelle Mechanique,' 4to. Paris, 1687; 'Nouvelle Mechanique ou Statique,' 2 vols. 4to. 1725; 'Eclaircissement sur l'Analyse des Infiniment petits,' &c.

VARILLAS, Anthony (Biog.) a French writer, was born in 1624 at Gueret, and died in 1696, leaving 'Les Anecdotes de Florence;' 'Histoire des Révolutions arrivées en Europe en matière de Religion,' &c.

VARRO, Marcus Terentius (Hist.) a Latin writer, who died 28 years A. C. in the 88th year of his age, is said to have composed 500 different volumes, all of which are lost except his work 'De Re Rustica,' and another 'De Lingua Latina.' His works, with the notes of Scaliger, Turnebus, &c. were published by Henry Stephens, 8vo. 1573, and 1581; the first edition of his work 'De Lingua Latina,' is a quarto, supposed to have been published at Rome in 1471, a second at Venice in 1474, and a third in folio at Rome in 1474; his work 'De Re Rustica,' is inserted among the 'Auctores de Re Rustica.' An English translation of this latter was published by the Rev. T. Owen, in 8vo. 1800. Varro found time also to take a part in public concerns, and attached himself to the interests of Pompey in consequence of which he was proscribed by Cæsar, but suffered to escape. [Vide Plate XXV]

VARRO, P. Terentius, surnamed Atacinus, a poet and cotemporary of the preceding, with whom he has been sometimes confounded, translated Apollonius Rhodius into Latin verse, besides Epigrams, and other pieces which he left, a few fragments of which, to the number of 12 verses, are extant. Horat. l. 1, sat. 10; Propert. l. 2, el. 25; Ovid. Am. l. 1, el. 15; Quint. l. 10, c. 1.

VENANTIUS, Honorius Clementianus Fortunatus (Biog.) a Christian poet of the sixth century, who died about 609, wrote several pieces of elegiac poetry, some hymns, &c. of which several editions have been published at different times: that of Rome, under the title of 'Venantii Opera Omnia,' &c. 2 vols. 4to. 1786, is the most complete.

VENDOME, Louis Joseph, Duke de (Hist.) grandson of Cæsar, duke de Vendome, son of Henry IV, by Gabrielle d'Estrées, was born in 1654, and died in 1712, after having distinguished himself at the taking of Luxembourg, Mons, and Namur; and afterwards as a commander in Italy, where he obtained numerous victories over the Imperialists under Eugene; but particularly in Spain against the English, 5000 of whom, under lord Stanhope, surrendered to him as prisoners of war; and also against the Imperialists under Stahremberg, by which victories he re-established Philip V on his throne. His brother, Philip de Vendome, was also engaged in the same service, and died in 1727, aged 72.

VENETI (Geog.) a people of Gallia Transpadana, who inhabited the country called Venetia, now Venice. [Vide Venice]

VENETI, a people of Gallia Celtica, who inhabited the country now called Vannes.

VENEZIANO, Agostino (Biog.) or Agostino de Musis, an engraver, and native of Venice, who died about 1540, left several works, which are now become scarce and highly esteemed.

VENICE (Geog.) the capital of a late republic of the same name, built on an island, or rather on a group of 72 small islands, in the Adriatic, 150 m. E. Milan, 246 N. Rome. Lon. 12° 23′ E. lat. 45° 27′ N.

History of Venice.

Venice, which derives its name from the Veneti, a people who inhabited the neighbouring coast, was built by the people of Padua in 421, as a place of refuge against the attacks of Attila, and was at first governed by a democracy, which was converted in the eighth century into an aristocracy, by the election of a chief from among the nobles, denominated a duke, or doge. Paul Luc Anafeste was the first who was raised to this dignity in 709. This form of government has continued ever since, with little change, except an increase of power in the Venetian nobility, until the French revolution in 1797, when Venice was made subject to Austria by the treaty of Campio Formio; and after having been annexed by Bonaparte to the kingdom of Italy, it was in 1814 definitively returned to the former power. Venice was a powerful state in the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries, when it took a leading part in the politics of Europe, and acquired no small glory by the stand which it made against the Turks.

VENIUS, Otho (Biog.) or Van Veen, a Dutch painter, descended from a good family of Leyden, was born in 1556, and died in 1634, leaving some treatises, which he embellished with his own plates, as 'Horatii Emblemata,' 4to. Antv. 1615; 'Batavorum cum Romanis Bellum,' &c.

VENTRY, Lord (Her.) baron of Ventry, a title enjoyed by the family of Mullins.

VENUS (Myth.) the goddess of love, called by the Greeks Ἀφροδίτη, because she was supposed to have sprung from ἀφρὸς, the foam of the sea. She was the daughter of Jupiter and the Nereid Dione, the mother of Cupid, and the wife of Vulcan, whose worship was universally established, and statues and temples were erected to her in every place. She was surnamed Cytherea, because she was the chief deity of Cythera, Acidalia, Anadyomene, Apaturia, Thalassia, &c. Mythologists speak of more than one deity who had this name; but the daughter of Jupiter is the only one celebrated and worshipped by the ancients. Hom. Hymn. in Ven. &c.; Hesiod. Theogn.; Orph. Hymn.; Sappho. in Ven.; Eurip. in Helen. &c.; Apollod. l. 1; Catul. Carm.; Virg. Æn.; Horat. Od.; Diod. l. 1, &c.; Hygin. Fab. 94; Ovid. Met.; Strab. l. 36; Plin. l. 36; Tacit. Annal. l. 3; Lactant. de Fal. Rel.; Fulgent. Mythol.; Suidas, Hesychius, &c.

VENUS (Numis.) this goddess is represented on medals or gems, &c. in her three prominent characters of Venus Victrix, as in fig. 1, where she has a small figure of victory in her right hand, and a spear in her left; of Venus Anadyomene, as in fig. 2, where her dripping tresses flow down her shoulders, and a fish is behind her; and of Venus Marina, as in fig. 3, where she is seen borne in a shell by Tritons. Sometimes she is drawn in a chariot by Tritons, or by Cupids, and sometimes she is represented holding the apple adjudged to her by Paris. Goltz. Num.; Jul. Cæs.; Vaill. Præst.; Morell. Fam.; Spence. Polym.

VENUSIA (Geog.) or Venusium, a town of Apulia, where Horace was born.

VERBANUS Lacus (Geog.) now Lago Maggiore, a lake of Gallia Cisalpina, in the modern duchy of Milan.

VERE, Sir Francis (Hist.) an English commander, second son of Geoffry, the third son of John Vere, earl of Oxford, was born in 1554, and died in 1608, after having distinguished himself as one of the bravest and most skilful commanders in his day, whilst engaged against the Spaniards in Holland, particularly at the siege of Bergen-op-Zoom, the battle of Nieuport, and the defence of Ostend. His brother, sir Horace, who shared with him in the glory of these exploits, was created baron Tilbury by Charles I, and died in 1635.

VEREKER (Her.) the present family name of viscount Gort, which title was conferred in 1816 on John Pendergast Smyth, with remainder to his nephew the right hon. Charles Vereker.

VERGERIUS, Peter Paul (Biog.) an historian, and a scholar, was born at Capo d'Istria in 1349, and is supposed to have died about 1431, leaving a treatise 'De Republica Veneta,' and 'De Ingenuis Moribus,' besides a History of the Princes of Carrara, and a Life of Petrarch, &c. There was another Peter Paul Vergerius, of the same family, who, after having acted the part of an intriguer in favour of the Romish church, turned Protestant, and died in 1566, leaving a number of pieces against the profession which he had deserted.

VERGIL, Polydore (Biog.) an Italian writer of Urbino, cotemporary with Erasmus, was the author of 'Adagia,' 1498, and frequently reprinted; 'De Rerum Inventoribus,' 1499, fourth edition, 12mo. Basil. 1536; 'Dialogi de Prodigiis,' 8vo. Basil. 1531; but the work by which he is most known is his 'Historia Anglica,' which was written at the command of Henry VIII, and first published in 1533, and frequently reprinted since, as it serves to fill up a chasm in our English history of seventy years, including particularly the reigns of Edward IV and V. [Vide Plate XXV]

VERINA, Ælia (Numis.) the wife of Leo I, is principally known by medals bearing her effigy, as in the annexed figure, inscriptions, D. N. AEL. VERINA.—AEL. VERINA AUG.

VERITAS (Myth.) a deity among the ancients, who was fabled to be the daughter of Saturn, and mother of Virtue. Pind. Olymp. od. 10; Hippocrat. in Ep. ad Phil.; Plut. in Quæst. Rom. &c.

VERNET, Joseph (Biog.) a painter, who was born at Avignon in 1712, and died in 1789, was very happy in representing marine subjects. His pictures are still in great estimation.

VERNEY (Her.) a family descended from William de Verney, who lived in the reign of Henry I. His descendant, sir Richard Verney, was summoned to Parliament in 1695, as lord Willoughby de Broke, in right of his maternal ancestors, on whom the barony was conferred in 1491.

VERNON, Edward (Hist.) an English admiral, descended from an ancient family of Staffordshire, was born at Westminster in 1684, and died in 1757, after having served with great distinction in the navy, particularly in the capture of Porto Bello in 1739. [Vide Plate XVI]

VERNON (Her.) the family name of lord Vernon, baron of Kinderton, co. Chester. William de Vernon assumed this name from the town and district of Vernon, in Normandy, of which he was sole proprietor in 1052. Richard de Vernon, his eldest son, came over to England with the Conqueror, and had great possessions; from him descended George Venables Vernon, who was created a peer in 1762.

VERNON, Thomas (Biog.) a lawyer, who had been secretary to the unfortunate duke of Monmouth, and died in 1726, was the author of 'Law Reports,' which were printed in 2 vols. fol. 1726-28; reprinted in 1806-7, under the care of Mr. Raithby.

VERONA (Geog.) a large city of Austrian Italy, capital of a province of the same name, divided by the river Adige into two parts, and situated 20 m. N. E. Mantua, 60 W. Venice, and 90 E. Milan. Lon. 11° 1′ E. lat. 45° 25′ N.

History of Verona.

Verona, called by Strabo Οὐήρων, by Ptolemy Οὐηρῶνα, by Procopius Βερόνα, or Βερῶνα, in the Latin Verona, was founded by the Cenomani inhabiting the neighbourhood of Brixia, whence Catullus, calls Brixia Mater Veronæ.

Catull. Carm. 66.

Atqui non solùm hoc se dicit cognitum habere
Brixia Chineæ supposita speculæ:
Flavus quam molli percurrit flumine Mela:
Brixia Veronæ mater amata meæ.

Pliny the Elder, Vitruvius, and Cornelius, as well as Catullus, were natives of this place, which by the birth of the latter has acquired a celebrity among the poets.

Ovid. Amor. l. 3, el. 13.

Mantua Virgilio gaudet, Verona Catullo.

Martial, l. 10, ep. 103.

Nec sua plus debet tenui Verona Catullo.

The father of Pompey the Great established a colony there, which is said to have been increased by Julius Cæsar, whence it is called in an inscription, COLONIA AUGUSTA VERONA. On the decline of the empire it fell into the hands of the Lombards, from whom it was taken by Charlemagne in 774; and after having been successively a free town, and subject to the leading families of Italy, it was united to the territorial possessions of Venice. It experienced the fate of other Italian states during the late revolutionary war; but was restored to Austria in 1815.

VERONESE, Paul (Biog.) vide Cagliari.

VERONESE, vide Guarino.

VERRES, C. (Hist.) a prætor of Sicily, who, being accused of oppression and rapine in his office, was defended by Hortensius, and opposed by Cicero. Fearing the eloquence of the latter, which has rendered his name celebrated, he withdrew into voluntary exile, and was killed by the partizans of Anthony 26 years after. Cic. in Ver.; Plin. l. 34; Lactant, l. 2.

VERRIUS, Flaccus (Biog.) vide Flaccus.

VERSCHURING, Henry (Biog.) a Dutch painter, was born at Gorcum in 1627, and was drowned near Dort in 1690. His best performances are at the Hague, Amsterdam, and Utrecht.

VERSTEGAN, Richard (Biog.) an antiquary of the 16th and 17th centuries, and a native of London, descended from an ancient family in Guelderland, wrote 'Restitution of decayed Antiquities,' 4to. 1605, and several times reprinted. He also published against the Protestants 'Theatrum Crudelitatum Hæreticorum nostri Temporis,' 4to. 1592.

VESUVIUS (Geog.) a mountain of Campania, about six miles E. Naples, now called by the natives Monte di Soma, celebrated for its eruptions, both in ancient and modern times. Pliny the Elder perished in one of these; and the towns of Herculaneum and Pompeii were buried in the ashes and lava, which it sent forth in another eruption. This mountain is called by the poets Vesevus, Vesvius, or Vesbius. Lucret. l. 1; Liv. l. 8; Virg. Geog. l. 2; Val. Max. l. 1; Strab. l. 5; Mel. l. 2; Plin. l. 3; Stat. Sylv. l. 3, carm. 8; Sil. l. 12; Flacc. l. 4.

VETRANIO, Flavius (Hist.) a commander of the army of Pannonia, was declared emperor after the death of Constans; but being defeated by Constantius Gallus, he resigned the empire, and died in Bithynia at the age of 60. He was so illiterate that he did not know his letters. Eutrop. l. 10.

VETRANIO (Numis.) medals of the usurper above-mentioned, bear his effigy as in the annexed figure; inscriptions D. N. CAES. VETRANIO — D. N. VETRANIO P. F. AUG, &c.

UFFINGTON, Viscount (Her.) the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Craven.

UGHELLI, Ferdinand (Biog.) an ecclesiastical historian, and a Carthusian, was born of a good family at Florence in 1595, and died in 1670, leaving 'Italia Sacra,' 9 vols. fol. 1642-62; incorrectly reprinted at Venice in 10 vols. in 1717-22; but a third and correct edition much enlarged was published at Florence in 1763, &c.

VIBIUS, Sequester (Biog.) a Latin writer, whose treatise, 'De Fluminibus,' was best edited by Oberlin, 8vo. Argentor. 1778.

VICENZA (Geog.) a town of Austrian Italy, 36 miles W. by N. Venice. It was called Vincentia by the Romans, from whom it was taken by the barbarians, and after enjoying a temporary independence, it fell into the hands of the Venetians. It was the scene of a sanguinary conflict between the French under Bonaparte and the Austrians under Alvinzi in 1796.

VICARS, John (Biog.) a puritanical rebel, who acted the part of a fanatic by being more than ordinarily furious in the rebellion against the established order of things. He was born in 1582 in London, educated at Oxford, and died in 1652, leaving several works, which were characteristic of the man, as also of the times.

VICO (Biog.) or Vighi, Æneas, an engraver and medallist of Parma in the 16 century, published 'Discorsi sopra le Medaglie degli Antichi,' 4to. Venice, 1548 and 1555; 'Monumenta aliquot Antiquorum ex Gemmis,' &c. fol. Rom.; 'Omnium Cæsarum verissimæ Imagines ex antiquis Numismatibus desumptæ,' 4to. 1544, &c.

VICTOR, Flavius (Hist.) the son of Magnus Maximus, was declared Cæsar by his father while yet a boy, and set over Gaul from A. D. 383 to 388; but, on the death of his father, he was slain by Arbogastus, general of Valentinian.

VICTOR, Sextus Aurelius, a consul and a writer. [Vide Aurelius]

VICTOR (Numis.) the medals of this prince bear his effigy as in the annexed figure, and in inscriptions sometimes the title of Augustus, as D. N. FL. VICTOR P. F. AUG.; also with the addition of TR. P. I—VI.

VICTOR, St. (Ecc.) a martyr, of an illustrious family of Marseilles, who, after having signalized himself as a soldier in the service of the Roman emperors, suffered during the persecution of Diocletian many tortures, and a cruel death for refusing to offer incense to the heathen deities. An abbey was erected over the tomb of this martyr by John Cassianus.

VICTOR, the name of three popes.

VICTOR I, an African by birth, succeeded Eleutherus in 193, and suffered martyrdom in 201, when S. Zephyrinus succeeded him. Some epistles of his are still extant.

VICTOR II, whose family name was Gebehard, succeeded Leo IX in 1055, and died in 1057, having Stephen X for his successor.

VICTOR III, succeeded Gregory VII in 1086, and died in 1087, when Urban II succeeded him.

VICTOR, Uticensis, or Vitensis, bishop of Vite, or Utica, in Africa, in the fifth century, wrote 'De Persecutione Vandalica,' published by father Chiflet with the works of Vigilius of Thapsum, 4to. Divion. 1665, which edition is not so much esteemed as that of Theodore Ruinart, 8vo. Par. 1693.

VICTOR of Tunis, another bishop of Africa in the sixth century, compiled an abridged Chronicle, from the reign of Justin the Younger to the year 566, which was published by Canicius and Scaliger.

VICTOR, Claudius Marius (Biog.) vide Victorinus.

VICTOR AMADEUS I (Hist.) succeeded his father, Charles Emanuel, as duke of Savoy in 1630, and died in 1637, after having signalized his courage in the service of France; the armies of which he commanded in Italy.

VICTOR AMADEUS II, duke of Savoy, and first king of Sardinia, was born in 1666, succeeded his father, Charles Emanuel II, in 1675, obtained the title of king of Sardinia at the peace with France in 1713, abdicated his throne after a reign of 55 years, and died in 1732. The effigy of this prince is given as in the annexed figure.

VICTORIA (Myth.) one of the deities of the ancients, called by the Greeks Νίκη, supposed to be the daughter of Pallas, or Titan, and Styx. She was much honoured by the Greeks, but still more by the Romans. Sylla raised a temple to her at Rome, and instituted festivals in honour of her.

VICTORIA (Hist.) or Victorina, the mother of Victorinus, sen. who, on the death of her son and grandson, had a share of the empire with Tetricus, is principally known by medals bearing her effigy, as in the annexed figure; inscription IMP. VICTORIA AUG.

VICTORIA (Numis.) this goddess was oftener depicted on medals than any of the other deities, and always with wings, and crowned with laurel, or holding a palm-branch in her hand, as in the annexed figure. She is mostly in the attitude of flying, except when she is the attendant of Jupiter; and is often to be seen hovering over a favourite general, or a warlike emperor. Goltz. Num. Jul. Cæs. &c.; Vaillant. Præst.; Tristan. Comment. Hist. &c.

VICTORINUS, Marcus Aurelius Piauvonius (Hist.) one of the tyrants of Rome, reigned with Posthumus in Gaul, and was assassinated in 268 by one of his officers, whose wife he had violated. His son, M. Aurelius Victorinus, his partner in the empire, shared his fate at the same time. Trebell. Poll. Trigint. Tyran.

VICTORINUS (Biog.) or Claudius Marius Victor, a rhetorician of Marseilles in the fifth century, was the author of a poem on the history of Genesis as far as the destruction of Sodom, and also of an epistle in verse, in which he relates the irruptions of the Vandals, and other barbarians.

VICTORINUS, Fabius Marius (Biog.) a philosopher of Africa in the fourth century, who taught rhetoric at Rome. His 'Expositio in primum et secundum Rhetoricon Ciceronis' was published by Aldus at Venice in 1522, and inserted in the Collection of the ancient Rhetoricians, 4to. Paris. 1599, and in Putschius' Collection of Grammarians. His Commentaries on Aristotle's Politics, Rhetoric, and Poetics, were published at Florence, with the text of Aristotle, Gr. and Lat. 1560-79.

VICTORINUS (Numis.) the medals of the two usurpers above-mentioned father and son, bear their effigies as in the annexed figures; inscriptions IMP. C. M. PIAUVONIUS VICTORINUS P. F. AUG. for the first; and IMP. C. L. A. VICTORINUS AUG. for the second.

VICTORIUS (Biog.) or Vettori, Peter, an Italian scholar, was born at Florence in 1499, and died in 1585, leaving editions of Terence, Varro, Sallust, Euripides, Porphyry, Plato, Xenophon, and Cicero; but of all these his edition of Cicero, in 4 vols. fol. 1534-37, is the most esteemed.

VIDA, Marcus Hieronymus (Ecc.) bishop of Alba, and a modern Latin poet, was born at Cremona about 1470 or 1480, raised to the see of Alba by Clement VIII in 1532, and died in 1566, leaving a number of pieces, both in prose and verse, which were all published in 2 vols. 4to. Rom. 1527 and 1535, and in 2 vols. 8vo. Cremon. 1550.

VIENNA (Geog.) the capital of the Austrian empire, and also of all Germany, situated in the province of Lower Austria, and standing on the Danube, 630 miles E. Paris, 896 S. E. London. Lon. 16° 22′ E. lat. 48° 12′ N.

History of Vienna.

Vienna, long known to the Romans by the name of Vindobona, fell afterwards successively into the hands of the Goths and Huns until the time of Charlemagne, who attached it to his dominions, from which period it became the imperial residence. It was captured in 1484 by the Hungarians under Matthias Corvinus, who resided in it until his death, when it was restored to Austria. In 1529 it was exposed to an attack from the Turks, who destroyed the suburbs; in 1619 the Bohemian insurgents penetrated into the city; but the Swedes were not so successful in their attempt in 1625. A dreadful attack was, however, made upon it in 1683 by a Turkish army, supported by some disaffected Hungarian chiefs, but they were repulsed by the governor Sobieski. In 1797 it was threatened by Bonaparte, and occupied by him in 1805 and 1809.

VIENNA, Allobrogum, now Vienne, a town of Gallia Narbonensis.

VIENNE (Geog.) a town of Dauphiny, a former province of France, situated in the modern department of the Isere, on the right bank of the Rhone, 18 miles S. Lyons; it contains many monuments of its ancient masters the Romans, by whom it was called Vienna Allobrogum.

VIETA, Francis (Biog.) a mathematician, was born in 1540 at Fontenai, in Lower Poitou, and died in 1603, leaving a number of works, which were collected by Schoten, Lugd. Bat. 1646. He was the first who used letters instead of numbers in algebraical operations.

VIGNIER, Nicholas (Biog.) a physician and historiographer to the king of France, was born in 1530 at Troyes, in Champagne, and died in 1596, leaving, among his works, 'Les Fastes des anciens Hebreux,' &c. 4to.; 'Bibliotheque Historiale,' 4 vols. fol.; 'Sommaire de l'Histoire des François,' fol.; 'Traité de l'ancien Etat de la Petite Bretagne.' His brother Jerome, who was born in 1606 at Blois, and died in 1661, wrote 'La Généalogie des Seigneurs d'Alsace;' 'Stemma Austriacum;' 'La Généalogie des Comtes de Champagne.'

VIGNOLA, James Barozzia de (Biog.) an architect, descended from one of the best families in Milan, was born in 1507 at Vignola, and died in 1575. Besides building numerous churches and chapels, he succeeded Michael Angelo as architect of St. Peters. He is now known and remembered also as the author of 'Regola delle cinque Ordini d'Architectura,' first published in folio, without a date; it has been several times reprinted, but the edition of Amsterdam in 1631 or 1642, 'Con la nuova Aggiunta di Michael Angelo Buonarotti.' There have been several good editions of this work, particularly the 'Cours d'Architecture,' &c. by Daviler; the third edition of which was published in 1699; Jombert also published, at Paris, in 8vo. 'Règles des cinq Ordres d'Architecture,' translated from the Italian of Vignola, with remarks, &c.

VIGNOLES, Alphonso des (Biog.) a French divine and mathematician, was born in 1649 at Aubais, in Languedoc, and died in 1744, leaving 'Chronologie de l'Histoire Sainte,' &c. 2 vols. 4to. &c.

VILLANI, John (Biog.) a Florentine historian, who died in 1348, was the author of a Chronicle, which, after receiving additions from the pen of his brother Matthew, and his nephew Philip Villani, was first printed in folio at Florence in 1537, and, lastly, in 2 vols. folio, at Milan, in 1729. Philip Villani also wrote the Lives of illustrious Men of Florence, translated by Mazzuchelli from the original Latin, to which he added copious notes.

VILLARS, Louis Hector, Duke of (Hist.) a marshal of France, was born at Moulins, in Bourbonnais, in 1653, and having early shown an ambition to excel in arms, he signalized himself successively at several sieges and engagements between 1702 and 1714, when he was employed as one of the Plenipotentiaries for concluding the peace of Radstadt between the emperor and France. In 1715 he was appointed President of the Council of War, and afterwards Counsellor to the Regency, and Minister of State. In 1733 he went into Italy as commander under the king of Sardinia, was declared Marshal General of the king's camps and armies, a title granted to no one before, but marshal Turenne; and, after having captured Milan, Tortona, and other places, he fell sick, and died at Turin in 1734. The memoirs of M. de Villars were published in Dutch in 3 vols. 12mo. 1734-36; the first volume of which only was written by himself. [Vide Plate XIV]

VILLARS, Montfauçon de (Biog.) a French abbé of Toulouse, and a distinguished preacher, who was related to the antiquary Montfauçon, was killed by robbers in 1676. He was the author of several works of humour; one of which entitled 'Le Comte de Gabalis,' &c. was considered so objectionable that he was silenced as a preacher. Pope is said to have drawn the machinery for his Rape of the Lock from this work.

VILLETTES, William Anne (Hist.) a lieutenant-general in the English army, descended from an ancient French refugee family, was born at Berne in 1754, and having chosen the military profession, raised himself by a zealous and faithful discharge of all his duties from the rank of a cornet to that of a lieutenant-general, and was entrusted with many important commands, particularly in Corsica, where he acted as the governor; in Malta, where he was commander-in-chief of all the forces; and in Jamaica, where he was sent at the latter end of 1807 as lieutenant-governor, and commander of the forces, but died a few months after his arrival.

VILLIERS (Hist.) vide Buckingham.

VILLIERS (Her.) the name of a family which has been variously written Villers, Villiers, Vileres, Vylers, &c. They derive their descent from the noble house of Villers, seigniours of Lisle Adam, in Normandy, who came over at the conquest in 1066. Alexander de Villiers, one of the descendants, was lord of Brooksby, in Leicestershire. His son, sir Richard de Villiers, of Brooksby, who followed Edward I to the Holy Land in 1268, relinquished his paternal coat of arms, namely, sable, three cinquefoils argent; and instead thereof assumed the cross of St. George, and five escallop shells on it, to show the cause of the expedition. This family has been ennobled in several of its branches. William Villiers, son of sir Edward Villiers of the eldest branch, succeeded his uncle, St. John, as viscount Grandison; and John, the fourth viscount, was advanced in 1721 to the dignity of earl of Grandison. This earldom became extinct at the death of George, the second earl, but the viscounty devolved on William Villiers, third earl of Jersey, and the lineal descendant of sir Edward, fourth son of the sir Edward before-mentioned; his son Edward having been created baron of Hoo, and viscount Villiers, of Dartford, co. Kent, in 1690-1, and earl of Jersey in 1697. [Vide Jersey] Thomas Villiers, second son of William, second earl of Jersey, was, in consequence of his marriage with lady Charlotte Capel, grand-daughter of the last earl of Clarendon, created in 1756 lord Hyde, of Hindon, in Wiltshire, and in 1776 earl of Clarendon. [Vide Clarendon] John Villiers, half-brother of the first sir Edward beforementioned, was created in 1619 baron Villiers, of Stoke, and viscount Purbeck, which titles became extinct at the death of the third viscount. The mother of the first viscount having been created in 1618 countess of Buckingham; this title was also borne by some of her posterity. George Villiers, brother of the fore-mentioned John, and the celebrated favourite of James I and Charles I, was successively created baron of Whaddon, viscount Villiers, earl, marquis, and duke of Buckingham, which titles became extinct at the death of the second duke.

VILLIERS, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl Jersey.

VIMINALIS (Topog.) one of the seven hills on which Rome was built, so called from the number of vimina, or oziers, which grew there. Varr. de Ling. Lat. l. 4; Liv. l. 1; Fest. de Sig. Verb.

VINCE, Samuel (Biog.) Plumian professor of astronomy and experimental philosophy at Cambridge, who died in 1821, was the author of 'Elements of Conic Sections;' 'Principles of Fluxions,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'Principles of Hydrostatics;' 'Complete System of Astronomy,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'Confutation of Atheism,' &c.

VINCENT (Her.) a family which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1620 on sir Francis Vincent; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Azure, three quater foils argent.
Crest. Out of a ducal crown proper, a bear's head argent.
Motto. "Vincenti dabitur."

VINCENT, William (Biog.) an English divine and scholar, was born in London in 1739, and died in 1815, leaving, 1. A Commentary on Arrian's 'Voyage of Nearchus,' 1797. 2. 'The Periplus of the Erythrean Sea,' &c. Parts I & II, 1800-5. 3. 'The Commerce and Navigation of the Ancients,' &c. published, with a new edition of the two former works, in two vols. 4to. 1807; besides which he wrote a 'Defence of public Education,' which passed through three editions, and some smaller pieces.

VINCENTIUS, Lirinensis (Ecc.) or St. Vincent of Lerins, a native of France in the fifth century, who, from a soldier, became a monk, and left among his works 'Commonitorium adversus Hæreticos,' in which he shows the folly of all novel opinions.

VINCI, Leonardo da (Biog.) an Italian painter, was born in 1452, and died in 1515, leaving his 'Last Supper' in the refectory of the Dominicans at Milan as a monument of his genius in the art.

VINDELICI (Geog.) an ancient people of Germany, whose country, called Vindelicia, forms now part of Suabia and Bavaria; and their chief town, Augusta Vindelicorum, is now Augsburg.

VINDEX, Caius Julius (Hist.) a noble Gaul, who set himself up against Nero; but, on being defeated by Virginius Rufus, he was compelled to kill himself. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

VINDOBONA (Geog.) the Latin name for Vienna, which was long a Roman station.

VINDONISSA (Geog.) now Wendish, a town of the Helvetii, in the territory of modern Berne.

VINER, Charles (Hist.) a benefactor to the study of the law, who died in 1756, was the author of 'A general and complete Abridgment of Law and Equity,' 24 vols. fol. 1741—1754, and reprinted in 24 vols. royal 8vo. 1792—94; to which six supplemental volumes have been added. He bequeathed 12,000*l.* to establish a professorship at Oxford, and endow such professorships and scholarships of the common law in that university as should be adequate to the produce of his estate. Judge Blackstone was the first professor on this foundation, whose lectures produced his celebrated 'Commentaries.'

VIPSANIA, gens (Hist.) a Roman family, which, though plebeian, rose to distinction in the reign of Augustus in the person of M. Agrippa, who married the daughter of the emperor. [Vide Agrippa]

VIRGILIUS, Maro Publius (Biog.) called the Prince of Latin Poets, was born U.C. 684, A.C. 70, in the consulship of Pompey and Crassus, of mean parentage in the village of Andes, near Mantua, and died in the 52d year of his age, after having enjoyed the favour of Augustus, and the friendship of Macænas. To the undisputed works of Virgil are sometimes added the 'Culex,' the 'Ciris,' and some smaller pieces called Catalecta. Among the numerous and excellent editions of this author, that 'In Usum Delphini,' 4to. 1675; the 'Variorum,' 3 vols. 8vo. Ludg. Bat. 1680; that of Masvicius, 2 vols. 4to. Leoward. 1717; that of Burmann, 4 vols. 4to. 1746; and that of Heyne, republished in London, 1793, may be reckoned the best. [Vide Plate XXVII]

VIRGINIA (Hist.) the daughter of L. Virginius, the centurian, whom her father stabbed to prevent her becoming a victim to the lust of the decemvir Appius Claudius. [Vide Claudius]

VIRGINIA (Geog.) one of the United States, situated between 36° and 40° N. lat. and between 1° and 6° W. long. It is said, according to the English accounts, to have been discovered by John Cabot; and the first settlement was in 1587 by sir Walter Raleigh. In the year 1606 James Town was built by a company of merchant adventurers under the auspices of king James I of England, which was followed by an increase of towns and settlements; but the colonists suffered much from a Dutch squadron which ravaged the coast in 1673, and still more by insurrections, which broke out in 1675 and 1676. They were among the first to set on foot the resistance to the government at home, which terminated in the violent separation of the colonies from the mother country.

VIRIATHUS (Hist.) a Spanish peasant, who, at the head of his countrymen for 14 years, made a stand against the Romans; and, after defeating several generals, among whom was Pompey himself, he was murdered by one of his servants, who was bribed to this act by Cæpio, A. C. 40. Liv. Epit. l. 52; Val. Max. l. 6; Flor. l. 2; Eutrop. l. 4, &c.

VIRTUS (Myth.) Fortitudo, valour or fortitude; a deity among the ancients, who was particularly honoured by the Romans.

VIRTUS (Numis.) this deity was represented on medals in a variety of forms, but, for the most part, under that of a female, as in the annexed figure, having a military dress, and armed with a spear in one hand, and a sword in the other, with one foot on a globe to denote that thereby the Romans would gain the mastery of the whole world. Many medals were inscribed VIRTUS—VIRTUS AUG. AUGG. &c.—VIRT. or VIRTUS EXERCIT.—VIRTUS MILIT. or MILITUM, &c. Vaillant. Præst.; Patin. Num. Impp.; Med. Num. Imp. Rom. &c.

VISCONTI (Hist.) a noble family of Milan, who governed that state for some centuries. [Vide Milan]

VISCONTI, Ennius Quirinus (Biog.) an Italian antiquary, was born in 1753 at Rome, and died in 1818, leaving, among his works, a 'Description of the Museum Pio-Clementinum,' and 'Iconographie Grecque et Romaine,' which he did not live to complete.

ULM (Geog.) a town of Wirtemberg, in the south-west of Germany, situated on the banks of the Danube, 44 miles S. E. Stutgard, and 40 W. Augsburg. This town sustained a siege after the battle of Blenheim in 1704; it was the scene of military operations under Moreau in 1800, and afterwards in 1805, when the misconduct of general Mack caused the surrender of an Austrian army to Bonaparte.

ULPHILAS (Ecc.) or Gulphilas, a Gothic bishop of the fourth century, was the first translator of the Bible into that language, of which there have been three editions, the best by Mr. Lye, printed at Oxford in 1750. He is said to have invented a new alphabet.

ULPIANUS, Domitius (Hist.) a lawyer, and principal minister to Alexander Severus, was murdered by the Prætorian guards whom he commanded, A. D. 226. Fragments of his writings on civil law are still extant, and were published by Cannegieterus, 4to. Traj. ad Rhen. 1768; and 4to. Lugd. Bat. 1774. His Commentaries on Demosthenes were printed by Aldus, in fol. 1527, and previously with the text at Basle, in 1522.

ULRIC (Biog.) vide Hutten.

ULRICA, Leonora (Hist.) of Bavaria, queen of Sweden, second daughter of Charles XI, king of Sweden, was born in 1688; took possession of the regency in 1713, during the absence of her brother, Charles XII; succeeded to the throne in 1718, at the death of the latter, together with her husband Frederic, hereditary prince of Hesse-Cassel, and died in 1741, he dying in 1751.

ULUGH-BEIGH (Hist.) a Tartar prince, and grandson of Tamerlane, was born in 1393, entered upon the government at the age of 14, and was murdered by his son Abdollatif in 1449. He is now remembered as a writer on astronomy, his favourite study. Greaves published in Latin his 'Tractatus de Epochis Gentium Orientalium,' &c. 1650; his 'Tabula Geographica de Situ quarundam Regionum;' and his 'Longitudines centum Stellarum;' and in 1665 Dr. Hyde published at Oxford his 'Tabulæ Longitudinum et Latitudinum Stellarum fixarum,' 4to.

ULTRAJECTUM (Geog.) the Latin name for Utrecht. [Vide Utrecht]

ULYSSES (Myth.) Ὀδυσσεύς, a king of the islands of Ithaca and Dulichium, the son of Laertes and Anticlea, or, according to some, of Sisyphus.

Ovid. Met. l. 13.

> —— Quid sanguine cretus
> Sisyphio, furtisque et fraude simillimus illi,
> Inserit Æacidis alienæ nomina gentis?

He was one of the Grecian chiefs at the Trojan war, where he distinguished himself by his cunning and activity, and, on the termination of this war, he passed through many adventures before he reached his home, where, coming in disguise, he found his faithful wife Penelope besieged by a number of suitors, whom, with the assistance of his son Telemachus and his steward Eumæus he slew, before he made himself known to any one else. He is said to have lived 16 years after his return. His personal adventures form the subject of Homer's Odyssey.

URANUS (Myth.) a deity, the same as Cœlus.

URBA (Geog.) now Orbe, a town of the Helvetii.

URBAN (Bibl.) a disciple mentioned by St. Paul. Rom. xvi. 9. The Greeks honour his festival October 3, and the Latins October 30.

URBAN (Ecc.) the name of several popes.

URBAN I, was elected after Callixtus I, in 223, and was beheaded in 230, during the persecution of Alexander Severus. S. Pontianus succeeded him.

URBAN II, a Frenchman, named Odo, or Eudes, succeeded Victor III in 1088, died in 1099, and was succeeded by Pascal II.

URBAN III, archbishop of Milan, named Lambert Crivelli, was elected after Lucius III in 1185, died in 1187, and had Gregory VIII for a successor.

URBAN IV, a Frenchman, named James Pantaleon Leon, succeeded Alexander IV in 1261, died in 1264, having Clement IV for a successor. He wrote an account of the Holy Land, of which Adrichomius availed himself; and also a volume of Epistles.

URBAN V, a Frenchman, named William de Grisac, succeeded Innocent VI in 1362, died in 1370, and was succeeded by Gregory XI.

URBAN VI, named Bartholomew Prignani, was raised from the archbishopric of Bari, &c. although not a cardinal, to the papal chair in 1378, at the instigation of the populace, who wished for a pontiff of Roman rather than French extraction; whilst the cardinals on the other hand chose Robert de Geneva, who assumed the name of Clement VII; this double election was the source of a schism in the church. Urban died in 1389. Benedict IX was elected in his place.

URBAN VII, a Roman, named John Baptist Castagna, succeeded pope Sixtus V in 1590, and died 12 days after, when Gregory XIV was elected.

URBAN VIII, a Florentine, named Maffeo Barberini, was elected after Gregory XV in 1623, and died in 1644, when Innocent X succeeded. He united the duchy of Urbino to the Holy See, published a bull against the Jansenists, and founded the college 'De Propaganda Fide.' Among his works as an author are some Latin poems, highly esteemed, of which an edition was published in folio, Paris, 1642, 8vo. Oxon. 1726.

URBAN (Numis.) medals are extant of Urban VII and VIII [vide Plate X], bearing their effigies; the inscriptions for Urban VII—URBANUS VII PONTIFEX MAXIMUS.—SPONSUM MEUM DECORAVIT CORONA, supposed to allude to his early decease. SIC LUCEAT LUX VESTRA, struck by the Roman people in honour to his memory, and NON POTEST ABSCONDI. Some of the medals of Urban VIII are inscribed—URBANUS VIII PONT. MAX.—IN VERBO TUO.—PONAT FINES SUOS PACEM.—RESERAVIT ET CLAUSIT.—HOMINIBUS BONAE VOLUNTATIS; these three were struck on the occasion of the jubilee in 1625.—TRANQUILLITAS REDUX, on the return of peace between the continental powers, &c.

URBINUM (Geog.) a town of Umbria, now Urbino, which is a place in the central part of the Ecclesiastical States, situated on a mountain, 40 m. N. by W. Ancona, and 50 S. by E. Ravenna. Lon. 12° 37′ E. lat. 43° 40′ N. It was the birth-place of Raphael, and is the see of an archbishop.

He also published Notes on Sallust, Livy, Cæsar, &c.

USHER, James (Ecc.) in Latin Usserius, an Irish prelate of the first distinction, was descended from a very ancient family, born at Dublin in 1580, and educated at Trinity College, in his native city, which had been founded by his uncle, Henry Usher, archbishop of Armagh. Here he acquired so much knowledge in divinity, that before he had completed his 20th year, he entered into a dispute with Fitz-Simons, a Jesuit. He was nominated in 1620 to the see of Meath, from which he was translated to the archiepiscopal see of Armagh; and after having taken a prominent part in the troubles of the times, he died in 1656, leaving among his works, as an author, 'De Ecclesiarum Christianarum Successione et Statu,' 4to. 1612; 'Britannicarum Ecclesiarum Antiquitates,' 1638; 'Annales Veteris et Novi Testamenti,' 1650—1654; reprinted in fol. Paris. 1673, Genev. 1722; besides an edition of Polycarp, and some treatises on the question of episcopacy, &c. His 'Chronologia Sacra,' &c. was published after his death. [Vide Plate X]

UTICA (Geog.) now Biserta as is supposed, a city of Africa, on the coast of the Mediterranean, celebrated for the death of Cato, who was on that account surnamed Uticensis. It became the principal place of Africa Propria after the destruction of Carthage. Polyb. l. 1; Cæs. de Bell. Civil. l. 2, &c.; Strab. l. 17; Plin. l. 5, &c.

UTICA (Numis.) the medals of this town are inscribed, M. M. J. V. vel M. MUN. JUL. UTICEN. i. e. Municipio Municipii Julii Uticensis; having been formed into a municipal or free town by Julius Cæsar, and received the rights of citizenship from Augustus.

UTRECHT (Geog.) capital of one of the Dutch provinces, situated on a branch of the Rhine, called the Old Rhine, 18 m. S. S. E. Amsterdam. Lon. 5° 7′ E. lat. 52° 5 N.

History of Utrecht.

This town, which in the Latin is variously named Ultrajectum, Trajectum inferius, Ubricesium, and Antonina Civitas, is said to have been built by Dagobert in the seventh century. It is celebrated as the birth-place of Adrian V, and was the place of meeting for the seven United Provinces, when they formed the treaty of peace between the Allies and the French, concluded in 1713, which bears its name. The church of Utrecht was erected into a metropolitan see in the seventh century, of which S. Willebrod, its first prelate, was its founder. It was afterwards only a bishop's see, suffragan of Cologne. The bishops were also lords of the city. Henry of Bavaria, the 68th bishop, was the last who exercised the sovereignty, the temporal part of which he transferred to Charles V, in consequence of the revolt of his subjects.

UTZ, John Peter (Biog.) a German poet, who was born in 1720, and died in 1795, translated Anacreon, and some odes of Pinder, and wrote several original lyric pieces.

VULCANUS (Myth.) Ἥφαιστος, Vulcan, the god of fire, son of Jupiter and Juno, or, according to some, of Juno alone. He was kicked down from Olympus for attempting to defend his mother, and after falling for nine days he alighted in the island of Lemnos; he broke his leg from the fall, and was ever after lame. He fixed his residence in this island, raised forges for working metals, and had the Cyclops for his attendants. Hom. Il. l. 1, &c.; Hesiod. Theogn. v. 570; Herodot. l. 2, c. 99; Plat. de Republ. l. 2; Aristot. Polit. l. 1; Apollod. l. 1; Varr. de Ling. Lat.; Catull. Carm. 37; *Cic. de Nat. W.

WACE, Robert (Biog.) an Anglo-Norman poet of the 12th century, was born in the Isle of Jersey, and wrote, among other things, a translation in verse of the famous 'Brut of England;' a History of the Irruptions into England, written in verses of eight syllables; Roman de Rou, composed in verses of twelve syllables, about 1166; Romance of William Longsword; the History of the Norman Dukes, a copy of which is in the British Museum; and an Abridged Chronicle of the History of the Dukes of Normandy, &c.

WACHTER, John George (Biog.) a German philologist and antiquary, in the 18th century, was the author of 'Glossarium Germanicum continens Origines et Antiquitates Linguæ Germanicæ,' &c. fol. Lips. 1737; 'Archæologia Nummaria,' &c. 4to. Lips. 1740.

WADDING, Luke (Biog.) an Irish Franciscan, was born in 1588 at Waterford, and died in 1657, leaving, among other works, a History of his Order, published in 8 vols. fol. 1654, and enlarged to 19 vols. 1745.

WADHAM, Nicholas (Hist.) a descendant of the Wadhams of Devonshire, and founder of Wadham College, Oxford, died in 1609, before he had completed his design, which was carried fully into execution by his lady Dorothy, daughter of sir William Petre, who died in 1618, at the age of 84. She purchased the site of the priory of Austin Friars in 1610, the remains of which being cleared away, the foundation stone of the college was laid in July 31, of the same year. [Vide Plate XII]

WAGENAAR, John (Biog.) a Dutch historian, was born in 1709, at Amsterdam, and died in 1773, leaving a History of Holland, and some other works on the same subject.

WAGER, Sir Charles (Hist.) a naval commander, was made captain of the Ruzee fire-ship in 1692, and appointed in 1707 to the chief command of a squadron on the West India station, when he intercepted the Spanish galleons, capturing one, and destroying or dispersing the rest. He was chosen in 1733 first commissioner for executing the office of Lord High Admiral, which post he resigned in 1742, when he was made Treasurer of the Navy, and died in 1743, in the 77th year of his age.

WAGSTAFFE, Thomas (Biog.) a nonjuring divine, of a good family in Warwickshire, was born in 1645, educated at Oxford, and died in 1712, after having been deprived of his preferments for refusing to take the oaths. He left many pieces on the subject for which he suffered.

WAKE, William (Ecc.) an English prelate, descended from an ancient family, was born in 1657 at Blandford, in Dorsetshire, was admitted of Christ Church, Oxford in 1672, and after various preferments raised to the see of Lincoln in 1705, whence he was translated in 1715 to the metropolitan see, and died in 1737. He bequeathed his library to Christ Church, Oxford, and is said to have expended 11,000*l.* in the repairs of the two palaces of Lambeth and Croydon, besides numerous other acts of munificent liberality. Among his works as an author are his 'Exposition of the Doctrines of the Church of England,' in opposition to Bossuet's 'Exposition of the Catholic Faith,' 4to. 1686; 'An English Version of the Genuine Epistles of the Apostolical Fathers,' 1693, and reprinted in 1710; 'The Authority of Christian Princes over their Ecclesiastical Synods,' &c. 8vo. besides other controversial pieces.

WAKE (Her.) a family of Saxon origin, descended, as is supposed by some antiquaries, from Oslac, who was general and butler to king Athelwolf in 849. From him descended Hereward, or Herewaldus, a celebrated chieftain, who made an heroic stand against the Conqueror. After many generations of barons and knights among his descendants, sir Baldwin Wake was created a baronet in 1621, and his son, sir John, mortgaged his estate in the service of his sovereign during the rebellion; their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Or, two bars gules, in chief three torteauxes.
Crest. A knot, commonly called Wake's knot.
Motto. "Vigila et ora."

WAKEFIELD, Gilbert (Biog.) a scholar and critic, was born at Nottingham in 1756, studied at Cambridge, and died in 1801, leaving editions of Horace, Virgil, Bion, Moschus, and Lucretius; besides 'Memoirs of his own Life,' &c.

WALDECK, Christian Augustus, Prince of (Hist.) an Austrian general, was employed against the Turks in 1789, and against the French in 1792, and died in 1798.

WALDEGRAVE, Sir Richard, Knight (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was chosen Speaker of the House of Commons in the 5th Ric. II, and was the first that made excuse that he might be discharged, to which the king would not consent. He was elected in four subsequent Parliaments in the same reign.

WALDEGRAVE, Sir Richard, his grandson, was a stout adherent to the house of York, and distinguished himself in the service of Edward IV. His next brother and heir, sir Thomas, was equally zealous on the same side, and fought valiantly at the battle of Towton.

WALDEGRAVE, Sir William, grandson of sir Thomas, who received the honour of knighthood in 35 Hen. VIII, was very instrumental in placing queen Mary on the throne, but died soon after.

WALDEGRAVE, Sir Edward, second son of sir Thomas, was high in favour with queen Mary, for whom he had suffered imprisonment during the life-time of her father. On her accession he was sworn of her Privy Council, and served her in various capacities until her death, when he was imprisoned, and died in 1561.

WALDEGRAVE, Sir Edward, Bart. grandson of the preceding, although seventy years of age, at the breaking out of the rebellion was one of the stoutest champions in the royal cause. At the head of a regiment of horse, he beat the rebels on several occasions, and continued steady to the last, although he lost two of his sons, and suffered in his estate to the value of 80,000*l.* He died in 1658.

WALDEGRAVE, James, first Earl, grandson of the preceding, was appointed in 1727 Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Germany, with whom he remained in that character for ten years, and died in 1741.

WALDEGRAVE (Her.) originally written Walgrave, a family of great antiquity, and of still greater note in history and heraldry. Sir Henry Waldegrave, son of sir Edward Waldegrave, the first baronet and distinguished loyalist above-mentioned, was created in 1686 a baron, by the title of baron Waldegrave; and James, the second baron, was further advanced in 1729 to the dignities of viscount Chewton, and earl Waldegrave. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Party per pale argent and gules.

Crest. In a ducal coronet or, a plume of five ostrich feathers, per pale argent and gules.

Supporters. Two talbots sable, eared or, and each gorged with a mural coronet argent, masoned sable.

Motto. "Cœlum non animum."

WALDEGRAVE, a junior branch of the same family, was ennobled in the person of admiral William Waldegrave, second son of John, the third earl, who in 1800 was created baron Radstock, of Castletown, Queen's County, Ireland.

WALDEMIR (Hist.) vide Valdemar.

WALDENSIS, Thomas (Biog.) a Carmelite monk of Walden, in Essex, whose family name was Netter, was born about 1367, and died in 1430, leaving, among other things, 'Doctrinale Antiquum Fidei Ecclesiæ Catholicæ,' 3 vols. fol. Paris, 1521—1523.

WALDO, Peter (Ecc.) the founder of an heretical sect, called after him Waldenses, who set themselves up to oppose the tenets of the Romish church, was a merchant of Lyons, and selling all his possessions, he turned reformer, obtained a number of followers, which he continued to increase by his preaching until his death in 1179.

WALES, Prince of (Her.) the title borne by the heir apparent of the English throne.

WALES (Geog.) a principality in the west of the island of Great Britain, which forms nearly a peninsula, being washed on the N. and W. by the Irish Sea; and on the S. and S. E. by the Bristol Channel. It is divided into North and South Wales, each of which is subdivided into six counties. It abounds in mountains, the most celebrated of which are Snowden and Plinlimmon; also in rivers, of which the Severn, the Wye, the Conway, the Towy, and the Dee, are the principal.

History. Wales, called in Latin Vallia, was originally inhabited by the Ordovices and the Silures, who submitted to the Romans, but on the conquest of the island by the Saxons, it became a place of refuge for all the Britons, who remained under the government of their own princes until the time of Edward I, who, having defeated Lewellyn ap Gryffyth in 1285, and killed him in battle, annexed the country to the English crown. In order, however, to reconcile the people to this change, he caused his son, who was born in Carnarvon, to be declared Prince of Wales, since which period this title has been borne by the eldest son of the king.

WALKER, Sir Edward (Hist.) a native of Somersetshire, was made Secretary at War in 1639, adhered to his royal master during the rebellion, and died in 1676, one of the clerks of the Privy Council, leaving 'Iter Carolinum,' being a succinct account of the necessitated marches, retreats, &c. of his majesty Charles I, &c.; 'Military Discoveries,' &c. printed in 1705.

WALKER, Obadiah, a divine, first of the English, and afterwards of the Romish church, was born at Worsborough, in Yorkshire, in 1615 or 1616, educated at University College, Oxford, driven from his fellowship during the rebellion, elected master of his college in 1676, imprisoned for his profession of the Romish religion in 1689, and died in retirement in 1699, having been supported for the latter part of his life by Dr. Radcliffe, who had been one of his pupils. He wrote 'A brief Account of Ancient Church Government;' 'A Life of King Alfred,' &c.

WALKER, John (Biog.) a native of Devonshire, was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, and died in 1755. He is now known by his 'Sufferings of the Clergy during the Rebellion,' published in folio in 1714.

WALKER, John, a grammarian, was born in 1732 at Friern Barnet, in Hertfordshire, and died in 1807, leaving a 'Critical Pronouncing Dictionary;' 'Elements of Elocution,' &c.

WALKER, Adam, a well-known lecturer in experimental philosophy, died in 1821, at the age of 90, leaving among his inventions, the Eidouranion, and the Cælestina, &c. He also wrote some astronomical and philosophical works.

WALL, William (Biog.) an English divine, who died vicar of Shoreham, in Kent, in 1728, was the author of the 'History of Infant Baptism,' which procured him the honour of a doctor's degree from the university of Oxford.

WALLACE, Sir William (Hist.) a celebrated warrior, was born, according to the account of his poetical biographer Henry, or Blind Harry, in 1276, and after having gained many advantages over the English, he was betrayed by his friend sir John Monteith, into the hands of Edward I, and being tried as a rebel and a traitor, was executed in 1305. [Vide Plate XIII]

WALLER, Edmund (Hist.) an English poet, who has also obtained no very honourable place in history, by the part he acted during the rebellion, was born in 1625, at Coleshill, in Hertfordshire. His father, Robert Waller, esq. of Agmondesham, in Buckinghamshire, was descended from the Wallers of Spendhurst, in Kent; and his mother was the daughter of John Hampden, and the sister of the rebel Hampden. He was educated at Eton, and King's College, Cambridge, and on being chosen to sit in the Parliament called in 1640, he begun his career of opposition to the measures of government, which he pursued until he had gone farther than he wished in the destruction of the royal authority. He then attempted to repair his fault by joining in a plot against the Parliament, which being detected, he was imprisoned, and fined 10,000*l*. On his liberation he lived for some time in France, but when Cromwell usurped the government he became one of his friends and encomiasts, and at the Restoration he employed his poetical talent with more sincerity, but with less success, in congratulating Charles II. He sat in several parliaments during the reign of this prince and his successor, and died in 1687. [Vide Plate XXVIII]

WALLER, Sir William, of the same family, who also fought on the side of rebellion, was born in 1597, and after being educated at Oxford, was early employed at the head of the rebel forces under the earl of Essex. He was one of the eleven members impeached of high treason by the army, committed to prison on suspicion of attachment to the royal cause; nominated one of the council of state in 1659, elected one of the representatives of Middlesex in 1660, and died in 1668. He wrote 'Vindication of the Character and Conduct of Sir William Waller, Knt.' &c.

WALLER (Her.) an ancient family, which derives its descent from sir Richard Waller, knt. who took John, duke of Orleans, prisoner, at the battle of Agincourt, from which time it has been permitted to his descendants to bear pendant from their ancient crest a walnut proper, the arms of the said duke. Sir Jonathan Wathen-Waller, his descendant, was created a baronet in 1815; his arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Sable, three walnut leaves or, between two bendlets argent.

Crest. On a mount vert, a walnut-tree proper, on the sinister side pendant an escutcheon of France, with a label of three points argent.

Motto. "Hic fructus virtutis."

WALLER, the present family name of baroness Howe.

WALLIS, John (Biog.) a mathematician, was born in 1616 at Ashford, in Kent, and died in 1703 Savilian professor of geometry at Oxford, which office, although he had obtained from the usurping powers, was confirmed to him by Charles II, in consideration of the services which he had at different times rendered to the royal cause during the rebellion, particularly by decyphering of letters, in which he was very skilful. His works were collected by the curators of the university, and published in 3 vols. fol. [Vide Plate XXXIV]

WALLOP, Sir John (Hist.) a statesman and soldier, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was distinguished for his martial exploits on several occasions, particularly when he was sent as Admiral and Commander in Chief of the fleet to encounter Prior John, the French Admiral, on his landing in Sussex, and burning the town of Brighthelmstone; sir John landed by way of reprisal in Normandy, and burnt 21 villages, besides committing great devastation along the coast. He was also sent on various embassies to Margaret, duchess of Savoy; to the princes of Germany; to Mary, queen of Hungary; to Sigismund, king of Poland; to the emperor Charles V; and several times to France, and died at Guisnes 5 Edward VI.

WALLOP, Sir Henry, nephew to the preceding, was distinguished for his abilities, and the leading part he took in public concerns during the reign of queen Elizabeth. As Treasurer of War in Ireland, he acted with vigour there against the rebels, and died in 1599.

WALLOP, Robert, only son of the preceding, departed from the honourable course of his forefathers, and mixing in all the violent measures of the rebel faction that overturned the state, he was nominated one of the judges, who presumed to call their sovereign to an account, for which crimes he was sentenced, at the Restoration, to be degraded from his gentility, drawn upon a sledge to and under the gallows of Tyburn, with a halter round his neck, and be imprisoned for life. He died in the Tower in 1667, after having undergone the whole of his sentence.

WALLOP (Her.) a family which derives its name from Wallop, or Wellhop, in Hampshire, and although of great distinction for many centuries, was first ennobled in the person of John Wallop, a descendant of sir Henry Wallop abovementioned, who was created in 1720, baron Wallop, of Farley Wallop, and viscount Lymington; and in 1745, earl of Portsmouth, co. Southampton.

WALPOLE, Sir Robert (Hist.) a minister, better known in history by his family name of Walpole, than by his title of earl of Orford, was born at Houghton, in Norfolk, in 1676; educated at Eton, and after studying at Cambridge for some time, he begun his political career as an active partizan in the Whig interest, was nominated one of the Council to prince George of Denmark, as Lord High Admiral of England in 1705; appointed Secretary of War in 1708; Treasurer of the Navy in 1709; expelled the House of Commons and imprisoned in 1711, on a charge of corruption; but was appointed a Privy Councillor, and invested with several offices on the accession of king George I, which he resigned at the end of two years. He was, however, soon after reinstated, and continued as the leader of administration until 1742, when he was finally compelled by the popular clamour in and out of the house, to retire from public life, after which he was honoured with the peerage, and died in 1745. [Vide Plate IX] He was the author of several pamphlets on the topics of the day.

WALPOLE, Horatio, Lord, brother to the preceding, was born in 1678, and died in 1757, after having been employed in an embassy to Paris, and sent plenipotentiary to the states general. He also wrote some political pamphlets.

WALPOLE (Her.) the name of a family derived from Walpole, in Norfolk, where they had possessions before the conquest. Of this family was sir Robert Walpole, the statesman abovementioned, who was created in 1741 baron Houghton, viscount Walpole, and earl of Orford, which titles became extinct at the death of Horatio, the fourth earl; but the earldom of Orford was revived in the person of Horatio, his cousin, second lord Walpole, of Wolterton, whose father, the first lord Walpole, was the younger brother of sir Robert.

WALPOLE, Lord, the title enjoyed by the eldest son of the earl of Orford.

WALPOLE, Horace (Biog.) third and youngest son of sir Robert Walpole, by his first wife, was born in 1718, and died in 1797, leaving numerous works on historical and antiquarian subjects, besides Poems, and Plays, &c. which were all published the year after his death. He had begun to print this edition as far back as 1768, of which nearly two volumes had been completed at his private press at Strawberry Hill, his favourite residence, near Twickenham. Among the most popular of his works, are his 'Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors,' of which a new and enlarged edition by Thomas Park was published in 1806, in 5 vols. 8vo.; and his 'Anecdotes of Painting.' At the death of his nephew in 1791, he succeeded to the title of earl of Orford, which he affected to despise, calling it a new name for a superannuated old man of 74. [Vide Plate XXXIX]

WALSCOURT, Baron (Her.) of Ardfry, co. Galway, the title enjoyed by a branch of the family of Blake, which was conferred in 1800 on Joseph Henry Blake.

WALSH (Her.) a family whose original name was Benn, which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1804 on sir John Benn Walsh; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Argent, a fess sable, cottised wavy gules, between six martlets of the second.

Crest. A griffin's head erased per fesse wavy argent and ermine, beak and ears or.

WALSH, William (Biog.) a critic and a poet, was born about 1663, educated at Oxford, and died in 1708, leaving 'A Dialogue concerning Women, being a Defence of the Sex,' 8vo. 1691, and 'Letters and Poems,' &c. published in what was called 'Dryden's Miscellany.' These were republished among the 'Works of the Minor Poets,' printed in 1749.

WALSINGHAM, Sir Francis (Hist.) a statesman in the reign of queen Elizabeth, descended from an ancient family in Norfolk, was born at Chislehurst, in Kent, in 1536, and after studying for a short time at King's College, Cambridge, and travelling into foreign countries, he was employed on an embassy to France during the civil wars; and a second time in 1570, to treat on the marriage between queen Elizabeth and the duke of Alençon, and other matters, which kept him there three years. On his return he was appointed one of the principal Secretaries of State, and sworn a Privy Counsellor. In 1578 he was sent on an embassy to the Netherlands; in 1581 on a third embassy to France; in 1583 in the same capacity to king James, in Scotland; after which he continued to labour for the interests of his royal mistress until a few years before his death, which happened in 1590. [Vide Plate VIII]

WALSINGHAM, Lord (Her.) baron of Walsingham, co. Norfolk, the title enjoyed by a branch of the family of De Grey. [Vide De Grey]

WALSINGHAM, Thomas de (Biog.) an English historian of the 15th century, was the author of 'Historia Angliæ ab Ed. I ad Hen. V,' fol. Lond. 1574, and 'Ypodigma Neustriæ,' fol. Lond. 1574.

WALLENSTEIN, Albert (Hist.) duke of Friedland, a celebrated German commander, descended from an ancient Bohemian family, was born in 1584, and was murdered in his chamber in 1634, after having fought with various success in the service of the emperor during the thirty years' war. Having thrown off the allegiance which he owed to the emperor, and attempted to make himself independent, he was degraded and his command given to another, soon after which he met with his fate at the hands of some Irish conspirators.

WALTON, Sir George (Hist.) a naval commander, rose by his gallant exploits, which he performed on different occasions, from the rank of lieutenant, which he held in 1692, to the command of a squadron in 1733, which was ordered to rendezvous at the Nore. He died in 1740.

WALTON, Brian (Ecc.) an English bishop, and editor of the Polyglott Bible, was born in 1600 at Cleaveland, in Yorkshire, educated at Cambridge, driven from his preferments during the rebellion and usurpation, promoted soon after the restoration to the bishopric of Chester by Charles II, to whom he presented the Polyglott Bible, and died in 1661. [Vide Plate XI]

WALTON, Isaac (Biog.) a writer, who was born at Strafford in 1593, and died in 1683, is still remembered as the author of the 'Complete Angler;' besides which he wrote the Lives of Hooker, Mr. George Herbert, Bishop Sanderson, and others, as also some poems, &c.

WARBURTON, William (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1698 at Newark-upon-Trent, and, after giving up the profession of the law, for which he was destined, he entered the church, where by his writings he acquired distinction, and, among other preferments, was raised in 1760 to the see of Gloucester, which he held until his death in 1779. Among his works, which were published in 7 vols. 4to. 1788, his 'Divine Legation' is that by which he is now most known. [Vide Plate XI]

WARBURTON, John (Biog.) an heraldic writer and antiquary, was born in 1681, and died in 1759, leaving 'A List of the Nobility and Gentry of the Counties of Middlesex, Essex, and Hertford,' &c. 1722; 'Vallum Romanum; or, the History and Antiquities of the Roman Wall,' &c. 4to. 1753.

WARD, Seth (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1617, or 1618, at Buntingford, in Hertfordshire, and educated at Sidney College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. He was driven from his fellowship during the rebellion for refusing to take the covenant; but, by condescending to take the engagement, he obtained the Savilian professorship at Oxford. Notwithstanding these compliances, which were not interpreted to his disadvantage, he obtained at the restoration the see of Exeter, from which he was translated to that of Salisbury, and died in 1667. He is now principally known by his writings on mathematics and astronomy; of which the principal are, 'A Philosophical Essay towards an Eviction of the Being and Attributes of God,' &c. 8vo. Oxford, 1652; 'De Cometis,' &c. 4to. Oxon. 1653; 'Idea Trigonometriæ,' &c. 4to. Oxon. 1654; 'Astronomia Geometrica,' &c. 8vo. London, 1656; besides some Sermons, &c.

WARD (Her.) a family which enjoys the peerage, conferred on Humble Ward, who in 1643 was created baron Ward of Birmingham; and John, the sixth lord Ward, was, in 1763, created viscount Dudley and Ward.

WARD, another family, of Norman extraction, long seated at Capesthorn, co. Chester, which also enjoys the peerage, first conferred on Bernard Ward, who was created in 1770 baron Bangor, and in 1781 viscount Bangor.

WARD, Thomas (Biog.) a schoolmaster in the reign of James II, who for some time rode in the king's guards, and died soon after the revolution, was the author of several works against the Protestants, the principal of which was 'England's Reformation,' a Hudibrastic poem, in which the follies and wickedness of sectarian reformers are set forth with great wit and vivacity. Protestants charge him with much misrepresentation.

WARD, Edward, a poet and miscellaneous writer of low extraction, was born about 1667 in Oxfordshire, and died in 1731. He wrote 'The London Spy;' 'The Humours of a Coffee-House,' &c.; a dramatic piece, and some poems in the Hudibrastic way, but not 'England's Reformation,' which was written by Thomas Ward above-mentioned.

WARE, Sir James (Hist.) a loyalist and antiquary of Dublin, descended from the ancient family of De Ware, or De Warr, in Yorkshire, was born in 1594, and, after being educated at Trinity College, Dublin, succeeded his father in the office of Auditor-General, and, adhering most strenuously to his royal master, he suffered severely during the rebellion and usurpation, but was restored to his office by Charles II, and died in 1666. His writings, which were principally on the antiquities of Ireland, were published collectively, except his 'Annals of Ireland,' in 3 vols. fol. 1739—1745; and reprinted in 2 vols. fol. 1764.

WARHAM, William (Hist.) an English prelate, descended from a good family at Okeley, in Hampshire, was educated at Winchester School, whence he was admitted a fellow of New College, Oxford, in 1475. He was sent with sir Edward Poynings in 1493 by Henry VII on an embassy to Philip, duke of Burgundy, to persuade him to deliver up Perkin Warbeck. Soon after his return he was appointed to the office of Master of the Rolls, and raised in 1502 to the posts of Keeper of the Great Seal, and Lord High Chancellor; as also the next year to the see of London, from which he was translated in 1504 to the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury. As he did not enjoy the same degree of favour with Henry VIII as he had done in the preceding reign, he resigned his offices in 1515, of which he became weary through the rivalry of Wolsey, and died in 1532. He laid out 3000*l.* in repairing and beautifying the houses belonging to his see; left his theological books to the library of All Souls College; his civil and canon law books to New College, and all his books of church music to Winchester College. He was the warm friend of Erasmus, and the generous patron of learning and learned men.

WARING, Edward (Biog.) Lucasian professor of mathematics in the University of Cambridge, descended from an ancient family at Milton, in Shropshire, was born in 1734, and died in 1798, leaving 'Miscellanea Analytica;' 'Proprietates Algebraicarum Curvarum;' 'Meditationes Algebraicæ;' besides a variety of papers in the Philosophical Transactions.

WARNER, John (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1585, educated at Oxford, advanced by Charles I in 1633 to the see of Rochester, of which he was deprived during the rebellion and usurpation, when he testified the most unshaken loyalty to king Charles I, and his exiled son, Charles II. At the restoration he was reinstated in his see, and died in 1666. He bequeathed not less than 20,000*l.* to different charitable purposes; among others to the foundation of Bromley College, for the residence and maintenance of 20 widows of loyal and orthodox clergymen.

WARNER, William (Biog.) an English poet in the reign of queen Elizabeth, is principally known by his 'Albion's England.' He also wrote in prose 'Syrinx, or a Seauenfold Historie,' &c. printed in 1597.

WARNER, Ferdinando, an English divine, was born in 1703, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1768, leaving among his numerous works a 'Dissertation on the Common Prayer,' fol. 1754; and an 'Ecclesiastical History,' 2 vols. fol. 1756-57.

WARNER, Richard, a botanist, was born in London in 1711, educated at Oxford, studied the law at Lincoln's Inn, which he never followed, and died in 1775, leaving 'Plantæ Woodfordienses,' 8vo.; a translation of some of Plautus' Plays, &c.

WARREN, Sir John Borlase, Bart. (Hist.) a naval commander, descended from a family of Norman extraction, who, after having received his education partially at Winchester School, and also at Cambridge, entered into the navy by his own particular choice, and distinguished himself in a long course of service by many brilliant exploits, which placed him in the first rank of his profession, and procured him several honours from his sovereign. He died in 1822. [Vide Plate XVI]

WARRENDER (Her.) a family of east Lothian, which derives its descent from one Robert de Warren, who removed from Durham to East Lothian, and transposed his name to that of Warrender. His descendant, sir George Warrender, was created a baronet in 1715, whose arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a bend wavy, between six roses gules, three plates.

WARSAW (Geog.) formerly the capital of Poland, situated on the Vistula, 320 m. E. Berlin, 240 S. S. E. Dantzic. Lon. 20° 2′ E., lat. 52° 15′ N.

History of Warsaw.

Warsaw was a place of no importance until the annexation of Lithuania to Poland, when it superseded Cracow as a capital. It was taken by the Swedes under Charles XII in 1703, was defended by Kosciusko against the Russians in 1793, but surrendered to the latter under Suwarrow in 1795; and, after the partition of Poland, it became the capital of a province only. It is now the residence of a viceroy representing the emperor of Russia.

WARTON, Joseph (Biog.) a poet and critic, descended from an ancient and good family of Beverley, in Yorkshire, was born at Dunsford in 1722, and died in 1800, leaving an edition of Virgil in English and Latin, the Æneid of which was the translation of Pitt, but the Eclogues and Georgics were written by himself, besides the addition of notes on the whole. He likewise published some Odes and other poems, several papers in the Adventurer, an 'Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope,' and an edition of Pope's works in 9 vols. &c. [Vide Plate XXIV] His life was written by Mr. Wool under the title of 'Biographical Memoirs.'

WARTON, Thomas, brother of the preceding, who was born at Basingstoke in 1728, and died in 1790, left several happy specimens of his poetical turn, but is best known by his 'History of English Poetry.' His life has been written by Mr. Mant. [Vide Plate XXIV]

WARWICK, Guy, Earl of (Hist.) of the family of Beauchamp, joined with the earl of Lancaster in the rebellion against Edward II, and having got Gavaston, the king's favourite, into their power, they had him beheaded at Warwick Castle in 1312.

WARWICK, Richard, Earl of, was appointed by Henry V one of the guardians to his son Henry VI, the care of whose person was committed to him for a time. He afterwards served in France, and succeeded the duke of York as regent, but died in 1440.

WARWICK and SALISBURY, Richard, Earl of, surnamed the King-maker, from the part which he took during the troubles in the reign of Henry VI, was engaged at first on the side of the Yorkists against his sovereign, Henry VI, but, taking disgust at the conduct of king Edward IV, he supported the pretensions of queen Margaret and her son Edward to the throne, and was killed in 1471 at the battle of Barnet.

WARWICK, Edward Plantagenet, Earl of, son of the duke of Clarence, was committed to the Tower by Henry VII, and on the insurrection of Lambert Simnel, who personated this prince, the king caused him to be carried through the streets of London; and, on the subsequent insurrection of Perkin Warbeck, with whom the earl had held a secret correspondence, he was condemned and executed in 1499.

WARWICK, Dudley, Earl of, vide Northumberland.

WARWICK, Robert, second Earl of, of the family of Rich, was a Privy Counsellor to Charles I; but, on the breaking out of the rebellion, he was one of the first to join the standard set up against the king, and acted in the character of admiral in the service of the usurping powers until his death in 1658.

WARWICK, Sir Philip, a gentleman, descended from the Warwicks, of Warwick, in Cumberland, was born in 1608, and, after studying at Oxford, and going on his travels, took a decided part in favour of his sovereign, Charles I, was one of the King's Commissioners to treat with the rebels for the surrender of Oxford, continued to act both as a soldier and a politician in the same cause until the restoration, when he was restored to his place as Clerk of the Signet, and died in 1683, leaving 'A Discourse of Government,' &c.

WARWICK, Earl of (Her.) a title which became extinct in the Beauchamp family, after having been enjoyed for some centuries, was revived in 1618 in the person of Robert, third lord Rich. His second son, Henry, was created earl of Holland, and Robert, the second earl of Holland, succeeded as fifth earl of Warwick; both which titles became extinct in 1756 at the death of the eighth earl. Addison married the widow of Edward, the sixth earl. The title of earl of Warwick was again revived in the same year in the person of Francis Grevile, eighth lord Brooke, and first earl Brooke, who was allied to the family of Beauchamp.

WARWICK (Geog.) vide Warwickshire.

WARWICKSHIRE (Geog.) an inland county of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. by Derbyshire, N. E. by Leicestershire, E. by Northamptonshire, S. E. by Oxfordshire, S. W. by Gloucestershire, and W. by Worcestershire, being 47 m. long, and 30 broad.

Principal Towns. Warwick, the county town, Coventry, Birmingham, Stratford on Avon, Henley, Nuneaton, &c.

Principal Rivers. The Thames, Severn, Trent, and Mersey, &c.

History. Warwickshire was inhabited by the Cornavii at the Roman invasion, and afterwards formed a part of the kingdom of Mercia during the Saxon heptarchy. Warwick, the county town, which is situated on the Avon, 90 m. and a half N. W. London, is principally famous for its castle, which is supposed to have been originally built by Ethelfleda, queen of Mercia; was greatly enlarged by William the Conqueror; was nearly destroyed during the wars with the rebellious barons, but soon after rebuilt, and received the addition of a tower, erected by Thomas de Beauchamp in the reign of Richard II. Being occupied by the rebel forces it was besieged by the earl of Northampton; but in the reign of Charles II it underwent great repairs and embellishments at the expence of Robert, earl of Brooke.

WASHINGTON, George (Hist.) Commander-in-Chief of the revolutionary army in America, and first president of the United States, descended from an ancient family in Cheshire, was born in 1732 in Washington, a town of Virginia, and died in 1799. [Vide Plate XVIII]

WATERFORD, Marquis of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Beresford; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. De la Poer Beresford, marquis of Waterford, earl, viscount, and baron of Tyrone, baron La Poer, baron Beresford, and baronet in Ireland; and baron Tyrone, of Haverfordwest in the peerage of the United Kingdom.

Arms. Argent, crusuly fitchy, three fleurs-de-lis, and a bordure engrailed sable.

Crest. On a wreath a dragon's head erased or, with a spear broken through his neck gules, the point argent, thrust through the upper jaw.

Supporters. Two angels proper, in silver vestments, with golden hair and wings, each holding in his exterior hand a sword erect of the first.

Motto. "Nil nisi cruce."

WATERFORD (Geog.) chief town of the county of Waterford, in the province of Munster, in Ireland, situated on the river Suir, 53 m. E. N. E. Cork, and 75 S. S. W. Dublin. It is supposed to have been built by the Danes, and was once surrounded by a wall and a ditch, part of which is remaining, but it was never a place of great strength. In the reign of Henry II it was taken by storm; in 1649 it was besieged by Cromwell, who, being compelled to raise the siege, it was taken the following year by Ireton. In 1690 James II embarked here for France after his defeat at the battle of the Boyne.

WATERLAND, Daniel (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1683 at Wasley, in Lincolnshire, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1740, leaving, among other things, 'The Importance of the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity asserted,' which is considered as the ablest performance on the subject that ever appeared.

WATERPARK, Baron (Her.) the title enjoyed by a branch of the family of Cavendish.

WATERLOO (Geog.) a village of the Netherlands, 10 m. S. Brussels, with 1600 inhabitants, which is now become memorable as the scene of the greatest battle ever recorded in history, which was fought June 18, 1815, between the French under Buonaparte, and the English under the duke of Wellington. The army of the former consisted of 71,000 men, and that of the latter 58,000, to which were added, at the close of the engagement, the Prussian reinforcements, who came up to complete that victory which was at no period doubtful.

WATSON, Thomas (Ecc.) a Roman Catholic prelate in the reign of queen Mary, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected fellow, and in 1553 master. He was raised in 1557 to the see of Lincoln, of which he was deprived at the accession of queen Elizabeth, and died in confinement in Wisbeach Castle in 1582. He has been confounded by some with Thomas Watson, the sonnetteer, who lived at the same time, and left several pieces of poetry.

WATSON, Richard, an English prelate, was born in 1737 at Heversham, in Westmoreland, and educated at Cambridge, where he resided for upwards of 30 years, and distinguished himself both as a chemical professor, and also as Regius Professor of divinity. In 1782 he was raised to the see of Landaff, and died in 1816, leaving among his works 'An Apology for the Bible,' in answer to Paine's 'Age of Reason;' besides 'Chemical Essays;' 'Theological Tracts,' &c. After his death appeared Memoirs of his Life written by himself.

WATSON (Her.) the family name of lord Sondes, which title was first conferred on Lewis Monson, who, at the death of Thomas Watson, third and last earl of Rockingham, assumed the name and arms of Watson, and was created in 1760 baron Sondes, of Lees-Court, co. Kent.

WATSON, another family which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1760 on sir Charles Watson for his distinguished naval services; whose arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a chevron engrailed azure, between three martlets sable, as many crescents or.

Crest. A griffin's head erased argent, ducally gorged or.

WATT, James (Biog.) an engineer, who was born at Greenock in 1736, and died in 1819, is particularly remembered for his improvements in the construction of the steam-engine, which has rendered it applicable to so many purposes of utility. He also invented a micrometer, and a machine for drawing in perspective, as also for copying writings.

WATTEAU, Anthony (Biog.) a French painter, was born at Valenciennes in 1684, and died in 1721, after having acquired a good reputation in his art.

WATTS, Isaac (Biog.) a poet among the Dissenters, was born at Southampton in 1674, and died in 1748, leaving, besides his poems, which have procured him a place among the British poets, also 'Psalms and Hymns,' 'Logic,' &c. His entire works have been published in 6 vols. 4to.

WAYNFLETE, William of (Hist.) the illustrious founder of Magdalen College, Oxford, was educated at Winchester School, and afterwards, as is supposed, at New College, Oxford. About 1429 he was appointed head master of Winchester School, and in 1438 master of St. Mary Magdalene hospital, near Winchester, whence in 1440 he was removed at the request of Henry VI to the school at Eton, just founded by that monarch, of which in 1442 he was appointed provost. In 1447 he was raised to the see of Winchester, which he held for 39 years, and died in 1486, after having passed through very troublesome times with unswerving fidelity to Henry VI. [Vide Plate XII]

WEBB (Her.) a family which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred on sir John Webb as a reward for his distinguished loyalty; whose arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Gules, a cross between four falcons or.

Crest. A demi-eagle displayed, issuing out of a ducal coronet or.

WEBB, Philip Carteret (Biog.) an antiquary and lawyer, who died in 1770, aged 70, was the author of 'Observations on the Course of Proceedings in the Admiralty,' 8vo. 1747; 'A Short Account of some Particulars concerning Domesday-Book,' &c. 4to. 1756; 'A Short Account of Danegeld,' &c. 1758, &c.; 'A Collection of Records about General Warrants,' &c. 1763.

WEBBE, George (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, was born in 1581 at Bromham, in Wiltshire, educated at Oxford, and died in 1641 in Limerick Castle, where he was confined by the rebels, leaving, among his works as an author, 'Practice of Quietness, directing a Christian how to Live Quietly in this World;' 'A Brief Exposition of the Principles of the Christian Religion,' 8vo. Lond. 1612; 'Arraignment of an Unruly Tongue,' &c. 12mo. 1619; 'Catalogus Protestantium,' &c. 4to. 1624, &c.

WEBBER, John (Biog.) an artist, was born in London in 1751, and died in 1793, leaving a set of views taken during his voyage with captain Cook, which were etched and aquatinted by himself.

WEBER, Anselm (Biog.) a musical composer, was born at Manheim in 1766, and died in 1821, leaving several operas, which were very successful. He also set to music many of the pieces of Schiller and Goethe.

WEDDELL (Her.) the name assumed by Thomas, the third lord Grantham, which he has changed from that of Robinson.

WEDDERBURNE (Her.) the family name of the earl of Rosslyn, which title was first conferred in 1801 on Alexander Wedderburne, Lord High Chancellor, who in history is better known by the title of lord Loughborough. A branch of the same family also enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1803 on sir David Wedderburn.

WEEVER (Biog.) or Weaver, John, an antiquary of Lancashire, was born in 1576, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1631, leaving 'Ancient Funeral Monuments within the Vnited Monarchie of Great Britaine, Ireland,' &c.

The next year he was set at liberty, and returned to Holland, where he was chosen by the duke of Brunswick Lunenburg to be his resident at the Hague, but was again confined in 1676, on the charge of holding a secret correspondence with the enemies of the states. He made his escape by the assistance of his daughter in 1679, and died, as is supposed, in 1682, leaving 'Memoires touchant les Ambassadeurs et les Ministres Publics,' 1677;' 'L'Ambassadeur et ses Fonctions,' 2 vols. 4to. Hague, 1681; 'L'Histoire des Provinces Unies des Pays Bas,' &c. fol. Hague, 1719.

WIDDRINGTON, Sir Thomas (Hist.) a lawyer, descended from an ancient family in Northumberland, who studied both at Oxford and Cambridge, as also at Gray's Inn, was knighted by Charles I, and after acting as a Speaker of the House of Commons, during the rebellion and the usurpation, contrived at the Restoration to be called among the serjeants, and died in 1664, leaving in MS. 'Analecta Eboracensia.' which is now among Mr. Gough's topographical collection in the Bodleian library.

WIELAND, Christopher Martin (Biog.) a German writer, was born in 1733 at Bieberach, and died in 1813, leaving a number of works, for which he was styled by his countrymen the Voltaire of Germany.

WIGRAM (Her.) an ancient family, descended from Patrick Fitz-Wygram, one of the citizens of Wexford, who besieged and made prisoner Robert Fitz-Stephen, and delivered him to king Henry II. John Wigram, a native of Wexford, was canon of Windsor in 1458, and sir Robert Wigram, the nineteenth in descent, was created a baronet in 1805. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a pale gules, three escallops or, over all a chevron engrailed counterchanged, and on a chief, waves of the sea, thereon a ship, representing an English vessel of war of the 16th century, with four masts, sails furled proper, colours flying gules.

Crest. On a wreath of the colours, on a mount vert, a hand in armour in fesse, couped at the wrist proper, charged with an escallop, holding a fleur-de-lis erect or. Supporters. On either side an eagle with wings elevated argent, collared gules, and charged on the breast with a shamrock vert; granted to sir Robert by a special warrant under his Majesty's royal signet and sign manual.

WILCOCKS, Joseph (Biog.) son of Joseph Wilcocks, bishop of Gloucester, who died in 1756, was born in 1723, educated at Westminster School, and Christ Church, Oxford, and died in 1791, leaving 'Roman Conversations,' 2 vols. and 'Sacred Exercises,' &c.

WILDE, John (Hist.) or Wyld, better known by the title of Serjeant Wilde, who studied at Oxford, and at the Inner Temple, died in 1669, after having acted a prominent part during the rebellion and usurpation, when he was high in office and favour with the ruling faction. He has been confounded by some with sir William Wild, who was advanced to the Court of King's Bench in 1672, and died in 1679. This latter published 'Yelverton's Reports,' in French, 1661, 1674.

WILKES, John (Hist.) a political hero, who cut a conspicuous figure in the early part of the reign of George III, was born in 1727, in St. John's-street, Clerkenwell, expelled the House of Commons in 1764, for the libels which he wrote in his paper called 'The North Briton;' and convicted in the same year in the Court of King's Bench for republishing another number of the offensive work; after which he retired to France for a time, and was outlawed, nevertheless he ventured to return to England at the election in 1768, was elected a member for Middlesex, but confined in prison on the sentence of the Court of King's Bench. The mob now taking the part of their champion, to the disturbance of the peace of the city, Mr. Wilkes availed himself of this occasion to offer fresh insults to the government, which caused him to be a second time expelled; and on his election a third time, he was declared by a majority of the House of Commons, incapable of holding a seat. Notwithstanding he was afterwards twice more elected, and having, on the second occasion, obtained his liberty, he took his seat without molestation in 1774. He was also elected Lord Mayor in the same year, after having been previously twice rejected by the Court of Aldermen. In 1779 he was chosen to fill the office of Chamberlain, after having previously made three unsuccessful attempts, and died in 1797. Having survived his popularity, he was neglected by his political followers, for whom he did not scruple to express his thorough contempt. His Letters and Speeches were collected in 3 vols. 12mo. 1769.

WILKINS, John (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born in 1614 at Fawsley, near Daventry, in Northamptonshire, and after being educated at Oxford, and taking orders, he submitted to the usurping powers, by whom he was made Warden of Wadham College, and marrying Oliver Cromwell's sister, was made Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, by Richard Cromwell, from which he was ejected at the Restoration, but obtained soon after the deanery of Rippon; and was in 1668 promoted to the see of Chester, which he did not hold more than four years, when he died. Among his works, which are mostly fantastical, 'An Essay towards a real Character and a Philosophical Language,' is the one by which he is best known.

WILKINS, David (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1685, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1745, leaving 'Novum Testamentum Copticum,' 4to. Oxon. 1716; an edition of the 'Leges Saxonicæ,' fol. Lond. 1721; 'Concilia Magnæ Britanniæ,' 4 vols. fol. 1736.

WILLAN, Robert (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1757, at the Hill near Sedbergh, in Yorkshire, and died in 1812, leaving several works, among which, that on Cutaneous Diseases, is the best known.

WILLIAM (Hist.) the name of three kings of England.

WILLIAM I, surnamed the Conqueror, natural son of Robert I, duke of Normandy, by Arlotta, the daughter of a furrier of Falaise, was born in 1024, and after having obtained Normandy from his father, he put in his claim to the throne of England, under the will of Edward the Confessor, and having successfully supported his claim by his arms, at the battle of Hastings in 1066, he mounted the throne, and died in 1087, while engaged in warfare against his own sons. [Vide Plate III] He was succeeded by his second son,

WILLIAM II, surnamed Rufus, from the colour of his hair, who, in the absence of his elder brother, was crowned on the death of his father, was accidentally shot as he was hunting in the New Forest, Hampshire, by a dart from sir Walter Tyrrell, one of his courtiers, and died a few hours after in 1100. [Vide Plate III]

WILLIAM III, of Nassau, son of William, prince of Orange, and Henrietta Maria, daughter of Charles I, was elected stadtholder in 1672; and named general of the Dutch forces against Louis XIV. He afterwards availed himself of the unpopularity of his father-in-law, James II, to take possession of his throne in 1688; was crowned in 1689 with his wife Mary, and died in 1702, after a life spent mostly in the camp. [Vide Plate IV]

WILLIAM of Malmsbury (Biog.) vide Malmsbury.

WILLIAMS, John (Hist.) an English prelate, was born in 1582 at Aber-Conway, in Caernarvonshire, educated at Cambridge, succeeded, after various preferments, lord Bacon in 1621, as Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, and was promoted the same year to the see of Lincoln. On the accession of Charles I, Williams was deprived of his office as Lord Keeper in 1626, when he was imprisoned and fined 10,000*l.* by a sentence of the Star Chamber; but he was liberated four years after, and in 1641 was raised to the see of York. Although he had a strong leaning to the Puritans, yet he did not join in all the measures of that faction, but withdrew from the scene of contest to his native town, where he died in 1650.

WILLIAMS, Charles Hanbury, a diplomatist, was born in 1709, and, after having been educated at Eton, he was, through the interest of sir Robert Walpole, appointed Envoy to the court of Dresden in 1746; chosen to succeed Mr. Legge in 1749 as Minister Plenipotentiary at Berlin, soon after which he was sent to St. Petersburgh to conclude a convention, but, having failed to give satisfaction to his own court by the course he had pursued, he died in a state of insanity in 1759, leaving several official dispatches, and also some verses, which were much admired in his day.

WILLIAMS, Griffith (Ecc.) an Irish prelate, was born at Caernarvon about 1589, educated at Cambridge, advanced to the bishopric of Ossory in 1641, and died in 1672, after having suffered much for his loyalty, leaving 'Vindiciæ Regum, or the Grand Rebellion,' &c. Oxford, 1643; 'Discovery of Mysteries, or the Plots of the Parliament to overthrow both Church and State,' 4to. Oxford, 1643; 'Jura Majestatis, or the Rights of Kings both in Church and State,' &c.; 'The Persecution and Oppression of John Bale and Griffith Williams, Bishops of Ossory,' &c.; besides other works on the topics of the day.

WILLIAMS, John, an English prelate, was born in Northamptonshire in 1634, and after being educated at Oxford, he was advanced to the see of Chichester in 1696, and died in 1709, leaving a number of controversial works, besides his Boyle's Lectures, entitled 'The Characters of Divine Revelation.'

WILLIAMS (Her.) the name of three families which enjoy a baronetcy, conferred, in the first case, in 1661 on sir Griffith Williams, of Penryn, who was of princely descent; in the second case in 1798 on sir John Williams, of Bedylwyddan, co. Flint; and in the third case in 1815 on sir George Griffies Williams, of Llwyny-Womwood, co. Carmarthen. The arms of the first family were—"Gules, a chevron ermine, between three Saxons' heads couped proper," which was given to one of his ancestors for a victory which he gained over the English, three of whose captains he killed. The arms of the second are—"Argent, two foxes counter-saliant in saltire gules, with a crescent for difference." The arms of the third are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, on a chevron engrailed gules, between three bulls' heads caboshed sable, a rose between two fleurs-de-lis of the field for Williams; second and third for Griffiths.

Crest. A bull's head erased at the neck, &c.

WILLIAMS, Daniel (Biog.) a dissenter, was born in 1644 at Wrexham, and died in 1715. He bequeathed the bulk of his property to charitable or public purposes; and among other things he gave his library to the society of dissenters, who erected a building for its reception in Redcross-street, Cripplegate, since which time it has received many considerable accessions. His writings were published together, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1738.

WILLIAMS, Anna, a literary lady, well known for the protection she found under the roof of Dr. Johnson in the midst of her affliction, was born in 1706, and died in 1783, after having passed many years of her life in a state of blindness, notwithstanding which she employed herself with her needle, and also with her pen. The fruit of the latter was a volume of 'Miscellanies in Prose and Verse.'

WILLIAMS, David, a miscellaneous writer, and native of Cardiganshire, was born in 1738, and died in 1816, leaving 'Lectures on Education;' 'History of Monmouthshire,' &c. He was the founder of the 'Literary Fund.'

WILLIAMSON, Sir Joseph (Hist.) a statesman, and benefactor to Queen's College, Oxford, was sworn one of the Clerks of the Council in 1657, under Secretary of State in 1665; was employed in 1674 as one of the British Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Cologne; sworn principal Secretary of State and Privy Councillor on his return; resigned his Secretaryship in 1678, and died in 1701. His benefactions to Queen's College in plate, books, buildings, and money, amounted to 8000*l.*

WILLIAMSON (Her.) a family of considerable antiquity, which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1642 on sir Thomas Williamson, who suffered much for his loyalty. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Or, a chevron gules, between three trefoils slipped sable.

Crest. On a mural crown gules, a demi-wyverne (or a dragon's head) or.

WILLIS, Thomas (Biog.) a physician, was born in 1621 at Great Bedwin, in Wiltshire, educated at Oxford, and died in 1675, leaving several works, which were printed in 2 vols. 4to. Genev. 1676, and Amst. 1682.

WILLIS, Browne, an antiquary, grandson of the preceding, was born in 1682 at Blandford, in Dorsetshire, educated at Oxford, and died in 1760, leaving his 'Notitia Parliamentaria,' &c. 3 vols. 8vo. 1715-30; 'A Survey of the Cathedral Church of St. David's,' 8vo. 1717; 'An History of the Mitred Parliamentary Abbies,' &c. 1718-19; 'Surveys of the Cathedral Churches of Llandaff,' &c.; 'Survey of the Cathedrals of England,' &c. 3 vols. 4to. 1727, 1730, and 1733, &c.

WILLOUGHBY, Robert de (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in the service of Edward I and II during their wars in France and Scotland, for which, as also for his great descent, he was summoned to Parliament among the barons of this realm in 7 Edw. II.

WILLOUGHBY, John, first Lord, served Edward III in the Scottish wars; as also in Flanders and France, where he was one of the principal commanders, particularly in the battle of Cresci. He died in the 23d Edw. III.

WILLOUGHBY, Robert, fifth Lord, was a distinguished warrior in the reigns of Henry V and Henry VI, to whom he rendered considerable service by his skill and valour in the wars in France; but owing to the dissensions which existed among the nobles in England, and the want of supplies, he was obliged to surrender the city of Paris. Nevertheless he continued to do much injury to the French until his death in 30 Hen. VI.

WILLOUGHBY, Richard, sixth Lord, and Lord Welles, was engaged with the earl of Warwick in the insurrection against Edward IV; but being taken prisoner while fighting against the latter, he was beheaded 9 Edw. IV.

WILLOUGHBY, Sir Hugh, a naval commander, and a descendant of the Willoughbys of Eresby and Parham, is distinguished in history as the commander of the expedition which set out in 1553 on a voyage of discovery, according to the plan projected by Sebastian Cabot; the result of which was the commencement of the trade to Archangel, which has since been carried on so extensively.

WILLOUGHBY (Her.) or Willughby, an ancient family, which has been ennobled in more than one of its branches. John, lord Willoughby of Eresby above-mentioned, was the first who bore this title, although his ancestors had already been summoned to Parliament among the barons of this realm. From William, the eldest son of Robert, third lord Willoughby, the barony of Eresby descended to Catherine, sole daughter and heiress of William Willoughby, ninth lord Willoughby, after having been for 50 years held by the family of Welles. She having taken for her second husband Richard Bertie, esq., their descendants in a direct male line enjoyed the title of barons Willoughby, of Eresby, until 1779, when, by the death of Robert Bertie, duke of Ancaster, and baron Willoughby, of Eresby, without issue, this barony came in abeyance between his two sisters and coheirs lady Priscilla Barbara Elizabeth, and lady Georgiana Charlotte: lady Priscilla, the eldest, wife of Peter Burrell, since created lord Gwydir, was confirmed baroness of Willoughby in 1786. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, three battering rams barways in pale proper, armed and garnished azure.

Supporters. On the dexter side a pilgrim, or friar, vested in grey, his staff and beads argent; on the sinister a savage, wreathed about the temples and loins with ivy, all proper.

From Thomas, a younger son of Robert, third lord Willoughby aforesaid, descended sir Robert Willoughby, who, for his services at the battle of Bosworth, was in 1492 advanced to the peerage, by writ of summons, by the title of Willoughby de Broke, which title passed in 1695 into the family of Verney, Richard Verney having laid claim to it as the descendant, through the heiress of Greville, from Robert, second lord Willoughby de Broke, which claim was allowed. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Gules, three crosses recercele or, a chief vaire ermine and erminois.

Crest. On a wreath, the bust of a man couped and affronté proper, ducally crowned or.

Supporters. Two antelopes argent, spotted gules, armed, crested, and unguled or.

Motto. "Virtue vaunteth."

A third and junior branch of this family descended from the fore-mentioned sir Thomas, was ennobled in the person of William Willoughby, who was advanced in 1546 to the title of lord Willoughby, of Parham, which became extinct at the death of George, the 17th lord Willoughby, in 1779. A fourth branch descended from the aforesaid sir Thomas Willoughby, was ennobled in the person of Thomas Willoughby, who was created a baron in 1712, by the title of lord Middleton. [Vide Middleton]

WILLOUGHBY, another family which enjoys a baronetcy, conferred in 1794 on sir Christopher Willoughby; the arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth sable, a cross engrailed or; second and third gules, a cross moline argent, all within a bordure gobony argent and gules.

Crest. A Saracen's head couped proper, ducally crowned or.

WILLOUGHBY, Francis (Biog.) a natural historian, son of sir Francis Willoughby, knt. was born in 1635, and after taking his degrees at Cambridge, he set out on his travels, in company with his friend Mr. Ray, and died in 1672, leaving 'Ornithologiæ Libri tres,' &c. fol. 1676; 'Historiæ Piscium Libri quatuor,' &c. fol. 1686; both which were published by the care of Mr. Ray; besides several pieces in the Philosophical Transactions.

WILMOT, Sir John Eardley (Hist.) a lawyer, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, and Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, was born in 1709 at Derby, educated at Westminster and Cambridge, studied law at the Inner Temple, succeeded sir Martin Wright in 1755 as Judge of the Court of King's Bench, was raised in 1766 to the Chief Justiceship in the Common Pleas, and died in 1792. His second son, Eardley Wilmot, who died in 1815, prepared his father's Notes and Reports for the press, with Memoirs of his Life; besides which he published the Life and Letters of Bishop Houghton, 4to. 1812.

WILMOT (Her.) a family of great antiquity, which settled soon after the Conquest at Sutton-upon-Soar, co. Nottingham, and has obtained the dignity of a baronet in three of its branches. Sir Edward Wilmot, of the elder branch, was created in 1759; sir Robert Wilmot, of the junior branch, father of sir John Eardley Wilmot, the judge above-mentioned, was created in 1772; and sir John Eardley-Eardley Wilmot, grandson of the judge above-mentioned, was created in 1821. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable, on a fess or, between three eagles' heads couped argent, as many escallops gules, a canton vaire ermine and gules.

Crest. An eagle's head erased argent, in his beak an escallop shell gules.

WILMOT, John (Biog.) Earl of Rochester, vide Rochester.

WILSON, Sir Thomas (Hist.) a statesman and divine in the reign of queen Elizabeth, was educated at Eton, and King's College, Cambridge, fled to the continent during the reign of queen Mary, and after having narrowly escaped with his life from Rome, where he had been imprisoned and tortured on account of his religious profession, he was appointed on the accession of Elizabeth one of the Masters of Requests, and soon after her Secretary; in 1567 he was sent on an embassy to the Low Countries; in the following year succeeded sir Thomas Smith as Secretary of State, and died in 1581, leaving, 1. 'Epistola de Vitâ et Obitu duorum Fratrum Suffolciensium, Henrici et Caroli Brandon,' 4to. Lond. 1552. 2. 'The Rule of Reason, containing the Art of Logic,' 4to. 1551, 1552, 1553, 1567; it was this work which is said to have given offence to the church of Rome. 3. 'The Art of Rhetoric,' 4to. 1553, and often reprinted.

WILSON, Thomas (Ecc.) an English prelate, was born at Burton, in the Palatine of Chester, in 1663, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, promoted in 1697 to the see of Sodor and Man, and died in 1755, after having acted the part of a Christian bishop for the space of 50 years. His works consisted of religious tracts, most of which have been repeatedly printed separately at different times; and also of Sermons, which were collected by his son, and published in 2 vols. 4to. and reprinted in two handsome volumes folio, by the editor the Rev. Clement Cruttwell.

WILSON (Her.) a family of considerable antiquity in Yorkshire, of which mention is made as early as the 13th century, when Thomas Wilson was seated at Elton, from whom descended sir William Wilson, a distinguished loyalist, who was created a baronet in 1660. Their arms, &c. are as follow:

Arms. Sable, a wolf saliant, and in chief three escallops, or.

Crest. A demi-wolf as in the arms.

Motto. "Pro legibus et regibus."

WILSON, Florence (Biog.) or Florentius Volusenus, a Latin poet, and native of Elgin, in Scotland, died in 1547, leaving some Latin poems, which were printed in London in 4to. 1619; also a work 'De Tranquillitate Animi,' Lugd. Bat. 1543.

WILSON, Arthur, an historian, and native of Norfolk, who was born in 1596, and died in 1652, is principally known as the author of the 'Life and Reign of James I,' fol. 1653, and again in Kennet's complete History of England. He likewise wrote some comedies, one of which is entitled 'The Inconstant.'

WILTON, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed originally by the family of Grey, subsequently by that of Egerton, and now by a junior branch of earl Grosvenor's family. The titles, arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Titles. Grosvenor, earl of Wilton, co. Hereford; viscount Grey de Wilton.

Arms. Argent, a lion rampant gules, between three pheons' heads sable.

Crest. On a wreath, three arrows, one in pale and two in saltire or, headed and feathered sable, bound together with a ribband gules.

Supporters. On the dexter a wyvern or; on the sinister a lion argent, ducally crowned or.

Motto. "Virtuti non armis fido."

WILTSHIRE, Earl of (Her.) a title conferred in 1533 on Thomas Bullen, the father of Anna Bullen, or Bulleyn, the wife of Henry VIII, which became extinct three years after.

WILTSHIRE, Earl of, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the marquis of Winchester.

WILTSHIRE (Geog.) an inland county of England.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the E. by Berkshire and Hampshire, S. by Hampshire and Dorsetshire, W. by Somersetshire, and N. by Gloucestershire, being about 53 miles long and 34 broad. It is divided into North and South Wiltshire.

Principal Towns. Salisbury, the capital and a city, Devizes, Trowbridge, Warminster, Chippenham, &c.

Principal Rivers. The Avon, Willy, Nadder, and Bourn.

History. Wiltshire was inhabited by the Belgæ previous to the invasion of the Romans, and retains many vestiges of its different inhabitants. Three Roman stations are mentioned as being situated in this county, besides three Roman roads; but the most interesting monuments of antiquity are Stonehenge, and that at Avebury, which are considered as Druidical temples; the Wansdyke, an immense earth-work, and the numerous barrows or tumuli, which are generally supposed to have been appropriated to sepulchral purposes.

WINCHELSEA, Heneage, second Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was one of the nobles concerned in the restoration of Charles II, whom he had also faithfully served and steadfastly assisted during his exile. He was sent shortly after as Ambassador Extraordinary into Turkey, to Sultan Mahomet Chan IV, and after having filled various offices under Charles II and James II. he died in 1688.

WINCHELSEA, sixth Earl of, and second Earl of Nottingham, was one of the Privy Council in the reigns of Charles II and James II, in whose cause he took an active but prudent part, and after the revolution he was constituted one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries; but resigned this post in 1693. On the accession of queen Anne he was sworn of her Privy Council, and again constituted one of the Principal Secretaries of State; but resigned it again in 1704. When king George succeeded to the crown, he was one of the Lords Justices for the administration of affairs until his arrival, and in 1714 was declared Lord President of the Council; but retired from all public affairs in 1715, and died in 1729. His lordship wrote an answer to Mr. Whiston's Letter to him on the subject of the Holy Trinity, which called forth the thanks of the University of Oxford.

WINCHELSEA, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Finch [vide Finch]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Finch, earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham, viscount Maidstone, baron Finch, of Daventry, and a baronet.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth argent, a chevron between three gryphons passant sable, for Finch; second and third three lions rampant or, for Fitzherbert.

Crest. On a wreath a flying horse argent, winged, maned, and ducally gorged or.

Supporters. On the right a flying horse as the crest, on the left a gryphon sable, ducally collared or.

Motto. "Adversis major par secundis."

WINCHELSEA (Geog.) a town of Sussex, in England, 8 m. N. E. Hastings, 67 S. W. London.

History of Winchelsea.

Winchelsea, in its original state, was a place of great antiquity and consideration; but it has been exposed to various disasters. During the turbulent reign of Henry III its sailors became notorious for their piracies, in consequence of which the town was attacked by Edward III, and the principal persons put to death who were concerned in these piracies. It afterwards suffered a still greater calamity in the 14th century from the rising of the sea, which compelled the inhabitants to change the site of their town; but in less than 20 years it was twice pillaged, first by the French and afterwards by the Spaniards. In 1358 the French once more attacked the town, and partly destroyed it; but were foiled in another attempt, which, after having burnt Rye, they made upon it in 1377. These calamities were succeeded by one still more ruinous than any, namely, the retiring of the sea, which caused the harbour to be choked, and the neighbourhood to be a dreary marsh; whence this town, which was once populous and flourishing, is now reduced to only 126 houses.

WINCHESTER, William, first Marquis of (Hist.) a statesman, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, was made Treasurer of the King's Household by Henry VIII in 1539, and Lord High Treasurer of England in 1549, which office he continued to hold in the reign of Mary and Elizabeth, and died in 1571. It was in a great measure by his counsel that the duke of Northumberland's design of setting the lady Jane Grey on the throne was prevented.

WINCHESTER, John, fifth Marquis of, was one of those noblemen who stood firm to their sovereign in the time of the rebellion. He made a garrison for his majesty of his fine seat at Basing, which endured a siege from 1643 to 1645; during which time, having with him several brave officers, he made many valiant and dexterous sallies, and killed great numbers of the enemy; but being resolved to maintain it to the last, his house was taken by storm, with himself in it, and about 200 persons. He testified his loyalty by writing on every window with a diamond 'Aimez Loyaulté,' which provoked the enemy so much that they burnt the house to the ground.

WINCHESTER, Marquis of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Paulet, or Powlett [vide Paulet]; which, with the arms, &c. are as follow:

Titles. Powlett, marquis of Winchester, earl of Wiltshire, baron St. John, of Basing, co. Wilts, and premier marquis of England.

Arms. Sable, three swords in pile, their points towards the base argent, the pomels and hilts or.

Crest. On a wreath, a falcon rising or, gorged with a ducal coronet gules.

Supporters. Two hinds purpure, semee of estoils argent, gorged with a ducal coronet or.

Motto. "Aymez Loyaulté."

WINCHESTER (Geog.) an ancient city of Hampshire, in England, situated on the Itchen, 21 m. N. W. Chichester, and 62 W. by N. London. Lon. 1° 12′ W. lat. 51° 4′ N.

History of Winchester.

Winchester, which is supposed to be the Venta Belgarum of Ptolemy and Antoninus, and afterwards called in Latin Vintonia, or Venta, was probably the site of a Roman encampment. It became afterwards the capital of the West Saxon kingdom; and in the reign of Egbert, and his Saxon successors, the metropolis of the kingdom; but in the reign of William the Conqueror it began to be rivalled by London, which ultimately acquired the preeminence. It was appointed by Edward III one of the fixed markets or staples for wool; but its commercial prosperity was checked by many adverse circumstances, particularly by a destructive plague, which desolated the neighbourhood. During the rebellion the city and castle were alternately occupied by the contending parties, and on their surrender to Cromwell after the battle of Naseby, the fortifications of the city, the castle, as also the bishop's castle, and several other public buildings, were destroyed by him. In 1665 this city was again visited by the plague, which desolated the rest of the kingdom. The cathedral of Winchester, which is one of the most interesting buildings in England, was first built by the Saxon kings Kinegils and Kenewalch; but the original structure being destroyed, was rebuilt by Ethelwold; after which it was enlarged and improved by bishop Walkelin in 1093, and was materially decorated by William of Wykeham in 1394; by whom was also founded the College, between the years 1387 and 1393, on the site of an ancient grammar-school, known to have existed there before 1136.

Ecclesiastical History of Winchester.

This city is the see of a bishop, suffragan of Canterbury, and has been the seat of several councils, namely, in 855 and 975, at which S. Dunstan is said to have presided, in 1021, 1076, 1129, and 1142, at which last Henry of Winchester presided.

WINDET, James (Biog.) a physician, who was educated at Oxford, and died in 1680, wrote, among other things, 'De Vitâ Functorum Statu,' 4to.

WINDHAM, William (Hist.) a statesman, descended from an ancient family in Norfolk, was born in Golden Square, London, in 1750, and after being educated at Eton, and University College, Oxford, he commenced his career of politics after the manner of his friend Mr. Burke, in the ranks of opposition, but the enormities of the French Revolution, and the democratic spirit which raged in England, opened his eyes to the folly of such courses, when he steadily attached himself to the interests of the state, and was appointed Secretary of War, which post he held from 1794 until 1801, when he and Mr. Pitt, with lord Spencer, and lord Grenville, resigned their posts to make way for viscount Sidmouth's administration. He was afterwards reinstated in his office, on the return of Mr. Pitt to the ministry, but at the death of the latter, he withdrew from public concerns, and died in 1810, to the great regret of all who knew him, either in a public or private capacity. His Speeches in Parliament have been published, with his Life prefixed, in 3 vols. 8vo.

WINDSOR, William de (Hist.) a statesman and soldier, of the family mentioned under Heraldry, distinguished himself in the service of Edward III, particularly as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, where he acted with vigour against the rebels. He married Dame Alice Perrers, who was in such favour with Edward III.

WINDSOR, Andrews, first Lord, attended Henry VIII in his expedition into France, where he was knighted for his signal valour at the siege of Terouenne, and the battle which ensued. He afterwards attended the princess Mary, the king's sister, on her marriage with Louis XII of France, and died in 1543.

WINDSOR, Thomas, sixth Lord, was rear-admiral in the fleet sent out in 1623, to bring prince Charles from Spain; one of the mourners at the funeral of king James, and one of king Charles' loyal subjects, who preserved his fidelity in the midst of rebellion, but died in 1642.

ZECHARIAH (Bibl.) vide Zachariah.

ZEDEKIAH (Bibl.) צדקיהו, the last king of Judah before the captivity of Babylon, whither he was carried in chains by order of Nebuchadnezzar, after having had his eyes put out.

ZEDEKIAH, son of Chenaanah, a false prophet of Samaria, who flattered Ahab and opposed Micaiah. 1 Kings xxii.

ZEDEKIAH, son of Maaseiah, another false prophet, who always opposed Jeremiah. Jerem. xxix.

ZEILER, Martin (Biog.) a German geographer, was born in 1589 in Stiria, and died in 1661, leaving 'Geographische, Historische, und Genealogische Beschreibung der zehn Deutschen Reichskreise,' &c. 8vo. Nuremberg, 1694; 'Reisebeschreibung durch Deutschland,' &c. and many other works, which principally composed the topography of Merian, in 31 vols. fol.

ZENAS (Bibl.) Ζηνᾶς, a disciple of St. Paul, and a doctor of the law. Tit. iii.

ZENO, Flavius (Hist.) surnamed Isauricus, a native of Isauria, of ignoble extraction, married Ariadne, the daughter of Leo the Elder, by whom he had Leo the Younger, at whose death he was declared emperor in 474, and died after a reign of 17 years and upwards. Evag. Hist. Eccles. l. 3; Marcellinus, Cassiodorus, Cedrenus, &c.

ZENO (Numis.) medals of this emperor bear his effigy, as in the annexed figure, inscriptions, IMP. ZENO PERP. AUG.—IMP. ZENO FELIX PERP.—D. N. ZENO PERP. F. AUG.

ZENO (Biog.) the founder of the Stoic sect, was born at Citium, in the island of Cyprus, and died by his own hands in the 98th year of his age, A. C. 264. [Vide Plate XXI]

ZENO, Apostolo, a poet, critic, and antiquary, descended from an illustrious Venetian family, long settled in the island of Candia, was born in 1669, and died in 1750, leaving, among his critical works, 'Bibl. dell' Eloquenza Italiana di Fontanini,' published in 1753. His 'Dissertationi Vossiane,' &c. were published in 3 vols. 8vo.; his dramatic works were collected and published in 10 vols. 8vo. 1744, by count Gozzi, and his Letters, in 2 vols. 4to. in 1752.

ZENOBIA (Hist.) the wife of Rhadamistus, king of Iberia, who attempted to kill her at her own request, and, after having stabbed her, threw her into the river Araxes, from which she was saved by a shepherd, who, carrying her to Tiridates, she was acknowledged by him as queen. Tacit. Ann. l. 12.

ZENOBIA, Septimia, a celebrated princess of Palmyra, who married Odenatus, a partner with Gallienus in the empire. On the death of her husband she reigned in the east as regent of her infant children until she was defeated and taken prisoner by Aurelian, A. D. 273. This princess was distinguished for her patronage of learning and learned men, among whom was Longinus. Aur. Vict.

ZENOBIA (Numis.) medals are extant of the queen of Palmyra, bearing her effigy, as in the annexed figure, inscriptions, CEΠT. ZHNOBIA CEB.—CEΠTIM. ZHNOBIA, &c.

ZEPHANIAH (Bibl.) צפניה, one of the minor prophets, son of Cushi, and grandson of Gedaliah, prophesied in the reign of Josiah.

Petræa, on the Red Sea, and bordering on Egypt. 2 Chron. xiv. 9, &c.

ZERUBBABEL (Bibl.) זרבבל, son of Salathiel, of the royal race of David, to whom Cyrus committed the care of the sacred vessels on his return to Jerusalem. 1 Chron. iii. 17; Ezra i.; St. Matth. i. &c.

ZETHES (Myth.) or Zetes, Ζήτης, a son of Boreas, king of Thrace and Orithya, who, with his brother Calais, accompanied the Argonauts to Colchis. They were both killed, according to some accounts, and changed into the winds called Prodomi by the Greeks, which blow eight or ten days before the dogstar appears. Orph. Argon. v. 220; Apollod. l. 1; Apollon. l. 1; Hygin. Fab. 14; Ovid. Met. l. 8, &c.

ZEUXIS (Biog.) a celebrated painter, and native of Heraclea, the town of Sicily, as is supposed, flourished about 468 years before the Christian æra. He was the disciple of Apollodorus, and cotemporary with Parrhasius, with whom he contested for the superiority, but acknowledged himself beaten when he was deceived by a curtain drawn by his rival which he took to be real. He is said to have painted grapes so naturally as to deceive the birds. Cic. de Inv. l. 2; Quintil. l. 12; Plin. l. 35.

ZIBA (Bibl.) ציבא, a servant of Saul, who brought Mephibosheth to king David. 2 Sam. ix. xvi.

ZICHRI (Bibl.) זכרי, a stout man of Ephraim, who killed Maaseiah, son of king Ahaz. 2 Chron. xxxviii.

ZIETHEN, John Joachim Van (Hist.) a distinguished officer in the Prussian army, rose by his superior merits to the rank of a general, and displayed during the seven years' war his talents to the admiration of the king and the whole army, particularly at the siege of Prague, the battle of Leignitz, and the storming of Torgau. He died in 1786, at the age of 87.

ZIKLAG (Bibl.) צקלג, a city that Achish, king of Gath, gave to David when he took shelter among the Philistines. 1 Sam. xxvii. 6 Joshua had allotted it to the tribe of Simeon. Josh. xix.

ZIMMERMANN, John George (Biog.) a physician and miscellaneous writer, was born in 1728 at Bruga, a town of Bern, and died in 1795, leaving, among other works, his 'Essay on Solitude,' which has acquired a considerable degree of popularity throughout Europe.

ZIMRI (Bibl.) זמרי, son of Salu, prince of the tribe of Simeon, who was slain with Cozbi, the Midianitish woman, in the tent by Phinehas, son of Eleazar, the high priest. Numb. xxv.

Zimri, a general of Elah, king of Israel, when he rebelled against his master, who afterwards killed the usurper, and put all his family to death, but, being besieged in Tirzah by the army of Israel, who had set up Omri in his stead, he burnt himself in his palace, after reigning only seven days. 1 Kings xvi.

ZINCKE, Christian Frederick (Biog.) an enamel painter, was born at Dresden about 1684, and died in 1767, after having acquired a high reputation in his art.

ZINGHA (Hist.) a queen of Angola, who was dispossessed of her throne by the Portuguese, when she retired into the interior of Africa, and died in 1664, at the age of 82.

ZINZENDORF, Nicholas Louis, Count de (Biog.) founder or restorer of the sect of Moravians, descended from an ancient and noble family of Austria, was born in 1700, and, on his coming of age, purchased the village of Bertholsdorf, near Zittaw, in Upper Lusatia, which he formed into a religious settlement, consisting of the remains of the Moravians, who, from the name of their new settlement, were called Hernhutters. He continued to govern this settlement, and, to the utmost of his power, contribute to the spread of their fanatical principles until his death, which took place in 1760.

ZION (Geog.) or Sion, ציון, a mountain near Jerusalem, on which the temple of the Lord was built by Solomon. Psalm xlv. 2.

ZIPPORAH (Bibl.) צפורה, daughter of Jethro, and wife of Moses, by whom she was mother of Eliezer and Gershom. Exod. ii. iv. &c.

ZISKA (Hist.) or Zisca, John, a native of Bohemia, and a leader of the Hussites, waged a successful war against the emperor Sigismund, who privately offered him advantageous terms, which he was on the point of accepting, when he died of the plague in 1424. The tale which is told of his having ordered his skin to be tanned, and to be used as a drum to animate his soldiers, is looked upon to be fictitious.

ZIZIM (Hist.) or Zem, son of Mahomet II, and brother of Bajazet, disputed the throne with the latter, but, being defeated, he fled to Charles VIII of France, by whom he was delivered into the hands of the pope, and died at Rome in 1497, as is said, by poison.

ZOAR (Bibl.) צוער, one of the cities destined to be consumed by fire, but spared at the intercession of Lot, who was permitted to take refuge there. It was called Bela until he dwelt there and gave it the name of Zoar, which signifies small. Gen. xiv. 1; xix. 22, &c. Zoar, called Zoara by Ptolemy, is described as a town of the Pentapolis, on the southern extremity of the Dead Sea. Ptol. l. 5, c. 17.

ZOE (Hist.) fourth wife of the emperor Leo VI, and mother of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, during whose minority she governed with great wisdom; nevertheless she was afterwards banished through the intrigues of the courtiers, and died in exile.

Zoe, daughter of Constantine XI, was born in 798, and, being married to Argyrus, he ascended the throne of her father, but she murdered him to make way for Michael, a goldsmith, whom she took for her second husband, and raised to the empire. Although confined in a monastery during his lifetime, yet at his death she married Constantine Monomachus in the 64th year of her age, and died 8 years after, in 1050.

ZOILUS (Biog.) a sophist and grammarian of Amphipolis, A. C. 259, who obtained the appellation of Homeromastix, or the chastiser of Homer, on account of his criticisms on that poet, which is said to have brought him into disgrace with Ptolemy Philadelphus, by whom he was put to a cruel death according to some accounts. Dionys. Hal. in Ep. ad Cn. Pomp.; Vitruv. in Præf.; Ovid. de Rem. Am. v. 266; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 11.

ZOLLIKOFER, George Joachim (Biog.) a German divine, was born in 1730 at St. Gall, and died in 1788, leaving eight volumes of 'Sermons,' which are in high estimation in Germany, and have been made known to the English reader by a translation from the pen of the late Rev. William Tooke.

ZONARAS, John (Biog.) a Greek historian in the twelfth century, who held some posts at the court of Constantinople, was the author of 'Annals' to the death of Alexius Comnenus 1118, the best edition of which is that of the Louvre, 2 vols. fol. 1686, and 1687, which form part of the Byzantine History. Zonaras also wrote some 'Commentaries,' published at Paris in folio, 1618, and some 'Tracts.'

ZOPYRUS (Hist.) Ζώπυρος, a Persian nobleman, son of Megabyzus, who, from attachment to Darius Hystaspes, cut off his ears and nose at the siege of Babylon, and fled to the enemy, pretending that he had met with this treatment from his master, whereby he gained their confidence so entirely, that he opened the gates to Darius without any difficulty. Herod. l. 3; Justin. l. 1; Plut. in Apoph.

ZOROASTER (Biog.) a philosopher, who was the author of the Chaldean astrology, but whose history is involved in great obscurity; whence the name has been applied by different writers to Abraham, Noah, Moses, as also Osiris, Mithras, and others. The writings ascribed to this Zoroaster are generally admitted to be spurious. But Zoroaster, or Zardusht, a Persian philosopher, who revived the worship of fire in Persia, was the author of many works, among which was one called the 'Zend,' which is said to be still extant among his followers. Fragments of a work entitled the 'Oracles' of Zoroaster are still extant, a small collection of which was published by Pletho at Paris in 1538, and 1589, Amst. 1689.

ZOSIMUS (Biog.) an officer in the reign of Theodosius the Younger, who wrote the history of the Roman emperors in Greek, from the age of Augustus to the fifth century, of which the first five books, and the beginning of the sixth is extant. The best editions of Zosimus are that of Cellarius, 8vo. Jen. 1728, and that of Reitemeier, Gr. et Lat. with Heyne's notes, 8vo. Lips. 1784.

ZOUCH (Hist.) or Zouche, Richard, a civilian and judge of the High Court of Admiralty in the reign of Charles I and after the restoration, was born at Ansley, in Wiltshire, about 1590, and died in 1660, leaving 'Elementa Jurisprudentiæ,' 8vo. Oxon. 1629; 4to. 1636; and reprinted both at Leyden and Amsterdam; 'Descriptio Juris et Judicii Feudalis secundum Consuetudines Mediolani et Normanniæ pro Introductione ad Jurisprudentiam Anglicanam,' 8vo. Oxon. 1634, 1636; also 'Secundum consuetudines Feudales,' &c.; 'Descriptiones Juris et Judicii Sacri,' &c.; 'Quæstionum Juris Civilis centuria,' &c. 8vo. Oxon. 1682, &c.

ZOUCH, Thomas (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1737 at Sandal, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire, educated at Cambridge, and died in 1816, leaving among his works 'An Inquiry into the Prophetic Character of the Romans as described in Daniel viii.' 8vo. 1792; 'An Attempt to Illustrate some of the Prophecies of the Old and New Testament,' &c.

ZUCCARELLI, Francis (Biog.) an artist, was born at Florence about 1710, and died about 1788, leaving several specimens of his skill, which were much esteemed.

ZUCCHERO, Taddeo (Biog.) an Italian painter, was born in 1529 at St. Angelo, in the duchy of Urbino, and died in 1566, leaving several works at Rome, Tivoli, Florence, and Venice.

ZUCCHERO, Fredericho, brother of the preceding, and also an artist, who died at Ancona in 1616, excelled in sculpture and architecture, as well as painting. He was patronised in England, where he happily succeeded in taking the likeness of queen Elizabeth.

ZUINGER, Theodore (Biog.) or Zwinger, a physician of Basil, who died in 1588, at the age of 54, was the author of 'Theatrum Vitæ Humanæ.' His son James, grandson Theodore, great grandson John, and great great grandson Theodore, were all writers. The latter, who died in 1724, was the author of 'Theatrum Botanicum,' fol. Basil. 1690, &c.

ZUINGLIUS, Ulricus (Ecc.) the principal promoter of the reformation in Switzerland, was born at Wildchausen, in the county of Tockenburg, in 1487, and, after having successfully broached his new doctrines, without opposition from the magistrates of his own district, he was killed in 1531 in the civil war which he had occasioned between the five Catholic cantons and those of Zurich and Berne. [Vide Plate XIX]

APPENDIX.

CONTINUING THE WORK DOWN TO 1833.

A.

Abbott, Charles, Lord Tenterden: See Tenterden.

Aberavon, Co. Glamorganshire: created, by Stat. 27, Hen. VIII., a borough in conjunction with Cowbridge, Kenfig, Llanbrissant, Lougher, Neath, and Swansea, is entitled by the Reform Act, in conjunction with Swansea, Lougher, Kenfig, and Neath, to send one member to Parliament. See Reform Act, Tech. Dict.

Aberdeen, New (Geog.) a royal burgh, the capital of the shire and chief city of the north of Scotland; received the name of New Town when rebuilt by David Bruce, after being burnt down by the English. It continues to send one member to Parliament; but the elective franchise, which was formerly confined to the tenantry of the crown, has been extended by the provisions of the Scotch Reform Act in the same manner as in England. See Reform Act, Tech. Dict.

Abernethy, John (Biog.) an eminent surgeon, was born in Scotland, about the year 1763-4, and died April 20, 1831. In manners Abernethy was singular, but he had a benevolent heart, and his scientific acquirements were of the highest order. For many years he was surgeon to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. Among his works are, Surgical and Physiological Essays; Surgical Observations; Physiological Lectures; and various articles in Rees's Cyclopædia.

Abington, Frances (Biog.) a distinguished comic actress, was born in London in 1731. Her maiden name was Barton. She made her first appearance in 1751, at the Haymarket Theatre, and after performing with great success at Bath and Drury Lane, she went to Dublin, where she met with equal applause. On her return to London she was engaged by Garrick, at Drury Lane, and sustained the principal characters in the comedies of Shakespear, Ben Johnson, Congreve, Cibber, &c. In 1782 she accepted an engagement at Covent Garden, where she continued uninterruptedly, except for a short interval, until her final retirement from the stage in 1799. She died in March, 1815.

Achard, Francis Charles (Biog.) a chemist of Prussia, was born in 1754, and died in 1821, leaving, among other writings, Lectures on Experimental Philosophy; Instructions for making Sugar, Molasses, and Vinous Spirit from Beet Root.

Ackermann, Conrad (Biog.) the first comic actor of his time on the German stage, was born in the early part of the 18th century, became manager of the Hamburg theatre in 1765, and died at Hamburg in 1778, in indigent circumstances.

Acuna, Don Antonio Osorio d' (Hist.) bishop of Zamora, an eminent Spanish Patriot, one of the leaders of "the holy league," distinguished himself by his valour, and was beheaded in 1521.

Adams, Samuel, (Hist.) one of the founders of the thirteen states of America, was subsequently governor of Massachusetts, and died in 1826.

AFRICA. (Geog.) The interior of this country is still very imperfectly known, notwithstanding the repeated enterprises which have been undertaken by different persons. In 1781 an association was formed for the purpose of encouraging discoveries in this country, under whose auspices Mr. Ledyard and Mr. Lucas set out upon the proposed expedition; but the former was arrested in his progress by death, after having reached Grand Cairo, and the latter was prevented, by the wars of the natives, from going far towards Fezzan. Hornemann, a German adventurer, afterwards succeeded in visiting Fezzan, in company with a party of traders from Egypt; and Mr. Browne, in 1793, went with traders from Egypt to the south-west, and reached Dor Four, the capital of a kingdom heretofore unknown. Mungo Park, in 1796, gratified public curiosity with a description of some unknown places. Having passed through the territory of Wouli, he reached Bondon, and traversed the territories of Kayaage, Kasson, and Kaarta, until he reached the river Niger, which he found flowing to the eastwards. He afterwards proceeded to Sego, the capital of Bambarra, and from thence to Silla, where he was compelled, by the tropical rains and other impediments, to terminate his labours. A second journey was undertaken by Mr. Park in 1805, at the request of the British ministry, but it is apprehended that he has perished in the attempt. Subsequent expeditions were undertaken by Captains Tuckey and Campbell, and Major Peddie, but all these gentlemen died on the way without effecting anything. To Major Denham and Captain Clapperton we are indebted for much accurate information. They passed from Tripoli through Fezzan, to the Tibboo territory, visited the empire of Bournou, and the kingdom of Houssa in the territory of Soudan, and penetrated as far as Musfeia, which is situated about nine degrees to the northward of the equator. M. Caillé is said to have visited Tombuctoo, of which all accounts have hitherto been vague and unsatisfactory, and the brothers Richard and John Lander are said to have ascertained the course of the Niger.

Aikin, John, (Biog.) was born in 1747, at Kibworth, in Leicestershire, adopted the medical profession, and died in 1822. He edited the Athenæum, and part of the Monthly Magazine, contributed to the General Biographical Dictionary, and wrote Miscellanies: a Life of Huet; a Medical Dictionary; and other works.

Ailsa (Her.) Baron Ailsa was advanced to the dignity of Marquess, in September, 1831.

Airlie, Alyth and Lintrathen, Earl of (Her.) titles belonging to the family of Ogilvie. This family, which has given rise to the Earls of Findlater and Seafield, the Barons Banff, and other eminent North British houses, traces its origin to Dubican, the son of Indechtraig Maormor, a Thane of Angus, who died in 939. The honours of the peerage, which had been forfeited by lord Ogilvie supporting the cause of the Stuarts in 1745, were restored in 1826 to David, the present earl.—Arms. Ar. a lion passant guardant, gu., crowned with an imperial crown, and collared with an open one.—Supp. Two bulls sable, unguled and horned vert, with a garland of flowers about their necks.—Crest. A lady, from the waist upwards, holding a portcullis.—Motto. A fin.

Allertrandy, John Baptist (Biog.) a polish historian and bishop in partibus Zenopolis, died in 1808 at Warsaw, leaving a History of the Reigns of Henry de Valois and Stephen Bettori, kings of Poland.

Aldborough (Geog.) a corporate town of Yorkshire, under the government of a bailiff chosen by the lord of the manor, has sent two members to Parliament from the reign of Philip and Mary to the present. The right of election was in all the inhabitants paying scot and lot, which consist of 64. This is one of the boroughs disfranchised by the Reform Act. See Reform Act, App. Tech. Dict. It is a place of great antiquity, being the Isurum Brigantium of the Romans, and abounds in Roman coins, from Augustus to Constantine.

Aldeburgh, or Aldborough, (Geog.) a sea-port and corporate town of Suffolk, under the government of two bailiffs, ten superior and twelve inferior burgesses, which, from the 15th of Elizabeth to the present time, has sent two members to Parliament, who were elected by forty electors. This is one of the boroughs disfranchised by the Reform Act. See Reform Act. App. Tech. Dict.

Aldrude (Hist.) a native of Italy, and Countess of Bertinoro in the 12th century, distinguished herself by her eloquence and courage, particularly in compelling the Imperialists to raise the siege of Ancona.

Alexander I. (Hist.) Emperor of Russia, King of Poland, and eldest son of Paul I., by his second wife, Sophia Dorothea, Princess of Wirtemberg Stutgard; was born Dec. 22, 1777, and educated under the direction of his grandmother, Catherine II., who engaged M. Laharpe for his tutor. In 1793 he married Elizabeth Alexievna, Princess of Baden; succeeded his father in 1801, and commenced his reign by making peace with England, which had for some time been interrupted by the northern confederacy, formed under French influence against this country. In 1805 he entered into a coalition with England, Austria, and Sweden, to resist the encroachments of Bonaparte, but the ill success of himself and his allies, at the battle of Austerlitz, in 1806, and, subsequently, his own ill success in 1807, at the battles of Pultush, Eylau, and Friedland, compelled him to enter into the treaty of Tilsit, by which he acknowledged the confederation of the Rhine, and engaged by secret articles to shut his ports against Great Britain. In 1808 a second interview took place between Bonaparte and the Emperor, and in 1809 Alexander entered Sweden, and made himself master of Swedish Finland. In 1812 hostilities were renewed between France and Russia, when Bonaparte marched with between three and four hundred thousand men towards this country, and, after defeating the Russians in several obstinately contested engagements, took possession of Moscow; but not until it was set on fire by the Russians themselves. This and other adverse circumstances compelled Bonaparte to retreat, and enabled Alexander to form such a powerful coalition against France, as terminated, in 1814, in the conquest of Paris, the downfal of Bonaparte, and the re-establishment of the Bourbons. After the conclusion of peace Alexander visited England on his way back to Russia; was in 1815 crowned King of Poland, and died suddenly in November, 1825, at Taganrock, on the sea of Azof. Leaving no issue, he was succeeded by his younger brother Nicholas, in whose favour the Grand Duke Constantine, the second brother, resigned his pretensions.

Algiers (Hist.) The dey of Algiers having offered various insults to France, and refused to make reparation, a formidable armament was dispatched to Algiers in 1830, which succeeded in compelling the dey to surrender, and conquering the country. The whole of the Algerine territory is now under the sway of France.

Ali Tepeleni (Hist.) more generally known as Ali Pacha, an Albanian, was born in 1744. After many vicissitudes, he obtained absolute power in Albania, which he held for many years. In 1822 he was overcome and put to death by the general of the Porte.

Allen, Sir Thomas (Hist.) a naval commander, the descendant of a loyal family of Lowestoffe, was a captain in the fleet which, under the command of Prince Rupert, preserved their allegiance to their exiled sovereign. At the restoration he was progressively raised to the chief command of the squadron stationed in the Mediterranean. In 1664, meeting with the Dutch Smyrna fleet, he totally defeated them, sinking several of their ships, and taking four of the richest of them. This was followed by a series of gallant services which he performed until the year 1670, when he was recalled from the station off Algiers. He afterwards held the post of Comptroller of the Navy, and was living after the year 1678.

Alompra (Hist.) a Birman of humble birth, who delivered his country from the Peguan yoke. He took up arms in 1753, and before his death, which took place in 1769, he dethroned the king of Pegu, vanquished the Siamese, and founded the Birman empire.

Alxinger, John Baptist d' (Biog.) a German poet, was born at Vienna in 1735, and died in 1797. He wrote Doolin of Mentz; Bliomberis; and other poems.

Ameilhon, Hubert Pascal (Biog.) a French writer, was born at Paris in 1730, and died in 1811. He wrote the History of the Commerce of the Egyptians; a Continuation of Le Beau's Lower Empire; and other works.

Amelunghi, Jerome (Biog.) surnamed the Hunchback of Pisa, is believed to have been the inventor of burlesque poetry. Among his works is the War of the Giants, published in 1666.

AMERICA, South (Geog.) consists now of independent republics which have been formed after many sanguinary conflicts and revolutions commenced after the subjugation of Spain by Bonaparte in 1808. Buenos Ayres first succeeded in establishing its independence in 1810, Chili in 1818, Mexico in 1821, and about the same time the provinces of New Grenada and Venezuela formed themselves into an independent state by the name of Colombia. In 1822 Peru declared itself independent. In 1824 Guatemala separated from Mexico, and formed a federal state, consisting of Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa-Rica. Brazil separated itself from Portugal in 1808.

AMERICA, British and Russian. (Geog.) In consequence of certain proceedings on the part of Russia, which affected the British territory in North America, a Treaty was concluded between the two courts in 1825, by which the Russian possessions in America were confined to the north-western corner of the continent. The boundary line takes in Prince of Wales's island, and extends, along the 141st degree of longitude, to the Arctic Ocean, including ten leagues in width of coast, from latitude 56° to the point of intersection of longitude 141°.

AMERSHAM, (Geog.) a market town and borough in Buckinghamshire; sent one member to Parliament in the reign of Edward I., and, after an intermission of nearly 400 years, the inhabitants paying scot and lot recovered the elective franchise on petition, but it has since been entirely taken from them by the Reform Act. See Reform Act, Tech. Dict.

BEDWIN (Geog.) a borough and market town of Wiltshire, and a place of great antiquity, which in the time of the Saxons was a city, retains many of its privileges. Being deemed a borough by prescription, it has sent members to Parliament from the reign of Edward I. to the present time, but is now disfranchised by the Reform Act. The right of election was in the freeholders and the holders of burgage tenure.

BELGIUM (Geog.) a country originally consisting of seventeen provinces, and forming a part of Belgic Gaul, extended from the French frontier to the river Ems, and from its low situation acquired the name of the Netherlands. These provinces were for some time governed by independent princes, but became united in the tenth century, under one of the grandsons of Charlemagne. In 1433, they passed to the house of Burgundy, and in 1477 to that of Austria, by the marriage of the Archduke Maximilian with Mary, daughter of the last Duke of Burgundy. In the next century, the people, headed by the Counts Hoorn and Egmont, and the Prince of Oranger, evolted against Philip II., son of the Emperor Charles V.; and after a sanguinary conflict, the Prince of Orange succeeded in forming the famous league of Utrecht in 1579, by which the seven provinces, Holland, Gelderland, Zealand, Utrecht, Friesland, Overyssel, and Groningen, were erected into a republic, known by the name of the Republic of the United Provinces, or the Dutch Netherlands. The remaining ten provinces, namely, Flanders, Brabant, Antwerp, Malines, Namur, Limburg, Luxemburg, Hainault, Artois, and Cambresis, returned under the dominion of Spain, until the accession of a branch of the house of Bourbon to the Spanish monarchy in 1714, when it was stipulated that the Spanish Netherlands, otherwise called absolutely the Netherlands or Low Countries, should return to the German branch of the house of Austria, with the exception of some parts ceded to the French and Dutch. The Dutch had parts of Brabant, Limburg, and Flanders; the French had Artois and Cambresis, with part of Hainault, Flanders, and Luxemburg; after which Antwerp and Malines were included under the name of Austrian Brabant. In 1788, the people again revolted against the emperor, Joseph II., and formed themselves into a republic; but Leopold II., the successor of Joseph, regained his authority. In 1792, the French overrun the Austrian Netherlands, and in 1795, annexed it, under the name of Belgium, to the French republic. On the downfall of Bonaparte, in 1815, the whole of the country originally known by the name of the Netherlands, were again united under William I., the former stadtholder, now king of Holland, and governed by the constitution already established in Holland. In 1830, Belgium, or the Belgian provinces, properly so called, raised the standard of revolt against King William; and the next year the Belgian congress consented to submit themselves to Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg as their king. The disputes between Holland and Belgium are, however, not yet terminated, notwithstanding the endeavours of the other powers to bring them to a conclusion. France and England are at this moment in a state of warfare with Holland, whom they wish to compel to accede to the decision of the Conference of London.

BLUCHER, Gebaral Labrecht Von (Hist.) an eminent Prussian marshal, was born in 1742 at Rostock, and entered the Prussian service during the seven years' war, after having served in that of Sweden. Disgusted with the conduct of Frederic the Great, Blucher retired from the army, and did not re-enter it till 1786. He first distinguished himself in the campaign of 1806. In the campaigns of 1813, 1814, and 1815, though several times defeated, he attained high reputation for his activity and perseverance. The king of Prussia created him Prince of Wahlstadt. He died in 1819.

BOLIVAR, Simon (Hist.) was born in Caracas, July 24, 1783, and received an excellent education. When the standard of independence was raised, in 1810, he obtained a colonel's commission, and he was on the staff of Miranda when that officer was compelled to capitulate to the Spanish general. Bolivar continued the contest with varied success till 1815, when the overwhelming force of the enemy compelled him to retire to Kingston in Jamaica. In April, 1816, he resumed the struggle, and after having maintained it for six years, and gained many victories, he brought it to a triumphant close by the expulsion of the Spaniards, and the establishment of the republic of Colombia. Peru next acquired its independence through his efforts, and he himself was honoured with the name of Liberator; but falling under the suspicion of aiming at supreme power, he withdrew in disgust from public life, and died in December, 1830, protesting against the ingratitude and calumnies of his countrymen.

BOLIVIA (Geog.) a name given to the territory formerly called Upper Peru, in honour of Bolivar, by whom it was formed into a republic in 1825. It is bounded by the Ocean, Peru, Paraguay, Brazil, and the states of the Rio de la Plata; and is divided into the departments of Le Paz, Oruro, Potosi, Charcas, or Chuqisaca, Chochabamba, and Santa Cruz. Its population is 1,400,000.

BOLTON-LE-MOORS (Geog.) a great manufacturing and market town of Lancashire, is, by the Reform Act, erected into a borough, to send two members to Parliament; and, by the Boundary Act, comprises Great and Little Bolton and Haulgh, except a detached part of Little Bolton. The boroughreeves of Great and Little Bolton are to be the returning officers.

BONAPARTE, or BUONAPARTE NAPOLEAN, (Hist.) was born at Ajaccio, in Corsica, August 15, 1769, being the second son of Carlo Bonaparte, by Letitia Ramolini. (See the next article.) His father, who was bred to the law, but fought under Paoli, is said to have been descended from an Italian family that distinguished itself in the contests between the Guelphs and Gibelines. Dying at the age of 39, Bonaparte was sent by Count de Marbeauf, governor of Corsica, to the military school of Brienne, whence he was removed, in 1784, to that of Paris. In 1790, he was made a captain, and commanded in the artillery at the siege of Toulon, in 1793. The next year, he went as commander-in-chief to Italy; and, after driving the Austrians from that country, erected it into a republic. In 1798, he set sail for Egypt, and returned to Paris the next year, without effecting his object. He then overthrew the Directory, and was appointed first consul. In 1800, he crossed the Alps with incredible celerity, and, defeating the Austrians at the battles of Marengo and Hohenlinden, recovered the whole of Italy. In 1801, he concluded a peace with England, which was broken the next year. In 1804, he assumed the title of Emperor, and was crowned King of Italy in 1805. This was followed by the defeat of the Russians and Austrians, at the battle of Austerlitz, in the month of December; and the next year, by the total rout of the Prussians at Jena. In 1808, he attacked Spain, and dethroned King Ferdinand; and, in 1809, he gained a decisive victory over the Austrians at Wigram, in July, which led to his divorce from Josephine, and marriage with the archduchess Louisa, daughter of the emperor, by whom he had a son, since deceased. In 1812, he invaded Russia, and penetrated as far as Moscow; but being afterwards compelled to retreat, his army perished from hunger, cold, and the sword of the enemy; and he himself returned, December 18, alone by night, to Paris. In the two succeeding years, he sustained the contest against the combined forces of the allies, until the surrender of Paris, in March, 1814, when he consented to retire to the island of Elba, on a pension of two millions of livres. The next year, he made another effort to regain his power, but, being defeated at the battle of Waterloo, he surrendered himself, July 15, 1815, to the English, by whom he was sent prisoner to the island of St. Helena, in August of the same year, where he died, May 5, 1821, of a cancer in the breast. (See the next article.)

BONAPARTE, Letitia, (Biog.) mother of Napoleon Bonaparte, one of the most beautiful women in Corsica, was left a widow in the prime of her life, in 1785, after having shared with her husband, Carlo Bonaparte, in the dangers of war and civil discord, and borne him thirteen children, of which five sons and three daughters survived him, namely, 1. Joseph, the eldest, who was placed by his brother on the throne of Spain, and now resides in this country under the name of Count Survillier. 2. Napoleon, spoken of in the preceding article. 3. Lucien, now Prince of Canino. 4. Louis, once King of Holland, now Count de St. Leu, and resident in Italy; and 5. Jerome, once King of Westphalia, now Duke of Montfort, in Wurtemberg, having married a sister of the King of Wurtemberg. The daughters were 1. Maria Anne, Grand Duchess of Tuscany, who died at Trent, in 1820. 2. Pauline, Princess of Borghese, who died in 1825. 3. Caroline, wife of Murat, King of Naples, and afterwards of Marshal Macdonald, now living in Austria as Countess of Lipano. Madame Bonaparte died lately at Rome, at the age of 82. Her half-brother, Cardinal Fesch, created cardinal at the instance of Bonaparte, in 1803, is still living.

Byron, George Gordon Lord (Biog.) a poet of the first rank, was born at Dover, Jan. 22, 1788. He was the grandson of the admiral mentioned under History, (see Dict.) and succeeded his great uncle William Lord Byron while at school in 1798. He was then removed from Aberdeen, where his mother was residing, to Harrow School, and at the age of sixteen or seventeen was entered of Trinity College, Cambridge. At nineteen he quitted the University, and began his poetical career in 1807, by his Hours of Idleness, by George Gordon Lord Byron, a Minor, which was followed by a bitter satire on the Edinburgh Reviewers, entitled, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, in consequence of the manner in which they handled his juvenile production. The next year he set out on his travels in company with John Cam Hobhouse, Esq., and afterwards raised his reputation as a poet by his Childe Harold's Pilgrimage; his subsequent works, the Giaour, the Bride of Abydos, the Corsair, Lara, the Siege of Corinth, followed one another in quick succession, and contributed to establish his poetical character. In 1812 he made his maiden speech in Parliament, and on a future occasion he addressed the house in support of the Catholic claims, and a third time on presenting a petition from Major Cartwright. On Jan. 2, 1815, he married Anna Isabella, only daughter of Sir Ralph Milbanke Noel, bart., and on the 10th of December following, her ladyship presented him with a daughter, Ada Augusta, soon after which she paid a visit to her father, and on her refusing to return to her husband, a formal separation ensued. His lordship then left England, and taking the plains of Waterloo, the banks of the Rhine, and Switzerland, in his way, he for some time resided, first at Venice, then successively at Pisa and Genoa, About this time appeared the third canto of his Childe Harold, The Prisoner of Chillon, A Dream, and other Poems; in 1817, Manfred, a Tragedy, and The Lament of Tasso; in 1818, the fourth and last canto of Childe Harold, Mazeppa, a Romantic Tale, and Beppo, a playful jeu d'esprit; in 1819, the commencement of Don Juan; in 1820, Marino Faliero, Doge of Venice; in 1821, Letter to Mr. W. Lisle Bowles, in defence of the poetical character of Pope; the drama of Sardanapalus, esteemed the best of his tragic productions; The Two Foscari, a tragedy; and Cain, a mystery. In 1822, he published, in conjunction with Mr. Leigh Hunt and Mr. Percy Bysshe Shelly, the periodical publication called The Liberal, four numbers only of which appeared; besides which he wrote in the same year the conclusion of Don Juan; Werner, a tragedy; and The Deformed Transformed, a fragment. In August, 1823, he sailed for Greece, and died at Missolonghi, April 19, 1824, while strenuously engaged in support of the Greeks. His last words are reported to have been, "My wife,—my child,—my sister,—you know all, you must say all." The body was brought to England, and interred at Huckwell, near his own seat of Newstead Abbey. At his decease the barony devolved on his cousin, Capt. George Anson of the Royal Navy.

GREENWICH (Geog.) a market town in the county of Kent, where there was probably a royal residence in the reign of Edward I. In 1433 Henry VI. granted the manor of East Greenwich to his uncle Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, where he built a palace called Placentia, which was afterwards the frequent residence of the royal family. Henry VIII. was born here, as were also his daughters, Mary and Elizabeth; Edward VI. also died here. Elizabeth often held her court at this palace, which was frequently visited by James I. and Charles I. After this it fell into decay, but Charles II. greatly enlarged and improved the park, and formed the plan of building a new palace on a scale of great magnificence, after a design by Inigo Jones. This edifice, which was completed in the reign of Queen Anne, by Sir Christopher Wren, was converted, by grant from William III., into a royal hospital, for old disabled seamen, and for the widows and children of those who have lost their lives in the naval service. On the summit of the hill in Greenwich Park is the royal observatory, founded by Charles II., which was completed in 1676; since that period the observations have been published annually by the royal society. The first astronomer royal was Flampstead, who was succeeded by Dr. Halley, Blass, Bradley, Maskelyne, and Pond. He wrote Notes on Virginia. His Correspondence has recently been published.

Jennings, Sir John (Hist.) a naval commander, who from the rank of lieutenant, which he held in 1687, rose by successive promotions, during an honourable course of service, to that of an admiral in 1713; and after being employed in many important commissions, civil as well as military, he retired on the accession of George II. from public life, and died in 1745 at an advanced age.

Iffland, Augustus William (Biog.) a German actor and dramatist of great celebrity, was born in 1759, and died in 1814, leaving numerous tragedies and comedies.

Ilchester (Geog.) a market town and borough by prescription, in Somersetshire, appears to have been a place of some importance at the conquest, having then no less than 107 burgesses, and is supposed to have been the Ischalis of Ptolemy, a town belonging to the Hedui, a tribe of ancient Britons, which was afterwards occupied by the Romans. Traces of a Roman station are distinctly to be seen, and Roman coins have been frequently discovered in and near the town. In the reign of William Rufus it was besieged by Robert de Mowbray, leader of an insurrection, and successfully defended by the inhabitants. This borough has sent members to Parliament since the reign of Edward I., the right of election being vested in the bailiff, burgesses, and inhabitants not receiving alms, in all to the number of seventy. It is now disfranchised by the Reform Act. See Reform Act, Tech. Dict.

By a treaty concluded between Great Britain and Russia, in 1815, it was placed under the exclusive protection of his Britannic majesty, his heirs and successors. It contains a population of 210,000 souls; has a senate of six members, and a legislative body consisting of forty, and is governed by a lord high commissioner, appointed by the British monarch.

Josephine (Hist.) the wife first of Viscount de Beauharnais, governor general of the Antilles, and afterwards of Bonaparte, was born at Martinico, June 24, 1763. Her maiden name was Tascher de la Pagerie, and after the death of her husband, who was guillotined by order of Robespiere, she became acquainted with Bonaparte, to whom she was married in 1796. He being then appointed commander in chief in Italy, she accompanied him thither; but on his embarking for Egypt she retired to Malmaison, where she employed herself in making a collection of exotic plants. On his return she was permitted for a time to share in his elevation, being crowned Empress at Paris and Queen of Italy at Milan; but she was divorced in 1809, to make way for Bonaparte's marriage with the Archduchess Maria Louisa. In her retirement she continued to amuse herself with her favourite study, botany, at Malmaison, and died May 29, 1814, leaving two children by her first husband, namely, Eugene de Beauharnais, (see Beauharnais,) and Hortensia, married to Louis Bonaparte, now known as the Duchess de St. Leu.

Istria, Capo de (Hist.) a Russian count, was appointed president of Greece in 1827, and assassinated October 9, 1831, by George, the son of Constantine, the brother of Mauromichaeli, the Bey of the Mainotes, who had been imprisoned since the month of January. Constantine was immediately put to death by the by-standers, but George sought safety in the house of the French consul, who refused to deliver him up to any but the authorities. The president, who was at this period exceedingly unpopular, had had frequent warnings that his life would be attempted; but he rejected every precaution, and fell dead from the discharge of a pistol at the door of the church of Napoli, as he was on the point of entering.

Iturbide, Augustin (Hist.) was born at Valladolid, in New Mexico, in 1784; espoused the cause of Mexican liberty in 1820; was crowned emperor in 1822; deposed and banished in 1823; and having returned in 1824, was seized and shot, July 19, of that year.

Ives, St. (Geog.) a market town and borough in Cornwall, is a place of great antiquity, and derives its name, as is said, from Iva, a woman of great sanctity, who came over from Ireland in 460. In the reign of Mary it was governed by a portreeve and burgesses; and in that of Charles I. it was erected into a corporation, consisting of a mayor, recorder, 12 capital and 24 inferior burgesses. It has sent two members to Parliament since the reign of Queen Mary, but is now entitled by the Reform Act to send one only. The right of election was vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot. See Reform Act, Tech. Dict.

Jumper, Sir William (Hist.) a naval officer, commenced his glorious career as a lieutenant at the revolution, and after performing many gallant exploits in the capture of numerous privateers, signalized himself still more by his skill and valour in 1703, at the taking of Gibraltar, and died in 1715.

Junot, Andoche (Hist.) a French general, was born in 1771, at Bussy le Grand, entered the army as a volunteer at the age of twenty, and attracting the notice of Bonaparte at the siege of Toulon, he was placed on his staff, and fought under him in Italy and Egypt. In 1807 he was sent to Lisbon, with orders to take possession of Portugal on the removal of the royal family to Brazil; but, being defeated at the battle of Vimeira, he was compelled to capitulate. Notwithstanding his ill success, he continued in active service until his death in 1813.

Kellerman, Francis Christopher (Hist.) a French marshal, was born in 1735, at Strasburgh, and having entered the army as a private hussar, at the early age of seventeen, he distinguished himself in the seven years' war, and in 1788 was made a quarter master general. As commander of the army of the Moselle, in 1792, he contributed to the success of the campaign by his gallant defence of Valmy, and afterwards commanded in Italy, until superseded by Bonaparte. On the elevation of the latter he was in his confidence, and raised to the rank of marshal. Having voted for the restoration in 1814, he continued in the king's service until his death in 1820.

Kelly, Michael (Biog.) a composer and singer, was born in 1762, at Dublin, and died in 1826, leaving Reminiscences, and above sixty pieces, of which Blue Beard is the most popular.

Kempelen, Baron Wolfgang (Biog.) an admirable mechanist, was born in 1734, at Presburg, in Hungary, and died in 1804. His automaton chess-player is a master-piece of art. He wrote two dramas, and some poems.

Kendal (Geog.) a market town and borough in Westmoreland, which contains vestiges of its having been a Roman station, was distinguished, as early as the beginning of the fourteenth century, for its manufacture of cloth. It was incorporated in the reign of Elizabeth, and is now entitled, by the Reform Act, to send one member to Parliament.

Kenmure, Viscount (Her.) and Lord Lochinvar, titles conferred, in 1633, on Sir John Gordon, paternally descended from the maternal ancestor of the ducal house of Gordon, (see Hist. Dict.,) were forfeited by the sixth viscount, who being taken at the battle of Preston Pans, was beheaded on a charge of high treason, in 1716. They were restored, by Act of Parliament, in 1824, to his grandson, John Gordon. Arms. Az. three boars' heads, erased, or, armed and langued gu.—Crest. A demi-savage, wreathed about the head and loins with laurel ppr.—Supp. Two savages wreathed about the head and loins with laurel, each holding in the exterior hand a club, all ppr.—Motto. Kidderminster (Geog.) a market town and borough in Worcestershire, was noted, in the reign of Henry VIII., for the manufacture of broad cloth, and more recently for that of carpets of a particular kind, which take their name from this place. It returned members to Parliament in the reign of Edward I., but lost the privilege by disuse. It is now entitled, by the Reform Act, to send one member. See Reform Act, App. Tech. Dict.

Kingston-upon-Hull (Geog.) a sea-port and borough in Yorkshire, usually called Hull, from its situation on the great inlet of the Humber, where it joins with the Hull, was a town of considerable importance in the beginning of the 13th century. It was fortified in the reign of Edward II., since which it has been the theatre of civil commotions at different periods. In 1536 it was taken by Robert Aske, who headed an insurrection to oppose the reformation; but he being soon after taken and executed, the insurrection was suppressed. Another unsuccessful attempt was made in 1569, and in the next century it was the first town that raised the standard of rebellion, by shutting its gates against King Charles I. Its commercial importance was so great, in the reign of Edward III., that it furnished sixteen ships for the invasion of France; and in the reign of Henry VI. it obtained the privileges of a county. It first sent members to Parliament in the thirty-third year of Edward I., but returns were not regularly made before the 12th of Edward II. It is now included, by the Reform Act, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, for the purpose of sending two members to Parliament. (See Reform Act, App. Tech. Dict.) The right of election is vested in the burgesses or freemen.

Lambeth, (Geog.) an extensive suburban district of the metropolis, which is sixteen miles in circumference, consisting of eight precincts, the Bishop's, the Prince's, Vauxhall, Kennington, Lambeth Marsh, Lambeth Wall, Stockwell, and Dean Lambeth. It is a place of great antiquity, being called in our early records Lambihith, referring, no doubt, to its hithe or haven on the Thames. About 1191, Baldwin, archbishop of Canterbury, commenced the erection of a fine chapel at Lambeth, which he intended to make collegiate; but owing to the opposition of the monks of Canterbury this design was abandoned, and the building was completed for an archiepiscopal residence. Subsequent additions were made to this palace by his successors, Warham, Cranmer, Cardinal Pole, Parker, Juxon, Sancroft, and Tillotson. The library, which is very rich in MSS., was founded by archbishop Sancroft. Lambeth is erected by the Reform Act into a borough, for the purpose of sending two members to Parliament. See Reform Act, Tech. Dict.

Landon, C. F. (Biog.) a French artist, who died in 1825, is better known as an editor than a painter, by his Annals of the Museum; Annals of the Modern School; Lives and Works of Painters; and Historical Gallery.

Lannes, John (Hist.) a French marshal of Bonaparte's creation, and one most in his confidence, was born in 1769, at Lectoure; and after signalizing himself in Spain, Italy, Egypt, and Germany, he was mortally wounded at the battle of Essling, in 1809.

Laplace, Marquis Peter Simon (Biog.) one of the greatest modern astronomers and geometricians, was born at Beaumont en Auge, in 1749, created a count and vice-president of the senate by Bonaparte, and a marquis by Louis XVIII.; and died March 6, 1827. His principal works are An Exposition of the System of the World; and A Treatise on Celestial Mechanism.

Launceston (Geog.) a market-town and borough in Cornwall, has sent two members to Parliament since the 22nd of Edward I., but is now entitled by the Reform Act to send only one member. The right of election was vested in the freemen to the number of twenty-three. It is remarkable for remains of an old castle built by Reginald, earl of Cornwall.

SCOTT, Sir Walter (Biog.) the illustrious subject of this memoir, already mentioned under Heraldry, (see Dict. Vol. II.,) was of high descent on both sides. His father, Walter Scott, Esq., Writer to the Signet, was descended from the Scotts of Raeburn, a younger branch of the family of the Scotts, who boast of the Duke of Buccleugh as their head. His maternal grandfather, Dr. John Rutherford, a pupil of Boerhaave, and professor of the practice of medicine in the Edinburgh University, married Jean Swinton, of Swinton, in Berwickshire, one of the oldest families in Scotland, and, at one period, very powerful. Sir Walter, the third of six sons, was born at Edinburgh, on the 15th of August, 1771, in one of the duskiest parts of the ancient capital, at the head of the College Wynd, a narrow alley leading from the Cowgate to the gate of the College. As the house stood in the line necessary for the opening of a street along the north skirt of the new university building, it was, as we are informed by Sir Walter Scott himself, pulled down to make way for the new college. It consisted of two flats above those occupied by Mr. Keith, and belonged to Mr. Walter Scott, by whom the upper floors were occupied, until he removed, some time after Sir Walter's birth, to George's Square. Sir Walter, after receiving the rudiments of his education from his mother, a woman of superior attainments, was sent to a private school, kept by a Mr. Leechman, in Hamilton's Entry, Bristo Street; from which he went to the High School, about the year 1779, and in October, 1781, entered the Rector's classes, then under the charge of Dr. Alexander Adam, a teacher of considerable celebrity, and the author of several esteemed elementary works. After passing through the usual course of instruction, in which, as it appears, he made no great proficiency, he passed advocate in 1792; but the strong bent of his mind towards poetry, which displayed itself at an early period, prevented him from prosecuting the law with any material effect, and finally determined him on relinquishing practice, and devoting himself to his favourite pursuit. In 1797, he married Miss Margaret Charlotte Carpenter, daughter of the deceased John Carpenter, Esq., of the city of Lyons, who, with her mother, had left France in consequence of the French revolution; and upon his marriage, he took a house in North Castle-street, Edinburgh. In 1799, he obtained the appointment of sheriff depute for Selkirkshire, to which was attached a salary of 300*l.* a year. This office requiring him to reside a certain part of the year in that county, he engaged the house of Ashetail, on the banks of the Tweed, which continued to be his country residence until the year 1811, when he removed to Abbotsford, the work of his own hands, in the proper sense of the word, having bought the land, and superintended the building of the house, and the laying out of the grounds, completely to his own taste. Some time previous to this, he had commenced his career as an author. In 1796, his first publication, consisting of a translation of Burger's Leonora and Der Wilde Jäger, made its appearance; and though it did not meet with a very flattering reception, yet in 1799, he published his Goetz of Berlingen, a tragedy, translated from the German of Goethe, which was quickly followed by his first original essay at ballad poetry, called Glenfinlas; and soon after by another ballad, called the Eve of St. John, which procured him many marks of attention from Duke John of Roxburgh. His Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, which contained a collection of genuine old ballads, appeared in 1802, and laid the foundation of his future fame, both as an antiquary and a poet. His subsequent works, namely, his Sir Tristram, in 1804; Lay of the Last Minstrel, in 1805; Ballads and Lyrical Pieces, in 1806; Marmion, and an edition of Dryden, in 1808; Sadler's State Papers, in 1809; The Lady of the Lake, in 1810; Don Roderick, in 1811; Rokeby, in 1813; the Lord of the Isles, in 1814; and two smaller anonymous pieces, The Bridal of Triermain, and Harold the Dauntless, placed him in the first rank of authors. It was in this latter year that his Waverley, the first of a series of novels, appeared without a name, or an acknowledged author. This was succeeded by Guy Mannering, in 1815; the Antiquary, and Tales of My Landlord, first series, in 1816; Rob Roy, and Tales of My Landlord, second series, in 1818; Tales of My Landlord, third series, in 1819. His later class of novels consist of Ivanhoe, the Monastery, and the Abbot, in 1820; Kenilworth, in 1821; the Pirate, and the Fortunes of Nigel, in 1822; Peveril of the Peak, Quentin Durward, St. Ronan's Well, and Red Gauntlet, in 1824; Tales of the Crusaders, in 1825; Woodstock, in 1827; Chronicles of the Canongate, in 1827 and 1828; Anne of Geierstein, in 1829 and 1831; a fourth series of Tales of My Landlord, in four volumes, making in all, seventy-four volumes; besides which, he edited the Works of Swift, in 19 volumes; wrote the Life of Bonaparte; and published many other lighter pieces both in prose and poetry, as Paul's Letters to his Kinsfolk, &c. In this interval, that is, in 1826, he was involved in the misfortunes which befel the house of Constable and Co., in Edinburgh, which rendered it necessary to divulge the circumstance of his being the author of the Waverley novels, and imposed on him the task of endeavouring to satisfy his creditors. The efforts which he made to effect this object, no doubt, shortened his days. He died on Wednesday, 25th September, 1832, after having considerably diminished the load of debt which pressed so heavily upon him. There is no doubt but the liberality of the public will do that which he was labouring to do, namely, to leave Abbotsford as a patrimony to his son. By his lady, who died May 15th, 1826, he left two sons and two daughters. 1. Walter, the present baronet, a major in the army, born October, 1801; who married, in 1825, Jane, daughter and sole-heiress of John Jobson, Esq. 2. Sophia Charlotte, married to John Gibson Lockhart, Esq., son of Dr. Lockhart. 3. Charles, attached to the legation of the king of the two Sicilies. 4. Anne, who has been placed on the civil list: she, and her brother Charles, are unmarried.
